1050. Heads of charge to the jury:—Under this section, the Judge is not required to write out in extenso the charge which he addresses to the jury. He is to record merely the heads of the charge, because it is impossible for the Judge to write down everything he says to the jury—Keamuddi, 51 Cal. 79 (82). The heads of charge to the jury need not be a verbatim reproduction of the Judge's observations to the jury, nor is it necessary that the charge should be written out before it is delivered. But whether they are written out before delivery or taken down verbatim, they should be placed on the record by the Judge as soon as he may find it possible to do so and whilst what he said is fresh in his recollection. The record need not be meticulous or lengthy, but it must give accurately the substance of what the Judge said to the jury so that the High Court may, if occasion arises, be able to ascertain from the record whether the law and the facts relative to the case were fairly and properly put to the jurors. Where the Judge's record of his charge to the jury was simply this: "Sections 141 to 149 and 299 to 304, I. P. Code, read over and explained"; held that such a short summary was not a sufficient compliance with the law—Rupan Singh, 4 Pat. 626, 27 Cr.L.J. 49 (53); Khijiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (272); Chotan, 7 Pat. 361, 29 Cr.L.J. 804 (805). It is absolutely necessary that the heads of charge should show clearly and distinctly what the exposition of the law actually was—Madan Tilakdas, 38 Cr.L.J. 767 (768), 169 I.C. 306, 41 C.W.N. 508, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 266, 9 R.C. 914. The heads of the charge mean that the Judge must faithfully record the line upon which he addressed the jury, both on the evidence and on the law, and the object of these heads of charge is to inform the High Court, should occasion arise, of what direction he gave in law to the jury and the nature of the summing up of the evidence not only for the prosecution but also for the defence. The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the jury; but they should contain in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness the points of law and direction given by the Judge to the jury, and the record should represent with absolute accuracy the substance of the charge by the Judge to the jury—Eknath, 1 P.L.J. 317, 17 Cr.L.J. 353; Fanindra, 36 Cal. 281; Ikramuddin, 39 All. 348; Abdul Gafur, 35 C.L.J. 437, 26 C.W.N. 996; Abbas, 25 Cal. 736; Shambulal, 10 Bom.L.R. 565; Panchu, 34 Cal. 698; Dwarkan, 33 C.W.N. 84.

Although under sec. 367, only the heads of the charge to the jury are required to be recorded, still as the law allows an appeal on grounds of misdirection, it is not only desirable but necessary that the charge should be recorded with sufficient fulness to enable the Appellate Court to see that the facts and circumstances were properly placed before the jury, that all points of law were clearly explained to the jury, and that the summing up was proper and free from misdirection—Wilson, 30 C.W.N. 693, 27 Cr.L.J. 926; Panchu, 34 Cal. 698; Abdul Gafur, 26 C.W.N. 996, 24 Cr.L.J. 8; Ikramuddin, supra; Khijiruddin, 53 Cal. 372, 27 Cr.L.J. 266 (272); Kasimuddin, 36 Cr.L.J. 480, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 31, 154 I.C. 110, 60 Cr.L.J. 45. The Judge should also record in his charge what evidence he reads out to the jury—Baswantappa, Ratanlal 917. It is not sufficient for the Judge to state in his record of the heads of the charge that he referred to certain sections of the Penal Code and explained to the jury the law with regard to the offence; he should set out in the record the directions which he gave to them in respect of the law, in order that the High Court may not have to speculate as to what the Judge said but may be in a position to judge whether the elements constituting the particular offence in question had been properly and fairly explained to the jury—

Kasimuddin, 47 Cal. 795, 21 Cr.L.J. 694; Chotan Singh, 7 Pat. 361, 29 Cr.L.J. 804 (805). The Judge's comments on the evidence of identification should be recorded in a form which will enable the Appellate Court to know what was actually said—Abdul Gafur, supra. But failure to record in the charge what actually the Judge's explanation of the law was, would not vitiate the trial where it has not occasioned a failure of justice. The High Court will not, therefore, order a retrial on this ground if it is of opinion that if the jury accepted the evidence of the prosecution they were entitled to convict the accused of the offence charged—Chotan Singh, 7 Pat. 361, 29 Cr.L.J. 804 (805); Kasimuddin, supra. In recording the heads of the charge to the jury, the Sessions Judge is not required to practically write a judgment. Where the facts of the case and the law applicable to the facts were not at all complicated, and the Sessions Judge recorded that such and such sections of the I. P. Code had been read and explained to the jury, held that there was a sufficient compliance with the law—Dhanpat Tiwari, 9 Pat. 148, 1930 Cr.C. 511 (512, 513), A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 243, 31 Cr.L.J. 786, 125 I.C. 131, 11 P.L.T. 646. Where the law regarding the offence charged was in fact fully explained to the jury, the mere fact that the Judge failed to record that the elements constituting the offence were fully explained was not sufficient to vitiate the conviction—Ramsarup, 9 Pat. 606, 1930 Cr.C. 1009, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 512, 11 P.L.T. 867, 32 Cr.L.J. 72, 128 I.C. 121.

Where the fresh charge was the same as recorded in the original charge, the omission to record the heads of the re-charge is not fatal to the conviction—Kasimuddin, 60 C.L.J. 45, 36 Cr.L.J. 480, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 31, 154 I.C. 110.

Where a joint trial is held of several offences some of which are triable by jury and others with the aid of assessors and in respect of the latter offences the jurors become assessors, it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to pronounce a judgment containing the particulars specified in this section, in respect of the latter offences. A reference to the charge to the jury is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Datta, Ratanlal 426.

1050A. Judgment under sec. 349, Cr. P. C.:—See Note 1010.

1051. Appellate Judgment:—See section 424. "It should be observed that sec. 424 of the Code extends the provisions of section 367 to the judgments of the Lower Appellate Courts, and it is essential that the judgment of such Courts should comply with the provisions of this section"—Cal G R. & C. O., p. 36. An appellate judgment, like the judgment of the Court of first instance, must fulfil the conditions laid down in this section; that is, the judgment must state the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for the decision—Devendra, 17 Bom.L.R. 1085, 16 Cr.L.J. 832; Kali Charan v. Geli Bewa, 2 P.L.T. 228, 22 Cr.L.J. 640, 63 I.C. 336; Bundarban, 21 Cr.L.J. 223 (Lah.); Dalip Singh, 5 Lah. 308; Mangla, 2 P.L.T. 616, 63 I.C. 416, 22 Cr.L.J. 656. If the Appellate Court dismisses the appeal without specifying these points, the appellate order must be set aside, and the appeal reheard—Shanmukh Basapa, 32 Bom.L.R. 353, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 163, 125 I.C. 710, 31 Cr.L.J. 925, 14 A.I.Cr.R. 534, 1930 Cr.C. 487. A judgment must conform to the provisions of this section which require, inter alia, that it shall contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. These requirements must be fulfilled in respect of each individual accused or suspect in cases where there are more than one. Where the reasons for decision in the judgment of the Appellate Court are not such as to enable a revisional Court acting under the provisions of secs. 435 and 439, Cr. P. C., to form any conclusion as to the correctness, legality or propriety of the findings, the judgment is clearly defective and the appeal must be reheard—Abdul Karim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Sind 113 (114), 41 Cr.L.J. 724, 189 I.C. 226.

Besides specifying these points, the Appellate Court has to decide two more points, viz. (1) is the objection raised in the memorandum of appeal a valid objection? and if not, (2) is there any ground apparent on the record for interference in appeal? A judgment which does not decide these points is not a valid judgment—Jairam, 8 N.L.R. 84, 13 Cr.L.J. 559.

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge, in disposing of an appeal, to record a judgment according to law; any deficiency in that judgment cannot be made up by a reference to the judgment of the Magistrate. It is his duty to go into the evidence and try the appeal in a proper manner. Where the Sessions Judge in appeal stated no facts and gave no reasons in his judgment for the conclusion arrived at by him, the appeal must be reheard—Bhola Nath, 7 C.W.N. 30; Ektar, 9 C.W.N. xxiii.

An appellate judgment must be quite independent and stand by itself; it ought not to be read in connection with or as supplementary to the judgment of the Court of first instance—Jamail, 35 Cal. 138, 6 C.L.J. 427, 12 C.W.N. 134; Manglu, 2 P.L.T. 616, 63 I.C. 416; Solhu v. Krishna Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 113, 76 I.C. 177, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 660; Thakur Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 444 (Pat.); Dasogi, 20 Cr.L.J. 645 (Pat.); Bach, 1 Rang. 301; Ghousbux, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 26 (27), 167 I.C. 227, 30 S.L.R. 382, 38 Cr.L.J. 363, 9 R.S. 73. Even when confirming the judgment of the trial Court, the Appellate Court should take its own view of the evidence after perusing the record. The judgment of the Court of Appeal should be such that the High Court as a Court of Revision might in looking into the judgment be in a position to judge for itself what the case was and how far the Court of Appeal had considered the evidence as bearing on the guilt or innocence of the accused, before it affirmed the judgment of the trial Court—Inatulla, 39 C.L.J. 117, 25 Cr.L.J. 1041, 81 I.C. 820, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 618. See also Ahmed Ali, 32 Cr.L.J. 271, 129 I.C. 276, 32 P.L.R. 92, 1930 Cr.C. 1227, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1051, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 164. It is the duty of the Appellate Court not merely to consider whether there are reasons for differing from the judgment of the trial Court, but to apply its mind afresh to the evidence and to form its own conclusion and to embody its conclusions and the reasons on which they are based, in a considered judgment which will, if necessary, bear the scrutiny of the High Court. Where it is in fact, almost impossible to gather from the judgment of the Court of Appeal taken by itself, what the alleged occurrence was, and what was the real nature of the dispute between the parties, the judgment does not comply with the provisions of sec. 367 read with sec. 424, Cr. P. C., inasmuch as it does not set forth the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for these decisions—Kali Charan Som v. Priya Nath Das, 39 Cr.L.J. 791, 176 I.C. 677, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 522, 11 R.C. 150. It would be well for District Magistrates who hear appeals in criminal cases to bear in mind that they are also subordinate to higher Courts and it is their duty to satisfy the higher Courts by their judgments that they have applied their minds to the case before them and in recording a finding of conviction upon the evidence produced before them have arrived at a correct conclusion. In order to discharge this duty, it is necessary for them to see that their judgments fulfil the requirements laid down by the law. It is always easy for the Appellate Court to say that all the points arising in the case have been considered by the Court below and have been rightly decided. This does not, however, show that the Appellate Court has applied its mind to the points arising in the case and has arrived at its own independent judgment in respect of them as it is required by the law to do. Under the law it is clearly the duty of the District Magistrate to state the various points urged before him and to record his decisions thereon with his reasons for those decisions. If he fails to discharge that duty, his judgment must be set aside—Banshidhar v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 All. 18, 1939 A.L.J. 671, 41 Cr.L.J. 220, 185 I.C. 682, I.L.R. 1939 All. 865. But the whole evidence need not be recapitulated and analysed by the Appellate Court—Kaloo, 14 O.L.J. 257, 8 O.W.N. 304.

The judgment of the Appellate Court in dealing with the case of several accused convicted in a joint trial must show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration, and should state reasons, as far as may be necessary, to show that the Appellate Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused—Jamail, 35 Cal. 138; Dakshinamurti, 1918 M.W.N. 129, 19 Cr.L.J. 200; Arindra, 20 C.W.N. 1296; Batu Naidu, 2 L.W. 958, 16 Cr.L.J. 735; Cherutath, 16 Cr.L.J. 496 (Mad.); Chinna Menikkam, 48 M.L.T. 504, 26 Cr.L.J. 1089; Maded Ali, 24 O.C. 230; Solhu v. Krishna Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 113, 76 I.C. 177, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 660.

The Appellate Court must record reasons for confirming, reversing or modifying the sentences or orders of the Magistrate. Where the Appellate Judge merely says that he adopts the reasons given by the trial Court, to support the grounds of his decision, or merely states that he is satisfied that the judgment of the trial Court is substantially right, the judgment is erroneous in form—Dasogi, 20 Cr L.J. 645 (Pat.); Baishnab Charan, 24 Cr L.J. 311 (Cal.).

An Appellate Court is not required to write a long and elaborate judgment, but it is clearly its duty not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and that the points urged by the appellant have been duly considered and decided. An Appellate Court which writes a judgment which the High Court is unable to follow without reference to the judgment of the trial Court, obviously fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by law—Dalip Singh, 2 Lah. 308 (310), A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 102, 23 Cr L.J. 9, 64 I.C. 337, 24 P.L.R. 1922; Abdul Wahid v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 88, 1937 Pesh L.J. 93, 173 I.C. 672.

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court does not discuss the facts nor the grounds of appeal, it is not in accordance with law and is liable to be set aside—Hurmat Ali, 27 Cr L.J. 114, 91 I.C. 690, 1 Lah. 399. Reasons for the decision should be given by the Appellate Court in order that the Superior Court may at once know the facts found and the reasons therefor without reference to the record and judgment of trial Court and satisfy itself as to whether the lower Court has, in fact, done its duty by an honest and careful consideration of the case—Maroti v. Kasabai, 27 Cr L.J. 1404, 98 I.C. 716, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 88. It is the duty of the Judge hearing the appeal to state the facts and give the reasons for the conclusion he arrives at. The High Court will not in revision make up for the deficiency of the appellate judgment by having recourse to that of the Court of first instance—Rahim Ali, 25 Cr L.J. 246, 76 I.C. 710, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 344.

The judgment of the Appellate Court must show that it has duly considered the evidence of both sides and the pleas raised in appeal, with a judicious mind; if it does not consider the evidence for the defence, nor even alludes to it, it is defective—Beni, 4 O.L.J. 80, 18 Cr L.J. 689; In re Seperumal, 11 Cr L.J. 331, 7 M.L.T. 182; Ballusu, 1912 M.W.N. 881, 13 Cr L.J. 712; Hulasi v. Chhotey Lal, 1939 O.A. 820, 1939 O.W.N. 1105, 1939 A.W.R. (C.C.) 319. Even though the Counsel for the applicant does not refer to the defence evidence, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to look into that evidence and after dealing with it come to its own decision—Fidoi Hossein, 40 Cal. 376, 14 Cr L.J. 419; Hulasi v. Chhotey Lal, 1939 O.A. 820, 1939 O.W.N. 1105, 1939 A.W.R. (C.C.) 319. Where the judgment of the Appellate Court did not discuss the defence evidence and had not arrived at any finding with regard to matters raised in the lower Court and it was not possible to ascertain from the Appellate Court's judgment what the occurrence was, it was not in accordance with law—Gakharali, 25 Cr L.J. 901, 81 I.C. 437, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 266. Where the judgment of the Appellate Court, without discussing the points urged in the memorandum of appeal and without giving any reasons, holds that the conviction is correct, the judgment is not a legal judgment as it does not contain the point or points for determination raised in the memorandum of appeal, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision—Kalikram, 29 Cr L.J. 270, 107 I.C. 665. Where a District Magistrate disposed of an appeal in a case under sec. 110, in which a large mass of evidence had been produced on both sides, by a short judgment in a few lines dealing with some general observations upon the volume of evidence which was put before him and without proper consideration thereof, the judgment was not in accordance with law—Sunehi, 19 A.L.J. 921, 23 Cr L.J. 378. A District Magistrate should not dispose of an appeal from an order requiring a person to furnish security, otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that he has applied his mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record and of the pleas raised by the appellant both in the Court below and in the memorandum of appeal—Lal Behari, 38 All. 393, 17 Cr L.J. 309. But the Appellate Court is not bound to give its opinion as to the character of the evidence in prolix detail—Pandeh Bhat, 19 All. 506. Where in the judgment of the first Court, evidence was set out at great length and reasons fully explained, the judgment of the Appellate Court which confirms the judgment of the trial Court does not become defective in law by reason of the fact that it does not set out again in detail the whole of the evidence and reasons for believing the witnesses, if it appears from the judgment that the Appellate Court appreciated the arguments adduced against the credibility of the prosecution witnesses—Kafiluddin, 20 Cr.L.J. 238 (Cal.). But where the facts are intricate, and the evidence is contradictory, it is incumbent on the Court of appeal to set out the points for determination and the reasons for decision with sufficient fulness. If the Appellate Court merely refers to the decision of the trial Court and says that nothing has been urged in appeal which affects the reasons given by the trial Court for conviction, such a decision is not in accordance with law—Aghore Dutt, 12 P.L.T. 601, 1931 Cr.C. 907, 32 Cr.L.J. 1197, 134 I.C. 619, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 379, Ind. Rul 1931 Pat. 475, 11 Pat. 143. It is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section, if the Appellate Court confirming the order of the lower Court gives no reasons for its decision but merely says that it has considered the evidence carefully and thinks that it is sufficiently strong to justify the order—San Dun, 2 Rang. 641; or if the Appellate Court states no reasons whatsoever and confirms the judgment of the Lower Court in these general terms. "I see no reason for disturbing the finding of the Lower Court"—Ram Das, 13 Cal. 110; Samsher, 1888 A.W.N. 280; Bhujpal, 1886 A.W.N. 289; Manicka, 1931 M.W.N. 119; or "after reading the evidence and hearing the counsel I am of opinion that the Lower Court has decided the case rightly; I find no ground for interference; appeal is dismissed"—Girish, 23 Cal. 420; Farkan v. Samsher, 22 Cal. 241; Rohimuddy, 20 Cal. 353; Pandeh, 19 All. 506; Shannugh Basapa, 32 Bom.L.R. 353, 1930 Cr.C. 487 (488), 31 Cr.L.J. 925, 125 I.C. 710, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 163 (distinguishing Patilbuva, 28 Bom.L.R. 1029, 27 Cr.L.J. 1153); or "the prosecution evidence is sufficient to warrant the conviction, I decline to interfere"—Shamsher Ali, 2 Weir 536; or "I have perused the judgment of the Lower Court, and I agree with the findings arrived at by the learned trying Magistrate and convict all the accused for the offence of rioting as stated in the charge"—Thakur Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 444 (Patna); or "Heard the appellant, I do not think it necessary to direct prosecution of the respondent in this case. Appeal dismissed"—Nitya Gopal v. Nani Gopal, 32 Cr.L.J. 1045, 133 I.C. 672, 35 C.W.N. 660, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 454, 1931 Cr.C. 606, Ind. Rul 1931 Cal. 736; Kalisadhan v. Nani Lal, 52 Cal. 478; or "I have gone through the record. The conviction under sec. 419, I. P. C., is sound. The fine inflicted of Rs. 30 only is very light. I see no reason to interfere and dismiss the appeal"—Jodhi, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 328, 146 I.C. 447, 35 Cr.L.J. 136.

Where, in acquitting the accused, the Appellate Court merely observed: "I have carefully gone through the whole evidence and I find that I cannot agree with the conviction" and later on, "I have gone through the depositions of the prosecution witnesses and I find that there are many discrepancies in their statements. The case is certainly of a doubtful nature," held that this was no discussion of the case at all—Raghnathmal v. Patiram, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 394, 172 I.C. 177.

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court was in the nature of a stereotyped one, which might answer for any case, it was not one in accordance with this section or sec. 424—Kasimuddin, 1 C.W.N. 169.

Even when an Appellate Court rejects an appeal summarily under sec. 421, it is advisable to state shortly in its order the reason or reasons which have influenced it in coming to the conclusion that there is no sufficient ground for interference in the case—Nanku, 17 All. 241; Ramrao, 13 N.L.R. 169, 18 Cr.L.J. 993. Although in rejecting an appeal under sec. 421, the Appellate Court is not bound to write a judgment and give reasons for its decision—Warubai, 20 Bom. 540; Rash Behari v. Balgopal, 21 Cal. 92; Ramrao, supra; Krishnaya, 25 Mad. 534, still the recording of reasons is necessary in view of the possibility of such orders being challenged by an application for revision—Nanku, 17 All. 241; Kundan, 36 All. 496, 15 Cr.L.J. 512. See Note 1132 under sec. 421.

Even where the Appellate Court dismissed the appeal because no one appears to argue the appeal, the Court is bound to read and consider the evidence and dispose of the appeal by writing a judgment in accordance with the provisions of this section—Naai Sheikh, 11 CWN. cxxv.

Defective Appellate Judgments —It is difficult to lay down any rule with precision as to what judgment of an Appellate Court complies, and what judgment does not comply, with the requirements of this Code. It cannot be held that merely because the form of judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of this section and of sec. 424, it is not a valid judgment. The omission in the judgment must be substantial in order to invalidate it—Pandeh, 19 All 506. Though the judgment of the Appellate Court is not in proper form, the High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal, unless there has been a miscarriage of justice—Rupa Mandal v Keshab, 5 CLJ 452, 5 CrLJ 349. Where the Appellate judgment shows that the Judge had appreciated and had in view all the points, the High Court should not interfere in revision merely because the form of judgment does not exactly comply with all the requirements of this section—Rohimuddy, 20 Cal. 353. But where the Appellate Court which dismissed the appeal not summarily but after notice to the parties, omitted to write the judgment altogether, such an omission was not a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537, but a grave illegality—Dubendra, 17 BomLR. 1085, 16 CrLJ 832, 31 IC. 1008. Where the judgment of the Appellate Court did not strictly comply with the provisions of this section but made it clear that the Appellate Court had perused the evidence and heard arguments, and, having heard the case argued, had come to an independent opinion as to the guilt of the appellants, the High Court did not set aside the judgment. The High Court is not invariably bound to interfere in revision because there is an irregularity in the form of a judgment, unless there is some reason to believe that there has been a failure of justice—Tippanna, AIR 1932 Bom. 473, 34 BomLR. 1110, 1932 CrC. 601, 139 IC 608, 33 CrLJ. 801, Ind Rui 1932 Bom 519. So long as the Appellate Court writes a judgment from which the High Court can gather what the decision of the Appellate Court was, that in majority of instances ought to be sufficient. If it is possible for the High Court reasonably to arrive at an understanding of what has been found in the Court below, it is not necessary that the High Court should captiously or capriciously set aside the judgment of the Court below or even comment on it with any severe strictures. Still less is it obligatory upon the High Court to hold that the proceedings in appeal ought to be quashed and the matter reheard in appeal from the beginning—Abdul Rahman, AIR 1935 Cal 316 (321), 62 Cal. 749, 1935 CrC. 467, 156 IC 678, 36 CrLJ. 982.

The Appellate Courts should take care to write judgment which are in consonance with the provisions of the Cr. P Code because by failing to do so they encourage persons convicted to waste their money and the time of the High Court by making applications in revision—Ram Singh v. Emp., AIR. 1940 All. 80, 1939 ALJ. 1146, 41 CrLJ 249, 186 IC 97.

The case of each of the appellants should be specifically dealt with—Madho Singh v. Emp., 41 CrLJ. 725 (726), 189 IC. 258, 1940 O.W.N. 607.

1052. Sub-section (6):—"We think it desirable to lay down that orders under secs. 118 and 123 (3) should be deemed to be judgments for the purposes of the section"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). This sub-section supersedes Ramasamy Chetty, 27 Mad. 510 (512) where it was held that an order passed in security proceedings was not a "judgment".

In Venkatachinnaya, 43 Mad. 510, it was contended for the Crown that the word 'inquiry' in sec. 117 did not mean a trial; but Aylmer J., in overruling this contention observed as follows (at pp 524-525).—"If the word is to be given the narrow interpretation contended for the Crown, such provisions as those in Chapter XXVI regarding judgments will not apply to security cases. That is to say, the Magistrate in ordering security under sec. 118 would be under no legal obligation, inter alia, to record a judgment setting forth his reasons (sec. 367) or to give the accused a copy of it without delay (sec. 371). So far as I can see, apart from the operation of sec. 117, the Magistrate might simply record an order requiring the execution of a bond, without recording any reasons or discussing the evidence. I do not think this could have been intended, especially as care has been taken to provide for an appeal against an order for security (vide sec. 406) and for the interference of the Chief Presidency or District Magistrate (sec. 125)." The present sub-section gives legislative recognition to the above remarks of Ayling, J.

An order passed under sec. 118 or sec. 123 (3), Cr. P. C., must be self-contained; it must show that the Court has considered the evidence against each of the suspected persons and has found that the evidence proves the case against each of the suspected persons individually—Ghousbux, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 26 (27), 167 I.C. 227, 30 S.L.R. 382, 38 Cr.L.J. 363, 9 R.S. 173; Abdul Karim v. Emp, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 113 (114), 41 Cr.L.J. 724, 189 I.C. 226

368. (1) When any person is sentenced to death, the sentence shall direct that he be hanged by the neck till he is dead.

Sentence of death.
Sentence of transportation. (2) No sentence of transportation shall specify the place to which the person sentenced is to be transported.

The Sessions Judge should not sentence the accused "to receive the supreme penalty". The sentence should direct that the accused be hanged by the neck until he be dead—Nga Shein Maung, 37 Cr.L.J. 290 (292), 160 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 46, 1936 Cr.C. 45.

369. No Court, other than a High Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except as provided in sections 395 and 484 or to correct a clerical error.

369. Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, or in the case of a High Court established by Royal Charter, by the Letters Patent of such High Court, no Court, when it has signed its judgment, shall alter or review the same, except * to correct a clerical error.*

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 101 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The wording of the old section admitted of the interpretation that High Court had unlimited powers of altering or reviewing their judgment (though such interpretation was never made in any of the decided cases). The present section as now amended lays down that the High Court has no power to alter or review its judgment except as provided by the Letters Patent. The references to secs. 395 and 484 have been omitted, because there are cases other than those referred to in these two sections, in which a review of judgment is possible, e.g., sec. 434. See the Report of the Joint Committee of 1922.

Sections 369 and 561A:—When sec. 369 was amended in 1923 in such a way as to show that the High Court had no power of altering or reviewing a judgment, except to correct a clerical error, the Legislature did not attempt or intend to deprive the High Court of any inherent power which it had hitherto possessed. Section 561A does not, in terms, invest the High Court with any powers which it did not possess before. But it does refer to an inherent power of which the High Court is already in possession. The High Court possessed no inherent power to review its judgment before the amendments of 1923. Consequently, it cannot be said that sec 561A either modifies the provisions of sec. 369 or clothes the High Court with any fresh powers—Banwari Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1286 (1288), 157 I.C. 1044, A.I.R. 1935 All. 466, 1935 A.L.J. 317, 1935 Cr.C. 507. See also Raju, 110 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 462, 29 Cr.L.J. 669, 10 Lah. 1; Dahu Raut, 31 Cr.L.J. 1100 (1105), 145 I.C. 937, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 870, 1933 Cr.C. 1481, 38 C.W.N. 25; Laxman Rao Parashram v Emp, 39 Cr.L.J. 116, 10 R.N. 192, 172 I.C. 299, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 74, not following Kjng-Emp v Shiv Dat, 3 Luck 680, 111 I.C. 573, 5 O.W.N. 641, 29 Cr.L.J. 893, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 402 and Mathra Das v Crown, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 139, 99 I.C. 1039, 9 L.L.J. 12, 28 Cr.L.J. 239.

Section 561A, Cr. P. C., does not confer upon the High Court any new powers but merely declares that such inherent powers as the Court may possess shall not be deemed or affected by anything contained in the Code. The High Court has, therefore, no power to alter or review its own judgment in a criminal case, once it has been pronounced and signed except in cases where it was passed without jurisdiction or in default of appearance without an adjudication on the merits or to correct a clerical error; nor is there any conflict between that section and sec. 369 of the Code—Eduard Few v. Emp, 40 Cr.L.J. 763, 183 I.C. 348, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 244, distinguishing Har Kishan Lal, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 497, 170 I.C. 375, I.L.R. 1937 Lah. 69, 38 Cr.L.J. 883, 39 P.L.R. 733, 10 R.L. 103 and Rash Behari Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 551, 152 I.C. 291, 1934 Cr.C. 1195, 36 Cr.L.J. 100, 15 P.L.T. 475, 7 R.P. 179.

1053. Scope and effect of section—Judgment:—The effect of this section may—speaking broadly and without attempting strict accuracy—be put under three heads: (1) it saves powers to correct clerical errors, (2) it provides that, as a general rule, no Court shall alter or review its judgment after it has signed it, except to correct clerical errors; and (3) in cases where the judgment has been signed and it is sought (in contravention of the general rule) to alter or review the judgment for the purpose of correcting errors other than clerical; power to correct such errors is reserved only if it can be derived from any provisions in (a), the Criminal Procedure Code, or (b) in any other law for the time being in force, or (c) (in the case of a High Court established by Royal Charter), by the Letters Patent of such High Court. The general rule under this section comes into operation only when the Court has signed its judgment. In the case of the High Court exercising its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, no judgment nor any other pronouncement of its decision is signed until the warrant is signed by the Presiding Judge. The warrant is drawn up some little time after the sentence has been orally pronounced. The practice has been for the Judges in proper cases to review their sentences though already pronounced in Court so long as the warrant has not been drawn up and signed—Abdul Rahiman, 37 Cr.L.J. 753 (754), 162 I.C. 950, A.I.R. 1936 Bom. 193, 38 Bom.L.R. 153, 1936 Cr.C. 573. Although this section refers in express terms to judgments under Ch. XXVI of the Code, still it is clear that the principle laid down herein applies also to final orders which are in the nature of judgments—Harilal, 22 Bom. 949. An order which is passed on full inquiry and after hearing both sides is in the nature of a judgment, and such an order cannot be altered after it is once passed and signed. Thus, an order of a District Magistrate, passed after full enquiry, refusing to deliver to the Political Superintendent of a Foreign State, a property seized in execution of a search warrant, cannot be altered by the Magistrate himself. The only course open to the Magistrate is to make a reference to the High Court, and have his own order cancelled—In re Harilal, 22 Bom. 949. The order of transfer cannot be regarded as an order in the nature of a judgment—Chhotey Lal v. Tinke Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 918, A.I.R. 1935 All. 815, 156 I.C. 163. An order under Chapter XII is in the nature of a judgment, and a Magistrate having passed an order under sec. 146 cannot cancel the order and pass an order under sec. 147 instead—Ram Dulare v. Ajodhya, 16 O.C. 192, 14 Cr.L.J. 605; Luchmi v. Bhusi, 19 Cr.L.J. 225 (Pat.). An order in sanction proceedings (now abolished) comes under this section and a Sessions Judge refusing to revoke a sanction has no jurisdiction to review his order and revoke it—Q-E. v. Ganesh, 23 Bom. 50. A final order in maintenance proceedings (sec. 488) is in effect a judgment, and the Magistrate cannot review a final order passed in such a proceeding—Nanda v. Manmaya, 21 C.W.N. 344. But see Bhagubhai Ranchhodas v. Bai Arvinda, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 334 where it has been held that section 369, Cr. P. C., does not apply to a case of maintenance falling within the express provisions of secs. 488 and 489, Cr. P. Code.

But this section does not apply to an order of dismissal of complaint under sec. 203. Such an order is not a judgment within the meaning of this section—Chinna Kaliappa, 29 Mad. 126 (131) (F.B.) and the Magistrate can re-hear the complaint. See Note 681 under sec. 203. So also, an order directing issue of process under sec. 204 is not a judgment, and a Magistrate can, on a reconsideration of that order, cancel the issue of process and order an inquiry under sec. 202—Lalit Mohan v. Nand Lal, 27 C.W.N. 651, 25 Cr.L.J. 464. A Magistrate, after he has passed an interlocutory order for the examination of a witness (who is in prison) in Court can afterwards review that order, and pass an order for the examination of the witness on commission—Asst. Govt. Advocate v. Upendra Nath Mukherjee, 11 P.L.T. 892, 1931 Cr.C. 201, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 81, 130 I.C. 538, 32 Cr.L.J. 551, 16 A.I.Cr.R. 29.

A complaint cannot be a judgment even when the complaint is made by a Court under sec. 476, Cr. P. Code. Therefore, sec. 369, Cr. P. C., cannot apply to a complaint and does not, therefore, amount to a bar against a Court altering or reviewing the complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. Code—Jagat Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 318 (319), 166 I.C. 915, 9 R.A. 469, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1125, 1936 A.Cr.C. 235, 1937 A.L.R. 112, 1936 A.L.J. 1199, A.I.R. 1937 All. 76.

An order dismissing a summons case for default of appearance under sec. 247 is in the nature of a judgment, and a Magistrate cannot revive the case once dismissed for default—Ram Coomar v. Ramji, 4 C.W.N. 26. But it is competent for a Magistrate to re-hear a warrant case in which he has discharged the accused person under sec. 253 or 259, because the order of discharge does not amount to a judgment—Mir Ahmad v. Md. Askari, 29 Cal. 726 (731); Dwarka Nath v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal. 652 (660); Chinnathambi v. Gurusamy, 28 Mad. 310. But see Phonsia, 36 Cr.L.J. 128, A.I.R. 1935 All. 59, 152 I.C. 619, where it has been laid down that an application to the Magistrate to review his order of discharge was clearly against the provision of this section.

So also, it is open to the Appellate Court to re-hear an appeal which has been summarily dismissed by itself for default of appearance of the pleader—Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29. Contra—Mahomed Yashin, 4 Bom. 101. Where an appeal is rejected because it did not comply with the provisions of sec. 419, Cr. P. C., the order rejecting the appeal cannot be held to be an order amounting to a judgment within the meaning of this section. Therefore, the Sessions Judge can hear an appeal on the merits which he dismissed for non-compliance with his order for filing a copy of the judgment within the time fixed for it when the copy is filed with an explanation for not filing it in time—Bansgopal, 35 Cr.L.J. 441, 56 All. 299, 147 I.C. 347, A.L.R. 1934 All. 452, 4 A.W.R. 516, 1934 A.L.J. 329, A.I.R. 1934 All. 206, 1934 Cr.C. 254. See also Notes under sec. 561A.

It is not the intention of the Procedure Codes that they should encourage the hindering of justice and all procedure is intended to help justice. Even the criminal Courts have power to ignore their orders passed either under a mistake or by fraud—Bhagubhai Ranchhodas v. Bai Arvinda, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 334.

This section must be read with sec. 430 of the Code, where it is said that "judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in sec. 417" (appeals against an acquittal by the Government) "and Ch. 32" of which sec. 439 is a part—The King v. Nga Ba Saing, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 392 (393), 41 Cr.L.J. 108, 185 I.C. 142.

1054. Alteration of judgment:—No Judge or Magistrate can add to or alter or review his proceedings or judgments in any case after they are signed and published—Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 C.W.N. 1062; Ganesh, 23 Bom 50; Official Receiver v. Ganga Ram, 1916 P.R. 25; Narayan v. Chandrabhaga, 26 Cr.L.J. 1289, 89 I.C. 193, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 457. Where the statement of the points for determination and the reasons for decision were added to a judgment after it was pronounced in open Court, held that the action of the Magistrate was illegal and the conviction must be set aside—Jhari Lal, 8 Pat. 904, 1930 Cr.C. 90 (91), 31 Cr.L.J. 416. Where a Magistrate, after signing and pronouncing judgment in open Court, on the same day enhanced the sentence at the request of the accused in order to make his order appealable, it was held that though the Magistrate acted with the best of motives yet the alteration of the sentence was illegal—Quarbay Ali v. Azizuddin, 1883 A.W.N. 16. Where the accused was charged with theft (379, I.P.C.) and also under sec. 75 (previous conviction) and 379, I.P.C., and the Sessions Judge at first tried the accused on the first charge alone and convicted and sentenced him, and he next inquired into the further charge of previous conviction, it was held that the subsequent proceedings with reference to the previous conviction were not valid, because after the judgment including the sentence was pronounced in the trial on the first charge, there was no power to review or alter the same—Mari Parsu, 42 Bom. 202, 19 Cr.L.J. 279, 20 Bom.L.R. 87. A Court cannot after passing judgment and sentence, reconsider the question of sentence and make an order under sec. 562—Ganpat, 27 N.L.R. 163, 1931 Cr.C. 830; see also Misri Lal, 17 A.L.J. 426, 20 Cr.L.J. 392, 50 I.C. 1000. A Magistrate after passing the sentence and signing it, cannot even alter the date from which the sentence is to run—Sahadat, Ratanlal 804. Where an illegal sentence of flogging in addition to imprisonment was passed by the Magistrate and the illegality was discovered before execution but after the sentence had been pronounced and signed, it was held that such sentence could be altered only by the High Court, and not by the Magistrate himself—Weir (3rd Edn.) 983. Where a Sessions Judge or a Magistrate once sentences an offender to pay a fine but omits through oversight to pass a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, it is not open to him to pass the order subsequently. The proper course in such a case is to submit the proceedings to the High Court and ask that Court in its revisional jurisdiction to inflict imprisonment in default of payment of fine—In re Dhondt Nathaji, 23 Bom.L.R. 846, 62 I.C. 880. A Sessions Judge has no power to alter or set aside a conviction and sentence once signed by him, even on the ground that the sentence passed by him was illegal—Poran Mal, 23 W.R. 49. Where a Sessions Judge rejected a criminal appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation, but subsequently on the representation by the prisoner he admitted the appeal and after hearing it acquitted the accused, it was held that the Sessions Judge had no power to re-admit the appeal—Bhimappa, 19 Bom. 732; Raghunath, 6 Bom.L.R. 360. It is not open to a Sessions Judge, after he has once accepted the verdict of the jury and has postponed the case for passing sentence, to reconsider his order and refer the case to the High Court under sec. 307, but he must pass sentence on the person awaiting sentence on the verdict. It is not open to him to reconsider his order any more than it would be for a jury to reconsider their verdict once given and recorded—Mobahar, 4 C.W.N. 683. Where a Bench of Magistrates has erroneously passed an order of acquittal, it is not open to the Bench to quash the decision and take the case again on the file and try it. The proper procedure is for the President to refer the matter to the District Magistrate, who, if so advised, would act under sec. 438—Ekambara v. Alamel-ammal, 53 Mad. 870, 59 M.L.J. 708, 1930 Cr.C. 1055 (1055), A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 1001, 32 Cr.L.J. 429. Even where the accused obtains a judgment of acquittal under sec. 247 by means of a fraud on the Court (e.g., by preventing the complainant from appearing when the case was called on, by wrongfully arresting and detaining him on a false charge), the Code does not permit the Court to cancel the judgment of acquittal on proof of the fraud and to restore the case to the file—In re Sinnu Goundan, 38 Mad. 1028, 15 Cr.L.J. 236. Even, if an appeal is summarily rejected under sec. 421 for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is not open to review—Mohomed Yashin, 4 Bom. 101. But in a Madras case it was held that if an appeal was summarily rejected under sec. 421 for non-appearance of the appellant's pleader, the Court could restore the appeal to the file and rehear it, if sufficient cause was shown for the pleader's non-appearance—Anonymous, 7 M H C R. App. 29.

But where a Sessions Judge on appeal in annulling a conviction omits to order a retrial, he is not precluded by this section from passing such an order subsequently. Such an order does not amount to an alteration of judgment—In re Ram Reddi, 3 Mad. 48. A Magistrate who makes an order under sec. 145 without any direction as to costs, has power to order the same subsequently under sec. 148 (3), and such latter order is not an alteration or review of his judgment in the original case within the meaning of this section—Nagar Chandra v. Siddhartha, 47 Cal. 974. So also, where a Magistrate disposing of a criminal appeal accidentally omits to pass an order under sec. 520, it will be open to him or to his successor to pass the order afterwards. Such an order does not amount to an alteration of the judgment—Subba Naidu, 43 M L J. 87, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 329. A Sessions Judge, after he has sentenced the accused to transportation and signed the judgment may afterwards add a direction that the sentence shall take effect immediately and not after a sentence of imprisonment which the accused is already undergoing—Hari, Ratanlal 391.

Where the appellate Court once passed an order for the evidence of two witnesses being recorded by the trial Court but decided the appeal without that evidence being recorded, this section did not apply to the order because that order was not a judgment but the procedure of the appellate Court was irregular—Madho Singh, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 396 (397), 41 Cr L J. 725 (726), 189 I.C. 258, 1940 O.W.N. 607, 1940 O.L.R. 420.

Where the Sessions Judge passed a detailed order recommending that the conviction and sentence passed upon the accused should be set aside he became functus officio and had no power to revise or review his own order and by a separate order reject the application for revision filed by the accused. Even a High Court after signing and pronouncing a judgment in a criminal case becomes functus officio and neither that Court nor any Bench of that Court can review the order so passed—Rameshwar v. Bharath, 35 Cr.L.J. 417, 147 I.C. 516, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 75, 1934 Cr.C. 255, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 85, 11 O.W.N. 75.

See also Note 1293 under the heading "Review".

Further inquiry :—An order for further inquiry does not amount to a review of the order of dismissal or discharge. The terms of this section must be read as controlled by sec. 437 (now sec. 436). That section does not limit the power of a District Magistrate to make further inquiry into a case in which an order of dismissal or discharge may have been passed by a subordinate Magistrate; and there is no bar to a District Magistrate making further inquiry into a case in which such order may have been passed by himself—Bidhu Chandalini v. Moti, 28 Cal. 102 (104). But where a District Magistrate has already dealt with a case in revision and decided that there was no cause for interfering with the order of discharge, he cannot subsequently order further inquiry, because such an order would be an order reviewing the earlier one and is prohibited by this section—Nga Than, 5 Bur L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. A Court cannot revise its own revisional order—Bhogi, 34 Cr.L.J. 278, 142 I.C. 138, 1932 M.W.N. 1162, Ind Rul 1933 Mad. 179, A.I.R. 1933 Mad 247, 1933 Cr.C. 374, 65 M.L.J. 6, 38 M.L.W. 668.

Proper procedure :—When a mistake has been made in the judgment (e.g., when an appeal has been erroneously dismissed as time-barred, or when an illegal sentence has been passed) it is not open to the Judge or Magistrate to alter or review his judgment or order, but the only course open to him is to submit the case to the High Court—Raghunath, 6 Bom L.R. 360; Poran Mal, 23 W.R. 49; In re Harilal, 22 Bom. 949; In re Dhondi, 23 Bom L.R. 845, 22 Cr.L.J. 608, 62 I.C. 880. Where cases were wrongly decided by the High Court the only remedy in such circumstances is to move the Local Government to exercise the Royal prerogative where the accused had been prejudiced, otherwise there is no remedy—Dahu Raut, 34 Cr.L.J. 1100 (1104), 145 I.C. 937, A.I.R.

1933 Cal. 870, 1933 Cr.C. 1481, 38 C.W.N. 25. See also Kalu, 45 All. 143 cited in the next paragraph and Kunji Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1485 (1487), 151 I.C. 714, 1934 A.L.J. 704.

1055. No power of High Court to alter its judgment:—See Notes under "Change" above. The law is now the same as it was practically before. It should be noted that inspite of the words 'other than a High Court' occurring in the old section, the High Court held that it had practically no power to alter or review its own judgment, under the old law. There being no provision in the Letters Patent or the Government of India Act authorising the High Court to exercise the power of review, the words "other than a High Court" could not be read as conferring on the High Court that power by implication—In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad 382 (389), 24 Cr.L.J. 439. It has even been remarked in In re Gibbons, 14 Cal 42 (47) that so far as the High Court was concerned there was no substantive enactment in this section; it did not confer any power on the High Court, nor did it take away any of the powers which existed in that Court before the passing of this section.

The Legislature has not conferred in express words upon the High Court the power of reviewing its judgment in all criminal cases, as it has done in all civil cases. The provisions of the old section, so far as they affect a High Court, merely apply to questions of law, which arise in its original criminal jurisdiction, and which are reserved and subsequently disposed of under the provisions of sec. 434 and the corresponding sections of the Letters Patent—Durgacharan, 7 All 672. The words 'other than a High Court' do not give the Division Bench of the High Court power to review its judgment passed by it in a criminal appeal. The words are to be accounted for by the power of review given to the High Court under sec. 434 on points specially reserved by the Judge presiding at the High Court Sessions—Mohan, Ratanlal 791; Kunhammad, 46 Mad 382 (404). In other words, the High Court cannot entertain an application to review a judgment passed by it on appeal in a criminal case—Godai, 5 W.R. 61; Mohan, Ratanlal 791; Hale, 1909 P.R. 1; Kale, 45 All. 143 (145); Arumuga, 50 M.L.J. 51, 27 Cr.L.J. 184, 91 I.C. 1000, 23 M.L.W. 56, 1926 M.W.N. 147. The review is a definite method of procedure and that if the Legislature intended by the Amending Act, XVIII of 1923, to make a provision in the Code for a review, there would have been a definite section dealing with a right of review and laying down the conditions under which that right could be exercised—Kunji Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1485, 151 I.C. 714, 1934 A.L.J. 704, A.I.R. 1935 All. 60, 1934 A.L.R. 905, 4 A.W.R. 252. The Code of Criminal Procedure was passed after the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter contains a section expressly authorising review of judgment, but the former contains no corresponding section. From this it may be reasonably inferred that the Legislature did not intend to confer in criminal cases the power similar to that which they had given in civil cases—Godai, 5 W.R. 61 (63). In criminal matters, the Letters Patent of the High Court confer on it full power and authority to review a case decided in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction on points of law. But such power to review does not appear to apply to a case decided in the exercise of its appellate or revisional criminal jurisdiction—Ibrahim, 30 Cr.L.J. 749, 117 I.C. 243, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 288, Ind. Rul. 1929 Rang. 179. As soon as an appellate judgment is pronounced and signed by the Judges, the High Court is functus officio, and neither the Court itself nor any Bench of it has any power to revise the decision or interfere with it in any way—In re Gibbons, 14 Cal. 42; Durgacharan, 7 All. 672; Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (401); Paras Ram, 1 O.W.N. 891, 26 Cr.L.J. 543, 85 I.C. 383, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 476; Jodha v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 711 (713). Even, if a single Judge of the High Court has passed an order dismissing an appeal, a Division Bench of the High Court cannot review that order by re-hearing the appeal—Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (401). If the Division Bench of the High Court passes an erroneous order in appeal, the only remedy is to make a petition (under Chap. XXIX) to the Local Government, the authority with whom rests the discretion either of executing the law or of commuting or setting aside the sentence—Mohan, Ratanlal 791; Kale, 45 All. 143 (145). So also, a Division Bench cannot review an order which has been passed by them in revision—Fox, 10

Bom. 176 (F.B.); Gobind Sahai, 38 All. 134; Durgacharan, 7 All. 672; Kunji Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1485, 151 I.C. 714, 1934 A.L.J. 704, 7 R.A. 199, A.I.R. 1935 All. 60, 1935 Cr.C. 102; Al Ak Lok, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr. P. C.) 35; Nand Kishore, 20 Cr.L.J. 447, 51 I.C. 271 (Pat.); Lachmi v. Bhushi, 19 Cr.L.J. 225, 43 I.C. 817, A.I.R. 1917 Pat. 110; Gaja v. Debi, 72 I.C. 945, 24 Cr.L.J. 481, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 532; Chimaba, Ratanlal 458; Bhogi Reddi Ankamma, 34 Cr.L.J. 278, 142 I.C. 138, 1932 M.W.N. 1162, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad 199, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 247, 1933 Cr.C. 374, 65 M.L.J. 6, 38 M.L.W. 668; Ranga Rao, 16 I.C. 518, 23 M.L.J. 371, 12 M.L.T. 350, 13 Cr.L.J. 710, 1932 M.W.N. 982. A High Court has no power to alter or review its own judgment in a criminal case, once it has been pronounced and signed, except in cases where it was passed without jurisdiction or in default of appearance without an adjudication on the merits, or to correct a clerical error—Raju, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 462, 110 I.C. 221, 29 Cr.L.J. 669, 10 Lah. 1; Diwan Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 132 (133), 19 N.L.J. 84; Raju, 110 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 462, 29 Cr.L.J. 669, 10 Lah. 1 and Banwari Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1286, 157 I.C. 1044, A.I.R. 1935 All. 466, 1935 A.L.J. 317, 1935 Cr.C. 507, 1935 A.L.R. 904, 8 R.A. 258. A single Judge of the High Court has no power to alter or revise an order passed by him in revision—Soma Naidu, 47 Mad. 422 (431). The High Court will not review its order passed in appeal or revision, even on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence, because such evidence ought to have been produced at the trial—Chimaba, Ratanlal 458; Kale, 45 All. 143 (145). So also, if a revision case is dismissed by the High Court for default of payment of printing charges, it is not competent for the High Court to rehear the case or entertain a fresh application for revision—Appayya v. Venkatappayya, 44 M.L.J. 27, 23 Cr.L.J. 746. Even, if a revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance of the practitioner who filed it, the High Court is not competent to restore the petition to its file—Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371. But in another recent case of the Madras High Court, as well as in cases of the other High Courts it has been held that when a criminal appeal or revision petition is dismissed by the High Court for default of appearance, there is no decision on the merits, and, therefore, there is no proper disposal of the case according to law. There being no provision in the Code for dismissing an appeal or revision petition for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is no "judgment" at all, and the High Court is not debarred from rehearing the appeal or revision petition—Kunhammad Haji, 46 Mad. 382 (402, 403) (dissenting from In re Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371 and Muhammad Yasin, 4 Bom. 101); Rajjab Ali, 46 Cal. 60 (63), 20 Cr.L.J. 265; Kishen Singh v. Girdhari, 23 Cr.L.J. 750 (Lah.); Ibrahim, 30 Cr.L.J. 749, 117 I.C. 243, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 288. Where a Jail appeal was dismissed by a single Judge of the High Court and an application for enhancement of sentence was made later on, held that in exercising the power of enhancement the High Court were not in any way violating the provisions of this section because the provisions of this section must be read subject to the provisions of sec. 430 and because a single Judge could not have exercised a jurisdiction for enhancing sentence—Abdul Qayum, 34 Cr.L.J. 1205, 146 I.C. 157, 55 All. 715, A.I.R. 1933 All. 485, 1933 Cr.C. 830, 1933 A.L.J. 957. Similarly, if an order is passed in the absence of the accused without giving him an opportunity of being heard in accordance with the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 439, as, for instance, where by mistake a case is posted on a day anterior to that fixed in the notice to the accused, the order is null and void, and the High Court is to proceed with the matter afresh after proper notice to the accused—In re Soma Naidu, 47 Mad. 428 (434), 46 M.L.J. 456, 34 M.L.T. 218, 26 Cr.L.J. 370; Rajjab Ali, 46 Cal. 60 (63). If an appeal is dismissed by a High Court Judge under sec. 421 without the appellant or his pleader being given reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same, the order is passed without jurisdiction, and the Court has power to make an order that the appeal should be reheard after giving the appellant or his pleader a reasonable opportunity of being heard—Muhammad Sadiq, 7 Lah.L.J. 108, 26 Cr.L.J. 1169, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 355.

Under the present section as now amended, the power of the High Court is as it was before the amendment. "In view of the cases reported in the Indian Law Reports, 7 All. 672, 10 Bom. 176 (F.B.), and 14 Cal. 42 (F.B.), it is proposed to make it clear that sec. 369 confers no power on the High Court to alter or review its own judgment after it has been signed"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921). See Raju, 110 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 462, 29 Cr.L.J. 669, 10 Lah. 1 and Banwari Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1286, 157 I.C. 1044, A.I.R. 1935 All. 466, 1935 A.L.J. 317, 1935 Cr.C. 507.

As soon as the judgment is signed, it becomes final and the Court is functus officio. The mere fact that there has been no formal order issued by the High Court or communicated to the Lower Court in pursuance of the judgment, does not enable the High Court to review its judgment. A judgment must be taken to mean and refer to the judicial act of the Court in finally disposing of the case and must, therefore, indicate only the order of the Court when it is read out and signed by the Judge, and cannot be meant to refer to the formal order on the judgment subsequently drawn up and issued merely as a clerical act by the ministerial officers of the Court—In re Arumuga, 50 M.L.J. 51, 27 Cr.L.J. 184, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 420.

A judgment of two Judges of the High Court sitting as a Criminal Bench is a judgment of the High Court and no other Judge or Bench of Judges of the High Court has power to override such judgment—Dahu Raut, 34 Cr.L.J. 1100 (1101), 145 I.C. 937, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 870, 1933 Cr.C. 1481, 38 C.W.N. 25. As to whether the High Court can review its judgment under the inherent powers conferred by sec. 561A, see Notes under that section.

The High Court, like the Lower Courts, can review its judgment before it is signed—Amodini v. Darsan, 38 Cal. 828, 13 Cr.L.J. 120; Bibhuti v. Das Moni, 7 C.W.N. 77. The Allahabad High Court can review its judgment after it is signed but before it is sealed, because the judgment of that High Court is not complete until it is sealed, and till then it may be altered by the Judge concerned—Lalit, 21 All. 177; Gobind Sahai, 38 All. 134; Kallu, 27 All. 92.

370. Instead of recording a judgment in manner herein-

Presidency Magistrate's judgment before provided, a Presidency Magistrate shall record the following particulars:—

- (a) the serial number of the case;
- (b) the date of the commission of the offence;
- (c) the name of the complainant (if any);
- (d) the name of the accused person, and (except in the case of an European British subject) his parentage and residence;
- (e) the offence complained of or proved;
- (f) the plea of the accused and his examination (if any);
- (g) the final order;
- (h) the date of such order; and
- (i) in all cases in which the Magistrate inflicts imprisonment, or fine exceeding two hundred rupees, or both, a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction.

1056. Scope of section:—This section does not apply to proceedings under secs. 2 (1) and 3 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859). Those proceedings are not criminal proceedings, and no offence can be said to have been committed under those sections. A Presidency Magistrate is not, therefore, bound to frame a record in such proceedings in accordance with the provisions of this section—Abhram v. Abdul, 27 Cal. 131. The Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859) has been repealed.

1057. Record:—The omission to record the various particulars required to be recorded under sec. 370 is a mere irregularity and not an illegality, where all the important itmes of these particulars have been recorded, and the omissions are of no real importance—Bishnupada, 30 C.W.N. 981, 27 Cr.L.J. 1131, 97 I.C. 651. But where not the slightest attempt was made to comply with the provisions of this section (e.g. where the Presidency Magistrate did not record who was the complainant, what was the offence, what was the date of the commission of the offence, etc.) the High Court severely condemned the Magistrate's proceedings—Mon Mohan Pande, 35 C.W.N. 868 (869), 136 I.C. 135, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 62, 1932 Cr.C. 10, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 183, 33 Cr.L.J. 264; Probodh Chandra Guha, 35 C.W.N. 867 (868), 136 I.C. 136, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 64, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 184, 1932 Cr.C. 12, 33 Cr.L.J. 265; U. K. Mitra, 35 C.W.N. 865 (867), 136 I.C. 465, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 63, 58 Cal. 1293, 1932 Cr.C. 11, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 193, 33 Cr.L.J. 303.

Where there is no record of the result of the examination by a Presidency Magistrate but it is noted below the record of evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution "examined under sec. 342" and there is no entry in the column for the plea of the accused and his examination (if any), the record is not in accordance with the requirements of this section—Ismail, 27 Cr.L.J. 110, 91 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 692.

Clause (i)—Reasons for conviction:—The meaning of this clause is that where the offence is sufficiently grave to involve a fine of Rs. 200 or imprisonment as the substantive sentence, the Magistrate is bound to record his reasons (In re Derrish Hussain, 49 Mad. 253) so as to enable the party to bring the matter up to the High Court; but in petty cases, which can be met by a fine of a few rupees, the decision of the Magistrate may be recorded shortly—Moteeram v. Belasteerom, 14 Cal. 174. This section requires that in a case in which the accused is sentenced to imprisonment, a Presidency Magistrate shall record a brief statement of the reasons for the conviction. It is not sufficient for him to record that the offence is proved, for that may be necessarily implied from the fact that he has convicted the accused. The law requires something further as the reasons for the conviction. The record should furnish some indication that he has considered the evidence in a critical manner—Shamlal Khetry, 139 I.C. 244, 33 Cr.L.J. 729, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 655, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 857, 36 C.W.N. 852, 1932 Cr.C. 632; Natabar v. Protash, 27 Cal. 461. So also, a mere statement to the effect "I believe the evidence for the prosecution and the evidence of the complainant, and I convict the accused" is not a statement of reasons—Shankar, 17 Bom.L.R. 890, 15 Cr.L.J. 771, 31 I.C. 371. The requirements of cl. (i) of this section are not fulfilled when the Magistrate simply says "Heard parties: Accused No. 3 acquitted. Nos. 1 and 2 sentenced to a month's rigorous imprisonment each"—Ismail, 27 Cr.L.J. 110, 91 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 662. The Magistrate should state his reasons in such a manner as to enable the High Court to judge of the sufficiency of the materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction—Yacoob v. Adamson, 13 Cal. 272; Emaman, 31 Cal. 983; Toolsey, 8 C.W.N. 587. Where there was not on the record any summary of the evidence nor such a statement of facts and reasons for conviction as would enable the High Court to say whether the materials were sufficient to support the conviction, it was held that the conviction should be set aside—Toolsey, 8 C.W.N. 587; Yacoob v. Adamson, 13 Cal. 272; Emaman, 31 Cal. 983. Even, in a non-appealable case, the Presidency Magistrate should state his reasons so as to enable the High Court in revision to judge the sufficiency of materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction—Yacoob v. Adamson, 13 Cal. 272. A Presidency Magistrate (as also an Honorary Presidency Magistrate), who tries and convicts an accused in a summary trial is bound to give reasons for the conviction—In re Varadarajulu, 31 M.L.T. 400, 23 Cr.L.J. 602; In re Thurman, 20 L.W. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1084. But the omission to record the reasons in a summary trial is a mere irregularity, and the High Court will not interfere in revision if the accused has not been prejudiced—In re Thuman, supra.

The imprisonment referred to in this clause is substantive imprisonment. A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this clause—Molccram v. Belascram, 14 Cal. 174

If the Magistrate omits to record the reasons, the defect is not cured by sec 441 which permits a Presidency Magistrate to submit with the record (when called for under sec. 435) a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision. Sec 441 does not abrogate the terms of sec. 370, but it merely allows the Presidency Magistrate to supplement the reasons which have been already recorded under sec. 370—In re Dervish Hussain, 46 Mad 253 But if the statement submitted under sec 441 discloses sufficient grounds for the decision, the defect in not recording reasons under sec. 370 may be excused under sec. 537, if no substantial failure of justice has occurred—Ibid.

Where a Presidency Magistrate writes a judgment he should discuss the prosecution evidence and come to a finding on the points sought to be made out by the prosecution. He should not convict the accused merely on discussing the defence evidence—Nishikanta v. Behari, 34 Cr L J 1059, 60 Cal 656, 145 I C. 660, 37 C W.N 368, 1933 Cr.C. 891, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 532

371. (1) On the application of the accused a copy of the judgment, or when he so desires, a translation in his own language, if practicable, or in the language of the Court, shall be given to him without delay. Such copy shall in any case other than a summons case, be given free of cost.

(2) In trials by jury in a Court of Session, a copy of the heads of the charge to the jury shall, on the application of the accused, be given to him without delay and free of cost.

(3) When the accused is sentenced to death by a Sessions Judge, such Judge shall further inform him of the period within which, if he wishes to appeal, his appeal should be preferred.

The application for a copy of judgment need not be stamped. See Ragba, Ratanlal 364.

Under clause (2), only a copy of the heads of the charge to the jury is supplied to the accused, because the Sessions Judge is not required to write a judgment but only to record the heads of the charge.

The period of limitation for appeal from a sentence of death is 7 days from the date of the sentence (Art. 150, Limitation Act) excluding the time requisite for obtaining copies (sec 12, Limitation Act). Under sub-sec. (3), the Judge should not only inform the accused that he must file his appeal within 7 days, but should also record that the accused was so informed, and whether he desires to appeal—See N. W. P. Gazette, 1873, p. 101.

372. The original judgment shall be filed with the record of proceedings, and where the original is recorded in a different language from that of the Court and the accused so requires, a translation thereof into the language of the Court shall be added to such record.

373. In cases tried by the Court of Session, the Court shall forward a copy of its finding and sentence (if any) to the District Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the trial was held.

CHAPTER XXVII.

OF THE SUBMISSION OF SENTENCES FOR CONFIRMATION.

374. When the Court of Session passes sentence of death, the proceedings shall be submitted to the High Court, and the sentence shall not be executed unless it is confirmed by the High Court.

Sentence of death to be submitted by Court of Session.

When the record of a case in which a sentence of death has been passed is submitted to the High Court under sec. 374, all the Police Diaries connected with the case should be simultaneously forwarded—Cal. G. R. & C. O., p. 39.

375. (1) If when such proceedings are submitted the High Court thinks that a further inquiry should be made into, or additional evidence taken upon, any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the convicted person, it may make such inquiry or take such evidence itself, or direct it to be made or taken by the Court of Session.

Power to direct further inquiry to be made or additional evidence to be taken.

(2) Such inquiry shall not be made nor shall such evidence be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors, and, unless the High Court otherwise directs, the presence of the convicted person may be dispensed with when the same is made or taken.

(3) When the inquiry and the evidence (if any) are not made and taken by the High Court, the result of such inquiry and the evidence shall be certified to such Court.

1058. Under this section the High Court can take additional evidence itself. In Basvanta, 25 Bom. 168, the High Court admitted in evidence a confession rejected by the Sessions Judge. In Bhagwan, 1911 P.W.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 412, 11 I.C. 596, the High Court (then Chief Court) admitted further evidence and inspected the building where the offence was alleged to have been committed.

The High Court when recording further evidence under this section, can dispense with the presence of the accused, especially where the additional evidence is recorded by itself—Tirumal, 24 Mad. 523.

The High Court acting under this section is not entitled, with a view to make its opinion still more conclusive with reference to the discrepancies in the testimony of the witnesses on which the trial Judge has properly dwelt, to test that testimony still further by reading the earlier statements of those witnesses made to the police and entered in the police diary; in other words, to treat as evidence what could be used at all events only for the purpose of discrediting those witnesses—Dal Sing, 44 Cal. 876 (P.C.).

This section is not meant to enable a Court to remedy an important error in procedure which might have been calculated to prejudice the accused in the trial, and which, in fact, causes the trial to be vitiated. The proper course is to set aside the conviction and direct a retrial—Hari, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 145 (179), 28 S.L.R. 397, 1935 Cr.C. 753, 157 I.C. 697, 36 Cr.L.J. 1161.

376. In any case submitted under section 374, whether tried with the aid of assessors or by jury, the High Court—

Power of High Court to confirm sentence or annul conviction

- (a) may confirm the sentence, or pass any other sentence warranted by law, or
- (b) may annul the conviction, and convict the accused of any offence of which the Sessions Court might have convicted him, or order a new trial on the same or an amended charge, or
- (c) may acquit the accused person:

Provided that no order of confirmation shall be made under this section until the period allowed for preferring an appeal has expired, or, if an appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal is disposed of.

1059. Power of High Court:—Though a High Court has power to substitute its own finding for the unanimous verdict of the jury in a trial for murder, when the sentence comes on for confirmation before the High Court, still as a matter of practice the High Court will not generally allow the verdict to be attacked arbitrarily. It is necessary that the convict must show prima facie that the verdict is unsupported by evidence. The High Court will not permit the same latitude in the criticism of the evidence before the jury that it allows in an ordinary appeal from a trial with assessors—Gul, 15 SLR 103, 23 CrLJ 33, 64 IC 657, AIR. 1921 Sind 84 (F.B.); Khadim v Emp., 38 CrLJ 808, 169 IC 716, 31 SLR 82, AIR. 1937 Sind 162. The High Court should be reluctant to differ from unanimous opinion of the jury apart from strong reasons which would induce it to do so—Kumarish Chandra Karmakar v. Emp., 65 CLJ 423 (424). In capital sentence cases though the High Court is not bound by the verdict of the jury it must rely upon the jury's verdict if it answers a reasonable test. Capital offences are not to be tried as res integra on the paper-book. But if there is no sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction the High Court has an obligation to say so—Asraf Ali, 34 CrLJ 533 (536), Ind Rul 1933 Cal. 354, 37 CWN 595, 143 IC 173, 1933 Cr.C 624, AIR 1933 Cal. 426. But the High Court will undoubtedly interfere with the verdict if it is perverse or if evidence has been improperly admitted or excluded, or if there is a misdirection by the Judge—Gul, supra. Where there has been a misdirection in the summing up to the jury, the conviction and sentence should be set aside and a retrial ordered—Rajab Ali, 31 C.W.N. 881, 28 CrLJ. 742 (744), 46 CLJ. 31, 103 IC. 790. But the questions of misdirection are of less importance in a case of reference, because on a reference the High Court is bound to come to its own independent conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, independently of the verdict of the jury or of the opinion of the Judge—Hazrat Gul Khan, 32 C.W.N. 345 (349), 27 CrLJ. 546, 47 CLJ. 240.

In disposing of a reference under sec. 374, Cr. P. C., and the appeals by the accused, the High Court is bound to satisfy itself by going through the evidence whether the accused have been rightly convicted, but in doing so it must attach considerable weight to the verdict of the jury. If after examining the evidence which is admissible in law, it finds, even without any opportunity of hearing witnesses and seeing their demeanour, that certain facts emerge from the evidence as proved beyond reasonable doubt and the decision in the case depends upon inference to be drawn from these proved facts, it is not bound to order a retrial. When, however, the evidence cannot be properly weighed by the Court without hearing witnesses and seeing their demeanour in the witness box and it is not in a position to say whether the facts from which inferences are to be drawn are true or false, re-trial should be ordered. It cannot, therefore, be accepted as a broad proposition that in dealing with a reference under sec. 374 and the appeal by the accused only two courses are open to the High Court, viz., either to acquit the accused or to order a re-trial—Benoyendra, 40 C.W.N. 432 (446), AIR. 1936 Cal. 73, 37 CrLJ. 394 (404), 161 IC. 74, 1936 Cr.C. 145, 64 CLJ. 154.

High Court may go into facts and law:—When a case is submitted under sec. 374, the whole case is reopened before the High Court, and the High Court is bound to go into the facts as well as the law, although the conviction is by the verdict of the jury—Jaffir Ali, 19 W.R. 57; Chatradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49; Daji, 17 Bom.L.R. 1072, 31 I.C. 994, 16 Cr.L.J. 818. Sec. 418, Cr. P. C., restricts appeals in jury cases as a general rule to matters of law. This restriction, however, does not apply to references under sec. 374—Rashbehari Lal, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 302, 13 P.L.T. 440, 1932 Cr.C. 774, 140 I.C. 846, 34 Cr.L.J. 83. Though the jury have unanimously convicted an accused for murder, it is the duty of the High Court on a reference under sec. 374, to be satisfied that the finding of fact is supported by the evidence on the record—Arshed Ali, 30 C.W.N. 166, 27 Cr.L.J. 378, 92 I.C. 890. Where the material evidence in the case could not be believed and was not supported by trustworthy evidence, and the confessions of some of the co-accused were not genuine but appeared to have been inspired in order to bring them into a line with the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, the High Court set aside the conviction and acquitted the accused, even though the jury passed a unanimous verdict of guilty, and there was no misdirection by the Judge to the jury—Panchu Mandal, 32 C.W.N. 702 (704), 29 Cr.L.J. 833, 111 I.C. 385. Although the powers of the High Court are not limited as in the case of an appeal from a trial held by jury, and although it is open to the High Court to go into the facts and to reject the finding of the jury if it is not supported by the evidence on the record, still where the case depends entirely upon the evidence of witnesses whom the High Court has never seen and has therefore, not the advantages of noticing the development of the prosecution case and the development of the evidence, the High Court will attach the greatest possible weight to the conclusion of the jury, especially where the jury were unanimous—Panchu Shaikh, 34 C.W.N. 1154 (1160), 1931 Cr.C. 242, 32 Cr.L.J. 190, 128 I.C. 811.

Where the High Court hears the appeal of a co-accused not sentenced to death along with a reference under sec. 374 in respect of a person sentenced to death, it was held under the old law that it was not open to the High Court to go into the facts in the appeal—Chatradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49, and the hearing of the appeal was limited, as laid down in secs. 418 and 423 (2), to points of law only—Ibid. But now see the new sub-section (2) of sec. 418. Sec. 376, Cr. P. C., is now to be read with sec. 418 (2), Cr. P. C. It is now an exception to the general rule that an appeal on a trial by jury will lie only on a matter of law. The High Court must allow the accused in confirmation case full liberty to attack the verdict of the jury not only on questions of law but on questions of fact, and sub-sec. (2), sec. 418, Cr. P. C., would appear to meet the practical difficulties of the situation which arise by giving to the person convicted on a verdict of the jury at the same trial as the person sentenced to death the same right to appeal on questions of fact as well as law—Khadim v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 808 (810), 169 I.C. 716, 31 S.L.R. 82, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 162.

Question of jurisdiction:—In determining whether the sentence should be confirmed, the High Court may also consider whether the conviction was by a Court of competent jurisdiction—Sarmukh, 2 All. 218.

1060. Commutation of sentence:—Where the condition of the convict was such that if he were ordered to be hanged, a complete severance of the body from the neck would ensure (owing to an aperture in the neck communicating with the larynx), the High Court commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation for life—Bodhoo, 2 C.L.R. 215. In Autor Singh, 17 C.W.N. 1213, 14 Cr.L.J. 642, 21 I.C. 882, there being a difference of opinion among the Judges who heard the reference, the case had to be referred to a third Judge (sec. 378) and there was a delay of six months in the High Court, before the final decision was arrived at. The third Judge upheld the conviction for murder, but commuted the sentence of death into one of transportation on the ground that the capital sentence had been hung over the heads of the accused for six months owing to the delay in the High Court. So also, the High Court commuted the capital sentence into transportation where the accused was tried for the second time before the Sessions Judge on a charge of murder committed 4 years ago—Buta Singh, 7 Lah. 396, 27 Cr L J. 1168.

Conviction for any other offence—Where the accused was tried before the Sessions Judge for murder and concealment of murder, and was convicted of murder, but no finding was given to the minor charge, the High Court in acquitting the accused of the charge of murder, could convict him of the minor charge, where there was evidence to support it, inspite of the omission of the Sessions Judge to give any finding in respect of this minor charge—Mahomed Shah, 1913 P.R. 8, 14 Cr L J 278, 223 P L R 1913. The Calcutta High Court altered the conviction for murder into a conviction for grievous hurt (sec 325, I P C) where it was found that the intention to kill was wanting—Hazrat Gul Khan, 32 CWN 345 (353), 29 Cr L J 546. The Bombay High Court holds that in a reference under this section, the High Court cannot alter a conviction for murder into one for culpable homicide not amounting to murder, unless there is a petition of appeal along with the reference. If no appeal is preferred, the only course is to order a retrial for the other offence—Balapa, 1 Bom. 639. But there is nothing in this section to warrant such a view.

1061. Retrial:—Where the evidence taken before the Court of Session was incomplete, and further evidence was necessary before judgment could be properly pronounced upon the accused, the High Court ordered a retrial—Daulat, 6 CWN 921. Where the accused was undefended in the Sessions Court, the High Court ordered a retrial on the same charge after proper arrangement being made for his defence—Mohar Ali, 19 CWN. 556, 16 Cr L J. 481, 21 C.L.J. 495, 29 I.C. 321. See also Balapa, 1 Bom 639 above.

Where there was no fair trial of the accused, he should under sec 376, Cr. P. C., be directed to be re-tried—Najab Gul Mohammad v Emp., 38 Cr.L J. 741, 169 I.C. 257, 9 R.Pesh 143, A I R 1937 Pesh. 71.

Where the conviction and sentence of death passed on the accused could not be allowed to stand as the accused was most probably prejudiced by the trial of murder charges along with the charge of conspiracy to commit dacoities and as the evidence in the case was not properly put before the jurors, the High Court refused to send back the case against him for separate re-trial on murder charges, considering that the occurrence took place nearly two years ago and that the witnesses would be liable to confuse what they heard since, with what they had actually seen at the time of occurrence, and further considering that the High Court was convicting him on the charge of conspiracy to commit dacoities and passing a sentence of transportation for life on him on that charge—Sanyasi Gan v Emp., 38 Cr L J. 1018 (1021), 171 I.C. 183, 10 R C. 235, A.I.R. 1937 Cal 269.

See also Benoyendra, cited in Note 1059 and Note 1143.

377. In every case so submitted, the confirmation of the sentence or any new sentence or order passed by the High Court, shall, when such Court consists of two or more Judges, be made, passed and signed by at least two of them.

Confirmation or new sentence to be signed by two Judges.

The new sentence or order referred to in sec. 377, Cr. P. C., refers to the powers of variation of the sentence, etc., conferred by sec. 376, Cr. P. C.—Fakira v. Emp., infra. When the Court of the Resident of Hyderabad (which exercises the function of the High Court in the Administered Areas in Hyderabad State) consists of two Judges and the order of confirmation of a death sentence is only made, passed and signed by one of them, the peremptory provisions of sec. 377 are not complied with. It follows that the sentence of death passed by the Court of Session has not been validly confirmed, and that it remains submitted to the Court of the Resident, who will require to dispose of the same under secs. 375 to 379, Cr. P. C.—Fakira v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 498 (500),

378. When any such case is heard before a Bench of Judges

Procedure in case of difference of opinion. and such Judges are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before another Judge, and such Judge, after such hearing as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

If the Judges of the High Court are in disagreement over the question of sentence, one favouring the death penalty and the other recommending that a sentence of transportation would meet the ends of justice, this in itself is a sufficient ground that death sentence is not to be inflicted. But this is not an inflexible rule, and the third Judge is required to go into the facts of the case and to judge for himself after considering all the circumstances, whether the case is or is not a fit one for the infliction of the death penalty—Dukari, 33 C.W.N. 1226 (1234), 31 Cr.L.J. 817, 125 I.C. 305, A.I.R. 1930 Cal 193, 1930 Cr.C. 225. When a case is referred to a third Judge, he must give his own independent opinion, and should not necessarily decide the case according to the opinion of the Judge who was in favour of acquittal—Bundu, 1887 A.W.N. 125.

379. In cases submitted by the Court of Session to the Procedure in cases submitted to High Court for confirmation. High Court for the confirmation of a sentence of death, the proper officer of the High Court shall, without delay, after the order of confirmation or other order has been made by the High Court, send a copy of the order under the seal of the High Court, and attested with his official signature, to the Court of Session.

380. Where proceedings are submitted to a Magistrate of Procedure in cases submitted by Magistrate not empowered to act under section 562. the first class or a Subdivisional Magistrate as provided by section 562, such Magistrate may thereupon pass such sentence or make such order as he might have passed or made if the case had originally been heard by him, and, if he thinks further inquiry or additional evidence on any point to be necessary, he may make such inquiry or take such evidence himself or direct such inquiry or evidence to be made or taken.

1062. The Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under sec. 562, must pass such sentence and make such order as he thinks fit. If, however, on a perusal of the evidence he comes to the conclusion that the conviction should not have taken place, he can acquit the accused under the powers vested in him under this section—Mi Thi v. Mi Kin, 1915 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 55, 29 I.C. 663, 16 Cr.L.J. 535. This view has not been accepted by the Madras High Court. It has been laid down that there is a very clear difference between sec. 349 and sec. 380. When a Magistrate of the second or third class submits proceedings under sec. 349 he does not convict but merely expresses the opinion that an accused person is guilty. But when a case is submitted under sec. 562 a conviction has first of all to be recorded and so when the proceedings reach the Magistrate for disposal under sec. 380, that Magistrate has to deal with a person who has been convicted. It is not permissible for the Magistrate acting under sec. 380 to set aside the conviction and to acquit him—Public Prosecutor v. Malaipati, 34 Cr L.J. 1043, 145 I.C. 659, 1933 M.W.N. 716, 65 M.L.J. 405, 38 M.L.W. 428, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 728, 1933 Cr.C. 1312, 57 Mad. 85.

The Magistrate to whom the case is referred cannot send the case back to the inferior Magistrate. Where a second class Magistrate, finding the accused guilty of an offence under sec. 325, I.P.C., submitted the case to the District Magistrate for an order under sec. 562, but the District Magistrate sent the case back to the 2nd class Magistrate pointing out that sec. 562 [before its present amendment] was inapplicable (as the offence was beyond its scope), it was held that the District Magistrate's order sending back the case was illegal; because, under this section, he could pass such sentence or order as he might have passed if the case had originally come to him, and he could not have sent it to the second class Magistrate for the purpose of sentence if he had originally heard it—Abdul, 4 L.B.R. 150, 7 Cr L.J. 449.

Appeal:—See sections 407 and 408 as now amended

CHAPTER XXVIII.

OF EXECUTION.

381. When a sentence of death passed by a Court of Session is submitted to the High Court for confirmation, such Court of Session shall, on receiving the order of confirmation or other order of the High Court thereon, cause such order to be carried into effect by issuing a warrant or taking such other steps as may be necessary.

Execution of order passed under section 376.

"The date named by the Sessions Court, in its warrant for the execution of a sentence of death, shall not be less than fourteen or more than twenty-one days from the date of the issue of such warrant."—Cal. G. R. & C. O., page 39.

382. If a woman sentenced to death is found to be pregnant, the High Court shall order the execution of the sentence to be postponed, and may, if it thinks fit, commute the sentence to transportation for life.

Postponement of capital sentence on pregnant woman.

1063. The fact that the accused is a pregnant woman is not a sufficient ground for commutation of sentence—Panhee, 15 W.R. 66; in such a case, execution will be deferred until delivery, as provided by this section.

The High Court is the only tribunal in which the law has vested the power of postponing the execution of a sentence of death passed on a woman found to be pregnant—Anonymous, 2 Weir 441 (442).

The pregnancy of the woman should be certified by a civil surgeon—Bombay Gazette, 1879, page 471.

383. Where the accused is sentenced to transportation or imprisonment in cases other than those provided for by section 381, the Court passing the sentence shall forthwith forward a warrant to the jail in which he is, or is to be confined, and, unless the accused is already confined in such jail, shall forward him to such jail, with the warrant.

Execution of sentences of transportation or imprisonment in other cases.

1064. Sentence when to commence:—A sentence of imprisonment ought to commence from the time the sentence is passed. A sentence of imprisonment to take effect at a future date is bad in law. A Magistrate has no power to postpone the execution of the sentence at the request of the accused—Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47. Where a Magistrate passes a sentence of imprisonment on an accused and admits him to bail in order that he may have the means of appealing, held that the admission to bail does not make the sentence one to commence at a future date, and does not, therefore, make it illegal—Okhoy Kumar, 7 C.L.R. 393; Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47. When a Judge convicts the accused, he must pass sentence on him at once; he has no power to adjourn the passing of sentence for an indefinite period—Keshavlal, 14 Bom.L.R. 144, 13 Cr.L.J. 288.

The commencement of the sentence cannot also be antedated. A sentence of imprisonment for the time already passed in the lock-up is illegal. If the Magistrate thinks that the time already spent by the accused in detention has been a sufficient punishment for his offence (petty theft of plantains), the proper course would be to sentence him to one day's imprisonment. He would then be released on the same day on which he was sentenced—Tha Hmun, 4 L.B.R. 152, 7 Cr.L.J. 453; Bhogel, 1907 P.W.R. 9, 5 Cr.L.J. 217. Nowhere does the Code provide for the antedating of a sentence of imprisonment, and the antedating of a sentence of imprisonment seems to be contrary to the spirit of secs. 383 and 397—Nga Po Min, 34 Cr.L.J. 447, 142 I.C. 728, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 28, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang 45, 1933 Cr.C. 275. A sentence of imprisonment until the rising of the Court is good and legal—Bhogel, 1907 P.W.R. 9, 5 Cr.L.J. 217 (218).

When a prisoner has been committed to jail under two separate warrants, the sentence in the one to take effect from the expiry of the sentence in the other, the date of such second sentence shall, in the event of the first sentence being remitted on appeal, be presumed to take effect from the date on which he was committed to jail under the first or original sentence—Cal. G. R. & C. O., page 40.

Where to be imprisoned:—When a case is submitted to the High Court under sec. 307, and the High Court passes a sentence, it does so as a Court of Reference and not in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction; and, therefore, it has power, on conviction and sentence, to send the accused to jail outside the Presidency town. The High Court is required to send the accused to that jail in which he would have been confined by the Court submitting the case—Horace Lyall, 29 Cal. 286.

It is illegal for a Magistrate to direct the accused to be imprisoned in a Police lock-up. A jail is a prison within the meaning of the Prisons Act and the Prisoners Act, but it does not include a police lock-up—Po Thin, 7 L.B.R. 62, 15 Cr.L.J. 10, 22 I.C. 154.

It is illegal to confine a person in a jail other than that mentioned in the warrant—Shamsonnessa v. Anne Lote, 11 Cal. 527 (cited under sec. 384).

Calculation of period of imprisonment:—In calculating sentences of imprisonment, the day on which the sentence is passed and the day of release ought to be included and considered as days of imprisonment; for example, a man sentenced on the 1st January to one month's imprisonment should be released on the 31st January, and not on the 1st February.—Mad. G. O. No. 2411, dated 22-11-81.

Sentence upheld in appeal:—The procedure on the Sessions Court upholding a sentence of imprisonment on appeal is to issue a warrant to the jail under this section, and where the accused is on bail and is not present the Court issues a warrant for his arrest to a Police Officer under sec. 77, Cr. P. Code. There is no procedure laid down by the Code that the Court should ask the sureties to ask the accused to surrender. The accused commits contempt of Court by evading the warrants of the Sessions Court and also by having the misrepresentation made in his application of revision to the High Court that he was in jail and should be released on bail—Mumtaz v. Chhutwa, 41 Cr.L.J. 741, 189 I.C. 468, A.I.R. 1940 All. 386, 1940 A.L.J. 309

384. Every warrant for the execution of a sentence of imprisonment shall be directed to the officer in charge of the jail, or other place in which the prisoner is, or is to be, confined.

1065. The warrant of imprisonment must be signed by the Magistrate; and the signature should be affixed by pen and not by means of a stamp—Subramanya Ayyar, 6 Mad. 396.

The period of imprisonment should be definite; thus, in an order under sec. 123, the Magistrate should state the period for which the accused is to be imprisoned in default of finding security; it is illegal to direct the accused to be imprisoned until he gives security—Maulamdi v. Taripulla, 8 Cal. 644.

It is illegal to confine a person in a jail other than that mentioned in the warrant. Where a sheriff's officer delivered over to the officer-in-charge of the Alipore Jail, a judgment-debtor who had been duly committed to the Presidency Jail, the confinement in the Alipore Jail was held to be illegal—Shumsonnessa v. Anne Love, 11 Cal. 527.

385. When the prisoner is to be confined in a jail, the warrant shall be lodged with the jailor.

Warrant with whom to be lodged.

386. (1) Whenever an offender has been sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may take action for the recovery of the fine in either or both of the following ways, that is to say, it may—

Warrant for levy of fine.

(a) issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by attachment and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender;

(b) issue a warrant to the Collector of the District authorising him to realise the amount by execution according to civil process against the moveable or immoveable property, or both, of the defaulter:

Provided that, if the sentence directs that in default of payment of the fine the offender shall be imprisoned, and if such offender has undergone the whole of such imprisonment in default, no Court shall issue such warrant unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing it considers it necessary to do so.

(2) The Provincial Government may make rules regulating the manner in which warrants under sub-section (1), clause (a), are to be executed, and for the summary determination of any claims made by any person other than the offender in respect of any property attached in execution of such warrant.

(3) Where the Court issues a warrant to the Collector under sub-section (1), clause (b), such warrant shall be deemed to be a decree, and the Collector to be the decree-holder, within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and the nearest

Civil Court by which any decree for a like amount could be executed shall, for the purposes of the said Code, be deemed to be the Court which passed the decree, and all the provisions of that Code as to execution of decrees shall apply accordingly:

Provided that no such warrant shall be executed by the arrest or detention in prison of the offender.

Change:—The whole section has been redrafted by sec. 102 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The old section stood as follows:—

“386. Whenever an offender is sentenced to pay a fine, the Court passing the sentence may, in its discretion, issue a warrant for the levy of the amount by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender, although the sentence directs that, in default of payment of the fine, the offender shall be imprisoned.”

The main changes introduced are:—Firstly, under the old law, fine could be recovered only by distress and sale of moveable property; under the present law it can be recovered by sale of immoveable property also, as provided in clause (b). Secondly, under the old law, fine could be recovered by distress and sale even though the offender had undergone the full term of imprisonment in default of payment of fine; the present section ordinarily prohibits the recovery of fine in such cases, and allows it only on special reasons; see the proviso to sub-sec. (1). Thirdly, sub-sections (2) and (3) have been newly added. The reasons have been stated below. In clause (a) the word ‘attachment’ has been substituted for ‘distress’ as it is “more appropriate.”

The words, “Provincial Government” have been substituted for “Local Government” by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1066. Scope of section:—Sections 63–70, I P C, and the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code in respect of levy of fines shall apply to all fines imposed under any Act, Regulation, Rule or Bye-law unless the Act, Regulation, Rule or Bye-law contains an express provision to the contrary—Section 25, General Clauses Act (X of 1897).

Compensation under section 250 of this Code shall be recoverable as a fine, and this section prescribes the mode in which the fine may ordinarily be recovered—Paryag v. Arjun Mean, 22 Cal 139. But the provisions of this section do not apply to fines imposed under Act XXI of 1856 (Abkari Act); such fines cannot be levied by distress and sale of the offender’s property—Junglee Beldar, 17 W.R. 7.

A warrant can be issued under this section only to levy a fine, but not to recover the amount of damage done to a Railway carriage, where no fine has been imposed on the offender. Such warrant is illegal and cannot be executed under this section—Abdul Majid v. Mukherji, 10 P.L.T. 124, 30 Cr.L.J. 635, 116 I.C. 524.

1067. Sentence of fine:—It should be specific:—A sentence of fine imposed upon more than one prisoner individually and collectively, is not a proper sentence. It should be specifically stated in the sentence what amount each individual prisoner is to pay—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R App. 5

It should be levied immediately:—There should be no delay in the levy of a fine directly upon passing a sentence. A Magistrate cannot defer the levying of the fine imposed on the prisoner till the period of appeal shall have expired, or until the orders of the Appellate Court are received on appeal preferred by the accused. Nor can the Appellate Court order the original Court to abstain from levying the fine till the disposal of the appeal—2 W.R. (Cr. Let.) 13. As to the period of limitation within which fine may be recovered, see section 70, I. P. Code

Who can levy fine:—The term ‘Court’ is not restricted to the particular individual who held office. The successor in office of a Judge or Magistrate may levy a fine imposed by his predecessor—Chunder Coomar v. Modhusoodun, 9 W.R. 50.

Refund of fine :—When a person pays money into the Criminal Court in payment of the fine imposed on the accused, the money must in law be deemed to have become the property of the accused because title thereto must pass to the Crown. There is no provision in the Cr. P. Code that on reversal of the sentence the Crown must return the amount to anybody other than the accused, even if the amount had been paid by such other person. He can, however, claim the amount from the accused—Hiralal Jindani v. Official Assignee, 38 Cr.L.J. 199, 166 I.C. 344, 1936 M.W.N. 1246, 9 R.M. 363, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 130, 45 M.L. 222, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 191.

1068. Clause (a):—Distress and sale—It is lawful for the Magistrate to issue his warrant for the levy of the fine by distress and sale of the goods of the offender, and at the same time to order his imprisonment for non-payment of fine. It is not necessary to postpone imprisonment till the distress and sale of goods have failed to realise the fine, and the imprisonment should not be allowed to stop the process for the levy of fine so as to give the offender time to remove his goods beyond the reach of the law—Jungle Beldar, 17 W.R. 7. The surplus sale-proceeds in the hands of the first mortgagee must be regarded as moveable property and as such liable to distress under this section; and the Crown is entitled to priority over the claim of others—Pichu v. Secretary of State, 40 Mad. 767, 18 Cr.L.J. 426, 38 I.C. 986, 5 M.L.W. 664, 1917 M.W.N. 20, 21 M.L.T. 71.

A Magistrate acting under this section cannot attach salary, which the salary-earner has not only not drawn, but has not even yet earned. The warrant can issue only after the salary has come into the salary-earner's possession or into that of the bailiff in his behalf. The words "moveable property" as used in this section cannot be held to include salary not yet drawn from the treasury for or by the person who is entitled to it—Maung Soe Hlaing v. Ma Thein Khin, 36 Cr.L.J. 850, 155 I.C. 742, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 82, 1934 Cr.C. 514.

This clause allows the distress and sale of moveable property of the offender. But growing crops are not moveable property for the purposes of this clause—Anonymous, 2 Weir 444. Rights and interests or shares in the joint moveable property of a joint Hindu family, of which the accused is a member, cannot be seized and sold under this clause—Anonymous, 2 Weir 442 (443); Q-E v. Sita Nath, 20 Cal. 478; Hira Lal v. Crown, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 166; Rajendra, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 292, 12 Pat. 29, 33 Cr.L.J. 872, 140 I.C. 101, 13 P.L.T. 549, 1932 Cr.C. 764, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 281; Pramatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 503, 143 I.C. 97, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 402, 37 C.W.N. 567, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 334, 1933 Cr.C. 580, 60 Cal. 932; Manmatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 579, 143 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 401, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 390, 1933 Cr.C. 579, 60 Cal. 851; Shrawan, 34 Cr.L.J. 1263, 146 I.C. 371, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 248, 1933 Cr.C. 932, 29 N.L.R. 320; Pritamdas, 34 Cr.L.J. 354, 142 I.C. 524, A.I.R. 1933 Sind. 43, 1933 Cr.C. 189, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind. 102. Section 386 (1) (a), Cr. P. C., authorizes the Court passing a sentence of fine to recover the amount by sale of moveable property of the offender. It cannot be said that moveable property owned by a coparcenary body is the property of the 'offender'. It is the property owned by several persons in which the offender has an interest which is unascertained and this will be the state of affairs so long as the property is not partitioned and the joint conditions continue. Therefore the fine imposed upon a coparcener cannot be realized by sale of moveable property belonging to the coparceners—Bansraj Das v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1939 Ail. 373 (374), 183 I.C. 134, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 247. But in such a case the onus rests on the coparcener claiming the property as joint to prove the same—Narasanna, 55 Mad. 1041, 1932 Cr.C. 566, 33 Cr.L.J. 622, 138 I.C. 548, 1932 M.W.N. 457, 63 M.L.J. 142, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 579, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 538, 36 M.L.W. 402. If the accused is a member of an Alayasantana family, the distress and sale of his moveable property in execution of a warrant under this clause is illegal—Achuma v. Rudra, 2 Weir 443. The proper procedure for recovery of the fine out of the undivided interest in joint family moveable property is that prescribed by Order 21, rule 47, C. P. Code (appointment of receiver, or issue of prohibitory order), and not attachment by way of seizure—Narasanna, supra.

According to the Sind Court the proper procedure is not under sec. 386 (a), but under sec. 386 (b). The Court which imposed the fine may issue its warrant to the Collector of the district, and that officer may proceed as the law directs—Pritamdas, 34 Cr.L.J. 354, 142 I.C. 524, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 43, 1933 Cr.C. 189, Ind. Rul 1933 Sind 102; Sahadto v. Ram Kishun, 33 Cr.L.J. 671, 138 I.C. 310, 13 P.L.T. 235, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 212, 1932 Cr.C. 493, Ind. Rul 1932 Pat. 180. But according to the Bombay High Court, the words "belonging to the offender" do not mean "belonging exclusively to the offender" and therefore the share of the accused in the moveable property of the joint Hindu family of which the accused is a member can be attached—Shivlingappa v. Gurlingava, 49 Bom 906, 27 Bom.L.R. 1363, 27 Cr.L.J. 652 (655). Where on the death of the offender the surviving members of his family succeeded by survivorship to the whole of the properties, there is no moveable property belonging to him which can be attached under this section after his death for his liability—Ram Chander, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 301, 13 P.L.T. 536, 1932 Cr.C. 773, 33 Cr.L.J. 958, 140 I.C. 72, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 290 (F.B.). Moveable property (money) belonging to the accused's brother and deposited in Court by the accused's brother as security for the appearance of the accused in a criminal trial cannot be seized, as the money does not belong to the accused. Even the fact that the accused and his brother are members of a joint Hindu family will not enable the Court to seize the money—Girdhari Lal, 19 A.L.J. 887, 22 Cr.L.J. 744. Moveable property of the offender in a Native State cannot be seized for the realisation of a fine adjudged by a British Court; only the property remaining in British India can be seized and sold—Anonymous, 2 Weir 444.

When moveable property belonging to coparceners was attached for realisation of fine imposed on one of them and another coparcener paid the fine to save the property from being sold away, the latter is entitled to recover back the amount paid by him from the Government—Bansraj Das v. Secretary of State, A.I.R. 1939 All 373, 183 I.C. 134.

1069. Clause (b):—The old law provided for the distress and sale of moveable property only; immoveable property could not be attached and sold for the recovery of fine—Madari v. Mehr Din, 22 Cr.L.J. 399, 61 I.C. 527 (Lah.); Lallu, 5 B.H.C.R. 63; Sitanath, 20 Cal. 478. Clause (b) now allows attachment and sale of immoveable properties also.

Where the accused, who was a member of a Hindu coparcenary, had unascertained share in standing crops belonging to all members of the family, the entire standing crops cannot be attached and sold in execution at the instance of the Collector of the district authorised to realise the fine from the accused in accordance with the provisions of this clause—Kollivenkataratnam v. Collector of Kistna, 37 Cr.L.J. 836, 163 I.C. 480, 43 M.L.W. 760, 70 M.L.J. 717, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 560, 1936 M.W.N. 728.

1070. Proviso:—Levy of fine after imprisonment.—It was held under the old section that an offender who had undergone the full term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced in default of payment of fine was still liable to have the amount levied by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to him—Modosoodun, 3 W.R. 61, because the imprisonment which the Court imposed in default of payment was intended as a punishment for non-payment and not as a satisfaction and discharge of the amount due—Gulab Chand, Ratanlal 91 (92).

The proviso in the present section now lays down that if the offender has undergone the whole term of the imprisonment awarded in default of fine, the Court should not issue a warrant for levy of the fine. "The new proviso directs that after the imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine has been served, no further steps should be taken for the recovery of the fine, unless the Court for special reasons to be recorded considers it necessary. The infliction of a double punishment is ordinarily uncalled for, and by the issue of warrants for the recovery of fines when there is no real reason why they should be recovered, the time of the police is frequently wasted. Convicted persons also are thus harassed for long periods after, they have expiated their offences by undergoing imprisonment"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

"Unless for special reasons to do so" :—These words at the end of the proviso are intended for the case of a contumacious person who may evade the fine and suffer imprisonment, and yet having the means to pay the fine, would not pay the fine. In such a case, the serving of the period of imprisonment provided in default of payment of fine should not absolve the person from paying the fine. See Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February, 1923, page 2061.

Section 386 (1) (b), proviso, requires the Magistrate to record his special reasons for issuing a distress warrant only when the warrant is issued after the offender has undergone the whole of the imprisonment in default. When the warrant was issued before the whole of the imprisonment in default had been undergone, it cannot be said that the issue of the warrant was illegal or that the sale was illegal merely because reasons were not recorded for issuing the warrant—Sarojini, 43 C.W.N. 443 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 654, 182 I.C. 315, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 337, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 471. The proviso does not apply to a case where the offender has not undergone the whole of the term of imprisonment to which he was sentenced—Nikantha v Bisakha, 36 Cr.L.J. 1267, 157 I.C. 1031, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 546, 1935 Cr.C. 938. The proviso applies in terms only to the issue of a fresh warrant and does not require the withdrawal of a warrant already issued before expiration of the sentence in default of payment. In dealing with such existing warrant the Court should, however, follow the policy which seems to have inspired the proviso to sec 386. The policy appears to be that in general an offender ought not to be required both to pay the fine and to serve the sentence in default. But the proviso enables a warrant to be issued for recovery of the fine, even if the whole sentence in default has been served, if the Court considers that there are special reasons for issuing the warrant. The special reasons should be reasons accounting for the fact that the fine has been recovered before the sentence in default has been served, and any reasons which are directed to that point would be relevant. It may be that the authorities, through no negligence on their part, did not know of the existence of the property or the accused may have inherited property after he served his sentence in default; or there may not have been time to execute the warrant. Matters of that sort would all be special reasons for issuing a warrant after the sentence in default had been served; and, in the same way, they are reasons justifying the Court in refusing to withdraw a warrant already issued—Digambar, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 160, 37 Bom.L.R. 99, 36 Cr.L.J. 1034, 156 I.C. 772, 1935 Cr.C. 320, 59 Bom. 350. Except in special cases it is both undesirable and unfair to seek to realise a fine when the sentence ordered to be served in default of payment of the fine has already been served in full and the proviso is intended to deal with cases where for some sufficient reason, the authorities have not been able to realise the fine before the default sentence has been served. That the accused is a man of dangerous character is not a special reason within the meaning of the proviso to this section—Jadabendra, 40 C.W.N. 604 (607), 37 Cr.L.J. 524, 161 I.C. 979, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 149, 1936 Cr.C. 291.

Where a sentence of imprisonment is imposed by way of providing a sanction for the payment of a fine if the fine is not paid, and the sentence is served out in its entirety, it is still possible to insist on payment of the fine being made. To serve the sentence of imprisonment is not to be taken as an exoneration or absolution as regards the payment of fine—Nikantha v Bisakha, 36 Cr.L.J. 1267, 157 I.C. 1031, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 546, 1935 Cr.C. 938.

Where the accused was released after undergoing his full term of imprisonment on offering security for fine payable by instalments and was recommitted to jail for default in making payment, held that the original order releasing the prisoner was illegal and that there was no law to order imprisonment in default of fine then—Teja Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 503, 161 I.C. 886, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 348, 37 P.L.R. 45, 1936 Cr.C. 268.

1071. Sub-section (2):—Claims of third parties—By this sub-section power is given to the Local Government to make rules regarding the execution of warrant and the determination of claims—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

Notifications :—It is provided in para. 819 of the Manual of Government Orders that the inquiry shall be conducted in the same way as an inquiry under O. XXI, rr. 58 to 61, Civil Procedure Code—Harimal, 34 Cr.L.J. 847, 144 I.C. 883, A.I.R. 1933 All. 135, 1933 A.L.J. 265, 1933 Cr.C. 278.

For Rules framed by the Government of Bihar and Orissa under this clause, see Notification No. 251-J. R., dated May 17, 1927, published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette, 1927, Part II, p. 689, and reproduced in the Supplement to the Bihar and Orissa Local Statutory Rules and Orders, 1927, Vol. II, p. 11. See Suraj Narain, 35 Cr.L.J. 682 (864), 148 I.C. 321, 15 P.L.T. 57, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 178.

No rules have been made by the Government of Bengal under this sub-section for the determination of the claims of third parties to property attached under sub-sec. (1), para (a) of the section—Manmatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 579 (580), 143 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 401, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 390, 1933 Cr.C. 579, 60 Cal. 851. It appears, however, that the Government of Bengal framed rules in the year 1925 which are contained in Circular Order No. 6 (Criminal) of 1925. The relevant rule is 117 (4) which reads—"If any person makes any claims in respect of the property attached, then the ownership of such property shall be determined by the Magistrate who issued the warrant, or his successor in office or the Magistrate in charge of accounts. The services of a junior Deputy Magistrate or Sub-Deputy Magistrate or Circle Officer may be utilised, if necessary, for the investigation of such claims." There is accordingly no necessity for a Magistrate in Bengal to follow the procedure laid down in Or. 21, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code; but on the other hand he is not entitled to utilise the services of a Police Officer in investigating such claims, nor is he entitled to rely simply on the report of a police officer—Sarojini, 43 C.W.N. 443 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 654, 182 I.C. 315, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 337, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 471.

Inquiry into claims :—Under the old law, when a claim was preferred by a third party to the ownership of the property distrained, the Magistrate was not required by law to try any such claim, because this section did not contain any provision for the trial of claims which might be preferred to the property distrained under this section—Gasper, 22 Cal. 935; Hira Lal, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 166. What the Magistrate had to do in such a case was to postpone the sale of the property and to allow the claimant an opportunity of establishing his title in a Court having jurisdiction to determine civil rights—Anonymous, 2 Weir 445. When a claim was preferred, the Court was to direct postponement of the sale of the property for such time as might be necessary to enable the claimant to establish his right (by a civil suit). But if the property was of such a nature that an immediate sale would be for the benefit of the owner, the property could be sold and the sale proceeds held over—Chhagan, Ratanlal 976; Kandappa, 20 Mad 88; Gasper, 22 Cal. 935. No rules having been framed by the Bombay Government under this clause, the Bombay High Court held that it has no option but to follow the law as laid down in 22 Cal 935; 20 Mad. 88 and Ratanlal 976 and stayed the sale of the property attached for such time as will be sufficient to give claimant time to establish his right to property in a Civil Court—Panduraung, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 476, 1932 Cr.C. 604, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 501, 33 Cr.L.J. 805, 139 I.C. 541, 56 Bom. 364, 34 Bom.L.R. 1102. The Calcutta High Court left this point open in Manmatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 579, 143 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 401, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 390, 1933 Cr.C. 579, 60 Cal. 851. But see Sarojini, supra.

Under the present law, the Magistrate is empowered to determine summarily the claims of third parties. This view was taken in a Burma case—Mingaing, 1 Bur.S.R. 332.

It is obviously the duty of the Magistrate himself to record all the evidence of both the parties and then to pronounce its judgment upon it. Where the Magistrate did not himself make any enquiry into the objection to the attachment and dismissed it on the report of the Naib-Tahsildar, held that the procedure was wholly unwarranted—Parshotam, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 543, 1931 Cr.C. 783, 131 I.C. 912, 32 Cr.L.J. 812. Where the Magistrate acted solely on the report of the police, the Patna High Court also set aside a similar order—Bansidhar, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 698, 1933 Cr.C. 1551, 14 P.L.T. 639, 147 I.C. 730. A proper inquiry in accordance with the provisions of O. XXI, rr. 58 to 61, C. P. C., should be held in such cases—Harimal, 34 Cr.L.J. 847, 144 I.C. 883, A.I.R. 1933 All. 135, 1933 A.L.J. 265, 1933 Cr.C. 278.

The claim under sub-sec. (2), sec. 386 must be made promptly and can only be entertained so long as the attachment subsists. If such a claim has been preferred while the attachment subsists, the Court must not finally credit the money to Government until the claim has been disposed of; but the summary determination of claims under sub-sec. (2), sec. 386 can only be made while the attachment is subsisting. The claim preferred by the members of a joint Hindu family to the money which has been attached in realisation of a fine imposed on an individual member of the joint family and their application for refund of the same, cannot be entertained after the amount has been credited to the Government—Suraj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 181, 35 Cr.L.J. 682, 148 I.C. 321, 15 P.L.T. 57 (S.B.).

Reasons :—The law does not require that reasons should be given for selling attached property after the disposal of claims—Sarojini, 43 C.W.N. 443 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 654, 182 I.C. 315, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 337, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 471.

Limitation :—No period for limitation is provided for in this section—Suraj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 181 (183), 35 Cr.L.J. 682, 148 I.C. 321, 15 P.L.T. 57 (S.B.).

1072. Sub-section (3):—"We would add a clause after sub-section (2) to enable a fine to be realised through the Collector as if the order was a decree of a Civil Court. We can see no reason why a property-owner who may be able to conceal his moveables should not be forced to pay a fine which has been inflicted upon him by a Criminal Court, just as much, and by the same process, as a civil debt. It seems to be recognised that the liability is so enforceable by sec 70, Indian Penal Code, and the decision in Sitanath Mitra, I.L.R. 30 Cal. 478, and we think that this should be made clear by the section under consideration. The proper person to effect such realisation is, we think, the Collector of the district, who will be treated as the decree-holder"—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

Prior to 1923 it was only possible to realize a fine by distress and sale of moveable property. By the amendments of 1923 it was made lawful to proceed against the immovable property also. The plain reading of the section 386, Cr. P. C., as it now stands is that the warrant which is issued to the Collector must be accepted as a decree by the nearest Civil Court competent to execute it—Collector of Peshawar v. Abdul Majid, A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 40, 177 I.C. 162, 11 R.Pesh. 18, 1938 Pesh.L.J. 48.

The immovable property of an agriculturist can be attached and sold in execution of an order passed under this section, and the mere fact that under sub-sec (3) the warrant is to be deemed a decree does not justify a Court in holding that the exceptional provisions of sec 22 of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act must be applicable to such a warrant. Section 386, sub-sec. (3) only applies the provisions of the C. P. Code as to execution of decrees, and there is nothing in the C. P. Code which involves the application of sec 22 of the D. A. R. Act. Section 22 of that Act mainly has reference to decrees which are passed in the ordinary way in suits to which an agriculturist is a party, and the mere fact that the warrant under sec 386 (3), Cr. P. Code is executable as if it were a decree does not suffice to make the provision of sec 22 of the D. A. R. Act applicable to such a warrant—Collector v. Mahadu, 28 Bom.L.R. 1231, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 582 (583), 50 Bom. 844. In Punjab, sec 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act lays down that no land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe shall be sold in execution of any decree or order by any Civil Court, and the combined effect of that section and of sec 386 (3), Cr. P. Code is that such land cannot be sold in pursuance of a warrant issued by a Magistrate to the Collector for levy of a fine in a criminal case—Mulka, 30 Cr.L.J. 1006 (1007), 1929 Cr.C. 212, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 667, 119 I.C. 227.

1073. Revision:—The order of a Magistrate for sale of properties under this section is not a judicial proceeding and is not the proper subject of criminal revision;

Notifications :—It is provided in para. 819 of the Manual of Government Orders that the inquiry shall be conducted in the same way as an inquiry under O. XXI, r. 58 to 61, Civil Procedure Code—Harimal, 34 Cr.L.J. 847, 144 I.C. 883, A.I.R. 1933 All. 135, 1933 A.L.J. 265, 1933 Cr.C. 278.

For Rules framed by the Government of Bihar and Orissa under this clause, see Notification No 251-J. R., dated May 17, 1927, published in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette, 1927, Part II, p. 689, and reproduced in the Supplement to the Bihar and Orissa Local Statutory Rules and Orders, 1927, Vol. II, p. 11. See Suraj Narain, 35 Cr.L.J. 682 (864), 148 I.C. 321, 15 P.L.T. 57, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 178.

No rules have been made by the Government of Bengal under this sub-section for the determination of the claims of third parties to property attached under sub-sec (1), para (a) of the section—Manmatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 579 (580), 143 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1933 Cal 401, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal 390, 1933 Cr.C. 579, 60 Cal 851. It appears, however, that the Government of Bengal framed rules in the year 1925 which are contained in Circular Order No 6 (Criminal) of 1925. The relevant rule is 117 (4) which reads :—"If any person makes any claims in respect of the property attached, then the ownership of such property shall be determined by the Magistrate who issued the warrant, or his successor in office or the Magistrate in charge of accounts. The services of a junior Deputy Magistrate or Sub-Deputy Magistrate or Circle Officer may be utilised, if necessary, for the investigation of such claims." There is accordingly no necessity for a Magistrate in Bengal to follow the procedure laid down in Or. 21, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code; but on the other hand he is not entitled to utilise the services of a Police Officer in investigating such claims, nor is he entitled to rely simply on the report of a police officer—Sarojini, 43 C.W.N. 443 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 654, 182 I.C. 315, A.I.R. 1939 Cal 337, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 471.

Inquiry into claims :—Under the old law, when a claim was preferred by a third party to the ownership of the property distrained, the Magistrate was not required by law to try any such claim, because this section did not contain any provision for the trial of claims which might be preferred to the property distrained under this section—Gasper, 22 Cal 935; Hira Lal, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 166. What the Magistrate had to do in such a case was to postpone the sale of the property and to allow the claimant an opportunity of establishing his title in a Court having jurisdiction to determine civil rights—Anonymous, 2 Weir 445. When a claim was preferred, the Court was to direct postponement of the sale of the property for such time as might be necessary to enable the claimant to establish his right (by a civil suit). But if the property was of such a nature that an immediate sale would be for the benefit of the owner, the property could be sold and the sale proceeds held over—Chhagan, Ratanlal 976; Kandappa, 20 Mad 88; Gasper, 22 Cal 935. No rules having been framed by the Bombay Government under this clause, the Bombay High Court held that it has no option but to follow the law as laid down in 22 Cal 935; 20 Mad. 88 and Ratanlal 976 and stayed the sale of the property attached for such time as will be sufficient to give claimant time to establish his right to property in a Civil Court—Panduraung, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 476, 1932 Cr.C. 604, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 501, 33 Cr.L.J. 805, 139 I.C. 541, 56 Bom. 364, 34 Bom.L.R. 1102. The Calcutta High Court left this point open in Manmatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 579, 143 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 401, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 390, 1933 Cr.C. 579, 60 Cal. 851. But see Sarojini, supra.

Under the present law, the Magistrate is empowered to determine summarily the claims of third parties. This view was taken in a Burma case—Mingaing, 1 Bur.S.R. 332.

It is obviously the duty of the Magistrate himself to record all the evidence of both the parties and then to pronounce its judgment upon it. Where the Magistrate did not himself make any enquiry into the objection to the attachment and dismissed it on the report of the Na'ib-Tahsildar, held that the procedure was wholly unwarranted—Parshotam, A.I.R. 1931 Lah 543, 1931 Cr.C. 783, 131 I.C. 912, 32 Cr.L.J. 812. Where the Magistrate acted solely on the report of the police, the Patna High Court also set aside a similar order—Bansidhar, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 698, 1933 Cr.C. 1551, 14 P.L.T. 639, 147 I.C. 730. A proper inquiry in accordance with the provisions of O. XXI, rr. 58 to 61, C. P. C., should be held in such cases—Harimal, 34 Cr.L.J. 847, 144 I.C. 883, A.I.R. 1933 All. 135, 1933 A.L.J. 265, 1933 Cr.C. 278.

The claim under sub-sec. (2), sec. 386 must be made promptly and can only be entertained so long as the attachment subsists. If such a claim has been preferred while the attachment subsists, the Court must not finally credit the money to Government until the claim has been disposed of; but the summary determination of claims under sub-sec. (2), sec. 386 can only be made while the attachment is subsisting. The claim preferred by the members of a joint Hindu family to the money which has been attached in realisation of a fine imposed on an individual member of the joint family and their application for refund of the same, cannot be entertained after the amount has been credited to the Government—Suraj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 181, 35 Cr.L.J. 682, 148 I.C. 321, 15 P.L.T. 57 (S.B.).

Reasons :—The law does not require that reasons should be given for selling attached property after the disposal of claims—Sarojini, 43 C.W.N. 443 (444), 40 Cr.L.J. 654, 182 I.C. 315, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 337, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 471.

Limitation :—No period for limitation is provided for in this section—Suraj Narain, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 181 (183), 35 Cr.L.J. 682, 148 I.C. 321, 15 P.L.T. 57 (S.B.).

1072. Sub-section (3) :—“We would add a clause after sub-section (2) to enable a fine to be realised through the Collector as if the order was a decree of a Civil Court. We can see no reason why a property-owner who may be able to conceal his moveables should not be forced to pay a fine which has been inflicted upon him by a Criminal Court, just as much, and by the same process, as a civil debt. It seems to be recognised that the liability is so enforceable by sec. 70, Indian Penal Code, and the decision in Sitanath Mitra, I.L.R. 30 Cal. 478, and we think that this should be made clear by the section under consideration. The proper person to effect such realisation is, we think, the Collector of the district, who will be treated as the decree-holder”—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

Prior to 1923 it was only possible to realize a fine by distress and sale of moveable property. By the amendments of 1923 it was made lawful to proceed against the immovable property also. The plain reading of the section 386, Cr. P. C., as it now stands is that the warrant which is issued to the Collector must be accepted as a decree by the nearest Civil Court competent to execute it—Collector of Peshawar v. Abdul Majid, A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 40, 177 I.C. 162, 11 R.Pesh. 18, 1938 Pesh.L.J. 48.

The immovable property of an agriculturist can be attached and sold in execution of an order passed under this section, and the mere fact that under sub-sec. (3) the warrant is to be deemed a decree does not justify a Court in holding that the exceptional provisions of sec. 22 of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act must be applicable to such a warrant. Section 386, sub-sec. (3) only applies the provisions of the C. P. Code as to execution of decrees, and there is nothing in the C. P. Code which involves the application of sec. 22 of the D. A. R. Act. Section 22 of that Act mainly has reference to decrees which are passed in the ordinary way in suits to which an agriculturist is a party, and the mere fact that the warrant under sec. 386 (3), Cr. P. Code is executable as if it were a decree does not suffice to make the provision of sec. 22 of the D. A. R. Act applicable to such a warrant—Collector v. Mahadu, 28 Bom.L.R. 1231, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 582 (583), 50 Bom. 844. In Punjab, sec. 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act lays down that no land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe shall be sold in execution of any decree or order by any Civil Court, and the combined effect of that section and of sec. 386 (3), Cr. P. Code is that such land cannot be sold in pursuance of a warrant issued by a Magistrate to the Collector for levy of a fine in a criminal case—Mukha, 30 Cr.L.J. 1006 (1007), 1929 Cr.C. 212, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 657, 119 I.C. 227.

1073. Revision :—The order of a Magistrate for sale of properties under this section is not a judicial proceeding and is not the proper subject of criminal revision;

the claimant whose property is wrongly sold under this section may proceed by way of civil suit (either against the purchaser or against the Secretary of State)—Secretary of State v Sukhdeo, 1898 A.W.N. 173; Kandappa, 20 Mad. 88; Hira Lal, 1915 P.L.R. 28, 16 Cr.L.J. 166.

387. A warrant issued under section 386, sub-section (1), clause (a), by any Court may be executed within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Court, and it shall authorize the attachment and sale of any such property without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate or Chief Presidency Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 102 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The amendment is merely verbal, and consequential to the amendment of sec. 386. The word attachment has been substituted for the word distress in this section as well as in section 386, as the term is more appropriate.

388. (1) When an offender has been sentenced to fine only and to imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, and the fine is not paid forthwith, the Court may—

Suspension of execution of sentence of imprisonment.

(a) order that the fine shall be payable either in full on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order, or in two or three instalments, of which the first shall be payable on or before a date not more than thirty days from the date of the order and the other or others at an interval or at intervals, as the case may be, of not more than thirty days, and

(b) suspend the execution of the sentence of imprisonment and release the offender, on the execution by the offender of a bond, with or without sureties, as the Court thinks fit, conditioned for his appearance before the Court on the date or dates on or before which payment of the fine or the instalments thereof, as the case may be, is to be made; and, if the amount of the fine or of any instalment, as the case may be, is not realised on or before the latest date on which it is payable under the order, the Court may direct the sentence of imprisonment to be carried into execution at once.

(2) The provisions of sub-section (1) shall be applicable also in any case in which an order for the payment of money has been made on non-recovery of which imprisonment may be awarded and the money is not paid forthwith; and if the person against whom the order has been made, on being required to enter into a bond such as is referred to in that sub-section, fails to do so, the Court may at once pass sentence of imprisonment.

1073A. Change:—This section has been redrafted by the Criminal Procedure Code Second Amendment Act, XXXVII of 1923. This amendment has been made on the recommendation of the Indian Jails Committee. See Gazette of India, 1923, Part V, p. 242.

The provision for issue of warrant for levy of the amount of fine by distress and sale has been omitted. The case of Byravalu, 26 Mad. 127 (129), in which it was held that before sending a person to prison under sec. 388 (2) for non-payment of the compensation awarded under sec. 250 (which is recoverable as a fine) the Magistrate was bound to issue warrant for levy by distress of the amount, is no longer good law.

Sub-section (1):—Sub-section (1) is inapplicable where no alternative sentence of imprisonment (for non-payment of fine) has been passed. Where a Magistrate sentences an offender to a fine, but omits to pass a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, he has no power to bind over the accused in his own recognizance to appear [under clause (b)]—Venkatrapragada, 2 Weir 445.

The provisions of sub-sec. (1) refer solely to cases in which a sentence of fine only is passed. They are not applicable to a case where the sentence is a sentence of imprisonment combined with a sentence of fine, and it makes no difference whether the sentence of imprisonment is merely nominal, or is for a substantive term. The provisions of sub-sec. (2) refer to an order for payment of money which order is not a sentence passed upon an accused person. There is a clear distinction between the provisions of sub-sec. (1), which refer to a sentence passed in a trial and the provisions of sub-sec. (2), which refer to an order made by a Criminal Court for the payment of money, but which is not a punishment inflicted on an offender for a criminal offence. The provisions of the latter sub-section refer to cases like that of the payment of compensation under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., or the payment of the penalty due on a bond under sec. 514—Mohmade, 35 Cr.L.J. 608, 148 I.C. 112, 11 Rang 451, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 11, 1934 Cr.C. 77. See also Ali Hussain, 34 Cr.L.J. 530 (532), 143 I.C. 120, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 308, 56 C.L.J. 73, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 343, 1933 Cr.C. 408.

389. Every warrant for the execution of any sentence may be issued either by the Judge or Magistrate
Who may issue warrant. who passed the sentence, or by his successor in office.

See 9 W.R. 50 cited under sec. 386.

390. When the accused is sentenced to whipping only, the sentence shall, subject to the provisions of section 391, be executed at such place and time as the Court may direct.

Time and place of execution of sentence of whipping only.

The italicised words have been added by sec. 21 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

1074. It has been held that if the accused is sentenced to whipping only, the sentence cannot be deferred; it must be carried out as soon as practicable. This section authorises the Court to fix the time and place for its execution, but not to postpone it—Abdulla, Ratanlal 906; Meyyan, 26 Mad. 465. An order that an accused shall not be whipped until after the expiry of the sentence of imprisonment passed in another trial, is illegal. This sentence should be carried out as soon as practicable—Nga Po, L.B.R. (1900–1902) 53. The sentence cannot be postponed pending an intended appeal—Meyyan, 26 Mad. 465. But these cases should now be read subject to clause (a) of sec. 391 which allows a postponement of whipping if the accused furnishes bail.

Even if the case does not fall under sec. 391 (a), i.e., even though the accused is sentenced to whipping only, and does not furnish bail, the sentence of whipping need not necessarily be carried out on the very day that it is passed. The words "at such place and time as the Court may direct" give a wide discretion to the Court in the matter; and the Court may direct that the sentence should be carried out as soon as practicable. Thus, if the Court passes the sentence of whipping at a late hour on Saturday and directs the sentence to be carried out as soon as practicable, it is not illegal to carry out the sentence on Monday (whipping not being allowed on Sunday by the Jail Rules)—Gopala, 30 Bom.L.R. 389, 29 Cr.L.J. 573 (574), 100 I.C. 509.

For general rules as to whipping, see Notes under sec. 32.

Execution of sentence of whipping only, or of whipping in addition to imprisonment.

391. (1) When the accused—

(a) is sentenced to whipping only and furnishes bail to the satisfaction of the Court for his appearance at such time and place as the Court may direct, or

(b) is sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, the whipping shall not be inflicted until fifteen days from the date of the sentence, or if an appeal is made within that time, until the sentence is confirmed by the Appellate Court, but the whipping shall be inflicted as soon as practicable after the expiry of the fifteen days, or, in case of an appeal, as soon as practicable after the receipt of the order of the Appellate Court confirming the sentence.

(2) The whipping shall be inflicted in the presence of the officer in charge of the jail, unless the Judge or Magistrate orders it to be inflicted in his own presence.

(3) No accused person shall be sentenced to whipping in addition to imprisonment, when the term of imprisonment to which he is sentenced is less than three months.

1075. This section has been amended by sec. 22 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. The old section contemplated only those cases where the accused was sentenced to whipping as well as to imprisonment; if the accused was sentenced to whipping only, the section did not apply, and the sentence of whipping could not be postponed—Anonymous, 2 Weir 446. But the new clause (a) now provides for such cases.

Clause (a) provides that a sole sentence of whipping should not be inflicted, if the accused furnishes bail, until 15 days from the date of the sentence, or if an appeal is made within that time, until the sentence is confirmed on appeal. This is because the Code now provides for an appeal from a simple sentence of whipping (sec. 413) which formerly was not appealable—Gopala, 30 Bom.L.R. 389, 29 Cr.L.J. 573 (574), 109 I.C. 509, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 138, 10 A.I. Cr.R. 306.

Postponement of whipping till after expiry of imprisonment—Where a person has been sentenced to whipping as well as to imprisonment, the whipping may be postponed, as provided by this section, until 15 days from the date of sentence or until confirmation of the sentence on appeal, but it is illegal to postpone the sentence of whipping till after the term of imprisonment has expired—Anonymous, 6 M.H.C.R. App. 38; Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29; Habla, Ratanlal 803 (804); Jagannath, 4 Bom.L.R. 929. Where an accused is convicted of two different offences, for one of which he is sentenced to imprisonment, and for the other to whipping, it is not permissible to postpone the whipping merely because the accused appeals against his conviction for the first offence—

Jaicant, 4 Bom.L.R. 436. Where a Magistrate ordered that the prisoner be brought before him at the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment, and that the sentence of whipping should then be carried out, the High Court cancelled the sentence of whipping as having become inoperative and incapable of being carried out by lapse of time—Hur Chandra v. Jafar Ali, 20 W.R. 72. Where an accused is sentenced in one case to 18 months' imprisonment and 15 stripes, and in another case he is also sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment and 15 stripes and the Magistrate orders in the second case that the sentence passed in that case must take effect after the expiry of the sentence in the first case, held that the sentence of whipping in the second case is illegal and must be set aside, because under this section, whipping can be postponed till 15 days from the date of sentence or till the disposal of the appeal, but it cannot be postponed till 18 months—Sagram, Ratanlal 300 (301). Where the accused was sentenced to imprisonment for two years and was further ordered "to receive 30 stripes on the day of his release from prison," held that the sentence of whipping was altogether illegal and improper and must be set aside, as it was ordered to be carried out after the expiry of the imprisonment—Jiva Ram, 1881 A.W.N. 138.

As soon as practicable.—The whipping must be carried into effect as soon as practicable after the expiry of the time specified in this section. But if through accident, or neglect or wilful breach of duty of the officer the sentence of whipping is not immediately carried into execution, the prisoner is not thereby free from the liability of undergoing the sentence still remaining unexecuted—Mahadhu, Ratanlal 136.

An order which says that the stripes will be given after the sentence of imprisonment for two years has been undergone, is clearly incorrect in the sense that the time mentioned for inflicting the corporal punishment is not accordance with law—Rashbehari, 36 Cr.L.J. 100, 152 I.C. 291, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 551, 15 P.L.T. 475, 1934 Cr.C. 1195.

Double sentence of whipping.—An accused cannot be sentenced to a double sentence of whipping when he is convicted of two offences; thus, where a person is convicted of offences under secs. 454 and 380, I P C., it is illegal to pass a sentence of 15 stripes for each offence—Dagdu, Ratanlal 955. The High Court altered the sentence to 15 stripes for both the offences.

Sub-section (2).—Under the provisions of this sub-section whipping must be inflicted in the presence of an officer in charge of a jail unless the Judge or Magistrate orders it to be inflicted in his own presence. The Borstal Institution at Thayetmyo is not a jail, the Superintendent thereof is not an officer-in-charge of the jail, and, therefore, a sentence of whipping cannot be carried out in his presence. In cases of this kind where a youthful offender, for one offence, is ordered to be detained in a Training School or a Borstal Institution, and, for another offence tried at the same trial, is sentenced to whipping, the Magistrate must act under the provisions of sec. 390, Cr. P. C., and either order the whipping to be inflicted in his own presence, or direct that it shall be inflicted at some convenient jail in the presence of the officer-in-charge of the jail—Nga Pyu, 14 Rang. 625, 38 Cr.L.J. 33 (35), 165 I.C. 575, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 485, 1936 Cr.C. 976 (F.B.).

Sub-section (3).—When a sentence of imprisonment for less than three months is awarded, an additional sentence of whipping is illegal—Bhica, 2 Bom.L.R. 54.

392. (1) In the case of a person of or over sixteen years of age whipping shall be inflicted with a light rattan not less than half an inch in diameter, in such mode, and on such part of the person, as the Provincial Government directs; and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall be inflicted in such mode, and on such part of the person, and with such instruments, as the Provincial Government directs.

- (2) In no case shall such punishment exceed thirty stripes and, in the case of a person under sixteen years of age, it shall not exceed fifteen stripes.

Limit of number of stripes.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Number of stripes:—Under the provisions of this section and the next, not more than one sentence of whipping and that not exceeding thirty stripes, should be awarded at one time—Nga Po, 1906 U.B.R. (Cr. P. C.) 47, 4 Cr.L.J. 281.

393. No sentence of whipping shall be executed by instalments: and none of the following persons shall be punishable with whipping, namely:—

Not to be executed by instalments.
Exemptions.

- (a) females;
- (b) males sentenced to death or to transportation or to penal servitude, or to imprisonment for more than five years;
- (c) males whom the Court considers to be more than forty-five years of age.

1076. This section forbids the execution of the punishment of whipping in respect of certain persons, and since the execution is prohibited, such persons cannot be sentenced to whipping; for it is futile to pass a sentence which cannot be executed. Therefore, a person who is sentenced to 7 years' rigorous imprisonment cannot be sentenced to whipping in addition, because the execution of such punishment is prohibited by clause (b) of this section—Akbar, 1919 P.R. 30, 3 Lah L.J. 395, 21 Cr.L.J. 306, 55 I.C. 466.

Sentence of whipping cannot be enhanced:—The accused was convicted under sec. 382, I. P. C., and was sentenced to whipping, and the sentence was duly executed. An application was afterwards made to enhance the sentence on the ground that it was inadequate; it was held that the sentence of whipping could not be enhanced by the infliction of an additional number of stripes, because under this section no sentence of whipping could be executed by instalments—Balu, Ratanlal 537.

Clause (b) :—A sentence of whipping passed on a person who is already under sentence of death, etc., is illegal. Even if the sentence of whipping precedes instead of following the other sentence, the passing of the latter sentence renders the infliction of the punishment of whipping illegal—Anonymous, 1 Mad. 56.

No sentence of whipping can be passed on an accused who has been sentenced to more than five years' rigorous imprisonment. When, therefore, the accused was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 7 years and also ordered to receive 20 stripes, the sentence was against the provisions of this section—Sona Khan v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 429, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 22, 167 I.C. 655, 9 R.Pesh. 90.

Whipping cannot be given where a person has been sentenced to imprisonment for more than five years whether for the offence for which whipping has been given or for any other. The cumulative sentence of imprisonment of more than five years cannot be maintained in the case of an accused who has been sentenced to undergo punishment of whipping and vice versa—Karim Shah v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 681 (684), 182 I.C. 530, A.I.R. 1939 Pesh. 17.

The word "sentenced" is used in a general sense, whether sentenced in one case, or collectively in more than one case. Therefore, a person who is sentenced in two different cases to punishments which collectively exceed the term of five years (in Burma, seven years) cannot be punished with whipping—Nga Ni Gyi, 7 Rang 769, 1930 Cr.C. 305, 120 I.C. 697, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 138, 31 Cr.L.J. 176, Ind. Rul. 1930 Rang. 57, following 1 Mad. 56, 2 Weir 448. This section clearly lays down that a person who is sentenced to imprisonment for more than five years, shall not be punishable with stripes and there is ample authority for the proposition that this section applies even if the sentences aggregating more than five years' rigorous imprisonment are passed in different cases—Nur Hahi v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 104, 39 P.L.R. 226, 171 I.C. 864. Although there may be justification for interpreting the word "sentenced" as including the sentence of an offender in two or more different trials for offences committed before conviction in any one of such trials, there is no reason whatever to warrant the reading of this word in such a way as to suggest "undergoing a sentence". There can, therefore, be no justification for the taking into account of the period of imprisonment to which a man has already been sentenced before the commission of the offence for which the sentence of whipping with or without imprisonment is passed, in the computation of the maximum period of imprisonment fixed by sec. 393, Cr. P. C., as amended by the Whipping (Burma Amendment) Act, 1927—Nga Nye Nge, 35 Cr.L.J. 1027, 149 I.C. 1073, 1934 Cr.C. 375, A.I.R. 1934 Rang 58

394. (1) The punishment of whipping shall not be inflicted unless a medical officer, if present, certifies, or, if there is not a medical officer present, unless it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo such punishment.

Whipping not to be inflicted if offender not in fit state of health.

(2) If, during the execution of a sentence of whipping, a medical officer certifies, or it appears to the Magistrate or officer present, that the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo the remainder of the sentence, the whipping shall be finally stopped.

Stay of execution.

1077. "Particular attention should be directed to sec 394 which prohibits the execution of a sentence of whipping when the offender is not in a fit state of health to undergo that punishment, and all officers are reminded that the Governor-General in Council considers that the precaution of having a medical officer present at the time of infliction of the punishment should be observed in every instance when practicable"—Cal. G. R. & C. O., page 65

Before the commencement of whipping, the Medical Officer must give a certificate whether the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo the whole punishment of whipping. There is no provision of law authorising a medical officer to give a certificate that the accused is fit to receive only a portion of the sentence; such a certificate cannot be held as granted under sub-sec (1)—Public Prosecutor, 31 Mad 84, 17 M.L.J. 555, 7 Cr.L.J. 5. Such a certificate cannot be treated as one under sub-section (2), because that sub-section refers to a certificate granted during the execution of the sentence—Ibid.

Under sub-sec (1), the Medical Officer is to give a certificate either that the offender is in a fit state of health to undergo the whole sentence passed on him or that he is not in fit state of health to undergo it at all. If he certifies that the accused is fit to undergo a smaller number of stripes than that ordered by the Magistrate, the certificate cannot be held as one granted under this section, and is invalid; the Magistrate cannot in such a case inflict a smaller number of stripes in accordance with the medical certificate, and in lieu of the rest of the stripes not inflicted he cannot award imprisonment under sec. 393—Public Prosecutor, 31 Mad 84, 17 M.L.J. 555, 7 Cr.L.J. 5.

A Magistrate should not reject the punishment of whipping on the ground that the accused is too young and frail, unless he has medical opinion in support of his own—Maung Tin Hlaing v. The King, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 383, 41 Cr.L.J. 22, 184 I.C. 464.

395. (1) In any case in which, under section 394, a sentence of whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being executed, the offender shall be kept in custody till the Court which passed the sentence can revise it; and the said Court may, at its discretion, either remit such sentence, or sentence the offender in lieu of whipping, or in lieu of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not executed, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months or to a fine not exceeding five hundred rupees which may be in addition to any other punishment to which he may have been sentenced for the same offence.

(2). Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize any Court to inflict imprisonment for a term or a fine of an amount exceeding that to which the accused is liable by law, or that which the said Court is competent to inflict.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 105 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, to enable a sentence of fine to be awarded in lieu of a sentence of whipping which cannot be carried out. Under the old law it was held that the Court had no power to revise a sentence of whipping by inflicting a fine—Sheodin, 11 All 308; Anonymous, 2 Weir 449. These cases are now rendered obsolete.

1078. "Wholly or partially prevented" :—"Wholly prevented" refers to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 394; 'Partially prevented' refers to sub-sec. (2) of that section—Public Prosecutor, 31 Mad 84.

'The Court which passed the sentence can revise it' :—The only Court which can revise the sentence is the Court which passed the sentence. Even where a sentence of imprisonment and whipping passed by a District Magistrate is confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, still the Magistrate is not prevented from revising the sentence—Chetu, 1889 P.R. 10. But the words 'the Court which passed the sentence' do not mean the same officer who inflicted the sentence; therefore, where a Magistrate who passed the original sentence of whipping was transferred, the District Magistrate who had jurisdiction over the whole district was competent to commute the sentence of whipping to one of imprisonment—Chhajju, 1901 P.R. 33, 1902 P.L.R. 20.

Power of revision :—The Court can revise the sentence of whipping by awarding solitary confinement in lieu of whipping, under this section—Gaman, 1899 P.R. 14. The Court may remit the sentence altogether, even though it is competent to inflict a term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping—Po Thit, 1 L.B.R. 202.

The imprisonment which the Court can award under this section in lieu of whipping must not exceed the term which the Court is competent to award under sec. 32. Where a Magistrate sentences the accused to the maximum term of imprisonment which he is competent to inflict as well as whipping, and the whipping cannot be carried out, he cannot sentence him to a further term of imprisonment in lieu of whipping, but ought to remit the sentence of whipping altogether—Karat Ahmad, 2 Weir 449; Ram Baran, 21 All. 25; Barkat Ali, 1901 P.R. 11.

Section 562, Cr. P. Code :—The accused was sentenced to 25 lashes under sec. 379, I. P. C., and as it was reported that owing to an enlarged spleen the sentence of whipping could not be executed, the Magistrate directed him to enter into a bond under sec. 562, Cr. P. C., for one year. Held that the order was clearly beyond the Magistrate's powers. Section 395 (1), Cr. P. C., in such a case allows the Court to remit the sentence altogether or to sentence the offender in lieu of whipping to imprisonment or fine. The reason why a Court is not empowered to release an offender on his entering into a bond for good behaviour in lieu of whipping is obviously that if such was suitable, it should be imposed in the first instance—The King v. Ba Kyway, 39 Gr.L.J. 707, 176 I.C. 224, 11 R.R. 39, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 218.

396. (1) When sentence is passed under this Code on an escaped convict, such sentence, if of death, fine or whipping, shall, subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, take effect immediately, and, if of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, shall take effect according to the following rules, that is to say—

Execution of sentences on escaped convicts.

(2) If the new sentence is severer in its kind than the sentence which such convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect immediately.

(3) When the new sentence is not severer in its kind than the sentence the convict was undergoing when he escaped, the new sentence shall take effect after he has suffered imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, as the case may be, for a further period equal to that which, at the time of his escape, remained unexpired of his former sentence.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section—

- (a) a sentence of transportation or penal servitude shall be deemed severer than a sentence of imprisonment;
- (b) a sentence of imprisonment with solitary confinement shall be deemed severer than a sentence of the same description of imprisonment without solitary confinement; and
- (c) a sentence of rigorous imprisonment shall be deemed severer than a sentence of simple imprisonment with or without solitary confinement.

What this section contemplates is that the severer sentence must be undergone first. Where the accused who was a life-convict under sentence of transportation for murder was convicted for attempting to escape from lawful custody and was sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment, the latter sentence must not commence immediately, but should be undergone after the expiry of the sentence of transportation—Mahadu, Ratanlal 965.

397. When a person already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, is sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, such imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation shall commence at the expiration of the imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation to which he has been previously sentenced unless the Court directs that the subsequent sentence shall run concurrently with such previous sentence:

Provided that, if he is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment, and the sentence on such subsequent conviction is one of transportation, the Court may, in its discretion, direct that the latter sentence shall commence immediately or at the expiration of the imprisonment to which he has been previously sentenced:

Provided, further, that where a person who has been sentenced to imprisonment by an order under section 123 in default of furnishing security is, whilst undergoing such sentence, sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the making of such order, the latter sentence shall commence immediately.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 106 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1080. Principle:—The general rule is that a sentence commences to run from the time of its being passed, and this section creates an exception in the case of persons already undergoing imprisonment, and postpones the operation of the subsequent sentence until after the expiry of the previous sentence—In re Krishnanand, 3 B.L.R. A.C. 50; Sobrai, 20 W.R. 70.

'Undergoing imprisonment':—A person is said to be undergoing an imprisonment the moment the sentence of imprisonment is passed, though he has not yet been sent to jail. Therefore, where a person is tried on the same day for two different offences in two different trials, then as soon as the first trial is over and he is convicted and sentenced he is said to 'undergo imprisonment'; and if he is convicted and sentenced in the second trial also, he is said to be sentenced to imprisonment 'while already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment' within the meaning of this section—Muthusami, 2 Weir 451; Nga Po, 3 Bur.L.J. 32, 82 I.C. 478, 25 Cr.L.J. 1310. But in Makhan, 19 Cr.L.J. 207, 43 I.C. 623 (All.), it has been held that until an accused has actually passed into jail, he cannot be said to be undergoing imprisonment, and therefore where two sentences of imprisonment are passed in two trials on the same accused on the same day, this section does not apply, as the accused cannot be said to be 'undergoing imprisonment' under the first trial, as soon as the sentence is passed; therefore, the second imprisonment need not commence after the expiry of the imprisonment awarded in the first trial; the Magistrate may order that the two sentences should be concurrent.

"Imprisonment" as used in sec. 397, Cr. P. C., includes imprisonment in default. Prima facie it would include imprisonment in default, which by virtue of sec. 64, I. P. C., is a sentence; and that being so, any subsequent sentence of imprisonment would not begin until the expiry of the sentence of imprisonment in default—Punjaji Lalaji, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 174 (176), 41 Bom.L.R. 277, I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 160, 40 Cr.L.J. 602, 181 I.C. 979.

Detention under the order of a Civil Court is not a sentence of imprisonment with the meaning of this section; therefore, a Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment awarded by him shall take effect on the expiry of a term of detention in the civil jail which had been ordered by a Civil Court—Makha Gyi, 4 Bur.L.J. 9, 3 Rang 93, 26 Cr.L.J. 821.

Section 397, Cr. P. C., is not applicable to sentences of detention under sec. 8, Madras Borstal Schools Act (V of 1926) and the direction that the sentence of detention should commence after the expiration of the previous sentence of detention is illegal—Public Prosecutor, Madras, 39 Cr.L.J. 795, 176 I.C. 768, 11 R.M. 176, 47 M.L.W. 473, 1938 M.W.N. 352, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 613.

1050A. Court:—Under this section the High Court in its appellate jurisdiction has power to direct separate sentences of separate trials to run concurrently—Sis Ram, A.I.R. 1929 All. 585, 1923 Cr.C. 175, 51 All. 888, 30 Cr.L.J. 904, 118 I.C. 384, 1929 A.L.J. 800. See also Rcott, A.I.R. 1933 All. 461 (463), 1933 A.L.J. 523, 34 Cr.L.J. 1018, 145 I.C. 609, 1933 Cr.C. 761; Nagappa, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 529, 33 Bom.L.R. 1163, 1931 Cr.C. 917, 134 I.C. 1239, 33 Cr.L.J. 77. But see Koural, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 159, 1932 Cr.C. 695, 34 Cr.L.J. 24, 140 I.C. 481.

1081. Order of sentences:—The meaning of this section is that sentences will take effect in the order in which they are passed. The sentence which is first passed and which the accused is undergoing must be given effect to first, and any subsequent sentence passed upon the accused must follow after the expiration of the first sentence. Where a Magistrate passes separate sentences of imprisonment on the same accused in separate trials and on the same day, the sentences will take effect in the order in which they are passed, by the terms of this section, and the Magistrate need not, therefore, give any direction in his judgment in respect of the same—Muthusami, 2 Weir 451.

But the above rule as to the sequence of sentences applies only to the 1st para of this section. It is only the sentences mentioned in para 1 (viz., sentences of imprisonment) that can be directed to take effect in the order in which they were passed. A sentence of whipping cannot be deferred till the sentence of imprisonment; for that will contravene the provisions of sec. 391—Sagram, Ratanlal 300. As regards the sentences mentioned in the first proviso, the Magistrate has a discretion to direct either that the subsequent sentence should take effect after the expiration of the prior sentence, or that it should take effect at once.

Imprisonment in foreign territory.—Where a person sentenced to imprisonment in a foreign territory is subsequently convicted of an offence in British India, it is competent for the Magistrate to pass a sentence which shall take effect after the expiration of the sentence in the foreign State—Venkataram, 20 Mad 444.

1082. Concurrent sentences:—It was held, prior to the present amendment, that a Magistrate could not direct that the subsequent sentences should run concurrently with the previous sentence, because a Magistrate could pass concurrent sentences only when the offences were tried at one and the same trial (see sec. 35)—Kamal Mandal, 20 C.W.N. 1300, 24 C.L.J. 54; Bhagandas, 2 Bom.L.R. 111; Tukaram, 4 Bom.L.R. 876; Govindaswamy, 13 Cr.L.J. 466, 1912 M.W.N. 396; Pattayil v Sami, 2 Weir 453; Harak Narain, 19 A.L.J. 316; Makbul, 11 A.L.J. 263, 14 Cr.L.J. 240; Nga Sein Po, 1 Rang. 306; Ganda Singh, 1912 P.L.R. 20; Khuda Bux, 2 S.L.R. 23; San, 4 L.B.R. 147, 7 Cr.L.J. 445; even where the trials were held on the same day, the Magistrate could not make the sentences in the two trials concurrent—Muzafar, 1894 P.R. 12. But now the amendment made at the end of the first para of this section will allow the subsequent sentence to run concurrently with the previous one. "In accordance with the amendment, a Court will be empowered to pass a sentence to run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment, etc., which the person convicted is already undergoing"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). See Mahadco, 27 Cr.L.J. 807 (812), 95 I.C. 471, A.I.R. 1926 Nag 426.

'At the expiration of'—A person was convicted by a Magistrate and sentenced to 2 years' imprisonment, and a month afterwards he was sentenced to three years' imprisonment by the Court of Session, which directed the sentence to take effect on the expiration of the sentence passed by the Magistrate. On appeal the conviction and sentence passed by the Magistrate were set aside. It was held that the sentence of the Sessions Court must be deemed to have commenced from the time it was ordered to commence, viz., after the expiration of the Magistrate's sentence whether by reversal or completion of the punishment, and not before—Anonymous, Ratanlal 139; K'handu, Ratanlal 523. But in Anonymous, 2 Weir 450, under similar circumstances, it was held that the imprisonment already undergone must be reckoned as imprisonment under the sentence in the conviction which was not reversed. So also, the Calcutta High Court lays down: "Where a prisoner has been committed to jail under two separate warrants, the sentence in the one to take effect from the expiry of the sentence in the other, the date of such second sentence shall, in the event of the first sentence being remitted in appeal, be presumed to take effect from the date on which he was committed to jail under the first or original sentence"—Cal. G. R. & C. O., page 40. But these remarks can only apply where the sentences in the two trials are of the same kind; otherwise the Bombay rulings cited above should apply. Those rulings are more reasonable and practical, though the Madras case and the Calcutta High Court Rule are more favourable to the accused. Equitable considerations, however, require that the period of imprisonment already undergone under the sentence which has been set aside should be deducted from the imprisonment subsequently inflicted—Koural, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 159, 1932 Cr.C. 695, 34 Cr.L.J. 24, 140 I.C. 481.

First proviso:—Where a person who is already undergoing imprisonment is sentenced by the Sessions Judge to transportation for life, the sentence of transportation passed by him will commence at the expiration of the previous sentence of imprisonment, unless the Judge in his discretion makes a further order that the sentence of transportation shall take effect immediately—Hari, Ratanlal 391.

An order directing that a sentence shall take effect on the expiration of another sentence, is not a part of the judgment and may, therefore, be made after the judgment has been signed. Therefore, where a Sessions Judge, in ignorance of the fact that the accused is already undergoing imprisonment, sentences him to transportation for life, it is subsequently open to him to order, even after the judgment has been signed, that the sentence of transportation shall take effect immediately—Hari, Ratanlal 391.

1063. Second proviso:—The proviso lays down that if a person who is imprisoned under sec. 123 in default of furnishing security, is subsequently sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed prior to the passing of the order under section 123, the latter sentence (i.e., the substantive sentence of imprisonment) shall take effect immediately. This is also laid down in a large number of cases. Joghi, 31 Mad. 515; Vishnu, 37 Bom. 178, 17 I.C. 785, 14 Bom.L.R. 965, 13 Cr.L.J. 849; Durga, 5 Bom.L.R. 26; Lekria, 8 N.L.R. 20, 13 Cr.L.J. 189. The contrary view taken in Tula Khan, 30 All. 334 (340) (F.B.) must be deemed as overruled. If, however, a person who is imprisoned under sec. 123 in default of furnishing security is subsequently convicted of an offence (theft) committed prior to the passing of the order under sec. 123, and for that offence is sentenced to fine, or to imprisonment in default of fine (i.e., where both the sentences of imprisonment are alternative sentences and not substantive sentences of imprisonment), the imprisonment in the latter case (for the offence of theft) must run after the expiry of the sentence under sec. 123—Nan Ne, 9 Rang. 612, 1932 Cr.C. 210, 33 Cr.L.J. 174, 135 I.C. 655, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 52, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 50, following Nga Pye, 32 Cr.L.J. 714, 131 I.C. 501, 9 Rang. 110, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 133, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 127, 1931 Cr.C. 522.

Under the old law, there was no distinction as to whether the offence for which the person imprisoned under sec. 123 was subsequently convicted was committed before or after the making of the order under sec. 123. The law was that if a person undergoing imprisonment under sec. 123 was subsequently convicted of an offence and sentenced to imprisonment (whether this offence was committed before or after the sentence of imprisonment passed under sec. 123 was immaterial), the latter imprisonment must take effect at once and should not be postponed till after the expiry of the period of imprisonment awarded under sec. 123. The simple rule was that the sentence for the substantive offence must take effect before the sentence passed in default of furnishing security—Tulskaya, Ratanlal 970 (971); Venkattagadu, 2 Weir 452; Pichari, 16 Cr.L.J. 622 (Mad.); Vishnu Balakrishna, 14 Bom.L.R. 965, 37 Bom. 178, 17 I.C. 785, 13 Cr.L.J. 819; Kanji, 5 Bom.L.R. 26; Durga, 6 Bom.L.R. 1098; Pandhi, 3 S.L.R. 114, 4 I.C. 663; Sukhal, 15 S.L.R. 205, 23 Cr.L.J. 255; Ghulam, 7 S.L.R. 393; Muthu Komaran, 27 Mad. 525; Joghi, 31 Mad. 515; Shin Taung, 10 Bur.L.T. 266; Dicean Chand, 1895 P.R. 14; Lekria, 8 N.L.R. 20. In Arjun, 5 I.C. 361, 12 Bom.L.R. 129, 34 Bom. 326 and Markenda, 1 P.L.J. 212, it has been held that the two sentences must run concurrently. This would be in consonance with the amendment made at the end of the first para of this section.

With reference to the second proviso the Joint Committee (1922) observe: "We think that the law should be that in cases where an offence has been committed prior to the order under sec. 123 but the conviction takes place subsequently, the sentences should ordinarily run concurrently; but when the offence is committed after the order under sec. 123 has been passed, e.g., cases of escape from custody or jail or offences committed in jail, then we think that the imprisonment for the subsequent offence should ordinarily not be concurrent; otherwise the prisoner might in some cases receive no further punishment for his subsequent offence." See Jagmohan, 34 Cr.L.J. 1152, 146 I.C. 1007, 10 O.W.N. 786, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 381, 1933 Cr.C. 1098.

An order of committal to or detention in prison passed under sec. 123, Cr. P. C., in default of furnishing security is a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this section and its proviso. And so, where a convict who was committed to prison for two years under sec. 123 subsequently committed an offence (e.g., escaped from confinement) and was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment, the second sentence should not run concurrently with the first, but should run consecutively and after the expiration of the sentence of 2 years' imprisonment—Nga Pse, 9 Rang. 110, 32 Cr.L.J. 714 (716), 131 I.C. 501, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang 133, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 127, 1931 Cr.C. 522.

Where during the time allowed to a suspect to furnish the security as required by the order passed under sec. 118, Cr. P. C., he is sentenced to imprisonment for an offence committed by him prior to the date of such order, it is not competent to the Magistrate to fix the date of the expiry of such sentence as the date for computing the period from which such security is to be furnished—Ahmed, 27 Cr.L.J. 865, 96 I.C. 113, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 273, 20 S.L.R. 163 (F.B.).

398. (1) Nothing in section 396 or section 397 shall be held to excuse any person from any part of the punishment to which he is liable upon his former or subsequent conviction.

Saving as to sections 395 and 397.

(2) When an award of imprisonment in default of payment of a fine is annexed to a substantive sentence of imprisonment, or to a sentence of transportation or penal servitude for an offence punishable with imprisonment, and the person undergoing the sentence is after its execution to undergo a further substantive sentence, or further substantive sentences, of imprisonment, transportation or penal servitude, effect shall not be given to the award of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine until the person has undergone the further sentence or sentences.

Sub-section (2) renders obsolete the ruling in Anonymous, Ratanlal 132, where it has been held that when a convict is imprisoned under two warrants which order consecutive punishments, the first warrant should be completely executed both in respect of the substantive sentence of imprisonment and the imprisonment in default of fine, before any effect is given to the second warrant. Now under sub-sec. (2) the imprisonment in default of payment of fine shall take effect last of all.

399. (1) When any person under the age of fifteen years is sentenced by any Criminal Court to imprisonment for any offence, the Court may direct that such person, instead of being imprisoned in a criminal jail, shall be confined in any reformatory established by the Provincial Government as a fit place for confinement, in which there are means of suitable discipline and of training in some branch of useful industry or which is kept by a person willing to obey such rules as the Provincial Government prescribes with regard to the discipline and training of persons confined therein.

(2) All persons confined under this section shall be subject to the rules so prescribed.

(3) This section shall not apply to any place in which the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, is for the time being in force.

Amendment:—The words, "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1084. A sentence of imprisonment is a condition precedent to an order under this section. Where there is no preliminary sentence of imprisonment, an order under this section cannot be passed—Bakhtawar, 1910 P.R. 34, 8 I.C. 1166.

The Court should come to a clear finding as to age of a youthful offender before sending him to a Reformatory School. The Court must find that the youthful offender is a fit and proper person to be an inmate of such a school and must also fix the period of detention—Sein Choung, 3 Rang. 218. See also Rama, 24 Mad. 13.

The period of detention in the Reformatory School should be a definite period. Where the trying Magistrate ordered the offender to be detained in a Reformatory for five years "or until he attains the age of 18 years," in lieu of imprisonment, it was held that the words "or until . . . 18 years" should be deleted—Rama Sudama, 15 Bom.L.R. 306, 14 Cr.L.J. 256, 19 I.C. 512.

The period of detention in the Reformatory must not be longer than the period of imprisonment at first ordered. Where a Magistrate finding a juvenile offender guilty of theft in a building sentenced him to three months' rigorous imprisonment and ordered that in lieu of that sentence the offender should be confined in a Reformatory for 14 months, it was held that having once passed a sentence of imprisonment for a particular term, it was not competent to the Magistrate to direct that the offender should be confined in a Reformatory for a longer term—Ganpaya, Ratanlal 109.

'Reformatory':—Where no Reformatories have been established, but only Reformatory Schools, the Court should not order the offender under this section to be sent to a Reformatory, but should pass an order under the Reformatory Schools Act, sending the boy to a Reformatory School—Madasami, 12 Mad. 94.

Sub-section (3):—The introduction of the Reformatory Schools Act repeals the operation of this section so far as may be practicable in those places where that Act applies—Madasami, 12 Mad. 94. Thus, this section has no application in the Punjab where the Reformatory Schools Act is in force—Noor Mahomed, 1918 P.R. 17, 19 Cr.L.J. 917, 47 I.C. 433.

Section 16 of the Reformatory Schools Act does not in any way take away the power of the High Court or any other Appellate Court to alter or set aside the sentence in substitution of which an order for detention is made—Reasul v. Courtney, 28 Cal. 423; Imp. v. Rajabali, 13 I.C. 284, 5 S.L.R. 173, 13 Cr.L.J. 44; Azimuddin, 32 Cr.L.J. 1268, 131 I.C. 864, 27 N.L.R. 212, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 179, Ind. Rul. 1931 Nag. 192, 1931 Cr.C. 920.

400. When a sentence has been fully executed, the officer executing it shall return the warrant to the Court from which it issued, with an endorsement under his hand certifying the manner in which the sentence has been executed.

Return of warrant on execution of sentence.

CHAPTER XXIX.

OF SUSPENSIONS, REMISSIONS AND COMMUTATIONS OF SENTENCES.

401. (1) When any person has been sentenced to punishment for an offence, * * * * * the Provincial Government may, at any time, without conditions or upon any conditions which the person sentenced accepts, suspend the execution of his sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment to which he has been sentenced.

Power to suspend or remit sentences.

(2) Whenever an application is made to * * * * * the Provincial Government for the suspension or remission of a sentence, * * * * * the Provincial Government, * * * * * may require the presiding Judge of the Court before or by which the conviction was had or confirmed to state his opinion as to whether the application should be granted or refused, together with his reasons for such opinion, and also to forward with the statement of such opinion a certified copy of the record of the trial or of such record thereof as exists.

(3) If any condition on which a sentence has been suspended or remitted is, in the opinion of * * * * * the Provincial Government, * * * * * not fulfilled, the Provincial Government may cancel the suspension or remission, and thereupon the person in whose favour the sentence has been suspended or remitted may, if at large, be arrested by any police-officer without warrant and remanded to undergo the unexpired portion of the sentence.

(4) The condition on which a sentence is suspended or remitted under this section, may be one to be fulfilled by the person in whose favour the sentence is suspended or remitted, or one independent of his will.

(4A) The provisions of the above sub-sections shall also apply to any order passed by a Criminal Court under any section of this Code or of any other law, which restricts the liberty of any person or imposes any liability upon him or his property.

(5) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to interfere with the right of His Majesty or of the Central Government when such right is delegated to it, to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remissions of punishment.

(5A) Where a conditional pardon is granted by His Majesty or, in virtue of any powers delegated to it, by the Central Government, any condition thereby imposed, of whatever nature, shall be deemed to have been imposed by a sentence of a competent Court under this Code and shall be enforceable accordingly.

(6) The * * * * * Provincial Government may, by general rules or special orders, give directions as to the suspension of sentences and the conditions on which petitions should be presented and dealt with.

Change:—The italicised words and sub-sections (4A) and (5A) have been added by sec. 107 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The following omissions have been made in this section by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, viz. :—

In sub-sections (1), (2) and (3) the words, "the Governor-General in Council or" have been omitted.

In sub-sections (2) and (3) the words, "as the case may be" have been omitted.

In sub-section (6) the words, "Governor-General in Council and the" have been omitted.

The words, "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1085. Scope of section:—Viewing sub-section (1) of this section as a whole it is the clear intention of the Legislature to confer a power to suspend or remit a sentence—Venkatesh Yeshwant v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 513, I.L.R. 1940 Nag. 1, 1938 N.L.J. 423, 40 Cr.L.J. 397, 180 I.C. 594 (F.B.). Though an order passed under this section is in the name of the Governor because that is the constitutional form it has to take, it is in reality an order of the Provincial Government—Ibid. It is not open to Government after remitting a sentence unconditionally, to restore it. Different considerations would arise in cases of fraud or mistake—Ibid. It cannot be said that an order of remission is never open to recall. It may be in certain circumstances; fraud and mistake for example might justify such action. But it cannot be done arbitrarily. The matter vitally affects the liberty of the subject, and so, if such power exists at all, it can only be exercised in circumstances which a Court of justice would uphold on general grounds of justice, equity and good conscience, and of public policy. In every case Government must be prepared to substantiate and justify its action and that means that it must give reasons, first to the person concerned, and then, if the matter reaches Court, to that tribunal. It cannot merely say, "I have done it and that is all that need be said. I have the right and I have the power." (Per Bose, J.)—Ibid. The effect of an order of remission is to wipe out the remitted portion of the sentence altogether and not merely to suspend its operation; suspension is separately provided for. (Per Bose, J.)—Ibid.

This section applies only to persons sentenced to imprisonment, and not to persons upon whom a conditional pardon has been tendered under sec. 337—Gangacharan, 11 All. 79.

In cases of murder, the Judge may report any extenuating circumstances calling for a mitigation of the punishment to the Government, and the Government may thereupon take such action under this section as it thinks proper—Kader Nasya, 23 Cal. 604; Lakshman, 10 Bom. 512; Narayanawami Goundan, 1931 M.W.N. 719; Bagga, 32 P.L.R. 331, 1931 Cr.C. 532 (534), 32 Cr.L.J. 1230, 134 I.C. 773, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 276, Ind. Rul.

1931 Lah. 981; Chajju Mal, 94 P.L.R. 1909, 11 Cr.L.J. 105 (110), 4 I.C. 985; Tola Ram, 8 Lah. 684. In these cases, the accused committed murder without any apparent sane motive, and was suffering from mental derangement of some sort; and the High Court holding that the accused was not entitled to be acquitted under sec. 84, I.P.C., recommended the case to the Local Government under this section to be dealt with in such manner as it thought fit. The High Court also recommended a case to the Local Government where the accused, a young boy under 16, committed the murder, being provoked by the outrageous conduct of the deceased in having sexual intercourse with a female relative of the boy in an open and bare-faced manner—Nawab, 33 P.L.R. 279, 33 Cr.L.J. 580, 138 I.C. 410, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 308, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 486, 1932 Cr.C. 422; or where the accused, a young boy of 17, participated in the act of murder under the influence of his father and elder brother—Kartar Singh, 33 Cr.L.J. 484, 137 I.C. 293, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 259, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 338, 33 P.L.R. 191, 1932 Cr.C. 324; or where a woman caused the death of her child born as a result of illicit intimacy in order to hide her shame—Glulam Jannat, 94 I.C. 403, 27 Cr.L.J. 627, 7 Lah. 70, 27 P.L.R. 534, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 271; Alam Bibi, 33 Cr.L.J. 448, 137 I.C. 259, 33 P.L.R. 223, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 318, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 297, 1932 Cr.C. 377; or where a boy of fifteen took part in a merciless beating resulting in the death of a man, under the influence of his maternal uncle—Glulam Mohammad, 35 Cr.L.J. 430, 147 I.C. 578, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1021, 1933 Cr.C. 1558; or where a woman of weak intellect caused the death of her child by throwing her in a pond on account of extreme poverty and the treatment of her relations—Dhulan, 35 Cr.L.J. 652, 148 I.C. 325, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 31, 1934 Cr.C. 44; or where the accused committed the murder of a five months' old baby under the delusion that the sacrifice was necessary to appease the goddess—Narayansuami, 1931 M.W.N. 719.

The accused was a girl less than seventeen years of age at the time of the murder. She became an approver and made a statement after a promise of pardon had been duly made to her: this statement involved herself as well as the other three persons who were charged. In her direct statement before the Committing Magistrate she supported the statement already made by her, but in cross-examination she stated that she made her statement because the police told her that if she did not make the statement she would be hanged. She was subsequently tried and convicted under sec. 302, I.P.C., and sentenced to transportation for life. Held that the situation of a girl whose mother and husband were determined on murder was not an enviable one and though she failed to earn her pardon, it should be remembered in her favour that her statement as approver led to a successful investigation and to the conviction of the principal criminal. She had already served a considerable sentence and had suffered by reason of the birth of her child in jail. There could not be stronger case for the exercise of the prerogative of mercy—Aziz Begum v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 689, 39 P.L.R. 394, 171 I.C. 954, 39 Cr.L.J. 16, 10 R.L. 254.

Procedure:—All recommendations for remission or suspension of a sentence made under sec. 401 by an officer of any subordinate Court to the Local Government, in regard to a convict whose case has been before the High Court on appeal, shall be made through the High Court—Cal G. R. & C. O., p. 40.

Certified copy of record:—The original record need not be sent. "Objection has been taken to the inconvenience of this, and we think that it will be sufficient to require a certified copy of the record to be furnished"—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

"Such record thereof as exists":—"It is well known that in the case of proceedings in a High Court the Judges object to their notes being treated as part of the record, and we have, therefore, referred in our proposed amendment of sec. 401 (2) to 'a copy of the record of the trial' or of such record thereof as exists." We think in cases where it is necessary, in considering a petition for mercy, for the High Court frequently may be, the nature of the evidence given at a trial in a High Court to trust to the courtesy of High Court Judges to furnish a copy of the record—the Select Committee (1916).

The better course for the Local Government is to refrain from

with the right of His Majesty or of the Central Government when such right is delegated to it, to grant pardons, reprieves, respites or remissions of punishment.

(5A) Where a conditional pardon is granted by His Majesty or, in virtue of any powers delegated to it, by the Central Government, any condition thereby imposed, of whatever nature, shall be deemed to have been imposed by a sentence of a competent Court under this Code and shall be enforceable accordingly.

(6) The * * * * * Provincial Government may, by general rules or special orders, give directions as to the suspension of sentences and the conditions on which petitions should be presented and dealt with.

Change:—The italicised words and sub-sections (4A) and (5A) have been added by sec. 107 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act. XVIII of 1923.

The following omissions have been made in this section by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, viz. :—

In sub-sections (1), (2) and (3) the words, "the Governor-General in Council or" have been omitted.

In sub-sections (2) and (3) the words, "as the case may be" have been omitted.

In sub-section (6) the words, "Governor-General in Council and the" have been omitted.

The words, "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1085. Scope of section:—Viewing sub-section (1) of this section as a whole it is the clear intention of the Legislature to confer a power to suspend or remit a sentence—Venkatesh Yeshwant v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag 513, I.L.R. 1940 Nag 1, 1938 N.L.J. 423, 40 Cr.L.J. 397, 180 I.C. 594 (F.B.). Though an order passed under this section is in the name of the Governor because that is the constitutional form it has to take, it is in reality an order of the Provincial Government—Ibid. It is not open to Government after remitting a sentence unconditionally, to restore it. Different considerations would arise in cases of fraud or mistake—Ibid. It cannot be said that an order of remission is never open to recall. It may be in certain circumstances; fraud and mistake for example might justify such action. But it cannot be done arbitrarily. The matter vitally affects the liberty of the subject, and so, if such power exists at all, it can only be exercised in circumstances which a Court of justice would uphold on general grounds of justice, equity and good conscience, and of public policy. In every case Government must be prepared to substantiate and justify its action and that means that it must give reasons, first to the person concerned, and then, if the matter reaches Court, to that tribunal. It cannot merely say, "I have done it and that is all that need be said. I have the right and I have the power." (Per Bose, J.)—Ibid. The effect of an order of remission is to wipe out the remitted portion of the sentence altogether and not merely to suspend its operation; suspension is separately provided for. (Per Bose, J.)—Ibid.

This section applies only to persons sentenced to imprisonment, and not to persons upon whom a conditional pardon has been tendered under sec. 337—Gangacharan, 11 All. 79.

In cases of murder, the Judge may report any extenuating circumstances calling for a mitigation of the punishment to the Government, and the Government may thereupon take such action under this section as it thinks proper—Kader Nasya, 23 Cal. 604; Lakshman, 10 Bom. 512; Narayanawami Goundan, 1931 M.W.N. 719; Bagga, 32 P.L.R. 331, 1931 Cr.C. 532 (534), 32 Cr.L.J. 1230, 134 I.C. 773, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 276, Ind. The better course for the Local Government is to refrain from taking action under this section until the question of sentence is decided judicially by the Court—Nga Ohu Shwe, 35 Cr.L.J. 959, 149 I.C. 107, 6 R.Rang. 286, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 125, 1934 Cr.C. 718, 12 Rang. 344.

Sub-sections (4A) and (5A):—"The new clause (4A) is intended to make it clear that the power to remit sentences conferred by sec. 401 can be exercised in the case of orders of a penal nature, e.g., orders under sec. 565 of the Code. The object of the new clause (5A) is to enable any condition, upon which a pardon has been granted by His Majesty or by the Governor-General when such power has been delegated to him, to be enforced in the same way as a sentence of a Court"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1921).

In sub-section (4A), the word 'law' has been used instead of the more common word "Act" to make it clear that this section applies to the case of persons sentenced by tribunals constituted by Regulations and Ordinances—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

Sub-section (5):—"Or of the Governor-General":—"We have made a formal amendment in this sub-section in view of the special delegation to the present Governor-General of His Majesty's prerogative of pardon"—Report of the Select Committee (1916).

death, transportation, penal servitude, rigorous imprisonment for a term not exceeding that to which he might have been sentenced, simple imprisonment for a like term, fine.

(2) Nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of section 54 or section 55 of the Indian Penal Code.

Sub-section (2) has been added by sec. 108 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "Doubts have been expressed as to the consistency of sec. 402 with sec. 54 or 55 of the Indian Penal Code, and these have now been resolved"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" and the words "Governor-General in Council or the" have been omitted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

402A. The powers conferred by sections 401 and 402 upon the Provincial Government may, in the case of sentence of death, also be exercised by the Governor-General in his discretion.

This section was inserted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

CHAPTER XXX.

OF PREVIOUS ACQUITTALS OR CONVICTIONS.

403. (1) A person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on

Person once convicted or acquitted not to be tried for same offence.

(g) A, B and C are charged by a Magistrate of the first class with, and convicted by him of, robbing D. A, B and C may afterwards be charged with, and tried for, dacoity on the same facts.

1086. Principle:—This section is an amplification of the well known maxim of law 'nemo debet bis vexari.' This principle does not rest on any doctrine of estoppel but embodies the well established rule of common law that a man may not be put twice in peril for the same offence—Chinna, 29 Mad. 126 (F.B.). Where an offence has already been the subject of judicial investigation and adjudication, and there has been an acquittal, the acquittal is conclusive, and it would be a very dangerous principle to adopt to regard a judgment of not guilty as not fully establishing the innocence of the accused—Rex v. Plummer, [1902] 2 K.B. 339; Lalit Mohan, 38 Cal. 559 (578).

There is nothing like res judicata in a criminal trial as long as it does not terminate in either acquittal or conviction so as to attract the provisions of this section. Apart from this there is no law, authority or principle which would estop an accused person from showing that the act with which he is charged as penal did not constitute an offence and that on a right interpretation of the enactment under which he is sought to be penalised, it should be held that the Legislature never intended that any one placed in his position should be criminally liable. To debar him from this defence would be nothing short of a prohibition from proving his innocence and would amount to a clear denial of justice. Such a course is manifestly repugnant to the basic principle of all criminal jurisdiction—Dewan Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 474 (477), 161 I.C. 635, 19 N.L.J. 84, 8 R.N. 219, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 55, 1936 Cr.C. 367.

The principles underlying the English common law pleas of autrefois convict and autrefois acquit have been embodied so far as this country is concerned within the limits, however narrow they may be or have been stated to be, of the language of the statute itself. It would be bewildering and, indeed, might result in great injustice to the community at large if it is endeavoured to stretch the language or extend the principles in the way so as to give to the accused the benefit of the spirit underlying the provisions of sec. 403, Cr. P. C., rather than to apply the clear and precise words of the section itself—Purnananda Das Gupta v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 65 (71), 68 C.L.J. 206, 179 I.C. 506, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 1, 40 Cr.L.J. 199.

There is no bar to proceedings being taken against a person under the Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879) after his conviction of a criminal offence as there is no question of any indictment or trial for the same offence under any other law and there is no question of punishing him over again for the offence—Ram Govind, 32 Cr.L.J. 1256 (1263), Ind Rul. 1931 Pat. 497, 134 I.C. 945, 12 P.L.T. 773, 1931 Cr.C. 897, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 369 (F.B.).

Section 403 (1) will operate in cases covered by secs. 236 and 237, Cr. P. C., but will not operate in cases covered by sec. 235, sub-sec. (1), Cr. P. C.—Ochharia, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 447 (448), 35 Bom.L.R. 985, 1933 Cr.C. 1406, 146 I.C. 587, 35 Cr.L.J. 112, 58 Bom. 23.

Decision of Civil Court:—"The higher grounds of public policy, in my opinion, undoubtedly necessitate the avoidance of conflict of decisions between Criminal and Civil Courts established for beneficent and good government. If I may be permitted to say so, with respect, I agree with the remarks of Heaton, J., in In re Markur, 41 Bom. 1, 33 I.C. 633, A.I.R. 1916 Bom. 163, 18 Bom.L.R. 185, 17 Cr.L.J. 153, on the subject to the following effect: "If we are to administer justice as a civilized country, if we are to avoid those conflicts between Civil and Criminal Courts which ordinarily must be fraught with evil and can produce no good, if, in short, we are to make the actual administration of justice in this country bear a proper relation to that which we profess it to be, then we cannot have Criminal Courts trying over again matters which have been thoroughly dealt with and finally decided by a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction. It may be that to this principle there would be rare exceptions founded on possibly, the discovery of new, cogent and important evidence. But ordinarily that principle must prevail, and if that principle must prevail, then it is a matter of the first importance, of the very highest relevancy to show to a Criminal Court that the matter which the Criminal Court is asked to adjudicate on has already been fully dealt with by a Civil Court." For that purpose it is of great importance to scan the grounds of the decision of the Civil Court and consequently, the judgment of that Court becomes relevant and admissible. It was observed in Agu Kumar Das v. Manazaddin, 55 Cal. 290, 113 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 610, 30 Cr.L.J. 69, 48 C.L.J. 193, 32 C.W.N. 1173 (F.B.), that the civil and criminal law being products of the same Legislature it would be attributing an inconsistency to the Legislature to permit the Criminal Courts in the exercise of their limited jurisdiction to override or nullify the proceedings of Civil Courts. On grounds of public policy, harmony between the decisions of the two Courts must be secured. . . . It is also important to bear in mind the general principle of public policy usually invoked in reference to ratification of illegal and criminal acts resulting in the stifling of criminal prosecutions. Consistently with that principle, if the Civil Court's decree constitutes the composition of non-compoundable and felonious acts, the objections cannot be permitted to prevail against Crown prosecution," (Per Wassoodew, J.). ". . . I think it is essential to remember that there can be no estoppel of a criminal prosecution and no ratification of a criminal offence. It also seems to me that however necessary and desirable it may be, as a matter of public policy, to prevent conflicts between decisions of Civil and Criminal Courts, it is of far greater moment to the State that no non-compoundable offence should be left unpunished if it is possible to secure evidence to prove such offence. There can be, besides, no "relating back" in the case of an offence as a result of a civil proceeding which treats the act as the foundation of the civil claim, although the Criminal Court ought, as a rule, to take into consideration the Civil Court's judgment relating to such claim." (Per Sen, J.)—Ramchandra Rango Saekar v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 579, 181 I.C. 870, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 129, 41 Bom.L.R. 98.

Though the civil suit and the prosecution may be based on exactly the same cause of action, the parties are, strictly speaking, not the same. The burden of proof is differently placed and different considerations may come in. The result may, therefore, be a conflict in decision. The risk of such conflict is one that is inherent in the division of causes into criminal and civil. The judgment of neither Court is binding on the other and each must decide the cause on the evidence before it. If they arrive at different conclusions, it is regrettable but unavoidable. The fact, therefore, that the matter in issue had already been decided in favour of the accused in a civil litigation between the same parties does not debar the Criminal Court from taking cognizance of the case and holding the trial—Maung Po Nwe v. Ma Pwa Chone, 41 Cr.L.J. 139 (141), 184 I.C. 842, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 394, following In re N. F. Markur, A.I.R. 1916 Bom. 163, 33 I.C. 633, 17 Cr.L.J. 153, 41 Bom. 1, 18 Bom.L.R. 185, Ramanamma v. Appalanarasayya, 55 Mad. 346, 126 I.C. 348, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 254, 1932 Cr.C. 184, 33 Cr.L.J. 307, 62 M.L.J. 230, 35 M.L.W. 176, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 300, 1931 M.W.N. 1205 and Traikynath Das v. Emp., 33 Cr.L.J. 441 (442), 59 Cal. 136, 137 I.C. 163, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 293, 1932 Cr.C. 262, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 275.

1086A. When the plea can be raised:—There is no rule of practice defining the proper time for raising a plea of autre fois acquit in this country. The artificial English rule against pleading double is certainly not to be applied. This section simply lays down the rule on which a plea of autre fois acquit or convict is founded; and it would seem that the rule could be invoked by an accused person at any stage of the proceedings—John MacIver, 37 Cr.L.J. 637 (640), 162 I.C. 592, 1936 M.W.N. 281, 43 M.L.W. 548, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 353, 70 M.L.J. 635, 1936 Cr.C. 433 (F.B.).

Tests of the plea:—The question whether a particular trial is barred by reason of previous prosecution ending in conviction or acquittal is a question to be determined on the facts and circumstances of a particular case: one of the tests is whether the facts are same or not; but the true test is not so much whether the facts are the same in both trials as whether the acquittal or conviction from the first charge necessarily involves an acquittal or conviction on the second charge. The provisions contained in sec. 403, Cr. P. C., are complete by themselves on the subject of the effect of previous acquittal or convictions and no question of inherent jurisdiction or the application of the rule of res judicata arises where there are specific provisions in the law—Jitendra Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 99 (113), 169 I.C. 977, 38 Cr.L.J. 818, 10 R.C. 69, following Ram Sahay Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 181, 57 I.C. 278, 21 Cr.L.J. 614, 48 Cal. 78, 24 C.W.N. 763; Purnananda Das Gupta v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 65 (70), 68 C.L.J. 206, 179 I.C. 506, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 1, 40 Cr.L.J. 199.

1087. "A person":—Person not tried at the first trial:—This section bars a subsequent trial of the same person who had once been placed on trial for the same offence. But does it bar the trial of persons who had not been placed in the first trial but who were implicated in the offence committed by the accused who was placed in the first trial? According to Bishun Das, 7 C.W.N. 493, the principle of this section extends to such persons, and, therefore, where three out of five persons concerned in the same offence were at first placed on trial and acquitted, a subsequent trial of the remaining two persons for the abetment of the offence was barred by this section. But this ruling has been disapproved of in several other cases. Thus, where on a complaint charging a number of persons with several offences, only three were sent up for trial, and they were acquitted on the ground that the prosecution case was untrue, and subsequently other persons alleged to be implicated in the same offences were sent up, it was held (dissenting from Bishun Das, 7 C.W.N. 493) that the trial of these persons was not barred under this section—Kokari Sardar v. Mehr Khan, 37 Cal. 680; Subal Chandra v. Ahadulla, 53 Cal. 606, 30 C.W.N. 546, 27 Cr.L.J. 788. So also, where in a previous trial, two persons were acquitted by the jury of the offence of conspiring with a third person who was not placed on trial, it was held that the acquittal of those two persons did not operate as a bar to the trial of the third person as there were two others named and others unknown who were also alleged to have been members of the conspiracy—Manindra, 41 Cal. 754, 18 C.W.N. 580. Because an accused has been either acquitted or convicted there is nothing in law to prevent another accused being subsequently tried or acquitted even if the decision in the second trial differs from that of the original trial on exactly the same evidence. It is probable that on exactly the same evidence two equally competent Judges will arrive at the same conclusion, but it is the duty of a Court to decide a case on the evidence before it without being influenced by the fact that another Court has on the same evidence on a previous occasion come to a certain conclusion—Awal Khan, 37 Cr.L.J. 889 (890), 164 I.C. 145, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 152. See also Hatim Mollah, 10 C.W.N. 1031. But, in such a case, although the plea of autre fois acquit would not be available to the present accused, and the acquittal of another person would not bar the issue of process against the present accused, still the fact that another person accused upon the same facts of having been implicated in the same offence has been acquitted may properly be taken into consideration by the Magistrate in determining whether upon the materials before him there is sufficient ground for proceeding to issue process against the present accused—Subal Chandra v. Ahadulla, 53 Cal. 606, 30 C.W.N. 546, 27 Cr.L.J. 788. See also Seshachalam v. Bapannayya, 1933 M.W.N. 246 and Singleton, 29 C.W.N. 260, 41 Cr.L.J. 87, where it was held that the acquittal of a co-conspirator has no effect so far as the other conspirator is concerned, beyond suggesting that some of the evidence upon which one was convicted, was, in a different trial of another accused person, found unworthy of acceptance.

Person absent in the first trial:—Where a complaint against two accused A and B was dismissed, and the accused A who attended Court to answer the charge was acquitted, the acquittal would operate in favour of the other accused (B) also who was absent, and would bar fresh proceedings against him on the same facts—Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346. In this case the second accused was placed on trial, though he was absent on the day of hearing. But where out of three persons concerned in an offence, two persons were found and the third absconded and the two were placed on trial and convicted, the case of the third, when found, should be heard and decided irrespective of the fact that there had been a previous trial and conviction of the other accused; the second trial is not barred by this section—Ghure, 36 All. 168, 12 A.L.J. 231, 15 Cr.L.J. 200.

1088. "Tried":—There must be a previous trial of the accused to bar a subsequent trial under this section. Where a complaint of a non cognizable offence was made before the Police, and the Magistrate did not take cognizance of that offence on the police report, there could not be said to have been a trial of that offence, and consequently a subsequent complaint of that offence is not barred by this section—Govt. v. Shidapa, 5 Bom. 405. So also, where a Magistrate after taking cognizance of an offence dismisses the complaint under sec. 203, there cannot be said to have been a trial of the accused; and it is open to the Magistrate to rehear the complaint—Chinna, 29 Mad. 126. So also, where no process had been issued against the accused, and no proceedings taken against them, but the Magistrate simply permitted the withdrawal of the charge-sheets against the accused, it was held that the withdrawal of the charge-sheets was no bar to fresh proceedings being taken against the accused by drawing fresh charge-sheets—Muthia-Moopan, 36 Mad. 315, 14 Cr.L.J. 559.

It is not necessary that there should be a full previous trial and an acquittal or conviction on the merits. Where the accused appears and answers to a charge but he is acquitted under sec. 247 for non-appearance of the complainant, he is said to be tried and acquitted (although there was no trial on the merits) and he cannot be tried again for the same offence—Suraya v. Venkata, 2 Weir 457; Guggilapu Peddaya, 34 Mad. 253; Suku Ram v. Krishna, 33 C.W.N. 260, 30 Cr.L.J. 585. The words "who has once been tried" means against whom proceedings have been commenced in Court, i.e., against whom the Court has taken cognizance of the offence and issued process. Therefore, where the Police filed a charge-sheet against a certain person before a Magistrate and summons was issued, but before it was served the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Court, withdrew from the prosecution under sec. 494, and the accused was acquitted, it was held that the accused must be said to have been 'tried and acquitted' within the meaning of this section, and the acquittal barred a further trial for the same offence—Dudikula Lal Sahib, 40 Mad. 976. But in another Madras case it is held that the non-appearance of a complainant on the first day of hearing and the consequent acquittal of the accused under sec. 247 do not bar a retrial, because the accused cannot be said to have been 'tried' on the first complaint; the trial of an accused in a summons case cannot be said to begin until the particulars of the offence are stated to the accused under sec. 242, and where there is nothing in the record to show that any trial was commenced on the first complaint, sec. 403 would not bar the Court from taking cognizance of the second complaint—Kotayya v. Venkayya, 40 Mad. 977 (Note). See Note 1089 below. See also Note 798.

Irregularity in the first trial—If there is a gross irregularity or illegality in a trial, such trial will not operate as a bar to retrial of the accused for the same offence—Shahabut, 13 W.R. 42. But if the order of acquittal was passed in the first trial under a misapprehension of law, it would still operate as a bar to a second trial—Bawa Manghnidas, 4 S.L.R. 174, 11 Cr.L.J. 731, 8 I.C. 936. The absence of a charge does not make the trial illegal. Where the trial had otherwise been regularly conducted even though no formal charge had been framed, the order of acquittal would bar subsequent proceedings—Gurdu, 3 All. 129.

But where the first trial was conducted without any complaint at all, the trial was void ab initio and therefore a second trial is not barred—Nanakram, 19 Cr.L.J. 796 (Oudh). The trial of an accused under sec. 21 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act (VI of 1919) without obtaining the sanction of the Municipality is not a trial at all. Consequently, the acquittal of the accused at such a trial does not bar a fresh prosecution after having obtained the necessary sanction—P. Bantjee v. Bipin Bihary, 30 C.W.N. 382, 27 Cr.L.J. 751, 95 I.C. 79, 43 C.L.J. 110, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 691.

1089. Conviction or Acquittal:—This section bars a second trial when the accused is acquitted in the first trial, and not where he is simply discharged—Parmeshwari v. Jagannath, 17 A.L.J. 867. See also Gaya Din, 35 Cr.L.J. 570, 147 I.C. 1141, 11 O.W.N. 264, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 235, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh , 1934 Cr.C. 765

What amounts to acquittal:—It is not necessary that there should be an acquittal on the merits; therefore, the withdrawal of the remaining charges under sec. 240 upon conviction on one of several charges, has the effect of acquittal, and bars a fresh trial on the same facts—Okhoy v. Modhoo, 19 W.R. 55. The non-appearance of the complainant in a summons case has the effect of acquitting the accused (sec. 247) and he cannot be tried again for the same offence—Dulla, A.I.R. 1923 All. 360, 74 I.C. 1054, 24 Cr.L.J. 862, 45 All. 58; Nityananda v. Rakhahari, 38 Cr.L.J. 196, 73 I.C. 910, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 96, 24 Cr.L.J. 716; Suku Ram v. Krishna, 33 C.W.N. 260, 30 Cr.L.J. 585; Panchu v. Umar, 4 C.W.N. 346; Ram Mahto, 61 I.C. 59, 22 Cr.L.J. 331, 2 P.L.T. 170; Kiram Sarkar, 74 I.C. 719, 20 Pat.L.R. 10 (Cr.), A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 140, 5 P.L.T. 15, 24 Cr.L.J. 815; Guggilapu Paddaya, 9 I.C. 253, 9 M.L.T. 93, 12 Cr.L.J. 41, 34 Mad. 253; Sinnu Goundan, 38 Mad. 1028, 26 M.L.J. 160; Suraya v. Venkata, 2 Weir 457. The order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., although the accused had not been served with a summons, is a good order and such an acquittal operates as a bar to any trial on the same facts—Shanker Dattatraya Vaze v. Dattatraya Sadashiv Tendulkar, 31 Cr.L.J. 1000 (1003), 126 I.C. 321, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 408, 53 Bom. 693, 31 Bom.L.R. 795. Acquittal under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., though not an acquittal on the merits has the force of a complete acquittal for all purposes. A fresh and a separate trial on the same facts would be barred under sec. 403, Cr. P. C. The word "acquittal" under sec. 403 does not necessarily mean an acquittal because of the bar of further proceedings in the same way as an acquittal after trial on the merits—Laxmi Prasad, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 357 (359), 1940 N.L.J. 399, 190 I.C. 467, 41 Cr.L.J. 919. Contra—Kotayya v. Venkayya, A.I.R. 1918 Mad. 212, 45 I.C. 257, 19 Cr.L.J. 497, 61 I.C. 59, 22 Cr.L.J. 331, 40 Mad. 977 (Note) cited in Note 1088. See also Note 798. The withdrawal of a summons-case by the complainant operates as an acquittal of the accused. A compromise under sec. 345 has the effect of acquittal—Wali Asmal, Ratanlal 519; Hasta, 1914 P.R. 29, 16 Cr.L.J. 81, 26 I.C. 993. The withdrawal of the Public Prosecutor from the case under sec. 494 (b) has the effect of acquitting the accused, and will bar a fresh trial—Sivarama, 12 Mad. 35; Dudikala, 40 Mad 976; Mahadeogir, 14 Cr.L.J. 135, 9 N.L.R. 26; Menghraj, 23 Cr.L.J. 306. But an order made under section 494 (a) is an order of discharge of the accused person and section 403 does not bar the entertainment of a fresh complaint—Ramanand v. Ali Hassan, 26 Cr.L.J. 129, 83 I.C. 689, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 797; Lari Chand v. Nirode, 31 Cr.L.J. 1153, 127 I.C. 63, 34 C.W.N. 196, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 369. See also Note 1301. This section does not bar a second trial even when, through mistake, an order of acquittal is passed under sec. 494 (a), Cr. P. C., instead of an order of discharge which can only be made under that section—Tolladagu v. Mateli, 43 Cr.L.J. 12, 140 I.C. 322, 36 M.L.W. 641, 1932 M.W.N. 1230, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad. 850, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 98, 1933 Cr.C. 129. The dismissal of a summons-case amounts to an acquittal—Saifuddin, 1917 P.W.R. 14, 18 Cr.L.J. 324. An order of acquittal under sec. 258 cannot be treated as an order of discharge; it is one of acquittal and bars a second trial of the same offence on the same facts—Gandi Apparaju, 43 Mad. 330, 21 Cr.L.J. 91.

Where a man is tried of a more serious offence and is convicted of less serious one he must be held to have been acquitted of the more serious offence and the acquittal cannot be set aside except upon an appeal filed by the Local Government—Kishan Singh, 50 All 722, 111 I.C. 332, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 251, 29 Cr.L.J. 828, 55 I.A. 390, 5 O.W.N. 911, 28 M.L.W. 396, 1928 M.W.N. 749, 29 P.L.R. 575, 33 C.W.N. 1, 48 C.L.J. 397, 30 Bom.L.R. 1572, 55 M.L.J. 786, 26 A.L.J. 1099 (P.C.); Motiram, 38 Cr.L.J. 71 (72), A.I.R. 1936 All. 758, 165 I.C. 734, 1936 A.L.J. 1083, 1936 Cr.C. 999, 1936 A.I.R. 944, 9 R.A. 301. See also Note 1143 under the heading "Scope of re-trial".

An order of the Magistrate dismissing a complaint for non-examination of the complainant under sec. 200, Cr. P. C., after the framing of the charge, does not operate as an order of acquittal so as to bar a second complaint on the same facts—Ali Baux, 35 Cr.L.J. 1177, 150 I.C. 1006, 1934 A.L.J. 648, 1934 Cr.C. 1084, A.I.R. 1934 All. 877, A.I.R. 1934 All. 624, 4 A.W.R. 213.

An order of discharge has to be taken as an order of acquittal when, in the circumstances, an order of acquittal was the only one that could legally be passed. Conversely an order that purports to be one of acquittal has to be regarded as one of discharge when under the provision of law that was applied, only a discharge order could be passed—Tolladaga v. Match, 34 Cr.L.J. 12 (13), 140 I.C. 322, 36 M.L.W. 641, 1932 M.W.N. 1230, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 850, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 98, 1933 Cr.C. 129.

But a wrong order of acquittal will not bar a subsequent trial under this section. If a Magistrate tries a warrant case as a summons-case and acquits the accused without framing a charge, such an order of acquittal will be treated as one of discharge only, and cannot operate as a bar to a re-trial—Jadu, 1886 A.W.N. 260; Lajja Ram, 1888 A.W.N. 96. If in a warrant case, before the charge is drawn up and the accused called upon to plead to it, the Magistrate erroneously acquits the accused, the acquittal amounts only to a discharge and does not bar a re-trial—Robert Sheriff, 6 W.R. 13. (But if the trial has been otherwise regularly conducted, the absence of a formal charge will not convert the order of acquittal into one of discharge, and the order of acquittal will bar a re-trial—Gurdu, 3 All. 129). Where a preliminary charge-sheet was laid by the Police before the Magistrate under sec. 107, against several persons, but the Police intending to withdraw it in order that they might present a fresh charge-sheet against some only of those included in it, the Magistrate permitted the withdrawal and endorsed on the charge-sheet that the accused were acquitted, it was held that such an endorsement was illegal, because neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal could be passed in a case where no process has been issued against the accused; and, therefore, the Magistrate's order was no bar to fresh proceedings being taken on a second charge-sheet—Muth'a Moopan, 36 Mad. 315.

On the other hand, where a person who ought to have been acquitted, is erroneously ordered to be discharged only, the order of discharge will be treated as one of acquittal, and will bar a re-trial. Thus, where a Public Prosecutor withdraws from the case under sec. 494, after the frame of charge, the accused ought to be acquitted and not discharged; if, however, he is ordered to be discharged, he will be deemed to have been acquitted and a subsequent trial and conviction on the same facts is illegal and will be set aside—Sitarama, 12 Mad. 35. So also, where in a warrant case, the accused has pleaded to a charge, the Magistrate can either convict or acquit him; his order dismissing the case will be one of acquittal, and not one of discharge of the accused—Jadubar, 5 C.L.R. 259; Hasta, 1914 P.R. 29, 16 Cr.L.J. 81, 26 I.C. 993. See also Chidambaram v. Ramaswamy, 1933 M.W.N. 1278 cited in Note 798.

1180. The Crim. e where all the

—Nazir Ahmad, 36 Cr.L.J. 202, 152 I.C. 884, A.I.R. 1934 All. 944, 1934 Cr.C. 1256.

An Appellate Court set aside a conviction and sentence on the ground that the Court below did not comply with the provision of sec. 360. It left the question of retrial to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate held a retrial. Held that the order of the Appellate Court did not amount to an acquittal. It was passed on a consideration of a point of law only and without recording any finding on the merits of the case. Such an order did not bar the retrial of the accused by the District Magistrate—Miajan, 53 Cal. 192, 27 Cr.L.J. 733, 95 I.C. 61, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 585, following Madhab, 46 Cal. 212. Where the Sessions Judge on appeal set aside the conviction under section 363, Indian Penal Code, and sent the case back to the trying Magistrate with a direction to commit the accused to the Sessions on a charge under section 366, Indian Penal Code, the Sessions Judge's order did not amount to an order of acquittal under section 363. Even, if the Judge used the word "acquitted" it must be held to be merely an error, and did not bar a retrial—Bajinath, 33 Cr.L.J. 669, 138 I.C. 609, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 488, A.I.R. 1932 All. 409, 54 All. 756, 1932 A.L.J. 483, 1932 Cr.C. 513 (515). Where the accused were charged under sec. 186, I. P. C., on a report which was sent by the Naib Nazir to the Munsif, who in his turn sent it to the Magistrate, but the Magistrate refused to treat the report as a complaint and "released" the accused, but directed the Naib Nazir to make a formal complaint, held that there was no trial at all, and the order of release did not amount to an acquittal, so as to bar a proper complaint subsequently filed by the Naib Nazir—Nasir Sardar, 34 Cr.L.J. 181, 141 I.C. 636, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 153, 60 Cal. 149, 36 C.W.N. 1038 (1040), 1932 Cr.C. 893, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 871. Where the Magistrate convicted the accused under secs. 20 and 29 (f) of the Arms Act, without passing any sentence under the latter section and the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 20 on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused under that section and set the accused at liberty, observing that if the Magistrate wished to proceed further in the matter he might commit the accused to the Court of Session, held that his order amounted to an order of discharge under sec. 19 (f) and this section could not operate as a bar to the prosecution of the accused under sec. 19 (f)—Nagendra, 33 Cr.L.J. 770, 36 C.W.N. 926, 1932 Cr.C. 636, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 683, 139 I.C. 470, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 628.

Burden of proof:—The burden of proof of previous conviction or acquittal is upon the party setting it up—Raghnandan, 1889 A.W.N. 8

1090. Court of competent jurisdiction:—The Council of Elders established under the Punjab Frontier Regulation (IV of 1873) is a Court of competent jurisdiction, for the purposes of this section, and a person convicted by such Council cannot be retried on the same facts—Sarwar, 1884 P.R. 30 Under the Burma Village Act, the village headman has the power to try as a Court an offence under sec. 294, I. P. C., and other offences. Therefore, a person who had once been tried by the village headman for an offence under sec. 294, I. P. C., is not liable to be tried again for the same offence—Nga E, 1 Rang. 499. A village Munsif in Madras is not a recognised tribunal under the Cr. P. Code, and consequently an acquittal by a village Munsif does not bar the trial of the accused by a Magistrate—Rama Naidu v. Veerapuram Venkatasami, 53 M.L.J. 102, 28 Cr.L.J. 507, 101 I.C. 891, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 178, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 695.

It is necessary to a plea of autre fois acquit that the first Court should have had competent jurisdiction to try the offence, and therefore the conviction or acquittal of an accused by a Court not having jurisdiction is no bar to the institution of fresh proceedings against the accused on the same facts—Protab, 2 W.R. 9; Robert Sheriff, 6 W.R. 13. See also Narayanaswami v. Karumbayiram, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 716, 1934 M.W.N. 1022, 1934 Cr.C. 1354, 36 Cr.L.J. 550, 154 I.C. 602, 58 Mad. 256. A trial by a Court not having jurisdiction is void ab initio, and the accused, if acquitted, is liable to be retried—Husain, 8 Bom. 307. But an illegal conviction is not the same as a conviction by a Court incompetent to try the case. So a second prosecution is barred under this section even when the previous conviction was illegal—Ram Piyari, 32 Cr.L.J. 731, 131 I.C. 373, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 199, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 469, 1931 Cr.C. 319. Where a conviction by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the offence is set aside by the Appellate Court, and that Court discharges the accused without ordering a retrial, this section does not bar fresh proceedings being taken in the proper Court—Abdul Ghani, 29 Cal. 412; Hussain, 39 All. 293. See also Nagendra, 33 Cr.L.J. 770, 36 C.W.N. 926, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 683, 1932 Cr.C. 636, 139 I.C. 470, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 628. But where an accused is tried and acquitted by a Court which on the face of it is a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the offence charged, his subsequent trial is barred by this section; and the second Court in which the accused is tried again is not entitled to impeach the competency of the Court which held the first trial on the ground that the presiding officer might, perhaps, have laboured under the disqualification prescribed by sec. 556. Until the order of acquittal passed by the first Court is set aside by some competent Court, the man acquitted is entitled to plead it under sec. 403 in connection with any other proceeding that may be taken against him—Darbari, 8 A.L.J. 1129, 12 Cr.L.J. 575.

The trial of the accused by a Court in a Native State bars their trial by a Court in British India on the same facts and for the same offence—Teja Singh, 5 Lah L.J. 574.

The word "jurisdiction" refers not only to the character and status of the tribunal, but also includes local jurisdiction as laid down in secs 177-184 and 188. Therefore, previous acquittal of an offence by a Court having no local jurisdiction to try the offence is not a bar to the subsequent trial by a competent Court—Shanker, 53 Bom. 69, 30 Cr.L.J. 54 (56), 113 I.C. 70, 30 Bom.L.R. 1435, A.I.R. 1928 Bom 530. The Full Bench of the Madras High Court took a different view in Rathnavelu v Iyer, 34 Cr.L.J. 1080, 145 I.C. 878, 1933 M.W.N. 713, 38 M.L.W. 562, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 765, 65 M.L.J. 529, 1933 Cr.C. 1372, 56 Mad. 996, following Doraiswamy, 30 Mad. 94. The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court followed the view of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Dhingano Khoso v. Gulsher Kambir Khan, 38 Cr.L.J. 959 (960), 170 I.C. 314, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 179 where Davis, J. C., observed: "Therefore it appears to us, secs. 403 and 531, Criminal Procedure Code, must be read together and we must conclude that a Court is a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of sec. 403, Criminal Procedure Code, where the finding, sentence or order of the Court could have been set aside under the provisions of sec. 531, Criminal Procedure Code, but has not in fact been so set aside. Section 531, Criminal Procedure Code, must be deemed to give jurisdiction to a Court which would otherwise lack it unless it appears that such lack of jurisdiction has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. Clearly it is not competent for a Court not acting under the provisions of sec. 531, Criminal Procedure Code, to say whether a failure of justice has or has not been occasioned. It was clearly not competent for the Resident Magistrate at Larkana to decide that the Sessions Court at Sukkur was not a competent Court within the provisions of sec. 403, Criminal Procedure Code merely because ex facie it lacked territorial jurisdiction."

Where the law requires a previous sanction (now complaint) under sec. 195 before a charge can be entertained by a Court, that Court is not a Court of competent jurisdiction until the sanction has been obtained or the complaint has been made. Therefore, the discharge or acquittal of the accused owing to want of such sanction (complaint) does not bar a subsequent trial of the accused for the same offence after the requisite complaint has been made or sanction obtained—Ambaji, 52 Bom 257, 109 I.C. 481, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 143, 30 Bom.L.R. 380, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 288, 29 Cr.L.J. 545; Jivan, 27 I.C. 208, 13 A.L.J. 4, A.I.R. 1915 All. 114, 37 All. 107, 16 Cr.L.J. 144; Samsuddin, 22 Bom. 711; Jivram, 31 I.C. 351, A.I.R. 1915 Bom 203, 17 Bom.L.R. 831, 40 Bom. 97, 16 Cr.L.J. 761; Fakir Mahomed, 21 S.L.R. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 1105 (1106), 97 I.C. 417, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 10; Muhammad Yasin, 5 Pat. 452, 95 I.C. 929, A.I.R. 1926 Pat 302, 7 P.L.T. 383, 27 Cr.L.J. 849 (850); Chuhar v. Emp., 129 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1055, 1930 Cr.C. 1231, 32 Cr.L.J. 253, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 160; Sanitary Inspector, Howrah Municipality v. Bepin Behary Ghosh, 95 I.C. 79, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 691, 27 Cr.L.J. 751, 43 C.L.J. 110, 30 C.W.N. 382; Ram Rakha, 39 Cr.L.J. 960, 177 I.C. 894, 40 P.L.R. 501, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 625, 11 R.L. 375, 1 I.R. 1939 Lah. 373. Therefore, where the accused was acquitted in the previous trial for the offence of forgery and cheating a Sub-Registrar, for which no sanction was obtained under sec. 195 before prosecution, the acquittal did not bar a subsequent trial for aiding and abetting cheating held after a formal sanction had been granted by the Sub-Registrar. The previous trial was not a trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction, since no sanction under sec. 195 was obtained before trial—Jivan, 13 A.L.J. 4, 37 All. 107. Contra—Ganapathi, 36 Mad. 308 (314), where it was held that the absence of a sanction or complaint did not affect the competency of the tribunal. But this decision has been disapproved of in almost all the cases cited above and by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Mulhu Mooppan, 38 Cr.L.J. 457, 167 I.C. 571, 9 R.M. 475, 1937 M.W.N. 17, 45 M.L.W. 226, 1 I.R. 1937 Mad. 664, A.I.R. 1937

Mad. 301, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 334 where Pandrang Row, J., has quoted the rule of English Law on the subject laid down in Rex v. Marsham, (1912) 2 K.B. 362, 81 L.J.K.B. 957, 107 L.T. 89, 76 J.P. 284, 28 T.L.R. 391, by Avary, J., as follows: "It is clear that in order to plead such a plea effectually—either a plea of autre fois acquit or autre fois convict—it must appear that the defendant has been legally convicted or legally acquitted, and it is laid down in Chitty on Criminal Law, 2nd Edition, Vol. I, page 445, that 'the point in discussion always is whether in fact, the defendant could have taken a fatal exception to the former indictment: for if he could, no acquittal will avail him.' King, J., also observed "The answers to these questions is in my opinion clear and is apparent on a perusal of sec. 530 of the Code. According to that section if any Magistrate 'not being empowered by law in this behalf' tries an offender, his proceedings shall be void. The Sub-Magistrate of Erode was certainly empowered by sec. 28 to try an offence under sec. 186, Indian Penal Code, but was he empowered to try these offenders for this particular offence? Clearly not, for sec. 195 prevents him from taking any notice whatever of the offence until a proper complaint is filed. His trial was, therefore, void. His charge was void. His judgment of acquittal was void. There is nothing which the accused can compel the Court to recognise in support of a plea under sec. 403." If the prosecution is defective for want of proper consent, the proceedings would be void and the complaint would be dismissed. The acquittal of the accused is obviously wrong, as that would prevent further proceeding even after the necessary consent is obtained—Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 468 (475), 43 C.W.N. F.C. 50, A.I.R. 1939 F.C. 43, 1939 M.W.N. 497, 181 I.C. 317, 1939 O.L.R. 366, 1939 P.W.N. 429, 1939 M.Cr.C. 148, 50 M.L.W. 95, 20 P.L.T. 539, (1939) 2 M.L.J. Sup. 23, 41 P.L.R. 680

Where a complaint under sec. 182, I. P. C., was made by an officer who did not come within the description of sec. 195 (1), Cr. P. C., and the prosecution was withdrawn on account of this defect and the accused was acquitted, a second complaint by the officer described in sec. 195 (1) (a) is not barred under the provision of this section—Mohendra, 35 Cr.L.J. 686, 148 I.C. 437, A.L.R. 1934 Pat. 302, 15 P.L.T. 554, 1934 Cr.C. 882, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 411, 6 R.P. 478.

No sanction is required for a prosecution under sec. 82 of the Registration Act, and, therefore, a Court has jurisdiction to try the accused for that offence, without a sanction—Maung Saing, 1 Rang 299, 25 Cr.L.J. 191 (following Gopi Nath v. Kuldip, 11 Cal. 566). But see Hussain Khan, 39 All. 293 and Mohan Lal, 19 A.L.J. 813, 22 Cr.L.J. 50.

While such conviction or acquittal remains in force :—This means 'as long as such conviction or acquittal is not set aside by a Court of Appeal or Revision.' If the conviction or acquittal is set aside by the Appellate Court, the result will be that the previous trial is annulled and the prisoner may be again put upon his trial—Kali Churn, 7 W.R. 2. So long as the conviction or acquittal is not set aside it will bar a second trial, even though the second Court considers that the acquittal in the first trial is not warranted by the evidence produced in the first trial—Dwarkanath, 7 W.R. 15 (22). So also, an acquittal of an offence arising out of certain facts under a wrong section will prevent a further inquiry into any offence based on the same facts, until that acquittal is set aside—Ram Nath v. Ram Saran, 26 O.C. 282.

Where the accused was acquitted of an offence, he cannot, as long as the order of acquittal remains in force, be deemed to have committed that offence. So the Sessions Judge cannot come to an adverse conclusion against him in respect of the same matter when deciding a subsequent appeal—Munnoo, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 470, 35 Cr.L.J. 36, 146 I.C. 354, 1933 Cr.C. 1393, 10 O.W.N. 895, following Ganesh, 12 Cr.L.J. 94, 9 I.C. 511 (Lah.), Sanalal, 37 Born. 658, 20 I.C. 613, 14 Cr.L.J. 453 and Lalit Mohan, 38 Cal. 559, 10 I.C. 582, 12 Cr.L.J. 286.

1091. Retrial:—Where the jury is discharged under sec. 305, the accused may be retried under sec. 308; such a trial is not barred by this section. In such a case, the accused is being tried on the original indictment, and not 'tried again' The duty of the Court is to continue the trial of the accused before another jury, and this process may continue, without the accused being 'tried again' under sec. 403—Nirmal Kanta, 41 Cal 1072. (Moreover, in a such a case, i.e., where the jury is discharged under sec. 305, the accused is neither convicted nor acquitted, and therefore his retrial is not barred under this section). But where the Appellate Court reverses the conviction and sentence without ordering acquittal or retrial, further trial of the accused for the same offences is barred under this section—Simlan v Simlan, 1933 M.W.N. 224.

An appeal or a revision is not a retrial, but a continuation of the same trial—Jabanullah, 23 Cal. 975 (1977); Baluant, 9 All. 134; Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (122); and, therefore, the Court of Appeal can convict the accused on a charge on which he has been acquitted by the first Court, or order a retrial on the same charge—Krishna Dhan, 22 Cal 377.

Before an Appellate Court passes an order for re-trial or commitment of the accused for trial, the conviction and sentence already passed have to be reversed. This reversal of the conviction and sentence does not amount to an acquittal such as is referred to in this section. This section does not bar a re-trial ordered by an Appellate Court under cl. (b) of sec 423, Cr P. Code—Bahraichi, 35 Cr.L.J. 1333, 158 I.C. 200, 1935 A.L.J. 1077. See Note 1143.

1092. "For the same offence":—The former conviction or acquittal is a bar to a second trial, if the offence is the same. Thus, a person charged with and acquitted of an offence under the Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878) cannot subsequently be tried for the same offence—Gustadji, 10 Bom. 181 (182). An offence under sec. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1914 (reckless driving) and an offence under sec. 279, I.P.C. (rash driving on the public road so as to endanger human life) are the same, even though punishable under different Acts, and a person convicted of the former offence cannot be again charged with the latter—Gur Narain, 26 A.L.J. 160, 107 I.C. 687, 9 A.L.Cr.R. 99, A.I.R. 1928 All. 191, 29 Cr.L.J. 271. The accused was tried and convicted for an offence under the Railways Act. In that trial, although there was no charge for assault, the Court took into account the fact that the accused had committed an assault upon the complainant, and in consideration thereof inflicted a heavy sentence. The accused was subsequently charged under sec. 323, I.P.C., held that the second trial was illegal in as much as it was a trial for practically the same offence for which trial was illegal in as much as it was a trial for practically the same offence for which he had been already punished, though indirectly, in the first trial—Ka.lashpati v. Gopi, 33 C.W.N. 948 (949), 31 Cr.L.J. 613, 124 I.C. 69, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 60, 1930 Cr.C. 12. The accused was at first charged with having forged pattahs A and B, but no mention of any charge as to pattah B was made in the order of commitment, and he was tried and acquitted on the indictment for forging pattah A. He was subsequently charged with having forged pattah B. Held that as the offence of forging pattah B was not the same offence as forging pattah A, the second trial was not barred, even though evidence was given at the first trial tending to show that both pattahs were forgeries. The Court before which the second trial is held has nothing to do with the evidence given in the former trial except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the offence which formed the subject of the first trial is the same as the offence which forms the subject of the second charge. If the offence is the same, the former conviction or acquittal is a bar to a second trial, whether the second Court considers that the former conviction or acquittal was warranted by the evidence given in the first trial or not. If the offence is not the same, the former conviction or acquittal is no bar to the trial upon the second charge, notwithstanding that the evidence given in the two cases is the same. Two distinct offences cannot be converted into one offence by reason of any evidence adduced upon the trial for one of them—per Peacock, C.J., in Duarkanath, 7 W.R. 15 (20, 21).

The trial of the accused for the dishonest receiving or retaining of certain stolen articles bars a second trial of the accused in respect of other stolen articles found in his possession on the same date, in the absence of evidence to show that the different articles which were the subject of the charge in the two trials were received at different times—Ganesh Sahu, 50 Cal 594; Bishun Singh, 3 Pat. 503 (519), 5 P.L.T.

319, 25 Cr.L.J. 738; Ishan Muchi, 15 Cal. 511; Makhan, 15 All. 317. See also Sheo Charan, 45 All. 485, 24 Cr.L.J. 432. But the Sind Court dissents from those rulings and is of opinion that where properties are stolen on different dates, the presumption is that the properties passed from the hands of the thief to the receiver at different dates, and the burden lies on the accused to prove that they passed to him at one and the same time. In the absence of such proof, a prior acquittal of the receiver with regard to one item of stolen property does not bar subsequent trial in respect of a different item of property stolen on a different date—Dadlomal, 21 S.L.R. 154, 27 Cr.L.J. 1256 (1257), 98 I.C. 104, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 53.

Where the person has been tried for some offence and acquitted, he cannot be subsequently charged with conspiracy, of which that offence is alleged to form a part—Lalit Mohan, 38 Cal. 559. A different view seems to have been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Das, 35 Cr.L.J. 1349 (1353), 151 I.C. 442, 1934 Cr.C. 130, 1934 A.L.J. 852, A.I.R. 1934 All. 61, where it has been laid down that there is nothing in the Indian Law to prevent an acquitted person, after his acquittal of a particular offence, from being charged with an offence of conspiracy. Only the evidence on which he has been acquitted cannot be received at a subsequent trial on a charge of conspiracy. But the previous conviction for the offence of criminal conspiracy cannot be a bar to a subsequent conviction for the offence of cheating merely because this act of cheating was considered in the previous case as one of the acts which was evidence of the conspiracy—Ochhavlal, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 447, 35 Bom.L.R. 985, 1933 Cr.C. 1406, 146 I.C. 587, 35 Cr.L.J. 112, 58 Bom. 23. A person accused of conspiracy under sec. 121A, I. P. C., can be convicted of that offence, even if he had been convicted or acquitted of an overt act in regard to that conspiracy. The provisions contained in sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., relating to the saving of the inherent power of the High Court to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice cannot be invoked in support of the position that the conviction or acquittal of the accused previously tried for commission of offences under the Indian Arms Act or under sec. 120B, I. P. C., can bar a prosecution under sec. 121A, I. P. Code—Jitendra Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 99 (114), 38 Cr.L.J. 818, 169 I.C. 977, 10 R.C. 69. The gist of the offence of conspiracy is the agreement of entering into the conspiracy. What sec. 403, Cr. P. C., merely lays down if it is a conspiracy matter to be considered—is that a man cannot be tried again for the particular entry into the conspiracy for which he has already been tried. Section 403 does not say, and indeed it would be clearly disastrous if it did say, that for any fresh entry into the conspiracy he cannot be tried. A person can, therefore, be tried again for any fresh entry into the same conspiracy—Purnananda Das Gupta, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 65 (69), 68 C.L.J. 206, 179 I.C. 506, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 1, 40 Cr.L.J. 199.

The accused was charged under the provisions of sec. 222 (2) of this Code, for criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of Rs. 18,924, alleged to have been misappropriated by him between 1st October 1921 and 1st March 1922. The charge was withdrawn with the leave of the Court and the accused was acquitted. He was subsequently charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 100 on the 30th November 1921, which sum was not included in the previous sum of Rs. 18,924 and the facts relating thereto were not known to the prosecution at the time of the previous charge. Held that as the sum of Rs. 100 (the subject of the subsequent charge) was not included in the gross sum of Rs. 18,924 (the subject of the previous charge) the offence subsequently charged was not the same in respect of which the accused was previously acquitted; therefore, the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the subsequent trial of the accused—Nagendra Nath, 50 Cal. 632, 25 Cr.L.J. 156, 27 C.W.N. 578 (581), A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 654. For contra—see Appadurai, 17 Cr.L.J. 30, 32 I.C. 158. But where the prosecution knew perfectly well what was the gross sum in respect of which the accused had committed breach of trust, and they could have proceeded against the accused in the first trial in respect of the gross amount under sec. 222 (2), but instead of doing so they elected to proceed on three items and got the accused convicted and then they picked up three other items and got the accused tried a second time, held that the second trial was not desirable, though not illegal—Sidh Nath, 33 C.W.N. 454 (457), 1929 Cr.C. 90 (91), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 457, 57 Cal. 17, 49 C.L.J. 378, 124 I.C. 824, 31 Cr.L.J. 747, 57 Cal. 17, Ind. Rul. 1936 Cal. 472. After a trial in respect of a gross sum for which a breach of trust was alleged to have been committed between two specified dates a second trial in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed on intermediate days but not included in the gross sum is permissible. In certain cases the High Court can exercise its powers under sec. 439, Cr. P. C., and prevent a second trial for the ends of justice—Brijwan Das, 32 Cr.L.J. 376, 129 I.C. 558, 53 All. 411, A.I.R. 1931 All. 209, 1931 A.L.J. 98, 1931 Cr.C. 924. In a case of defalcation the prosecution should decide whether they are going to proceed against the accused for conspiracy or not. In the event of the prosecution deciding that a charge for conspiracy is not appropriate they can pick out three items from among the number of defalcations for the purpose of framing charges. In a trial upon three such charges it will undoubtedly be open to the prosecution to lead evidence relative to other items for the purpose of proving system. If, however, the prosecution decide that it is necessary to frame a charge of conspiracy they should frame one such charge covering all the items of defalcation which had been discovered up till then. The policy of splitting up the charges and the trials in respect of groups of three different items is contrary to good sense and unfair to the accused persons—Jagdish Prosad Basu v Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 90, 178 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 697, 43 C.W.N. 23. See also Note 726. The accused was tried for the offence of criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of a sum of money and acquitted. He was again tried for the same offence in respect of another sum misappropriated during the same period to which the former amount related and was convicted. Held that the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the accused's conviction at the second trial—Kashinath, 12 Bom.L.R. 226, 5 I.C. 970, 11 Cr.L.J. 337; Seemakurti, 32 Cr.L.J. 223, 129 I.C. 75, 32 M.L.W. 789, 59 M.L.J. 584, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 978, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 219, 1930 M.W.N. 1097, 1930 Cr.C. 1194. For the question of sentence in cases like these see Mg Po Kywe v The King, 40 Cr.L.J. 621, 182 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 152, 1939 Rang. 251 and Jagdish Prosad Basu v Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 90, 178 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 697, 43 C.W.N. 23.

Continuing offence:—A person who has once been tried for building a house without the sanction of the Municipal Committee and acquitted, cannot be retried for the same offence simply on the ground that the house continues to stand and thus constitutes a continuing offence. The previous acquittal will bar a retrial—Saifuddin, 1917 P.W.R. 17, 18 Cr.L.J. 324.

Second complaint by a different person:—A person once convicted of an offence cannot be tried again for the same offence and on the same facts, even though the complainant in the second case is not the same person as the complainant in the first case. Thus, the accused assaulted several persons A, B, etc. At first A filed a complaint against the accused, and they were convicted under sec. 323, I. P. C. Afterwards B filed a similar complaint against the same accused on the same facts. Held that the second trial was barred—Ram Chandar, 18 A.L.J. 83, 54 I.C. 772, 21 Cr.L.J. 164, A.I.R. 1919 All. 90.

Accused persons along with others presented a petition to the police against the complainant, who was a young girl aged about 17, and her father, alleging that his house was visited by persons of bad repute who drank liquor and committed debaucheries and were thus a nuisance to the people of the mohalla. The father of the complainant filed a complaint for defamation against the accused and other signatories of the application under sec. 500, I. P. C., which was eventually compounded upon the accused tendering an apology withdrawing their allegations. The accused were, therefore, acquitted. A second complaint was filed under sec. 500, I. P. C., by the girl with reference to the same application. Held that the previous complaint did not purport to be on her behalf and she being a minor, it could not, according to law, have been

But the Sind Court dissents from those rulings and is of opinion that where properties are stolen on different dates, the presumption is that the properties passed from the hands of the thief to the receiver at different dates, and the burden lies on the accused to prove that they passed to him at one and the same time. Where the person has been tried for some offence and acquitted, he cannot be subsequently charged with conspiracy, of which that offence is alleged to form a part—Lalit Mohan, 38 Cal 559. A different view seems to have been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Ram Das, 35 Cr.L.J. 1349 (1353), 151 I.C. 442, 1934 Cr.C. 130, 1934 A.L.J. 852, A.I.R. 1934 All. 61, where it has been laid down that there is nothing in the Indian Law to prevent an acquitted person, after his acquittal of a particular offence, from being charged with an offence of conspiracy. Only the evidence on which he has been acquitted cannot be received at a subsequent trial on a charge of conspiracy. But the previous conviction for the offence of criminal conspiracy cannot be a bar to a subsequent conviction for the offence of cheating merely because this act of cheating was considered in the previous case as one of the acts which was evidence of the conspiracy—Ochhavai, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 447, 35 Bom.L.R. 985, 1933 Cr.C. 1406, 146 I.C. 587, 35 Cr.L.J. 112, 58 Bom 23. A person accused of conspiracy under sec. 121A, I. P. C., can be convicted of that offence, even if he had been convicted or acquitted of an overt act in regard to that conspiracy. The provisions contained in sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., relating to the saving of the inherent power of the High Court to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice cannot be invoked in support of the position that the conviction or acquittal of the accused previously tried for commission of offences under the Indian Arms Act or under sec. 120B, I. P. C., can bar a prosecution under sec. 121A, I. P. Code—Jitendra Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 99 (114), 38 Cr.L.J. 818, 169 I.C. 977, 10 R.C. 69. The gist of the offence of conspiracy is the agreement of entering into the conspiracy. What sec. 403, Cr. P. C., merely lays down is that if it is a conspiracy matter to be considered—is that a man cannot be tried again for the particular entry into the conspiracy for which he has already been tried. Section 403 does not say, and indeed it would be clearly disastrous if it did say, that for any fresh entry into the conspiracy he cannot be tried. A person can, therefore, be tried again for any fresh entry into the same conspiracy—Purnananda Das Gupta, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 65 (69), 68 C.L.J. 206, 179 I.C. 506, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal 1, 40 Cr.L.J. 199.

The accused was charged under the provisions of sec. 222 (2) of this Code, for criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of Rs. 18,924, alleged to have been misappropriated by him between 1st October 1921 and 1st March 1922. The charge was withdrawn with the leave of the Court and the accused was acquitted. He was subsequently charged with criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 100 on the 30th November 1921, which sum was not included in the previous sum of Rs. 18,924 and the facts relating thereto were not known to the prosecution at the time of the previous charge. Held that as the sum of Rs. 100 (the subject of the subsequent charge) was not included in the gross sum of Rs. 18,924 (the subject of the previous charge) the offence subsequently charged was not the same in respect of which the accused was previously acquitted; therefore, the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the subsequent trial of the accused—Nagendra Nath, 50 Cal. 632, 25 Cr.L.J. 156, 27 C.W.N. 578 (581), A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 654. For contra—see Appadurai, 17 Cr.L.J. 30, 32 I.C. 158. But where the prosecution knew perfectly well what was the gross sum in respect of which the accused had committed breach of trust, and they could have proceeded against the accused in the first trial in respect of the gross amount under sec. 222 (2), but instead of doing so they elected to proceed on three items and got the accused convicted and then they picked up three other items and got the accused tried a second time, held that the second trial was not desirable, though not illegal—Siddh Nath, 33 C.W.N. 454 (457), 1929 Cr.C. 90 (91), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 457, 57 Cal. 17, 49 C.L.J. 378, 124 I.C. 824, 31 Cr.L.J. 747, 57 Cal. 17, Ind. Rul. 1936 Cal. 472 After a trial in respect of a gross sum for which a breach of trust was alleged to have been committed between two specified dates a second trial in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed on intermediate days but not included in the gross sum is permissible. In certain cases the High Court can exercise its powers under sec. 439, Cr. P. C., and prevent a second trial for the ends of justice—Brijwan Das, 32 Cr.L.J. 376, 129 I.C. 558, 53 All. 411, A.I.R. 1931 All. 209, 1931 A.L.J. 98, 1931 Cr.C. 924. In a case of defalcation the prosecution should decide whether they are going to proceed against the accused for conspiracy or not. In the event of the prosecution deciding that a charge for conspiracy is not appropriate they can pick out three items from among the number of defalcations for the purpose of framing charges. In a trial upon three such charges it will undoubtedly be open to the prosecution to lead evidence relative to other items for the purpose of proving system. If, however, the prosecution decide that it is necessary to frame a charge of conspiracy they should frame one such charge covering all the items of defalcation which had been discovered up till then. The policy of splitting up the charges and the trials in respect of groups of three different items is contrary to good sense and unfair to the accused persons—Jagdish Prosad Basu v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 90, 178 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 697, 43 C.W.N. 23. See also Note 726. The accused was tried for the offence of criminal breach of trust as a public servant in respect of a sum of money and acquitted. He was again tried for the same offence in respect of another sum misappropriated during the same period to which the former amount related and was convicted. Held that the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the accused's conviction at the second trial—Kashinath, 12 Bom.L.R. 226, 5 I.C. 970, 11 Cr.L.J. 337; Scemakurti, 32 Cr.L.J. 223, 129 I.C. 75, 32 M.L.W. 789, 59 M.L.J. 584, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 978, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 219, 1930 M.W.N. 1097, 1930 Cr.C. 1194. For the question of sentence in cases like these see Mg Po Kywe v. The King, 40 Cr.L.J. 621, 182 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 152, 1939 Rang. 251 and Jagdish Prosad Basu v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 90, 178 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 697, 43 C.W.N. 23.

Continuing offence:—A person who has once been tried for building a house without the sanction of the Municipal Committee and acquitted, cannot be retried for the same offence simply on the ground that the house continues to stand and thus constitutes a continuing offence. The previous acquittal will bar a retrial—Saifuddin, 1917 P.W.R. 17, 18 Cr.L.J. 324.

Second complaint by a different person:—A person once convicted of an offence cannot be tried again for the same offence and on the same facts, even though the complainant in the second case is not the same person as the complainant in the first case. Thus, the accused assaulted several persons A, B, etc. At first A filed a complaint against the accused, and they were convicted under sec. 323, I. P. C. Afterwards B filed a similar complaint against the same accused on the same facts. Held that the second trial was barred—Ram Chandar, 18 A.L.J. 85, 54 I.C. 772, 21 Cr.L.J. 164, A.I.R. 1919 All. 90.

Accused persons along with others presented a petition to the police against the complainant, who was a young girl aged about 17, and her father, alleging that his house was visited by persons of bad repute who drank liquor and committed debaucheries and were thus a nuisance to the people of the mohalla. The father of the complainant filed a complaint for defamation against the accused and other signatories of the application under sec. 500, I. P. C., which was eventually compounded upon the accused tendering an apology withdrawing their allegations. The accused were, therefore, acquitted. A second complaint was filed under sec. 500, I. P. C., by the girl with reference to the same application. Held that the previous complaint did not purport to be on her behalf and she being a minor, it could not, according to law, have been either instituted or compounded without permission of the Court, that the application made by the accused to the police contained matter which defamed both and consequently the complainant had an independent right to seek redress therefor in Civil and Criminal Courts and that sec. 403, I. P. C., was not a bar to the second complaint—Mt. Harbans Kaur v. Lahari Ram, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 739, 178 I.C. 791, 40 Cr.L.J. 131, distinguishing Ram Chandar, supra.

"Same facts":—A Court ought not to decide that a charge pending trial before him is barred under this section without an investigation of the facts put forward on behalf of the complainant—Radha Kishan v. Fatik Chand, 23 C.W.N. 543, 22 Cr.L.J. 67. Where the complainant charges the accused before the Magistrate with a certain offence, and a preliminary objection is put forward on behalf of the accused that he had been previously tried on the same facts in another Court and acquitted, it is the duty of the Magistrate to hear the evidence and ascertain what are the facts in the two cases, in order to determine whether the facts in the present case are the same as those in the previous case—M. N. Mukherjee v. Matangi Charan Palit, 23 C.W.N. 599, 20 Cr.L.J. 572. Where the accused was charged in the former trial for an offence under sec. 401, I. P. C., but the charge failed because the approver's statement on which the prosecution was based was considered unreliable, a subsequent trial for an offence under sec. 413, I. P. C., is not barred by the provisions of this section, because the second trial is not based on the same facts as those on which the former trial proceeded. In the first trial the prosecution rested primarily on the approver's statement, but in the second trial the prosecution is based entirely on the evidence as to the discovery of the stolen property in the house of an accused—Chhajju, 26 P.L.R. 470, 26 Cr.L.J. 1097, 88 I.C. 185, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 537. Where the prosecution of the accused rests on facts wholly and completely different from those on which he was previously prosecuted, the previous acquittal does not bar the subsequent proceedings, even though under the same section of the I. P. Code. Thus, the previous acquittal of an accused on a charge under sec. 498, I. P. C., is not a bar to subsequent proceedings under the same section on a charge of subsequent detention of the same woman, upon different facts—Waryam, 29 P.L.R. 52, 29 Cr.L.J. 3, 106 I.C. 339, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 315.

1093. Trial for a different offence upon the same facts:—The protection offered by this section extends to different offences only when they are based on the same facts and fall within the provisions of sec. 236 or sec. 237—Subedar Krishnappa, 1 Bom.L.R. 15; Diwan Sahab v. Emp., 1938 M.W.N. 586, 47 M.L.W. 145. Where a person has been tried and convicted or acquitted for an offence arising out of a particular set of facts, he cannot, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, be again tried in respect of any offence based on the same facts, unless the case can be brought under one or other of the specific exceptions to the rule provided by sub-sections (2) to (4)—Mahadeogir, 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr.L.J. 135.

Examples—(1) A trial for the offence of theft of an animal bars a subsequent trial for the offence of mischief for subsequently killing that animal—Madar, 1 Weir 497. Similarly, where a person was tried for the offence of mischief and was acquitted on the ground that the tree in respect of which the mischief was alleged to have been committed was his own property, he cannot afterwards be tried for theft of the same tree on the same facts—Erramreddi, 8 Mad. 296.

(2) Where the accused with a body of people committed rioting and mischief to the trees of the complainant, and was at first tried for the offence of mischief alone and acquitted, held that he could not be tried again for the offence of rioting which was based on the same facts as the offence of mischief—In re Chinnappa, 19 L.W. 31, 25 Cr.L.J. 244, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 478, 76 I.C. 708, 1924 M.W.N. 153.

(3) Where the accused have been tried and acquitted on charges of forgery and abetment thereof, they cannot afterwards on the same facts be prosecuted for offences under sec. 82 (c) of the Registration Act, since they could have been charged in the previous trial under sec. 82 of the Registration Act—Maung Saing, 1 Rang. 299, 25 Cr.L.J. 191, A.I.R. 1921 Rang. 213.

(4) A person acquitted of using criminal force cannot be tried for hurt on the same facts—Kaplin v. Smith, 16 W.R. 3.

(5) Where a person is convicted on a charge under sec. 411, I. P. C., of having been dishonestly in possession of property knowing it to be stolen, he cannot be subsequently convicted under sec. 414, I. P. C., of voluntarily assisting in concealing other property stolen on the same occasion from the same person—Mian Jan, 28 All. 313. The accused was charged before the Sessions Judge with the offence of abetment of theft; the Judge acquitted the accused but was satisfied that he had committed the offence of receiving stolen property (sec. 411, I. P. C.). The Judge, however, did not charge him with that offence, as he could have done under sec. 236 of this Code. Subsequently, the accused was charged with an offence under sec. 411, I. P. C., and put on his trial. Held that the second trial was barred under the provisions of sec. 403—Pundalik, 26 Bom. L.R. 440, 26 Cr. L.J. 831, 86 I.C. 479, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 448.

(6) Where a person has been tried and acquitted on a charge under sec. 211, I. P. C., he cannot be tried again on a charge under sec. 182, I. P. C.—Ganapathi, 35 Mad. 308.

(7) A person acquitted on a charge under sec. 324, I. P. C., cannot be again tried on the same facts for an offence under sec. 323, I. P. C.—Wali Asmal, Ratanlal 519.

(8) A conviction under sec. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914) for reckless driving bars a subsequent prosecution on the same facts under sec. 279, I. P. C., for rash driving on the public road so as to endanger human life—Gur Narain, 26 A.L.J. 160, 29 Cr. L.J. 271, 107 I.C. 687, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 99, A.I.R. 1928 All. 191. So also an acquittal for rash and negligent driving of a car precludes trial for driving the car without a license—Maksudan, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 22, 59 I.C. 207, 22 Cr. L.J. 63, 2 P.L.T. 31.

(9) Where the prisoner was at first tried under sec. 498, I. P. C., for having enticed away a married woman from her husband, and was acquitted on the ground that the whole case was fabricated, and the prisoner was next charged and convicted under sec. 363, I. P. C., of having kidnapped two infants of the woman, who were with her when she left the house, it was held that the second trial was illegal, because so long as the acquittal under sec. 498, I. P. C., remained in force, the second Court was bound to take it as proved that the accused did not entice away the woman; and, therefore, the offence under sec. 363 alleged to have been committed while the prisoner enticed away the woman was disproved by the above finding of facts—Ganesh Das, 1911 P.L.R. 56, 12 Cr. L.J. 94, 9 I.C. 511.

(10) A person acquitted of the charge of cheating cannot be tried again for the offence of falsification of accounts, upon the same facts—Nand Kishore, 20 Cr. L.J. 667 (Patna). So also, the acquittal of cheating furnished a valid plea of autrefois acquit in bar of the accused being tried for criminal breach of trust on the same facts, even when the acquittal was under sec. 345, Cr. P. C.—John MacIver, 37 Cr. L.J. 637 (644), 162 I.C. 592, 1936 M.W.N. 281, 43 M.L.W. 548, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 353, 70 M.L.J. 635, 1936 Cr.C. 433 (F.B.).

(11) The accused was tried under sec. 363, I. P. C., and acquitted. The Sessions Judge directed further inquiry to be made to ascertain whether offences under secs. 366 and 368, I. P. C., were committed. It was held that the order directing further inquiry was illegal, in as much as kidnapping (sec. 363, I. P. C.) is an essential element in offences under secs. 366, 368, I. P. C., and the accused having been already acquitted of the offence of kidnapping, he could not be put on trial again for offences under secs. 366, 368, I. P. C.—Muhammad Saleh, 20 Cr. L.J. 526 (Pat.).

(12) An acquittal of the prisoner on charges under secs. 380, 411, I. P. C., for being found in possession of a quantity of jute, bars subsequent proceedings in respect of the same act under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, because in the previous trial the charge of theft (secs. 380, 411, I. P. C.) might have been joined with a charge under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act, under the provisions of sec. 236 of this Code—Manhari, 45 Cal. 727, 22 C.W.N. 199, 19 Cr. L.J. 198.

(13) Where the accused was acquitted of a charge of unlawful assembly with the common object of assaulting a person, the District Magistrate is not justified in ordering a further inquiry into the offence of hurt on the same facts, while the order of acquittal remains in force—Jaliram v. Raj Kumar, 5 C.W.N. 72.

(14) Where a person was at first charged with kidnapping a minor girl, under sec. 363, I. P. C., but the trying Magistrate finding that the girl was not under sixteen, acquitted the accused, a second trial on the same facts for the offence of abducting the girl in order to confine her secretly (sec. 365, I. P. C.) was barred. The accused in the first trial might have been charged in the alternative with the second offence, under sec. 237 of this Code—Kala Nath, 24 C.W.N. 856, 21 Cr.L.J. 639.

(15) If a person charged under sec. 338, I. P. C., with having caused grievous hurt by rashly driving a motor car, was acquitted on the ground that it was not proved that he was driving the car, he cannot be subsequently tried under sec. 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act for the offence of driving the car without a license—Maksudan, 2 P.L.T. 31, 22 Cr.L.J. 63, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 22.

(16) Where an accused was tried under sec. 408, I. P. C., for criminal breach of trust in respect of three sums of money alleged to have been dishonestly misappropriated, and it was part of the prosecution case at the trial that he had made three false entries to conceal the misappropriation, and he was acquitted by the jury, but was subsequently charged on the same evidence under sec. 477A, I. P. C. (falsification of accounts) in respect of the said three entries, it was held that he should not on the same facts be tried again for what were virtually the same offences charged in a different form—Jhabbar, 49 Cal. 924, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 129, 72 I.C. 973, 24 C.L.J. 509. Where the accused was convicted under sec. 408, or in the alternative, sec. 408|109, I. P. C., but the Appellate Court held that the evidence did not establish that the accused had committed an offence under sec. 408 or sec. 408|109, I. P. C., and directed, at the same time, that a charge under sec. 477A, I. P. C., be framed against him and that he be committed to the Sessions, held that in view of the provisions of sub-secs. (1) and (4), sec. 403, Cr. P. C., it was not open to the Appellate Court to direct that, upon the same facts as the original charge under sec. 408 or sec. 408|109, I. P. C., had been based, the accused should be committed for an offence under sec. 477A, I. P. C., and the provisions of sec. 403 (2), Cr. P. C., did not warrant the committal of the accused upon a fresh charge—Mahadeo Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 368, 167 I.C. 360, A.I.R. 1937 All. 117, 1937 A.L.J. 2, 1937 A.L.R. 174, 9 R.A. 522, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1133.

(17) Where the accused were at first charged under sec. 193, I. P. C., and acquitted by the Magistrate, who dealt very exhaustively with the evidence and came to the conclusion that the culpability of the accused had not been established beyond reasonable doubt, and the accused were subsequently charged with offences under secs. 467 and 471 read with sec. 120B of the I. P. C., upon facts which were wholly inseparable from the facts upon which the previous case was proceeded with, held that the subsequent trial was barred by this section—Cheraghali v. Satish, 30 C.W.N. 384, 26 Cr.L.J. 1023, 87 I.C. 817, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 450.

(18) The accused went into a Mahomedan grave yard and there cut down a tree. They were at first tried under sec. 297, I. P. C., for hurting the religious feelings of the Muhammadans by cutting down the tree, and were acquitted. They were subsequently prosecuted for theft of the tree. Held that the trial of the accused for theft, based on the same set of facts, was barred under sec. 403—Fatfeh Muhammad, 8 Lah. 52, 27 Cr.L.J. 1019 (1020), 96 I.C. 875, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 639.

(19) The accused who was employed on a steamship assaulted the captain of the ship and was convicted of an offence under sec. 68, Calcutta Police Act. Subsequently the captain filed a complaint under sec. 103 (iv) of the Merchant Shipping Act against the accused on the same facts. Held that the second trial was barred. In fact the second complaint was for the same offence under a different enactment—Alfred Laird, 31 C.W.N. 195, 28 Cr.L.J. 233 (234), 99 I.C. 1033, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 224.

(20) An accused person, who was acquitted of an offence under sec. 397, I. P. C., cannot, on the same facts, be tried again for an offence under sec. 307, I. P. C. Sec. 403, Cr. P. C., bars the trial of the latter offence—Penumatcha, 35 Cr.L.J. 783, 148 I.C. 844, 1934 M.W.N. 41, 39 M.L.W. 433, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 311, 66 M.L.J. 653, 57 Mad. 554, A.L.R. 1934 Mad. 1, 1934 Cr.C. 604.

(21) It would not be right or just, when the Court has once decided that there has been no failure to remove an encroachment and acquitted the accused, to make the same person liable to be tried again and again for failure to remove the same encroachment, simply because the same authority hopes to get a different decision by issuing one notice after another. Otherwise, there would be no end to such prosecutions—Rangachariar v. Venkataswami, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 56, 1934 M.W.N. 1088, 40 M.L.W. 834, 67 M.L.J. 873, 36 Cr.L.J. 311, 153 I.C. 322.

(22) The acquittal of the accused on a charge under rule 21 of the Burma Forest Rules for having extracted teak timber without a license and under rule 71 for converting timber at a sawpit without a sawpit license, is a bar to the subsequent prosecution of the accused on the same facts for offences under secs 379 and 411, I. P. Code—Yeok Kuk, 6 Rang 386, 29 Cr.L.J. 930 (931), A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 252, 111 I.C. 850.

(23) The abduction and rape of the same woman are not so distinct that an acquittal on the first charge will not bar subsequent proceedings on the second. On the grounds of public policy too non-success in a prosecution for abduction ought not to entitle the prosecutrix to bring further evidence to support a rape alleged to have been committed during the pendency of the abduction in question, even when further evidence is relied upon. Such a proceeding is contrary both to good law and good sense—Chit Hlaing Maung 32 Cr.L.J. 205, 128 I.C. 843, A.I.R. 1930 Rang. 360, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 59, 1933 Cr.C. 1238.

(24) The acquittal of the accused on a charge under sec. 41 (16), Rangoon Police Act, is equivalent to an acquittal on a charge of rioting—Nga Myat Thaung, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 436, 1935 Cr.C. 1217, 159 I.C. 967.

(25) Where the accused was acquitted of an offence under sec 283, I. P. C., for creating an obstruction in the bed of a river by extending a tank and making banks, he cannot be subsequently tried under sec 76B of the Bengal Embankment Act (Act II of 1882, B.C.) for meddling with embankment—Shib Chandra, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 686, 38 Cr.L.J. 1, 165 I.C. 847, 1936 Cr.C. 946, 9 R.C. 461.

But the previous trial for an offence founded on a particular set of facts does not bar a second trial for a different offence based on different facts. Thus, the previous acquittal on a charge of theft does not bar a subsequent trial for the offence of receiving stolen property, as the latter offence is supported by certain additional facts ascertained subsequent to the first trial—Hatim Molla, 10 C.W.N. 1031. An acquittal on the charge of murder does not prevent another trial upon a charge of robbery, because the two offences are so widely different that in the first trial for murder the accused could not have been convicted of the offence of robbery under the provisions of sec. 237 of the Code—Walla, 4 Lah. 373 (375). The accused falsely represented himself to be another and borrowed money by executing a mortgage of a property standing in the latter name, and subsequently falsely personated the latter in the Registration office for getting the mortgage registered. He was at first charged with cheating by false personation (sec. 419, I. P. C.) but acquitted. He was subsequently charged under sec. 82 (c), Registration Act. Held that the second trial was not barred, because the offence committed in the Registration office was a different and subsequent offence for which he could not in the first trial, under sec. 236 of this Code—Me Tok, 6 Bur.L.J. 201, 28 Cr.L.J. 908 (910), 105 I.C. 236, 6 Bur.L.J. 201, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 303.

"For which a different charge might have been made":—Where a different charge could not have been framed on account of absence of a complaint under sec 195, Cr. P. C. in the first trial, a second trial in respect of that charge is not barred under this section—Chuhar, 32 Cr.L.J. 253, 129 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1053, 1930 Cr.C. 1231, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 160. This section protects a person against a trial for 'any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made'; but where the offence for which he is to be tried again is the same charge that was made against him in the first trial, the defence must fail. Thus, where the accused was charged in the first trial with the murder of A under sec. 302, I. P. C., as well as with culpable homicide of A under sec. 304, I. P. C., and was acquitted by the jury of the charge of murder, but the jury disagreeing as to the culpable homicide, the accused was retried for that offence, it was held that the second trial was not illegal, for a charge in respect of that offence had already been made in the first trial. If the accused had been charged with murder alone, no doubt a verdict of not guilty would protect him from another trial for culpable homicide; but where a charge of culpable homicide was also made, the case falls outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it 'might have been made'—Nirmal Kanta Roy, 41 Cal. 1072, 18 C.W.N. 723, 15 Cr.L.J. 460, 24 I.C. 340. Where the charge against the accused was only under sec. 302, I. P. C., and no charge under sec. 304, I. P. C., was framed against him, the second trial under sec. 304, I. P. C., is barred under this section—Abla Isak, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 309, 55 Bom. 520, 134 I.C. 1219, 33 Cr.L.J. 62, 1931 Cr.C. 565, 33 Bom.L.R. 349.

Additional evidence :—If after the trial in which the accused has been acquitted, any additional evidence is available, but this evidence is of such a nature that it could not have affected the result of the first trial, it cannot be a ground for trying the accused again for any cognate offence for which he might have been charged in the first trial under sec. 236. The application of sec. 403 does not depend upon additional evidence being available or not. The prospect of getting additional evidence is not a ground for exceeding the principle of autre fois acquit—Maksudan, 2 P.L.T. 31, 22 Cr.L.J. 63, A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 22 (23).

1094. Sub-section (2) :—Sub-section (2) permits a second trial for a distinct offence for which a charge might have been framed under sec. 235 (1) as having been committed in the course of the same transaction.

The expression "distinct offence" means an offence entirely unconnected with a former offence charged—Yeok Kuk, 6 Rang. 386, 29 Cr.L.J. 930 (931), 111 I.C. 850, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 252.

Examples :—(1) Where certain persons, after beating the inmates of a house, carried off a woman, and on the first trial they were charged under secs. 325 and 452, I. P. C., for house-trespass and grievous hurt, and convicted, it was held that such conviction did not bar a subsequent trial for the offence of abduction which had been committed in the course of the same transaction. The case fell under sec. 235 (1) and therefore under sub-sec. (2) of this section—Baldeo, 3 A.L.J. 2, 3 Cr.L.J. 93.

(2) A previous conviction for being in possession of counterfeit coins, under sec. 243, I. P. C., does not bar a subsequent trial under sec. 240, I. P. C., for passing other coins, knowing them to be counterfeit. They are two different offences—Prasanna, 31 Cal. 1007.

(3) The accused was at first tried on a charge of abetment of forgery of a document. He was again tried by the Sessions Court, in respect of the same document, for using as genuine a forged document. It was held that the previous acquittal was no bar to the second trial. The case was not governed by sub-sec. (1) of this section, in as much as the case was not one contemplated by sec. 236, there being nothing doubtful as to what should be the true view of the offence committed, the case fell under sub-sec. (2) of this section, because the two offences were distinct offences, and committed in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of sec. 235 (1)—Jivram, 40 Bom. 97, 31 I.C. 361, 16 Cr.L.J. 761, 17 Bom.L.R. 881. Where the accused was originally acquitted of cheating by filing a false affidavit he can be subsequently tried on the same facts for the offence of perjury or swearing a false affidavit as swearing a false affidavit and using that false affidavit are distinct offences even though they are parts of the same transaction—Abdul Hamid, 37 Cr.L.J. 492, 161 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 174, 74 Rang. 24, 1936 Cr.C. 271.

(4) The acquittal of an accused on a charge under sec. 400, I. P. C., does not bar the trial of the accused under sec. 395, I. P. C., for committing one of the dacoities in respect of which evidence was given at the previous trial—Subedar Krishnappa, 1 Bom.L.R. 15.

(5) Where six documents were alleged to be fabricated at one and the same time, and at first the accused was tried for fabricating three of the documents and acquitted, a second trial for fabricating the other three of the documents was not barred. But in the circumstances of the case it was not desirable that the second trial should take place, as the fabricating of all the documents was treated in the first trial as one offence—Inamullah, 2 A.L.J. 673, 2 Cr.L.J. 790.

(6) A conviction for an offence under sec 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act, VIII of 1914 (reckless driving) does not bar a subsequent prosecution under sec 325 or 328, I P. C. (causing grievous hurt to a person in consequence of rash driving)—Gur Narain, 26 A.L.J. 160, 29 Cr.L.J. 271, 107 I.C. 687, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 99, A.I.R. 1928 All. 191.

(7) The conviction of the accused for an offence under the Excise Act does not prevent the accused from being subsequently tried for an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, the two offences being distinct and committed in the course of the same transaction—Croft, 23 Cal 174.

(8) The conviction of the accused for committing affray (sec. 160, I. P. C.) is no bar to their trial and conviction for the offence of causing hurt (sec 323, I P. C.) committed in the course of the affray—Ram Sukh, 47 All 284, 23 A.L.J. 8, 26 Cr.L.J. 688, 86 I.C. 64, A.I.R. 1925 All 299. See also Dodhee Kalu, 118 I.C. 693, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 451, 1929 Cr.C. 510, 30 Cr.L.J. 965, 31 Bom.L.R. 922, Ind. Rul. 1929 Bom. 469. Where the accused and others were acquitted of the charge of affray, he can be tried for an offence of causing hurt in the course of the same affray—Sankatha Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 785 (Pat.) Where the accused was convicted of causing hurt under sec. 323, I. P. C., and in respect of the same conduct of being guilty of disorderly behaviour under sec. 3 (12) of the Madras Towns Nuisance Act (III of 1889) in two different cases, held that there was no bar to the trial of the one offence owing to the conviction in respect of the other—Subbiah v Kandaswami, 33 Cr.L.J. 522, 55 Mad. 788, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 454, 137 I.C. 754, A.I.R. 1932 Mad 362, 62 M.L.J. 197, 1932 Cr.C. 295, 1932 M.W.N. 105, 35 M.L.W. 265.

(9) A complaint was preferred under secs. 352 and 504, I. P. C., but the Magistrate issued process upon the accused directing him to appear and take trial under sec. 352 only. The Magistrate acquitted the prisoner of the offence under sec 352, but being of opinion that on the evidence adduced a prima facie case of an offence under sec 504 had been made out, ordered process to issue directing the accused to appear and stand his trial under sec 504. It was held that sub-sec. (2) of this section applied and the retrial was not illegal—Bijay Krishna v. Balai Chand, 20 Cr.L.J. 43.

(10) The accused who were Police constables, committed rioting in the course of which they took several persons in custody. They were at first tried for wrongful confinement under sec. 342, I. P. C., in respect of the arrests made by them, and were acquitted; subsequently they were convicted of rioting under sec. 147, I. P. C. Held, that the second trial was not barred. The two offences fell under sec. 235 (1) of this Code—Ram Sahay, 48 Cal. 78, 24 C.W.N. 673, 21 Cr.L.J. 614.

(11) M sent a telegram to Mrs. P. in America asking her to send a certain sum of money wording the telegram as though it was despatched by P. M was prosecuted for an offence under sec. 420, I. P. C., but the case was compromised and M was acquitted. Subsequently, M was again prosecuted under sec. 468, I. P. C., and sec. 29, Telegraph Act. Held that M had committed three offences, viz, under sec. 468, I. P. C., when he wrote the telegram, under sec. 29, Telegraph Act, when he sent the false telegram, and under sec. 420, I. P. C., when Mrs. P received the telegram and sent the money; and all these offences having been committed in the same transaction, the previous acquittal of the offence under sec. 420, I. P. C., did not bar a second trial for offences under sec. 468, I. P. C., and sec. 29, Telegraph Act—Mahomed Rafiq, 25 S.L.R. 9, 1931 Cr.C. 734 (735), A.I.R. 1931 Sind 116, 134 I.C. 1004, Ind. Rul. 1931 Sind 156.

charge that was made against him in the first trial, the defence must fail. Thus, where the accused was charged in the first trial with the murder of A under sec. 302, I. P. C., as well as with culpable homicide of A under sec. 304, I. P. Where the charge against the accused was only under sec. 302, I. P. C., and no charge under sec. 304, I. P. C., was framed against him, the second trial under sec. 304, I. P. C., is barred under this section—Abla Isak, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 309, 55 Bom. 520, 134 I.C. 1219, 33 Cr.L.J. 62, 1931 Cr.C. 565, 33 Bom.L.R. 349.

Additional evidence :—If after the trial in which the accused has been acquitted, any additional evidence is available, but this evidence is of such a nature that it could not have affected the result of the first trial, it cannot be a ground for trying the accused again for any cognate offence for which he might have been charged in the first trial under sec. 236. The application of sec. 403 does not depend upon additional evidence being available or not. 1094. Sub-section (2) :—Sub-section (2) permits a second trial for a distinct offence for which a charge might have been framed under sec. 235 (1) as having been committed in the course of the same transaction.

The expression "distinct offence" means an offence entirely unconnected with a former offence charged—Yeok Kuk, 6 Rang. 386, 29 Cr.L.J. 930 (931), 111 I.C. 850, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 252.

Examples :—(1) Where certain persons, after beating the inmates of a house, carried off a woman, and on the first trial they were charged under secs 325 and 452, I. P. C., for house-trespass and grievous hurt, and convicted, it was held that such conviction did not bar a subsequent trial for the offence of abduction which had been committed in the course of the same transaction. The case fell under sec. 235 (1) and therefore under sub-sec. (2) of this section—Baldeo, 3 A.L.J. 2, 3 Cr.L.J. 93.

(2) A previous conviction for being in possession of counterfeit coins, under sec. 243, I. P. C., does not bar a subsequent trial under sec. 240, I. P. C., for passing other coins, knowing them to be counterfeit. They are two different offences—Prasanna, 31 Cal. 1007.

(3) The accused was at first tried on a charge of abetment of forgery of a document. He was again tried by the Sessions Court, in respect of the same document, for using as genuine a forged document. It was held that the previous acquittal was no bar to the second trial. The case was not governed by sub-sec. (2) of this section, because the two offences were distinct offences, and committed in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of sec. 235 (1)—Jivram, 40 Bom. 97, 31 I.C. 361, 16 Cr.L.J. 761, 17 Bom.L.R. 881. Where the accused was originally acquitted of cheating by filing a false affidavit he can be subsequently tried on the same facts for the offence of perjury or swearing a false affidavit as swearing a false affidavit and using that false affidavit are distinct offences even though they are parts of the same transaction—Abdul Hamid, 37 Cr.L.J. 492, 161 I.C. 763, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 174, 14 Rang. 24, 1936 Cr.C. 271.

(4) The acquittal of an accused on a charge under sec. 400, I. P. C., does not bar the trial of the accused under sec. 395, I. P. C., for committing one of the dacoities in respect of which evidence was given at the previous trial—Subedar Krishnappa, 1 Bom.L.R. 15.

(5) Where six documents were alleged to be fabricated at one and the same time, and at first the accused was tried for fabricating three of the documents and acquitted, a second trial for fabricating the other three of the documents was not barred. But in the circumstances of the case it was not desirable that the second trial should take place, as the fabricating of all the documents was treated in the first trial as one offence—Inamullah, 2 A.L.J. 673, 2 Cr.L.J. 790.

(6) A conviction for an offence under sec. 5 of the Motor Vehicles Act, VIII of 1914 (reckless driving) does not bar a subsequent prosecution under sec. 325 or 328, I P. C. (causing grievous hurt to a person in consequence of rash driving)—Gur Narain, 26 A.L.J. 160, 29 Cr.L.J. 271, 107 I.C. 687, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 99, A.I.R. 1928 All. 191.

(7) The conviction of the accused for an offence under the Excise Act does not prevent the accused from being subsequently tried for an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, the two offences being distinct and committed in the course of the same transaction—Croft, 23 Cal. 174.

(8) The conviction of the accused for committing affray (sec. 160, I. P. C.) is no bar to their trial and conviction for the offence of causing hurt (sec. 323, I. P. C.) committed in the course of the affray—Ram Sukh, 47 All. 284, 23 A.L.J. 8, 26 Cr.L.J. 688, 86 I.C. 64, A.I.R. 1925 All. 299. See also Dodhee Kalu, 118 I.C. 693, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 451, 1929 Cr.C. 510, 30 Cr.L.J. 965, 31 Bom.L.R. 922, Ind. Rul. 1929 Bom. 469. Where the accused and others were acquitted of the charge of affray, he can be tried for an offence of causing hurt in the course of the same affray—Sankatha Rai, 37 Cr.L.J. 785 (Pat.) Where the accused was convicted of causing hurt under sec. 323, I. P. C., and in respect of the same conduct of being guilty of disorderly behaviour under sec. 3 (12) of the Madras Towns Nuisance Act (III of 1889) in two different cases, held that there was no bar to the trial of the one offence owing to the conviction in respect of the other—Subbiah v. Kandaswami, 33 Cr.L.J. 522, 55 Mad. 788, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 454, 137 I.C. 754, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 362, 62 M.L.J. 197, 1932 Cr.C. 295, 1932 M.W.N. 105, 35 M.L.W. 265.

(9) A complaint was preferred under secs. 352 and 504, I. P. C., but the Magistrate issued process upon the accused directing him to appear and take trial under sec. 352 only. The Magistrate acquitted the prisoner of the offence under sec. 352, but being of opinion that on the evidence adduced a prima facie case of an offence under sec. 504 had been made out, ordered process to issue directing the accused to appear and stand his trial under sec. 504. It was held that sub-sec. (2) of this section applied and the retrial was not illegal—Biyya Krishna v. Balai Chand, 20 Cr.L.J. 43.

(10) The accused who were Police constables, committed rioting in the course of which they took several persons in custody. They were at first tried for wrongful confinement under sec. 342, I. P. C., in respect of the arrests made by them, and were acquitted; subsequently they were convicted of rioting under sec. 147, I. P. C. Held, that the second trial was not barred. The two offences fell under sec. 235 (1) of this Code—Ram Sahay, 48 Cal. 78, 24 C.W.N. 673, 21 Cr.L.J. 614.

(11) M sent a telegram to Mrs. P. in America asking her to send a certain sum of money wording the telegram as though it was despatched by P. M was prosecuted for an offence under sec. 420, I. P. C., but the case was compromised and M was acquitted. Subsequently, M was again prosecuted under sec. 468, I. P. C., and sec. 29, Telegraph Act. Held that M had committed three offences, viz., under sec. 468, I. P. C., when he wrote the telegram, under sec. 29, Telegraph Act, when he sent the false telegram, and under sec. 420, I. P. C., when Mrs. P. received the telegram and sent the money; and all these offences having been committed in the same transaction, the previous acquittal of the offence under sec. 420, I. P. C., did not bar a second trial for offences under sec. 468, I. P. C., and sec. 29, Telegraph Act—Mahomed Rafiq, 25 S.L.R. 9, 1931 Cr.C. 734 (735), A.I.R. 1931 Sind 116, 134 I.C. 1004, Ind. Rul. 1931 Sind 156.

(12) A person who has been convicted of theft (sec. 379, I. P. C.) in respect of a certain quantity of opium can be subsequently tried for illicit possession of the same opium under sec. 9 of the Opium Act (I of 1878)—Deoki, 48 All. 496, 24 A.L.J. 559, 27 Cr.L.J. 767.

(13) A person acquitted of the offence of causing hurt with a dangerous weapon (sec. 324, I. P. C.) can be subsequently tried for the offence of going armed with a dangerous weapon under sec. 19 (e), Arms Act—Manjubhai, 53 Bom. 604, 1929 Cr.C. 38, 30 Cr.L.J. 1059 (1061), 119 I.C. 641, 31 Bom.L.R. 536, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 283, Ind. Rul. 1929 Bom. 513.

(14) Where a complaint was lodged under various sections particularly under secs. 453 and 379, I. P. C., and the Magistrate charged the accused under sec. 453, I. P. C. only and acquitted him and a second complaint was preferred, held that it was not barred under this section and it was not inappropriate and inexpedient to allow the accused to be prosecuted a second time for matters arising out of same set of facts as the complainant had no opportunity of having the matter investigated of which he complained under sec. 379, I. P. C.—Ajodhya v. Kshitish, 35 C.W.N. 1182.

(15) Where a police constable was acquitted of offences under sec. 223, I. P. C., and sec. 29 of the Police Act for negligently suffering a prisoner to escape from confinement and was subsequently prosecuted under Rule 77 (c) of the Police Manual which required a sentry on night duty to rouse the night officer for public service, held that sec. 403 did not bar the second trial as there were two distinct acts of omission, the acquittal for one not involving the acquittal for the other—Balchand, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 670, 147 I.C. 773, 1933 Cr.C. 1492.

(16) The accused was committed to the Court of Session on two separate charges accusing him of two distinct offences, viz., the offence of theft of a blank second class Railway ticket, punishable under sec. 380, I. P. C., and the offence of forgery in respect of certain entries alleged to have been made by him in that ticket with intent that fraud may be committed, punishable under sec. 467, I. P. C. The trial of the accused was proceeded with at first only in respect of the first offence and ended in acquittal. Held that the trial of the accused in respect of the second offence was one to which sec. 235 (1), Cr. P. C., applied—Srirangachariar, 35 Cr.L.J. 1503, 152 I.C. 154, 40 M.L.W. 586, 67 M.L.J. 583, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 673, 1934 M.W.N. 994, 1934 Cr.C. 1307, 58 Mad. 178.

(17) Two separate Police Challans were sent up to the Magistrate, one for an offence under sec. 451, I. P. C., and sec. 42 of the Prisons Act and another under secs. 161|511, I. P. C., on the allegations that the accused had trespassed into the Presidency Jail in order to have communication with a prisoner and that thereafter he had offered a bribe to the European Warder of the said Jail. The case started on the former Challan was taken up first while the case which was started upon the latter Challan was adjourned sine die. After acquittal in the first case the second Challan was taken up and a charge was framed against the accused under sec. 161|116, I. P. C. Held that this section did not operate as a bar to the second trial as in the words of the sub-sec. (1) of this section, it might be said that no charge in respect of the offence under secs. 161|116, I. P. C., might have been made and the accused could not be convicted of the same offence which was expressly reserved for a separate trial and that the general principle of autre fois acquit was also inapplicable, because the fact that the accused was acquitted in the previous trial did not necessarily mean that the offence under sec. 161|116, I. P. C., was not committed—Hira Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1270, 151 I.C. 259, 1934 Cr.C. 352, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 240, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 12.

(18) The offence of abetment of forgery is plainly quite different from the offence of using as genuine a forged document. There is nothing either in law or in fact to prevent a man being innocent of the first offence and guilty of the second. Even, if one offence involve the other an accused cannot claim to be acquitted of both offences because the provisions of sec. 195, Cr. P. C., constitute a bar to his trial and conviction for one of them—Ali Ahmad, 34 Cr.L.J. 39, 140 I.C. 544, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 545, 55 C.L.J. 336, 1932 Cr.C. 545, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 11,

(19) In the course of a riot accused persons trespassed upon the lands of several tenants and caused damages to their crops. The accused were tried for rioting by damaging the crops of three of these tenants and were acquitted. Held that a separate offence of trespass and mischief could be charged in respect of each separate holding which was damaged and that there was no bar to the fresh trial of the accused for offences touching other holdings than those in respect of which they were definitely acquitted—Ghana, 31 Cr.L.J. 472, 123 I.C. 78, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 710.

(20) The fact that the accused was found to be not guilty of the charge under sec. 376, I. P. C., cannot be said to be tantamount to an acquittal under secs. 376/511, I. P. C., as well—Hanuman, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 723 (725), 36 C.W.N. 1152, 1932 Cr.C. 728, 141 I.C. 622.

This clause applies when the case falls under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 235, and not to a case falling under sub-sec. (2) of sec. 235. Thus, a person who has been tried and acquitted of offences under secs. 201 and 202, I. P. C., cannot be tried again for an offence under sec. 176, I. P. C., based on the same facts. Such a case does not come under sec. 235 (1), but under sec. 235 (2), and, therefore, sub-sec. (2) of sec. 403 does not apply. It falls under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 403 and the second trial is barred—Sharbekhan, 10 C.W.N. 518; see also Ghamandi v. Babu, 1929 A.L.J. 1056, 1929 Cr.C. 491 (492).

(21) Where the accused might have been tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate at one trial both under sec. 44 and sec. 45 of the Calcutta Police Act (Act IV of 1866) but was tried only under sec. 45 of the said Act, his failure to do so does not make the subsequent trial under sec. 44 of the said Act bad under the first clause of sec. 403, Cr. P. Code. The case is covered by the second clause of sec. 403, Cr. P. Code—Kalicharan v. S. K. Brahmachari, 42 C.W.N. 1232.

(22) The acquittal of a person on a charge under sections 379 and 411, I. P. C., is no bar to his being tried for an offence under the Forest Act Sandalwood Transit Rules, when the offence under the latter Act is established on the facts, and when the only doubt is whether an offence under the Penal Code is established—Gurunatha Goundan v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 1247.

1095. Sub-section (3):—‘Constituted a different offence’:—The facts or circumstances must be such as to indicate a different kind of offence of which there could be no conviction at the first trial. It is not enough to show merely circumstances of aggravation or serious consequences of the offence which have occurred since the first trial. Where a person was convicted under sec. 31 of the Rangoon Police Act, 1899, for being in possession of an article supposed to be stolen, he cannot be tried subsequently for an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C., merely on the ground that the owner of the article is traced and some further evidence is available—Nga Shwe, 8 Bur.L.T. 129, 16 Cr.L.J. 267, 28 I.C. 155. The new evidence must constitute a different kind of offence, for which he could have been tried at the first trial.

‘Were not known to the Court’:—The new facts or consequences must have occurred since the conviction or acquittal at the first trial. Thus, where a person was at first tried for causing grievous hurt and convicted, and after the conviction the injured man died, it was held that the accused could be again tried for the offence of culpable homicide, since the consequence of hurt (i.e., the death) did not take place until after the first trial—Sarbiland, 1901 P.R. 3; Salan, 36 All. 4. The previous trial of the accused under sec. 307, I. P. C., was no bar to their subsequent trial under secs. 302/34, I. P. C., when the injured person died after the conviction of the accused in the previous trial—Arsala Khan, 36 Cr.L.J. 813, 155 I.C. 287, A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 18, 1935 Cr.C. 191. So also where a person was acquitted of an offence under the Bombay City Municipal Act, for proceeding to erect certain balconies in contravention of the Act, he can be subsequently tried for failure to remove these balconies after notice, because the offence of non-removal of these balconies could not have been committed until the notice to remove them was served, and the service was made only after the previous acquittal—Municipality of Bombay v. Javer, 4 Bom.L.R. 575.

But if the new facts or consequences were known to the Court at the time of the first trial, a second trial for an offence constituted by these new facts would be barred. Thus, where the prisoner was at first tried for causing hurt, and before the trial and conviction for hurt the injured man died, and this fact was known to the Court which convicted the prisoner for hurt, he could not again be tried for homicide under this sub-section, though he might be tried again if the case fell under sub-section (4)—Mahadeogir, 9 N.L.R. 26, 14 Cr.L.J. 135.

1096. Sub-section (4):—'Was not competent':—The words 'was not competent to try' mean 'had no jurisdiction to try'—Krishna Aiyar, 24 Mad. 641. Jurisdiction includes local jurisdiction; so if the previous Court had no local jurisdiction to try the subsequent offence, it was a Court "not competent to try" that offence within the meaning of this clause—Shanker, 53 Bom. 69, 30 Cr.L.J. 54 (56), 113 I.C. 70, 30 Bom.L.R. 1435, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 530, Ind. Rul. 1929 Bom. 78. If a person has been acquitted or convicted of an offence, but the same facts disclose another offence which could not be tried by the same Magistrate who tried the first offence, then the previous acquittal or conviction is no bar to further proceedings for the latter offence—Venkatarama, 18 Cr.L.J. 643 (Mad.); Palani Goundan, 48 M.L.J. 490, 26 Cr.L.J. 1087, 88 I.C. 31, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 711, 22 M.L.W. 205, 1925 M.W.N. 553. Therefore, where a Magistrate convicted the accused of rioting, a fresh complaint of dacoity based on the same facts was not barred, since the Magistrate who tried the offence of rioting was not competent to try the offence of dacoity—Viran Kutti v. Chiyamu, 7 Mad. 557. The prior conviction by a second class Magistrate for an offence under sec. 182, I. P. C., would be no bar to the subsequent trial by a first class Magistrate for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., since the latter offence was not triable by a second class Magistrate but only by a first class Magistrate—Kannachampet Parangodan, 2 Weir 482 (483). A person acquitted by a Second Class Magistrate of an offence under sec. 323, I. P. C., cannot subsequently be tried on the same facts under sec. 324, I. P. C., as that charge could have been framed by the Second Class Magistrate. The case is fully covered by Illus. (2) to sec. 403, Cr. P. C., and it does not come within paragraph 3 of the section—Bhag Singh v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 870, 177 I.C. 339, I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 127, 11 R.L. 298, 40 P.L.R. 1036, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 614. But a previous conviction for the offence of causing hurt tried before a Magistrate does not bar a subsequent trial by the Sessions Judge of an offence under sec. 304, upon the same facts—Bahinu, 5 Bom.L.R. 125; Gandi Apparaju, 43 Mad. 330. A conviction by a Magistrate for a minor offence does not bar a subsequent trial for murder because the Magistrate was not competent to try the offence of murder—Ladkia, Ratanlal 337 (338); Wadhawa, 1912 P.R. 7. A person acquitted or convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 465, I. P. C., may on the same facts be tried by a Court of Session under sec. 467, I. P. C., on the allegation that the document said to have been forged was a valuable security—Abdul Hakim, 19 Cr.L.J. 388, 44 I.C. 740 (Cal.). When on a complaint made under secs. 409 and 477A, I. P. C., a second class Magistrate proceeded to deal with the case as one under sec. 408, I. P. C., and acquitted the accused, and the complainant afterwards presented a further complaint to the District Magistrate praying for the trial of the accused under secs. 409 and 477A, I. P. C.; it was held that the District Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the second complaint, as the second class Magistrate who dealt with the first complaint was not empowered to commit the accused persons for trial to the Court of Session—Krishna-dhone v. Mahendra, 23 C.W.N. 518. The accused was tried and acquitted on a charge under sec. 498, I. P. C., for having taken away a girl from the custody of her mother with intent to have illicit intercourse with her. He was subsequently charged under secs. 363 and 366, I. P. C., for having kidnapped the girl from the lawful guardianship of her mother with intent to have intercourse with her. Held, that the plea of autrefois acquit would prevail with respect to the charge under sec. 363, but not with respect to the charge under sec. 366, as it was a Sessions offence which the Magistrate who tried the accused under sec. 498 was not competent to try—Chhanu Prasad, 10 P.L.T.

446, 29 Cr.L.J. 760 (761), 110 I.C. 792, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 577, 11 A.I.Cr.R. 29. A person convicted by a village Headman under the Burma Village Act, for assault, can be tried subsequently by a Magistrate for the causing of hurt upon the same facts, the village Headman not being competent to try the offence of causing hurt—Michit v. Mt Njun, (1919) 3 U.B.R. 135, 20 Cr.L.J. 533, 51 I.C. 773.

If, however, the Court (Sessions Judge) which tried the previous offence was also competent to try the subsequent offence, the trial of the latter offence is barred by this section, and the fact that the first offence was triable with the aid of assessors and the second offence was triable by a jury, is immaterial—Krishna Aiyar, 24 Mad. 641. This sub-section refers to the competency of the tribunal to try the offence, and not to the nature of the offence, i.e., as to whether it is triable by jury or with assessors.

It was held in a Madras case that the words "competent to try" in this clause referred to the character and status of the tribunal, and that where the law required a sanction or complaint under sec. 195 before the Court could take cognizance of the offence, the sanction or complaint was not a condition of the competency of the tribunal but was only a condition precedent for the institution of proceedings before that tribunal; and that want of sanction or complaint did not make the Court incompetent to try the offence within the meaning of this clause if the Court was otherwise competent to try the offence—Ganapathi, 36 Mad. 308 (314). But this ruling has been disapproved of in 37 All 107, 52 Bom. 257 and several other cases. See these cases cited in Note 1090, ante. The words "competent to try" are equivalent to "in a legal position to have tried and acquitted or convicted". That is, they refer narrowly to the legal position of the Court at the time of the former trial in relation to the particular offence committed by the accused, and not broadly to the jurisdiction of the Court with regard to the class of offences in general—Babu Lal v. Ram Saran, 30 Cr.L.J. 806 (809), 117 I.C. 625, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 433, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 26. Thus, the absence of a proper complaint by the person specified under section 199 of this Code renders the Court "incompetent" to try the offence. Where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint of an offence under section 498, I. P. C., on the ground that the complaint was not made by the person specified under section 199, and acquitted the accused, it was held that the order of acquittal amounted to a finding that the Court was 'not competent to try the offence' in the absence of a complaint by the proper person, and, therefore, a fresh complaint instituted by the proper person (the husband of the woman) was not barred under this section—Umeruddin, 31 All. 317, 9 Cr.L.J. 526. Where the accused was first charged on a police-report under secs. 368 and 376, I. P. C., and acquitted, and subsequently, the husband of the woman preferred a complaint under sec. 498, I. P. C., on the same facts, and the accused was tried and convicted; it was held that the second conviction was not illegal, since the previous Court was not competent to try the accused under sec. 498 in the absence of a complaint by the husband—Tikaram, 17 Bom.L.R. 678, 16 Cr.L.J. 657.

Where a previous prosecution for an offence under sec. 171F, I. P. C., failed on the ground that sanction under sec. 196, Cr. P. C., was not obtained, a subsequent prosecution on the same facts and for the same offence is not illegal if it is launched after obtaining such sanction. In the absence of a sanction in the first trial, the first Court which tried the accused was not a Court of competent jurisdiction in respect of the offence, and the second trial is not therefore barred—Ram Nath, 24 A.L.J. 180, 94 I.C. 897, A.I.R. 1926 All 231, 27 Cr.L.J. 705. A prosecution for an offence specified in section 82 of the Registration Act cannot be commenced without the sanction of the officers mentioned in section 83 of that Act; and consequently, an acquittal in a previous trial for an offence under section 419, Indian Penal Code, when no such sanction under section 83 had been given, is no bar to a subsequent prosecution under sec. 82 of the Registration Act on such sanction being given. The Court in the previous trial was not competent to try the accused under sec. 82 of the Registration Act—Mohan Lal, 19 A.L.J. 813, 22 Cr.L.J. 50; Hussain, 39 All. 293. But see Maung Saing, 1 Rang. 299, 25 Cr.L.J. 191, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 213; and Gopi Nath v Kuldip, 11 Cal. 566. Where an accused charged under sec. 21 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act, 1919 (Act VI of 1919) was acquitted on the ground that the sanction of the Municipal Commissioners was not obtained, and subsequently the sanction was obtained and another prosecution was launched, held that the previous acquittal did not operate as a bar to the fresh prosecution—P. Banerjee v. Bipin, 30 C.W.N. 382, 27 Cq.L.J. 751.

1097. "Explanation":—The Explanation to sec. 403, Cr. P. C., states that a dismissal of a complaint or discharge of the accused is not an acquittal for the purposes of this section. If the Legislature had intended to qualify this Explanation so that the dismissal of the complaint or the discharge of the accused is to be a bar to fresh proceedings on the same facts unless the order of dismissal or discharge is set aside by a higher Court, the Legislature would have said so either explicitly or by omitting the Explanation altogether—Harbai v. Raya Premji, 40 Cr.L.J. 745 (748), 183 I.C. 283, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 193 (F.B.).

It should be noted that whereas sub-sec. (1) says that a man who has been tried for an offence and convicted or acquitted shall not be liable to be tried for the same offence while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, there is no such qualifying words in the explanation. In other words, the meaning of the explanation is that the dismissal of a complaint or the discharge of the accused shall not amount to an acquittal and shall not bar subsequent proceedings, even though the order of dismissal or discharge remains in force and has not been set aside by a superior authority—Ponnu-swami, 55 Mad. 622 (F.B.), 62 M.L.J. 469, 33 Cr.L.J. 454 (456). See also the cases cited in Note 682 under sec. 203, Note 798 under sec. 247, Note 827 under sec. 253 and Note 854 under sec. 259.

What orders do not amount to acquittal:—(1) The dismissal of a complaint under sec. 203 is not an order of acquittal within the meaning of this section, and therefore upon such dismissal, it is competent for the Magistrate to entertain a fresh complaint or to re-hear the original complaint; see Note 681 under sec. 203. The explanation added to the section makes it clear that the dismissal of the complaint, or discharge of the accused is not an acquittal for the purposes of this section. This explanation, therefore, clearly implies that the retrial will not be barred if the complaint has been summarily dismissed or the accused has been discharged. The mere fact that there is a special procedure under which the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge or the High Court can order further enquiry, does not necessarily mean that a fresh complaint is legally barred and cannot be entertained. An enquiry even on a second complaint whether after the accused has been discharged or the complaint has been summarily dismissed, is not absolutely barred—Lallain, 35 Cr.L.J. 1059, 150 I.C. 376, 1934 A.L.J. 241, A.L.R. 1934 All. 514, 1934 Cr.C. 614, 3 A.W.R. 571. The correct course for the complainant to adopt would be to make an application under sec. 436, Cr. P. C., without lodging a second complaint when the accused is discharged—Phonsia, 35 Cr.L.J. 128, A.I.R. 1935 All. 59, 152 I.C. 619. The dismissal of a complaint under sec. 204 (3) for non-payment of process-fee for summoning the witnesses does not amount to an acquittal and does not bar a fresh complaint—Shcorajsai v. Dain, 32 Cr.L.J. 603, 130 I.C. 825, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 39, 27 N.L.R. 13, 1931 Cr.C. 233, Ind. Rul. 1931 Nag. 73.

(2) An order under section 249 stopping the proceedings of a trial has been specially excluded by the explanation from being an order of acquittal, and therefore it does not bar fresh proceedings—Achhu, 1913 P.R. 9, 13 Cr.L.J. 860.

(3) A stay of trial under sec. 240 has not the effect of acquittal of the accused. Where a Magistrate trying an accused for offences under secs. 193 and 204, I. P. C., convicted the accused under the former section, but with regard to the latter the Magistrate thinking that the facts constituted some other offences, ordered the papers to be placed before the District Magistrate, and later on the accused was again put on trial under sec. 204, I. P. C., it was held that the first disposal did not amount to an acquittal but only to a stay of trial under sec. 240, and the subsequent trial was not barred by this section—Raghunandan, 1889 A.W.N. 8.

(4) Where the prisoner is released by the Appellate Court on the ground of illegal or irregular procedure in the Lower Court, the release is no bar to the retrial of the accused for the same offence—Shahbut, 13 W.R. 42.

Discharge of accused :—Section 403 applies only to cases of acquittal or conviction, and has no application to a case in which the accused person has been discharged—Parameshwari v. Jagan Nath, 17 A.L.J. 867, 20 Cr.L.J. 403, 51 I.C. 163.

It is competent for the Magistrate to rehear a complaint after the accused is discharged under sec. 253 or 259. See Notes 827, 852 and 854 under those sections. An order of discharge under sec. 333 is no bar to fresh proceedings—Sheikh Idoo, 49 Cal. 71; but see Jitendra, 52 Cal. 590, 26 Cr.L.J. 1397, 89 I.C. 709, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 902. Where a person is discharged under sec. 119, he is merely permitted to depart. Such a discharge is not an acquittal, and fresh proceedings may be taken against the accused. See Velu Tayi Ammal v. Chidambaramulu, 33 Mad. 85; Muthia In re Moopan, 36 Mad. 315. Where a conviction by a Magistrate who had no jurisdiction to try the case is set aside on appeal, and the Appellate Court, without ordering a retrial, merely discharged the accused, this section does not bar a fresh trial by a competent Magistrate—Abdul Ghani, 29 Cal. 412; Ram Reddi, 3 Mad. 48.

But although there is nothing in law against the entertainment of a second complaint on the same facts against a person who has been discharged, yet, unless very strong grounds are shown, (i.e., discovery of new facts, etc.), a person who has been charged once ought not to be harassed on the same charge—Malayul, 18 Cr.L.J. 329 (Mad.).

Where an order of discharge is passed, no formal order under sec. 436 or 437 is necessary for the institution of a fresh trial—Mohesh Mistree, 1 Cal. 282; Donnelly, 2 Cal. 405; Hari Dayal, 4 Cal. 16; Nobin v. Russik, 10 Cal. 268; Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211; Mir Ahmad v. Md. Askari, 29 Cal. 726; Mehrban, 29 All. 7; Gowdapa, 2 Bom. 534; Dorabji, 10 Bom. 131; Chinnathambi v. Gurusamy, 28 Mad. 310; Narayanaswamy, 32 Mad. 220; Alauddin, 17 O.C. 273, 15 Cr.L.J. 638.

PART VII.

OF APPEAL, REFERENCE AND REVISION.

CHAPTER XXXI.

OF APPEALS.

404. No appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force.

Unless otherwise provided, no appeal to lie.

1099. No appeal:—Ordinarily no appeal lies, except as otherwise provided by this Code or by any other special law. In a case in which no appeal lies from an order, the proper course is to make an application for revision—Zahur v. Muhammad Hasan, 1893 A.W.N. 147. Although the law may not allow appeal in certain cases, the High Court in the exercise of the powers vested in it as a Court of Revision, may, in those cases and on very exceptional grounds, act as an Appellate Court—Sheikh Badrudin, 8 Bom. 197. If an appeal is presented to the High Court in a case in which no appeal is allowed to the High Court, the case may be disposed of under its revisional powers, if the High Court finds that it is a proper case in which it may exercise its revisional jurisdiction. See Rangai, 9 Cal. 513.

Ordinarily no appeal lies, except as otherwise provided by Code of Criminal Procedure which contains no provision for appeal to the Privy Council. It is only in the power of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council exercising the prerogative right on behalf of the Crown to entertain appeals in matters of criminal jurisdiction—In re Joy Kissen Mookerjee, 1 W.R. 13, (1861-63)-1 Moo.P.C. (N.S.) 272, 9 M.I.A. 168, 1 Suther. 481, 1 Sar. 860, 138 R.R. 522 (P.C.).

An appeal to the Privy Council lies only under very special and exceptional circumstances. It is not in every case in which it could be shown that the Judge had misdirected the jury, that an appeal will be allowed—MacCrea, 15 All. 310. The Criminal Procedure Code does not provide for an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council being entertained by any High Court and such applications can only be entertained by Chartered High Courts under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent. When a person wishes to appeal from a decision of any High Court other than a Chartered High Court, the proper procedure is to apply to the Privy Council for special leave to appeal—Thaprya, 34 Cr.L.J. 931, 145 I.C. 246, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 216, 1933 Cr.C. 798, 29 N.L.R. 340. See also Dal Singh, 44 Cal. 876, 15 A.L.J. 475, 19 Bom.L.R. 510, 21 C.W.N. 818, 33 M.L.J. 555, 18 Cr.L.J. 471 (P.C.) and Shankar Ganesh, 49 Cal. 845, 69 I.C. 367, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 351, 18 N.L.R. 176, 27 C.W.N. 343, 1923 M.W.N. 528, 37 C.L.J. 136, 49 I.A. 319 (P.C.). Where an appeal is presented for the exercise of the royal prerogative either leave or a certificate from the tribunal which passed the appellate decision is not required as a preliminary step. The appellant may proceed direct, without an intermediate application to the High Court, to His Majesty in Council and there obtain leave to present his case. Clause 33, Letters Patent (Patna) has no application to such a case—Rahman, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 65, 15 P.L.T. 833, 14 Pat. 318. The Bombay High Court has, however, held that before granting the certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council, the High Court must be satisfied that there is a reasonable ground for thinking that grave and substantial injustice may have been done by reason of some departure from the principles of natural justice—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 33 Bom. 221, 10 Bom L.R. 973, 9 Cr.L.J. 226. Leave to appeal is not granted "except where some clear departure from the requirements of justice" exists [Reil v. The Queen, 10 A.C. 675], nor unless "by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done" [In re Dillet, 12 A.C. 459, 56 L.T. 615, 35 W.R. 81, 16 Cox C.C. 241]. It is true that there are cases of applications for special leave to appeal, but the Board has repeatedly treated applications for leave to appeal and the hearing of criminal appeals as being upon the same footing [Reil's case, supra; Ex parte Deeming, 1893 A.C. 422]. The Board cannot give leave to appeal where the grounds suggested could not sustain the appeal itself; and conversely, it cannot allow an appeal on grounds that would not have been sufficient for the grant of permission to bring it. Misdirection, as such, even irregularity as such, will not suffice [Ex parte Macrea, 15 All. 310, 20 I.A. 90, 6 Sar. 344 (P.C.), 1893 A.C. 346]; C. B. Plucknett, 43 C.W.N. 133 (136), I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 187, A.I.R. 1939 Cal 682, 184 I.C. 614, 41 Cr.L.J. 59. There must be something which, in the particular case, deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial and the protection of law, or which, in general, tends to divert the due and orderly administration of the law into a new course, which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future [R. v. Bertrand, 16 L.T. 752, 10 Cox C.C. 618 (1867)]—Ibrahim, 18 C.W.N. 705 (716), [1914] A.C. 599 (614); Stephen Senviratne, 41 C.W.N. 65 (68).

It ought to be understood very clearly in India that there is not a chance of the Judicial Committee turning itself into a mere Court of Criminal Appeal—Taba Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 59, 84 I.C. 935, 26 Cr.L.J. 391, 48 Bom. 515 (P.C.); C. B. Plucknett, supra. The Judicial Committee will not interfere with the course of criminal law unless there has been such an interference with the elementary right of an accused as has placed him outside the pale of the regular law or unless within that pale there has been so manifest a violation of the principles of natural justice that their Lordships are satisfied first, that the result arrived at was opposite to the result they themselves would have reached and, secondly, that the same opposite result would have been reached by the local tribunal even in the absence of an irregularity. The Judicial Committee will not intervene in the criminal administration of this country unless it can be shown that there is some violation of the principles of justice or some disregard of legal principles—C. B. Plucknett, supra. Although in very special and exceptional circumstances leave to appeal in criminal cases may be granted, misdirection by a Judge, either in leaving a case to the jury where there has been no evidence, or founded on an incorrect construction of the Penal Code, even if established, is insufficient for that purpose especially where no miscarriage of justice has resulted—Ex parte Macrea, supra; C. B. Plucknett, supra.

◁ The power of the Judicial Committee to review proceedings of a criminal nature is undoubted. But there are reasons both constitutional and administrative which make it manifest that this power should not be lightly exercised. The overruling consideration on the topic has reference to justice itself—Channing Arnold, 41 Cal. 1023, A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 116, 23 I.C. 651, 41 I.A. 149, 15 Cr.L.J. 309, 8 L.B.R. 16, 18 C.W.N. 785 (800) (P.C.). The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council does not lightly interfere in criminal cases; but where justice had been gravely and injuriously miscarried, and the sentence pronounced against the appeal formed an invasion of his liberty and denial of his just rights as a citizen, their Lordships felt called upon to interfere, although the proceedings taken were unobjectionable in form—Louis Eduard Lenier, 18 C.W.N. 98 (103), 15 Cr.L.J. 303, 26 M.L.J. 1 (P.C.). Where the High Court adopted the special procedure of an ex officio information (sec. 194) instead of the ordinary procedure of preliminary inquiry before a Magistrate and commitment, where the ex officio information did not contain a detailed statement of the charge, where the accused had not ample time and notice to prepare for his defence, where witnesses who were available were not called, where copies of statements of prosecution witnesses were handed to the defence very late, and there were other irregularities, their Lordships interfered and set aside the conviction—Dwarkanath Varma, 14 P.L.T. 305, 37 C.W.N. 514 (531), 1933 Cr.C. 442, 34 Cr.L.J. 322 (P.C.).

The rule has been repeatedly laid down and invariably followed that His Majesty will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings, unless it is shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done—In re Dillet, (1887) 12 A.C. 459 (467); Abdul Rahman, 5 Rang. 53, A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 44, 100 I.C. 227, 54 I.A. 96, 6 Bur.L.J. 65, 29 Bom.L.R. 813, 31 C.W.N. 271, 52 M.L.J. 585, 25 A.L.J. 117, 28 Cr.L.J. 259 (P.C.); Clifford, 40 Cal. 568, 18 C.W.N. 374 (378) (P.C.); Dal Singh, 44 Cal. 876 (881) (P.C.); Babulal Chokhani v. King-Emp., A.I.R. 1938 P.C. 130 (135), 65 I.A. 158, 32 S.L.R. 476, 1938 O.L.R. 189, 1938 O.A. 398, 1938 M.W.N. 505, 19 P.L.T. 343, 1938 A.L.R. 309, 10 R.P.C. 250, 4 B.R. 490, 39 Cr.L.J. 452, 67 C.L.J. 161, 40 Bom.L.R. 787, 42 C.W.N. 621, 1938 A.Cr.C. 27, 1938 O.W.N. 416, 1938 A.L.J. 382, 174 I.C. 1, 1938 A.W.R. (P.C.) 116, 1938 P.W.N. 320, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 647 (P.C.). In other words the Judicial Committee is not a Court of Criminal Appeal—Babulal Choukhani v. King-Emp., supra; C. B. Plucknett, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 187, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 682, 184 I.C. 614, 41 Cr.L.J. 59, 43 C.W.N. 133 (136), following Rustom v. King-Emp., 48 Bom. 515 (516) and Taba Singh v. King-Emp., 48 Bom. 515 (518), A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 59, 84 I.C. 935, 26 Cr.L.J. 391. The Board of Judicial Committee does not act as a Court of review of the decisions of a Court of Criminal Appeal, unless it can be shown that the error has led to injustice of a grave character—Fakira v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 498 (500), 167 I.C. 790, 39 P.L.R. 334, 1937 O.L.R. 216, 41 C.W.N. 741, 1937 M.W.N. 546, 9 R.P.C. 231, 1937 A.Cr.C. 74, 3 B.R. 426, 1937 O.W.N. 412, A.I.R. 1937 P.C. 119 (P.C.). In the region of fact, the Judicial Committee will not interfere unless something gross amounting to a complete misdescription of the whole bearing of the evidence has occurred—Channing Arnold, 41 Cal. 1023, 18 C.W.N. 785 (799) (P.C.). Where injustice of a serious character has occurred owing to the admission of a whole body of inadmissible evidence, their Lordships had to interpose—Pillai, 36 Mad. 501, 17 C.W.N. 1110 (P.C.). A mere mistake on the part of the Court below, as for example, in the admission of improper evidence, will not suffice, if it has not led to injustice of a grave character. Nor do the Judicial Committee advise interference merely because they themselves would have taken a different view of the evidence admitted. Such questions are, as a general rule, treated as being for the final decision of the Court below. Error in procedure may be of a character so grave as to warrant the interference of the Sovereign. Such error may, for example, deprive a man of the constitutional or statutory right to be tried by a jury or by some particular tribunal. Or it may have been carried to such an extent as to cause the outcome of the proceedings to be contrary to the fundamental principles which justice requires to be observed. But where the error consists only in the fact that evidence has been improperly admitted, which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independently of it, the case is different. The dominant question is the broad one, whether substantial justice has been done, and if substantial justice has been done it is contrary to the general practice of the Board to advise the Sovereign to interfere with the result—Dal Singh, 44 Cal. 876 (882, 889), 15 A.L.J. 475, 19 Bom.L.R. 510, 21 C.W.R. 818, 33 M.L.J. 555, 18 Cr.L.J. 471 (P.C.). The extreme case in which the Judicial Committee would advise His Majesty to interpose is this, that it must be established demonstratively that justice itself in its very foundation has been subverted, and that it is, therefore, a matter of general Imperial concern that by way of an appeal to the King it should then be restored to its rightful position—Channing Arnold, 41 Cal. 1023, 18 C.W.N. 785 (803) (P.C.).

It is not for the Judicial Committee to interfere because its conclusion as to guilt or innocence might differ from the jury. But where there are no grounds on the evidence taken, as a whole, upon which any tribunal could properly as a matter of legitimate inference, arrive at a conclusion that the Appellant was guilty and any conclusion on the available materials would be, and is, mere conjecture or guess, which are not, in law of justice, permissible grounds on which to base a verdict, it will interfere—Stephen Seneviratne, 41 C.W.N. 65 (78).

An appeal from the Federal Court should not lightly be admitted by the Privy Council, and should only be admitted if it arises in a really substantial case. Where the matter was anything but one concerned with the construction of a very exceptional section which would have no application in the future and it was a technical point, the Privy Council refused to grant leave to appeal—Hori Ram Singh v. The King-Emp, 44 C.W.N. 401, A.I.R. 1940 P.C. 54, 1940 O.W.N. 244, 1940 P.W.N. 232, 51 M.L.W. 407, 1940 M.Cr.C. 72, 1940 O.L.R. 190, 1940 M.W.N. 360, 187 I.C. 1, 1940 A.L.J. 205, 67 I.A. 122, 21 P.L.T. 327, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 706, 41 Cr.L.J. 413, 71 C.L.J. 307, 42 P.L.R. 392, I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 132, 42 Bom.L.R. 619, 6 B.R. 452, I.L.R. 1940 Lah. 413.

The right of appeal in criminal matters is a statutory one, and is primarily governed by the first sec. 404, Cr. P. C., which forms the commencement of this Chapter—Kali Kumar Mitter v. Emp, 38 Cr.L.J. 876, 170 I.C. 26, 10 R.C. 122, I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 123, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 413. See also Kishori Singh v. Emp, 38 Cr.L.J. 990 (1991), 170 I.C. 920, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 469, 10 R.C. 212, 41 C.W.N. 833, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 394.

Period of limitation for appeal:—See Arts. 150, 150A, 154, 155 and 157 of the Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908.

405. Any person whose application under section 89 for the delivery of property or the proceeds of the sale thereof has been rejected by any Court may appeal to the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the sentences of the former Court.

Appeal from order rejecting application for restoration of attached property.

'Court to which appeals ordinarily lie' means a Court to which appeals lie in the majority of cases, even though in a particular instance, the appeal may lie to another Court—In re Anant Ram, 11 Bom. 438.

406. Any person who has been ordered under section 118 to give security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour may appeal against such order—

Appeal from order requiring security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour.

- (a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court;
- (b) if made by any other Magistrate, to the Court of Session:

Provided that the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct that in any district specified in the notification, appeals from such orders made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate shall lie to the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session:

Provided, further, that nothing in this section shall apply to persons the proceedings against whom are laid before a Sessions

Judge in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (2) or sub-section (3A) of section 123.

1101. Change:—This section has been redrafted by sec. 109 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The old section stood thus:—

"406. Any person ordered by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate or a Presidency Magistrate to give security for good behaviour under sec. 118 may appeal to the District Magistrate."

The main changes introduced are:—(1) Under the old section an appeal was allowed only in a good behaviour case; no appeal lay from an order directing security to keep the peace—Chet Ram, 27 All. 623; Har Datt, 14 A.L.J. 268, 17 Cr.L.J. 165; Baranasi v. Partab, 11 A.L.J. 16, 35 All. 103; Suleman, 11 Bom.L.R. 740, 10 Cr.L.J. 375, 3 I.C. 774; Shamrao, 19 N.L.R. 160, 25 Cr.L.J. 67, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 60. These cases are now over-ruled, and an appeal is now allowed from such order.

(2) Under the old law there was no appeal against an order of a District Magistrate or Presidency Magistrate directing security—Phulla, 1898 A.W.N. 127; under the present law, an appeal lies from the order of any Magistrate.

(3) Under the old law, the appeal lay to the District Magistrate; under the present law, it will ordinarily lie to the Court of Session, and in the case of orders by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court. The reason of this amendment has been thus stated: "All cases in the district relating to the breach of the peace and good behaviour are cases in which the District Magistrate is interested officially, and it is only fair that any order passed by a Magistrate should be revisable on appeal by an independent tribunal such as the Sessions Judge." Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February 1923, pp. 2063, 2064.

The words "Provincial Government" and "Official Gazette" have been substituted for "Local Government" and "local Gazette", respectively, in this section by section 14 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1102. Scope:—This section applies only to an order requiring security under sec. 118; an order directing security to keep the peace under sec. 106 is not appealable—Rowtha v. Muthusamy, 2 Weir 460.

Clause (b):—Under the old law, an appeal from an order passed by a Magistrate (other than the District Magistrate) lay to the Court of the District Magistrate and not to the Court of Session—Mahendra, 48 Cal. 874, 25 C.W.N. 383, 23 Cr.L.J. 229; Mahendra, 30 All. 47 (48); Mahomed Shah, 1 S.L.R. 98, 8 Cr.L.J. 356. Even an appeal from the order of an Additional District Magistrate lay to the District Magistrate and not to the Sessions Judge—Mahendra, 48 Cal. 874. Under the present law, the appeal will ordinarily lie to the Sessions Court; only under a special notification under the first proviso, the appeal will lie to the District Magistrate, even from an order by the Additional District Magistrate—Jahangir, 32 Cr.L.J. 819, 32 P.L.R. 453, 132 I.C. 206, 13 Lah. 251, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 463.

Second proviso:—This proviso expressly lays down that the moment a reference is made to the Court of Session under sec. 123, it operates as a bar to an appeal. The reason is two-fold: first, since the Sessions Judge is seised of the case on the reference, any appeal to him is unnecessary; Secondly, if an appeal is allowed to the Court of the District Magistrate under the first proviso, there may be two different decisions, one by the District Magistrate on appeal, and another by the Sessions Judge on the reference. The principle of this proviso was also recognised under the old law, see Qamar Din, 23 Cr.L.J. 454 (1st.). See also Fazal Mahomed, 35 Cr.L.J. 936, 156 I.C. 284, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 55, 1935 Cr.C. 346; Mangal Singh, 28 Cr.L.J. 657 (659), 103 I.C. 139, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 189.

If security is offered and accepted by the Magistrate after reference to the Sessions Judge under sec. 123 (2) Cr. P. C., the reference to the Sessions Judge, if not disposed of, would automatically come to an end when security is taken. At the same time it follows that the right of appeal given under this section to the person from whom security is demanded revives once he has given security and if an appeal is preferred the fact that the appellant has been engaged in these proceedings should be taken into account by the Court or Magistrate hearing the appeal—Muhammad Akbar, 29 Cr.L.J. 236 (238), 107 I.C. 286, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 64, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 490.

Where the order of a Subdivisional Magistrate under sec. 123 is confirmed by the Sessions Judge, the order passed by the Sessions Court becomes the operative order, and no appeal lies thereupon to the District Magistrate as it were from the order of the Subdivisional Magistrate—Shew Gyan, L.B.R. (1893-1900) 381. When a reference has been made to the Sessions Judge under sec. 123 and disposed of, no appeal lies to the District Magistrate—Ida, 1900 P.R. 15; nor even to the High Court—Chand Khan, 9 Cal. 878. Where a Sessions Judge has dealt with a case under the provisions of sec. 123, the order passed by him, whatever it may be, becomes the order in the case; and there is no longer an order by a Magistrate under sec. 118, which can be the subject of an appeal to the District Magistrate—Amir Bala, 35 Bom. 271 (274).

1102A. Duties of the Appellate Court:—It is settled law that a Court of Criminal Appeal dismissing an appeal summarily is not bound to write a judgment. The High Court has, however, always maintained a right to interfere, in the exercise of its discretion, where there was reason to suppose that the appeal had not received fair and adequate consideration. An appeal from an order requiring a person to furnish security to be of good behaviour is certainly distinguishable from an appeal against a conviction in respect of an offence specifically charged, where the only matter for consideration may be the credibility or otherwise of certain direct and positive evidence. In a case of furnishing security to be of good behaviour it is not unreasonable for the High Court to insist that the Appellate Court should not dispose of an appeal of this nature otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that it had applied its mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record, of the pleas raised by the appellant, both in the Court below and in his memorandum of appeal—Lal Behari, 38 All. 393, 14 A.L.J. 445, 17 Cr.L.J. 309, 35 I.C. 485.

On an appeal from an order under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., it is the duty of the Appellate Court to look into the defence evidence, and, after dealing with it, to come to a decision, although no reference might have been made to it by the Counsel for the appellant during his arguments—Fidoi Hossein, 40 Cal. 376, 14 Cr.L.J. 419, 20 I.C. 403, 17 C.W.N. xx.

In an appeal from an order under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., the Appellate Court is competent to order a re-trial—Bhagwat, 27 Cr.L.J. 945, 96 I.C. 497, 48 All. 501, 24 A.L.J. 566, A.I.R. 1926 All. 403. The Lahore High Court seems to have taken a different view in Chandan, 30 Cr.L.J. 491, 115 I.C. 544, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 28, 30 P.L.R. 416, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 416, where it was held that a District Magistrate had no power to remand a case for fresh inquiry, while setting aside on appeal an order requiring a person to furnish security under sec. 110, Cr. P. Code. The Madras High Court seems to have taken the view adopted by the Lahore High Court. See In re Narappa Reddy, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 202, 1933 M.W.N. 241, 145 I.C. 306, 34 Cr.L.J. 947. See also Nasiban, 49 I.C. 781, 20 Cr.L.J. 221; Dayanath, 33 Cal. 8.

See also the Note 273 where rulings regarding the requirements of an Appellate Court judgment have been quoted.

406A. Any person aggrieved by an order refusing to accept or rejecting a surety under section 122 may appeal against such order,—

(a) if made by a Presidency Magistrate, to the High Court;

(b) if made by the District Magistrate, to the Court of Session; or.

(c) if made by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, to the District Magistrate.

This section has been added by sec. 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "We think that there should be a general right of appeal against the rejection of a surety, and we have provided for it in sec. 406A"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

407. (1) Any person convicted on a trial held by any Magistrate of the second or third class, or any person sentenced under section 349, or in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under section 380, by a Sub-divisional Magistrate of the second class, may appeal to the District Magistrate.

(2) The District Magistrate may direct that any appeal under this section, or any class of such appeals, shall be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him and empowered by the Provincial Government to hear such appeals, and thereupon such appeal or class of appeals may be presented to such Subordinate Magistrate, or, if already presented to the District Magistrate, may be transferred to such Subordinate Magistrate. The District Magistrate may withdraw from such Magistrate any appeal or class of appeals so presented or transferred.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 111 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. A similar amendment is made in sec. 408 also.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1103. 'Convicted on a trial':—Since the word 'offence' as defined by sec. 4 includes an act in respect of which a complaint may be made under section 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, a person against whom an order under sec 22 of that Act is made is a person 'convicted on a trial' within the meaning of this section, and an appeal against such conviction by a second or third class Magistrate lies under this section—Ponnuswami, 29 Mad. 517; see also Rodriks v. Papa Dada, 46 Bom. 58, 23 Bom.L.R. 236, 22 Cr.L.J. 624, 63 I.C. 160, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 191.

Second or Third Class Magistrate:—If a 2nd class Magistrate after the hearing of the case is complete, is invested with first class powers and he convicts the accused in the latter capacity, he will be deemed to have held the trial as a second class Magistrate, and the appeal against his judgment in this trial will lie to the District Magistrate, and not to the Sessions Judge—Nga Pira 4 I.L.R. 239, 8 Cr.L.J. 48 (49); Baramaddi, 33 Cr.L.J. 516, 137 I.C. 854, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 460, 36 C.W.N. 302, 1932 Cr.C. 450, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal 394. The wording of this section ("trial held") shows that it is not the conviction by a second class Magistrate but the holding of trial by such Magistrate that determines the forum of the appeal—Sheobhanjan, infra. The Allahabad High Court supports the abovementioned view of the Calcutta High Court—Bakshi Ram v. Emp. A.I.R. 1938 All. 102, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1147, 1937 A.L.J. 1152, 1938 A.L.R. 164, 173 I.C. 663, 117 I.R. 1938 All 157, 39 Cr.L.J. 345. But see Jalal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 22, 38 Cr.L.J. 350, 30 S.L.R. 456, 167 I.C. 75, 9 R.S. 162 where a contrary view has been taken. In a very recent case the Calcutta High Court dissented from the decision in Baramaddi, supra, and held that, where a second class Magistrate was vested with first class powers before the date fixed for arguments in the case but after the evidence had been concluded, he could in passing sentence rely upon his first class powers and pass a sentence which only a Magistrate of the first class could pass and no appeal would lie to the District Magistrate and, if the sentence of fine imposed by the first class Magistrate did not exceed rupees fifty, no appeal would lie to the Sessions Judge either—Bejoy Kumar v. Sita Nath, 44 C.W.N. 677 (679), A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 540, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 519, following Banwari Tewari v. Sheo Balak Rai, 10 C.W.N. 243 (short notes). But where a Magistrate begins a trial as a second class Magistrate, but before hearing of the case is complete (e.g., before the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is finished, or before a charge is framed), he is invested with first class powers, i.e., where part of the trial is held by him as a second class Magistrate and part as a first class Magistrate, the proper tribunal for hearing the appeal from his conviction is the Sessions Judge and not the District Magistrate—Sheobhanjan, 86 I.C. 978, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 472, 29 C.W.N. 474, 3 Pat.L.R. 100, 6 P.L.T. 554, 26 Cr.L.J. 914 (915); Babu Ram, 8 Lah. 203, 28 Cr.L.J. 781 (782); Durga Das, 28 Cr.L.J. 50 (51), 99 I.C. 82 (Lah.); Maganlal, 29 Bom.L.R. 482, 101 I.C. 602, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 366, 28 Cr.L.J. 474; Venkatareddi v. Ramayya, 51 Mad. 257, 29 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 55, 106 I.C. 583, 53-M.L.J. 733.

An appeal from a Bench of Magistrates invested with 2nd or 3rd class powers will lie under this section to the District Magistrate, even when the case was tried summarily—Narayansami, 9 Mad. 36. But if a Bench when sitting together is invested with first class powers, though consisting of second or third class Magistrate, an appeal from such Bench will not lie to the District Magistrate but to the Sessions Judge—Havaldar v. Jagu Mian, 9 Cal. 96.

1104. Sub-section (2):—Transfer by District Magistrate:—The District Magistrate may delegate his work of hearing appeals, but not any revisional work. Where a District Magistrate directed an Assistant Collector under him to perform all "routine work of the Collector's office including criminal, appellate and revisional work," it was held that as regards revisional works, such a delegation was ultra vires, because this section does not refer to work of that kind; but as regards appellate work, the delegation is valid—Bai Harku v. Sitaram, 2 Bom.L.R. 536.

Although the District Magistrate may delegate his work of hearing appeals (from orders of 2nd and 3rd class Magistrates) to a first class Magistrate, still the Court of this last mentioned Magistrate will not be deemed as an Appellate Court with reference to the Courts of the 2nd and 3rd class Magistrates—Eroma, 26 Mad. 656 (F.B.) (overruling Subbaraya, 18 Mad. 487); Sadhu Lal v. Ram Churn, 30 Cal. 394; Mahim Chandra, 56 Cal. 824, 33 C.W.N. 285 (288); Anantharamayya v. Tukkadu, 41 Mad. 787 (789).

An Additional District Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate for the purposes of this sub-section, and the District Magistrate may transfer an appeal to the Additional District Magistrate. See sec. 10 (3).

The Court to which an appeal is transferred for disposal, and on which the responsibility for its correct disposal rests, is not bound by any opinion as to the necessity for taking further evidence formed by the Court from which the appeal was transferred and which is no longer responsible for the decision of the appeal.—Alagu Ambalam, 31 Mad. 277, 18 M.L.J. 89, 7 Cr.L.J. 329.

Even though a District Magistrate has transferred the appeal to a Sub-divisional Magistrate, the District Magistrate has jurisdiction to withdraw the appeal to his own file from the file of a Sub-divisional Magistrate, by whom it has been heard in part. Where such Sub-Divisional Magistrate has issued summons for the examination of certain witnesses as Court witnesses, it is not incumbent on the District Magistrate, on the withdrawal of the case to his own file, to examine those witnesses, as he is not bound by any opinion of the Sub-divisional Magistrate—Alagu Ambalam, supra.

408. Any person convicted on a trial held by an Assistant Sessions Judge, a District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class, or any person sentenced under section 349, or in respect of whom an order has been made or a sentence has been passed under section 380, by a Magistrate of the first class, may appeal to the Court of Session:

Provided as follows:—

(a) * * *

(b) when in any case an Assistant Sessions Judge or a Magistrate specially empowered under section 30 passes any sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years, or any sentence of transportation, the appeal of all or any of the accused convicted at such trial shall lie to the High Court;

(c) when any person is convicted by a Magistrate of an offence under section 124A of the Indian Penal Code, the appeal shall lie to the High Court.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 112 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Clause (a) which referred to European British Subjects has been omitted by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

Construction of this section:—This section grants the right of appeal and any restriction on that right of appeal must be strictly construed in favour of the subject. Any restriction that takes away a very substantial right must always be strictly construed and construed in favour of the subject—Akabbar Ali, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 642, 35 C.W.N. 752, 134 I.C. 1196, 1931 Cr.C. 842, 33 Cr.L.J. 90, 59 Cal. 19.

1105. 'Convicted':—A person who is convicted but on whom no sentence is passed, the person being released on probation under sec. 562, is said to be 'convicted' within the meaning of this section and can appeal—Manohar, 1904 P.R. 24, 1 Cr.L.J. 1098; Hayat, 1917 P.R. 20, 18 Cr.L.J. 401; Bahadur v. Ismail, 52 Cal. 463, 29 C.W.N. 151, 85 I.C. 135, 41 C.L.J. 45, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 329, 26 Cr.L.J. 455; Madhav, 27 Cr.L.J. 873, 96 I.C. 121, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 882, 28 Bom.L.R. 671; Mayandi v. Pala, 36 Cr.L.J. 589, 154 I.C. 879, 1934 M.W.N. 1318, 41 M.L.W. 22, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 157, 1935 Cr.C. 179, 58 Mad. 517. But see Note 1111 which deals with the question of appeal from an order of a Presidency Magistrate releasing the accused on probation under sec. 562.

If a Magistrate of the first class convicts a person and passes an order under sec. 562 in a summary trial, sec. 414 will not apply but the case will be governed by this section, and an appeal will lie to the Sessions Judge—Hira Lal, 46 All. 828 (830), 22 A.L.J. 751, 82 I.C. 172, A.I.R. 1924 All. 765, 25 Cr.L.J. 1244. This section gives a right of appeal immediately a conviction is recorded under sec. 562, Cr. P. C., without waiting for the passing of the subsequent sentence, if any. It confers upon the accused the right of appeal against their convictions, notwithstanding the fact that they have not yet been sentenced and that right is not taken away by sec. 414, Cr. P. C., which does not apply to such a case—Shankar Sukul v. The King, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 223, 41 Cr.L.J. 877, 190 I.C. 226, 1940 Rang.L.R. 381, following Mt Shwe Nyun v. King-Emp., (1904) 1 U.B.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 543 and Ma Chit Su v. King-Emp., (1909) 5 L.B.R. 129, 4 I.C. 1027.

An Ordinance (e.g., Ordinance III of 1914) is a law, and an infringement of its provision is an offence. A person convicted of such offence by a District Magistrate may appeal to the Sessions Judge and the latter has jurisdiction to hear the appeal—Sher Singh, 1916 P.R. 10, 17 Cr.L.J. 225 (226)

A person who is directed by a 1st class Magistrate to pay compensation under sec. 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act can be said to be convicted of an offence, and the appeal from his conviction is governed by this section—Rodricks v. Papa Dada, 46 Bom. 58, 23 Bom.L.R. 836, 22 Cr.L.J. 624, 63 I.C. 160, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 191.

"Trial" :—If a trial is commenced by a second class Magistrate, but during the course of the trial and before the hearing is complete, he is invested with first class powers, the trial is said to be held by a first class Magistrate, and the appeal lies to the Sessions Judge. See Shcobhanjan Sing, 6 P.L.T. 554 and other cases cited in Note 1103 under sec. 407. See also Note 1107.

Sentence under section 349 :—When a case is referred to a District Magistrate under sec. 349, the fact that he is also invested with special powers under sec. 30 will not empower him to pass a sentence of five years' imprisonment; such a sentence is ultra vires having regard to the last clause of sec. 349. The appeal in such a case will lie to the Court of Session and not to the High Court under proviso (b)—Nga Pya, 4 L.B.R. 53, 6 Cr.L.J. 289. See also Ragha, 7 Bom.H.C.C.C. 31.

Sentence under section 380 :—Where proceedings were submitted under sec. 380 by a second class Magistrate to a first class Magistrate, in order that the accused might be dealt with under sec. 562, and the latter convicted and sentenced the accused, and the question arose under the old law as to whether an appeal lay to the Sessions Judge or to the District Magistrate, it was held that the sentence passed by the first class Magistrate under sec. 380 in a case submitted to him was unquestionably a sentence passed by such Magistrate, and the appeal lay to the Court of Session—Bhimappa, 17 Bom.L.R. 895, 16 Cr.L.J. 738, 31 I.C. 338. This is now expressly laid down in the present section as amended.

1106. Court of Session :—Where a Magistrate was authorised to try all offences throughout the whole District, and there were two Sessions Divisions in the District, an appeal from a sentence of the Magistrate will lie to the Sessions Division within whose jurisdiction the Head quarters of the Magistrate were situate, irrespective of the place where the offence was committed—Valia Ambu, 30 Mad. 136; Hiralal, 1918 P.R. 7, 19 Cr.L.J. 310.

Appeal heard without jurisdiction :—Where an accused person was acquitted by a Sessions Judge in an appeal which he had no jurisdiction to hear, he may be re-arrested even after the expiration of the period of which he was originally sentenced to be imprisoned, and may be made to undergo the remaining portion of the sentence—Gopala Shiru, Ratanlal 17 (18).

1107. Proviso (b) :—The reason for this proviso obviously is that when a long term of imprisonment has to be undergone, the question whether the offence is proved should be tried in appeal by a Court of a higher grade than it would be tried by if the sentence were less—Nga Pya, 4 L.B.R. 53, 6 Cr.L.J. 289. The sentence of imprisonment exceeding four years in this proviso must be taken to mean the substantive sentence of imprisonment apart from any sentence of imprisonment in default of fine. Therefore, an appeal from a sentence awarding 4 years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100, and in default of fine, to six months' rigorous imprisonment, lies to the Court of Session and not to the High Court—Khuda Baksh, 1918 P.R. 19, 19 Cr.L.J. 742; Nga Tun Tha, 1 L.B.R. 57. An appeal from a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment and whipping by an Assistant Sessions Judge should be filed in the Court of the Sessions Judge and not in the High Court. The mere fact that the accused has been sentenced to whipping does not alter the position. The phrase "sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years" in this clause has a reference to the substantive sentence of imprisonment apart from any sentence of whipping or fine or imprisonment in default of fine—Kajjan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1288, 151 I.C. 289, 11 O.W.N. 11 1934 Cr.C. 1311, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 433.

An appeal from a conviction and sentence of less than 4 years' imp Assistant Sessions Judge lies to the Sessions Judge and not to the because by the time the appeal is filed the Assistant Sessions Judge has been promoted to the position of Officiating Sessions Judge (and is therefore incompetent to hear the appeal against his own order). The proper procedure in such a case would be to file the appeal before the Officiating Sessions Judge who on receipt of the appeal would either send it to the High Court or would postpone its hearing till the return of the permanent incumbent—Garib Lal, 3 P.L.J. 192, 19 Cr.L.J. 442. The Court to which an appeal lies from the judgment of the Judge is determined by the status of the Judge on the day he pronounces judgment. So, where a trial was held by an Assistant Sessions Judge but before he pronounced judgment, sentencing the accused to four years' rigorous imprisonment, he was made an Additional Sessions Judge, held that an appeal from his judgment lay to the High Court and not to the Sessions Judge—Jalal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 22, 38 Cr.L.J. 350, 167 I.C. 75, 30 S.L.R. 456, 9 R.S. 162. The Allahabad High Court has taken a contrary view and has held that, in such circumstances, the appeal lies to the Court of Session and not to the High Court—Bakshi Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 All 102, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1147, 1937 A.L.J. 1152, 1938 A.L.R. 164, 173 I.C. 663, I.L.R. 1938 All. 157, 39 Cr.L.J. 345.

In calculating the term of 4 years under this proviso, the Court must not take into account the length of time during which the accused was under trial. The Court is only concerned with the actual substantive sentence imposed—Jagadish, 10 N.L.J. 135, 28 Cr.L.J. 672, 103 I.C. 208, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 255, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 295.

An order of detention in a Borstal School is not a sentence of imprisonment, and the terms of this section itself plainly contemplate that, except in the instances mentioned in this proviso, all appeals from a Magistrate of the first class shall lie to the Court of Session. Where, therefore, under the provisions of sec. 25 (1) of the Burma Prevention of Crimes (Young Offenders) Act (III of 1930), the accused were directed to be detained in a Borstal School for a period of five years by a Special Power Magistrate, their appeal lay to the Court of Session and not to the High Court—Nga Tha E, 37 Cr.L.J. 793, 163 I.C. 144, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 229, 14 Rang. 143, 1936 Cr.C. 513.

1108. Concurrent Sentences:—Under sec. 35 (3), concurrent sentences cannot be aggregated together for the purpose of raising the status of the forum of appeal—Gurusahay, 3 P.L.J. 138; Tulsi Ram, 35 All. 154, 11 A.L.J. 111, 14 Cr.L.J. 119. Therefore, where an Assistant Sessions Judge or a Magistrate specially empowered under sec. 30 passes several sentences of imprisonment upon an accused each of which is for a term of four years or under, and the sentences are ordered to run concurrently, the appeal from the conviction and sentences lies to the Sessions Court and not to the High Court—Lakshmi, 23 C.L.J. 595; Gurusahay, 3 P.L.J. 138; Sher Muhammad, 1901 P.R. 25; Jagadish, 10 N.L.J. 135, 103 I.C. 208, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 255, A.I.Cr.R. 295, 28 Cr.L.J. 672; Tulsiram, 14 Cr.L.J. 119, 11 A.L.J. 111, 35 All. 154.

Magistrate acting under section 30:—Under this proviso, where a person is convicted by a Magistrate invested with enhanced power under sec. 30, and sentenced to imprisonment for more than four years, an appeal lies to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Ahmad Khan, 1916 P.R. 5, 17 Cr.L.J. 290.

If the appeal is presented to the Sessions Judge instead of to the High Court, and the Sessions Judge disposes of the appeal, the proceedings before the Sessions Judge are void under sec. 530 (r)—Abdulla, 2 Rang. 386 (387), 26 Cr.L.J. 293, 84 I.C. 437, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 39.

1108A. Consecutive Sentences:—See Note 88

1109. 'All or any of the accused':—"This amendment provides that in a trial in which more than one person are accused, and in which by reason of the sentences passed an appeal lies in the case of some persons to the Sessions Judge and of others to the High Court, the appeal of all shall lie to the latter tribunal"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). If several persons are tried jointly, and the Assistant Sessions Judge passes a sentence of over four years' imprisonment on some of the accused, and a sentence of less than four years on the others, the appeal by the latter will also lie to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Palant, 17 M.L.J. 248, 5 Cr.L.J. 496; Richhe, 13 A.L.J. 272, 16 Cr.L.J. 353; Jaisingh, 1900 P.R. 12; Debi Din, 21 A.L.J. 151, 91 I.C. 959, A.I.R. 1926 All. 160, 27 Cr.L.J. 175; Perumal, 1931 M.W.N. 1068 (The contrary view held in Nittoor Moideen, 43 M.L.J. 561 is hereby overruled). Even, if in such a case, the persons on whom sentences of over four years were passed did not appeal to the High Court, the appeal of the other persons on whom sentences of less than four years were passed would lie to the High Court and not to the Court of Session—Har Dayal, 37 All. 471, 13 A.L.J. 719, 16 Cr.L.J. 606; Ahmad Khan, 1916 P.R. 5, Debi Din, 27 Cr.L.J. 175, 91 I.C. 959, 24 A.L.J. 151, A.I.R. 1926 All. 160.

Proviso (c):—Where the accused was convicted by a District Magistrate under sec. 124A, I. P. C., and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, and was in the same trial convicted of an offence under sec. 153A, I. P. C., and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment, the two sentences must be aggregated and considered as one sentence under sec. 35 (3) for the purposes of appeal, and the appeal against the single sentence will lie to the High Court. It is not necessary that the prisoner will file an appeal against the conviction under sec. 124A to the High Court, and another appeal against the conviction under sec. 153A to the Court of Session—Joy Chandra, 38 Cal. 214 (219).

Where, overlooking this proviso, the Sessions Judge entertained an appeal from a conviction under sec. 124A, I. P. C., and reduced the sentence, his order is without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court—Krishna Chandra Pangoria v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 972, 170 I.C. 874, 1937 A.L.J. 365, 1937 A Cr.C. 70, 1937 A.W.R. 401, 1937 A.L.R. 749, 10 R.A. 191, A.I.R. 1937 All. 466.

409. An appeal to the Court of Session or Sessions Judge

Appeals to Court of Session how heard. shall be heard by the Sessions Judge or by an Additional Sessions Judge:

Provided that an Additional Sessions Judge shall hear only such appeals as the Provincial Government may, by general or special order, direct or as the Sessions Judge of the division may make over to him.

Change:—The proviso has been added by sec. 113 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by section 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1110. Under this section, the Sessions Judge can transfer an appeal ~~presented to~~ him to the Additional Sessions Judge, he cannot transfer it to the Assistant Sessions Judge for disposal. Even sec. 193 (2) does not confer on him such power, ^{because the} word 'case' under that section does not include an appeal—Abdul Razak, 27 Ind. 209, 16 Cr.L.J. 316. Under sec. 528 (1), the Sessions Judge can only transfer a case (not an appeal) to the Assistant Sessions Judge.

The Additional Sessions Judge will try only those appeals which would be made over to him by the Sessions Judge; but that does not oust the jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge over those appeals. Therefore, if a Sessions Judge makes over a particular appeal to the Additional Sessions Judge to be tried by the latter, he can afterwards withdraw the appeal from the latter and take it on his own file and decide—Binji Marwar, 44 All. 157, 23 Cr.L.J. 107, 19 A.L.J. 952.

Where the High Court transferred an appeal from the file of the Sessions Judge to that of another Sessions Judge without any express direction that the Sessions Judge was to hear the appeal himself, the Sessions Judge to whom the appeal was transferred had power to transfer it to the Additional Sessions Judge ^{if he so wished}. ~~The power~~ this section should not be limited to apply only to appeals made within the ~~area~~ ^{jurisdiction} of the Sessions Judge. of the Court of Session—Kedarnath, 35 Cr.L.J. 1167, 150 I.C. 927, 15 P.L.T. 318, 1934 Cr.C. 300, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 114.

But an Additional Sessions Judge cannot transfer a criminal appeal from the file of another Additional Sessions Judge to the file of the Sessions Judge—Daulat Ram, 1931 A.L.J. 591, 33 Cr.L.J. 158 (159), 135 I.C. 252, A.I.R. 1931 All. 435, 1931 Cr.C. 707, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 76.

410. Any person convicted on a trial held by a Sessions Judge, or an Additional Sessions Judge, may appeal from sentence of Court of Session. appeal to the High Court.

1110A. If a Sessions Judge imposes a fine for intentional insult to him in Court, in a summary way, the accused is said to be 'convicted on a trial,' and may appeal under this section to the High Court—In re Chappu Menon, 4 M.H.C.R. 146.

If a Sessions Judge on appeal has taken additional evidence under sec. 428, and has dismissed the appeal, the prisoner has no further right of appeal to the High Court—Ishahak, 27 Cal. 372.

'May appeal':—This section confers a right of appeal to the High Court to a person convicted on a trial held by the Sessions Judge or an Additional Sessions Judge. The word 'may' does not mean that it is at the option of the High Court to entertain or not appeals under this section—Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (178).

An appeal lies to the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court against convictions and sentences passed by a Judge of that Court sitting in its Sessions Court jurisdiction with a jury only on a point of law—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (211), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474, 12 R.S. 107.

411. Any person convicted on a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate may appeal to the High Court, if the Magistrate has sentenced him to imprisonment for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding two hundred rupees.

1111. Imprisonment:—The word 'imprisonment' means a substantive sentence of imprisonment, and does not include an award of imprisonment in default of payment of fine, the operation of which is contingent only on the fine not being paid. Therefore, where the Presidency Magistrate inflicted a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 200, and in default of payment, three months' simple imprisonment, the two sentences of imprisonment could not be combined to give the prisoner a right of appeal—Jotharam, 2 Mad. 30; Schein, 15 Cal. 799; Hari, 20 Bom. 145.

An order under sec. 562 is not a 'sentence'; therefore, no appeal lies to the High Court from an order of a Presidency Magistrate releasing the accused under sec. 562 on execution of a bond for good behaviour for two years—Burks, 36 C.W.N. 459 (460), Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 478, 138 I.C. 627, 33 Cr.L.J. 639, 1932 Cr.C. 480, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 488; Kali Kumar Mitter v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 876, 170 I.C. 26, 10 R.C. 122, I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 123, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 413.

Where the accused was convicted by a Presidency Magistrate under sec. 408, I. P. C., and sentenced to suffer six months' rigorous imprisonment under each of three counts under that section, directed to run concurrently, held that the conviction was not appealable—Suknandan, 17 C.L.J. 392, 13 Cr.L.J. 787, 17 I.C. 531.

Whipping:—Where the sentence passed by a Presidency Magistrate is to receive five stripes, it is not a sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding six months or of fine exceeding two hundred rupees and is, therefore, not appealable—Motiram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 985, 170 I.C. 757, 10 R.B. 142, 39 Bom.L.R. 470, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 336.

412. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, where an accused person has pleaded guilty and has been convicted by a Court of Session or any Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class on such plea, there shall be no appeal except as to the extent or legality of the sentence.

No appeal in certain cases when accused pleads guilty.

1112. Conviction on his own plea:—The principle of this section is that the accused in pleading guilty to the charge is considered to have waived his right to question the legality of the conviction, he can only question the extent or legality of the sentence—Akub Ali, 31 C.L.J. 122, 21 Cr.L.J. 547, 56 I.C. 851; Jafar, 5 Bom. 85. When a person has been convicted on his own plea by a Presidency Magistrate, no appeal shall lie to the High Court, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence, although he is sentenced for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding Rs. 200—Jafar, 5 Bom. 85. Where a charge has been framed against an accused person under sec. 221 (7) of this Code, and such person has pleaded guilty to the charge that he is a previous convict, the Appellate Court under sec. 412 is precluded from opening the question whether the accused is a previous convict or not—Kissan, 4 N.L.R. 163, 9 Cr.L.J. 56.

A person who pleaded guilty to the charge and was convicted by a second class Magistrate, is not barred from contending in appeal that the conviction is illegal. Sec. 412 bars the appeal where the conviction was by a first class Magistrate—Chundal, 28 Bom.L.R. 1023, 27 Cr.L.J. 1148, 97 I.C. 668.

If a person who has no right of appeal under this section, makes an appeal, and the Appellate Court hears the appeal, sets aside the conviction and acquits him, the order of acquittal is without jurisdiction and must be set aside by the High Court—Nga Lu Gale, 5 Rang 710, 29 Cr.L.J. 115 (116), 106 I.C. 707, A.I.R. 1928 Rang 49.

Where an accused pleads guilty on a charge under sec. 380, I. P. C., but the said plea is founded upon an erroneous conception of one's right in the property, this section is inapplicable to the case and cannot shut one's right of appeal—Sat Narain, 32 Cr.L.J. 576 (577), 130 I.C. 693, 1931 A.L.J. 201, A.I.R. 1931 All. 265, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 309, 1931 Cr.C. 425, 53 All. 437.

Extent and legality of the sentence:—Under this section, the right of appeal, when the accused has pleaded guilty, is limited to such matter as may be a special ground of complaint with respect to the sentence (as distinguished from the conviction itself), whether on the ground that the sentence is beyond what the circumstances of the case required, or that the sentence is illegal or not authorized by law—Jafar, 5 Bom. 85. Although the Appellate Court may reject an appeal on the ground that the accused has pleaded guilty before the Lower Court, still the extent and legality of the sentence will have to be considered by the Appellate Court—Geind Raghu, Ratanlal 954; and in order to consider the legality of the sentence the Appellate Court must satisfy itself that the plea of guilty was properly made after the nature of the offence was explained to and understood by the prisoner—Kalu Dosan, 22 Bom. 759.

But where no sentence was passed (e.g., where the accused was convicted upon his own plea of guilty, and was released under sec. 562 on his executing a bond) the right of appeal is absolutely barred—Hayata, 1917 P.R. 20, 18 Cr.L.J. 401. In such a case the accused has no right of appeal even when his co-accused are convicted and appealable sentences are passed against them. Under sec. 415A, Cr. P. C., the accused's right of appeal is not more extensive. Sec. 412, Cr. P. C., is not controlled by sec. 415A—Tejunai, 32 Cr.L.J. 1142, 134 I.C. 379, 25 S.L.R. 337, Ind. Rul. 1931 Sind 123, 1931 Cr.C. 923, A.I.R. 1931 Sind 151.

ed person in cases in which a Court of Session [] passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or, in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding rupees fifty only. * *

Explanation.—There is no appeal from a sentence of imprisonment passed by such Court or Magistrate in default of payment of fine when no substantive sentence of imprisonment has also been passed.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 24 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. Under this section as now amended, a right of appeal is given against conviction by District Magistrate or Magistrates of the first class where they pass sentences of imprisonment even for a period of one month or less. Under the old law (section 416) only an European British subject could appeal against such sentence. We consider that outside the presidency towns, in the case of all persons, both Euro-and will to a certain extent in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or of fine not exceeding fifty rupees only or of whipping only. are of opinion on general grounds, and apart from the particular case of the European British subject, that an appeal should lie against any sentence. It is to be noted that short sentences of imprisonment should where possible be avoided; and the number of sentences of one month and under passed by District Magistrates and first class Magistrates should not, as far as we can judge, be very large. In the case of a sentence passed in a trial by a Court of Session, we would allow no appeal in respect of a sentence of one month or under"—Report of the Racial Distinctions Committee, para. 19.

This section also gives a right of appeal against a sentence of whipping.

1113. Scope:—The words of this section are clear enough and wide enough to include cases under sec. 349 or sec. 380, Cr. P. C., though these are not specifically and distinctly mentioned, as in sec. 408, Cr. P. Code. What has to be seen, in considering whether a case is hit by sec. 413, Cr. P. C., is whether the sentence in question was one not exceeding the limit prescribed, and whether it was a sentence passed by a Court of the class mentioned therein. If these conditions are satisfied, sec. 413, Cr. P. C., would apply, whether the sentence was passed under sec. 349 or sec. 380, Cr. P. C., or otherwise—Kishori Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 990 (992), 1 L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 469, 170 I.C. 920, 10 R.C. 212, 41 C.W.N. 833, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 394.

Sole sentence of imprisonment:—Where the accused was sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment and to pay the cost of court-fees, the sentence is a sole sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month; and the order to pay the court-fees is no part of the sentence and is not a sentence of fine added to imprisonment, so as to make it appealable (sec. 415)—Madan v. Haran, 20 Cal. 687; Khajabhoy, 16 Mad. 423; Karupanna, 29 Mad. 188; Para Muniyan, 1 Weir 724. See also Atul Chandra Modak v. Emp., 42 C.W.N. 760. Contra—Thangavedu, 22 Mad. 153; Anonymous, 2 Weir 723, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 28.

Fine:—Compensation awarded under sec. 22 of the Trespass Act is not a fine, and therefore an appeal lies from an order awarding it—Rodricks v. Pada Dada, 46 Bom. 58, 22 Cr.L.J. 621, 63 I.C. 160, A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 191.

The words "a sentence of fine" includes a case where the aggregate fine does not exceed rupees fifty. So, if two sentences of fine are passed on the accused, one of Rs. 20 and another for Rs. 15, no appeal lies—Nawab Ali v. Jamab, 59 Cal. 1131, 36 C.W.N. 407, 1932 Cr.C. 551, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 525, 138 I.C. 720, 33 Cr.L.J. 704, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 551; Kali Charan Sardar v. Adhar Mandal, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 274, 43 C.W.N. 360, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 325, 182 I.C. 258, 40 Cr.L.J. 652; Paluvadi Venkataramayya, infra. But see Kandhai, 7 Luck. 501 cited under sec. 414, and Makrand Singh v. Ganga under sec. 415 and Public Prosecutor, Madras v. Kollur Dasa Pai, 1936 M.W.N. 213 which has been dissented from in Paluvadi Venkataramayya, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 111, 50 M.L.W. 614, 1939 M.W.N. 1039, 1939 M Cr.C. 285, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 878, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 1035. Where the accused is convicted under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 40 and he is also convicted under sec. 393, I. P. C., and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 40 in the same trial, he has a right of appeal—Akabbai Ali, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 642, 35 C.W.N. 752, 134 I.C. 1196, 1931 Cr.C. 842, 33 Cr.L.J. 90, 59 Cal. 19; Shidlingappa, 27 Cr.L.J. 926, 96 I.C. 270, 28 Bom.L.R. 668, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 416. See also Note 1114.

The costs of the court-fees, presumably awarded under sec. 546A, Cr. P. C., ought not to be regarded as forming part of the fine for the purposes of appeal—Atul Chandra Modak v. Emp., 42 C.W.N. 760. See also the rulings mentioned above under the heading "Sole sentence of imprisonment."

Aggregation of sentences:—Where a person is charged with two separate offences in one trial, the amount of the whole punishment awarded for the two offences must be regarded as one sentence for the purpose of determining whether an appeal lies or not—Haradhan, 3 CLR 511; Rama, 1 Bom. 223. See section 415.

Passing appealable sentence at the request of accused:—When a Magistrate at first passed a non-appealable sentence, and shortly afterwards at the request of the accused enhanced the sentence to make it appealable, and on appeal the Sessions Judge struck out the added sentence as illegal, and declined to hear the appeal on the ground that the sentence as originally passed was not appealable, it was held that as the Magistrate had passed an appealable sentence, an appeal lay under this section, whether that sentence was passed legally or illegally, and that the Sessions Judge was bound to hear the appeal on the merits—Keshavlal, 35 Bom. 418, 12 Cr.L.J. 431. Where the accused, when he realized or surmised that he was about to be convicted, put in a petition praying for an appealable sentence, but was given a non-appealable one, held that it is quite true that the nature of the sentence does affect the question whether there is an appeal from the decision of the Court which inflicted the sentence; but to say that the Court ought to take into consideration the prayer of the accused in deciding what is the proper sentence, is wholly wrong. A Court should weigh the sentence with reference to the crime committed and the circumstances of the case and not with reference to anything which may happen subsequently—Yar Muhammad, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 448, 58 Cal. 392, 1931 Cr.C. 600, 32 Cr.L.J. 1181, 134 I.C. 536. It is hardly open to the accused persons to say that they should have been given a higher sentence so that they might have a right of appeal—Anant Singh, A.I.R. 1936 All. 147, 37 Cr.L.J. 417, 161 I.C. 307, 1936 A.L.J. 209, 1936 Cr.C. 175. A sentence must be passed which is considered proper in all circumstances of the case, regardless of the consideration whether it should be an appealable one—The King v. Maung Saw Han, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 69 (70), 40 Cr.L.J. 248, 179 I.C. 716, 11 R.R. 343.

in which a Magistrate empowered to act under section 260 passes a sentence * * * of fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only. * * *

1113A. This section has been amended by sec. 25 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. By this amendment, certain sentences passed on summary convictions which were originally non-appealable (viz., imprisonment for three months or less, or whipping) are now made appealable. Under the old law, only European British subjects could appeal from such sentences.

If a Magistrate of the first class passes an order under sec. 562 in a summary trial, this section does not apply, because an order under sec. 562 is not a sentence of imprisonment or fine, but sec. 408 will govern the case and an appeal will lie to the Court of Session—Hira Lal, 46 All. 828 (829), 22 A.L.J. 751, 25 Cr.L.J. 1244; Shankar Sukul v. The King, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 223, 1940 Rang.L.R. 381. See also Note 1105.

The words "fine not exceeding Rs. 200" mean one sentence of fine. If in a summary trial a Magistrate imposes two sentences of fine, one of Rs. 50, and another of Rs. 150, the latter is within the meaning of Rs. 200. 9 (60), 33 Cr.L.J. 278, 136 I.C. 332 Oudh 27. But see 59 Cal. 1131, cited under sec. 413. This section does not apply only to a case where one sentence only is imposed. The singular includes the plural and reading this section with sec. 415, it is clear that what is meant is not two punishments of different kinds. Therefore, where aggregate fine imposed is less than Rs. 200, no appeal lies—Hemandas, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 40, 37 Cr.L.J. 455, 161 I.C. 267, 1936 Cr.C. 230. There is, therefore, a difference of opinion between the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court and the Oudh Chief Court on his point.

415. An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in section 413 or section 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace.

Explanation.—A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence by which two or more punishments are combined within the meaning of this section.

1114. Combination of sentences:—Where the accused was sentenced to one day's imprisonment and a fine of fifty rupees, the fact that the accused was not actually sent to jail does not prevent the combination; the passing of the sentence of imprisonment is sufficient, and the two sentences of imprisonment and fine may be combined for the purposes of appeal—Alam, 33 All. 510, 12 Cr.L.J. 389, 8 A.L.J. 524, 11 I.C. 253. Where the accused were charged under secs. 323 and 427, I. P. C., and fined Rs. 50 each as the charge was brought home to them, held that in the absence of any indication that the Magistrate intended to pass two sentences or one sentence consisting of two punishments the Sessions Judge was not wrong in holding that the accused had no right of appeal—Munna Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1102, 157 I.C. 123, A.I.R. 1935 All. 630, 1935 Cr.C. 642, 1935 A.L.R. 703, 8 R.A. 103, 1935 A.L.J. 952.

It is not possible to interpret the reference in this section to a combination of punishments as meaning a combination of punishments of different kinds, that is to say, a combination of a punishment of imprisonment with a combination of fine, since the section, after referring to secs. 413 and 414, Cr. P. C., speaks of "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned," and sec. 413, Cr. P. C., as it now stands, mentions only two forms of punishment, imprisonment and fine, and sec. 414, Cr. P. C., mentions only one form of punishment, that is to say, fine. For the purposes of sec. 414, Cr. P. C., read with sec. 415, Cr. P. C., therefore, the only possible combination of punishments is a combination of sentences of fine. It does not seem possible to interpret a combination of punishments for the purposes of sec. 414, read with sec. 415, Cr. P. C., as meaning a combination of sentences of fine, but to restrict it for the purposes of sec. 413 read with sec. 415, Cr. P. C., to a combination of punishment of different kinds, that is to say, a combination of a sentence of imprisonment with a sentence of fine. Therefore two sentences of fine may be combined for the purpose of appeal under this section—Makrand Singh v. Ganga, 38 Cr. L. J. 1062 (1065), 13 Luck 618, 171 I. C. 337, 1937 O. W. N. 1088, 1937 O. L. R. 547, 10 R. O. 114, A. I. R. 1937 Oudh 524. This view has, however, not been followed by the Calcutta High Court in Kali Charan Sardar v. Adhar Mandal, A. I. R. 1939 Cal. 274, 43 C. W. N. 360, I. L. R. (1939) 1 Cal. 325, 182 I. C. 258, 40 Cr. L. J. 652, where it has been laid down that there can be no appeal to a Sessions Judge from a conviction by a first class Magistrate in which the aggregate combined sentences do not exceed Rs. 50. The combination of punishments which is contemplated by sec. 415, Cr. P. C., as sections 413, 414 and 415 Cr. P. C., now stand after the amendment of 1923, refers to a combination of the punishments of imprisonment and fine, but sec. 415, Cr. P. C., can have no application in a case in which two non-appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate amount of fine does not exceed Rs. 50. See also Nawab Ali, in Note 1113. The Madras High Court has also adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court expressed above in Paluvadi Venkataramayya, A. I. R. 1940 Mad. 111, 41 Cr. L. J. 403, 187 I. C. 103, 50 M. L. W. 614, 1939 M. W. N. 1039, 1939 M. Cr. C. 285, (1939) 2 M. L. J. 878, I. L. R. 1939 Mad. 1035. The Nagpur High Court has also preferred the view of the Calcutta High Court as expressed in Nawab Ali, supra, and has held that there is nothing to show that the legislature intended to modify the principle that two or more punishments of different kinds, not of the same kind, should be appealable—Provincial Government v. Bhivram, 41 Cr. L. J. 544, 188 I. C. 80, 1940 N. L. J. 242, A. I. R. 1940 Nag. 264. See Note 1113.

Security to keep the peace:—The imprisonment to be undergone in default of furnishing security to keep the peace is not a part of the substantive sentence. If the substantive sentence is not in itself appealable, it does not become so, merely because the person convicted has been ordered to find security to keep the peace—Maghu, 7 O. C. 338, 1 Cr. L. J. 1054; Kuhori Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr. L. J. 990 (991), 170 I. C. 920, I. L. R. (1937) 2 Cal. 469, 10 R. C. 212, 41 C. W. N. 833, A. I. R. 1937 Cal. 394.

The words "security to keep the peace" refer only to those cases where the accused is ordered to find security to keep the peace under this Code, and not where he is ordered to do so under any local enactment. Thus, where the accused was sentenced in a summary trial to a non-appealable term of imprisonment, and further ordered under sec. 31A of the Rangoon Police Act to give security, it was held that this section did not apply, and the sentence passed was appealable—Kathan, 4 L. B. R. 359, 9 Cr. L. J. 368.

Again, this section applies where the accused is ordered to give security to keep the peace, and not where he is required to furnish security for good behaviour—Kathan, supra.

Where the accused was fined Rs. 60 under Rule 60A of the Burma Motor Vehicles Rules read with sec. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, and his license was suspended for one year in a summary trial, held that the order for suspension of license was a part of the 1113A. This section has been amended by sec. 25 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. By this amendment, certain sentences passed on summary convictions which were originally non-appealable (viz., imprisonment for three months or less, or whipping) are now made appealable. Under the old law, only European British subjects could appeal from such sentences.

If a Magistrate of the first class passes an order under sec. 562 in a summary trial, this section does not apply, because an order under sec. 562 is not a sentence of imprisonment or fine, but sec. 408 will govern the case and an appeal will lie to the Court of Session—Hira Lal, 46 All. 828 (829), 22 A.L.J. 751, 25 Cr.L.J. 1244; Shankar Sukul v. The King, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 223, 1940 Rang.L.R. 381. See also Note 1105.

The words "fine not exceeding Rs. 200" mean one sentence of fine. If in a summary trial a Magistrate imposes two sentences of fine, one of Rs. 50, and another of Rs. 20, the case is one in which two punishments are combined within the meaning of sec. 415, and an appeal lies—Kandhai, 7 Luck. 501, 1932 Cr.C. 59 (60), 33 Cr.L.J. 278, 136 I.C. 248, Ind. Ruf. 1932 Oudh 104, 8 O.W.N. 1373, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 27. But see 59 Cal. 1131, cited under sec. 413. This section does not apply only to a case where one sentence only is imposed. The singular includes the plural and reading this section with sec. 415, it is clear that what is meant is not two punishments of different kinds. Therefore, where aggregate fine imposed is less than Rs. 200, no appeal lies—Hemandas, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 40, 37 Cr.L.J. 455, 161 I.C. 267, 1936 Cr.C. 230. There is, therefore, a difference of opinion between the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court and the Oudh Chief Court on this point.

415. An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in section 413 or section 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be appealable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace.

Explanation.—A sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is not a sentence by which two or more punishments are combined within the meaning of this section.

1114. Combination of sentences:—Where the accused was sentenced to one day's imprisonment and a fine of fifty rupees, the fact that the accused was not actually sent to jail does not prevent the combination; the passing of the sentence of imprisonment is sufficient, and the two sentences of imprisonment and fine may be combined for the purposes of appeal—Alam, 33 All. 510, 12 Cr.L.J. 389, 8 A.L.J. 524, 11 I.C. 253. Where the accused were charged under secs. 323 and 427, I. P. C., and fined Rs. 50 each as the charge was brought home to them, held that in the absence of any indication that the Magistrate intended to pass two sentences or one sentence consisting of two punishments the Sessions Judge was not wrong in holding that the accused had no right of appeal—Munna Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1102, 157 I.C. 123, A.I.R. 1935 All. 630, 1935 Cr.C. 642, 1935 A.L.R. 703, 8 R.A. 103, 1935 A.L.J. 952.

It is not possible to interpret the reference in this section to a combination of punishments as meaning a combination of punishments of different kinds, that is to say, a combination of a punishment of imprisonment with a combination of fine, since the section, after referring to secs. 413 and 414, Cr. P. C., speaks of 'any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned,' and sec. 413, Cr. P. C., as it now stands, mentions only two forms of punishment, imprisonment and fine, and sec. 414, Cr. P. C., mentions only one form of punishment, that is to say, fine. For the purposes of sec. 414, Cr. P. C., read with sec. 415, Cr. P. C., therefore, the only possible combination of punishments is a combination of sentences of fine. It does not seem possible to interpret a combination of punishments for the purposes of sec. 414, read with sec. 415, Cr. P. C., as meaning a combination of sentences of fine, but to restrict it for the purposes of sec. 413 read with sec. 415, Cr. P. C., to a combination of punishment of different kinds, that is to say, a combination of a sentence of imprisonment with a sentence of fine. Therefore two sentences of fine may be combined for the purpose of appeal under this section—Makrand Singh v. Ganga, 38 Cr.L.J. 1062 (1065), 13 Luck. 618, 171 I.C. 337, 1937 O.W.N. 1088, 1937 O.L.R. 547, 10 R.O. 114, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 524. This view has, however, not been followed by the Calcutta High Court in Kali Charan Sardar v. Adhar Mandal, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 274, 43 C.W.N. 360, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 325, 182 I.C. 258, 40 Cr.L.J. 652, where it has been laid down that there can be no appeal to a Sessions Judge from a conviction by a first class Magistrate in which the aggregate combined sentences do not exceed Rs. 50. The combination of punishments which is contemplated by sec. 415, Cr. P. C., as sections 413, 414 and 415 Cr. P. C., now stand after the amendment of 1923, refers to a combination of the punishments of imprisonment and fine, but sec. 415, Cr. P. C., can have no application in a case in which two non-appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate amount of fine does not exceed Rs. 50. See also Nawab Ali, in Note 1113. The Madras High Court has also adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court expressed above in Paluvadi Venkataramayya, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 111, 41 Cr.L.J. 403, 187 I.C. 103, 50 M.L.W. 614, 1939 M.W.N. 1039, 1939 M.Cr.C. 285, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 878, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 1035. The Nagpur High Court has also preferred the view of the Calcutta High Court as expressed in Nawab Ali, supra, and has held that there is nothing to show that the legislature intended to modify the principle that two or more punishments of different kinds, not of the same kind, should be appealable—Provincial Government v. Bhivram, 41 Cr.L.J. 544, 188 I.C. 80, 1940 N.L.J. 242, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 264. See Note 1113.

Security to keep the peace:—The imprisonment to be undergone in default of furnishing security to keep the peace is not a part of the substantive sentence. If the substantive sentence is not in itself appealable, it does not become so, merely because the person convicted has been ordered to find security to keep the peace—Maghu, 7 O.C. 338, 1 Cr.L.J. 1054; Kishori Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 990 (991), 170 I.C. 920, I.L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 469, 10 R.C. 212, 41 C.W.N. 833, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 394.

The words "security to keep the peace" refer only to those cases where the accused is ordered to find security to keep the peace under this Code, and not where he is ordered to do so under any local enactment. Thus, where the accused was sentenced in a summary trial to a non-appealable term of imprisonment, and further ordered under sec. 31A of the Rangoon Police Act to give security, it was held that this section did not apply, and the sentence passed was appealable—Kathan, 4 L.B.R. 359, 9 Cr.L.J. 368.

Again, this section applies where the accused is ordered to give security to keep the peace, and not where he is required to furnish security for good behaviour—Kathan, supra.

Where the accused was fined Rs. 60 under Rule 60A of the Burma Motor Vehicles Rules read with sec. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, and his license was suspended for one year in a summary trial, held that the order for suspension of license was a part of the sentence and that the conviction was appealable—Guranand, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 329, 1933 Cr.C. 1146, 146 I.C. 545, 35 Cr.L.J. 116; Dhekli, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 71.

415A. Notwithstanding anything contained in this Chapter,

Special right of appeal when more persons than one are convicted in certain cases. in one trial, and an appealable judgment or order has been passed in respect of any of such persons, all or any of the persons convicted at such trial have a right of appeal.

This section has been added by sec. 114 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, to remove the conflict of opinion which existed under the old law, as will be evident from the undernoted cases.

1115. Where several persons are tried and convicted at one trial, some of whom are sentenced to appealable sentences while the rest are awarded non-appealable sentences, all of them will be able to appeal; the fact that non-appealable sentences are passed on some of them does not, by virtue of sec. 413, take away their right of appeal. Section 413 applies to the case where only a non-appealable sentence is passed and not where non-appealable as well as appealable sentences are pronounced—Naurati, 1915 P.R. 30; Ba Thaw, 4 L.B.R. 354, 9 Cr.L.J. 356; Jaisukh, 1916 P.R. 16; Sheopal, 15 O.C. 386, 14 Cr.L.J. 170; Lal Singh, 38 All. 395; Biswanath, 22 Cr.L.J. 297 (Pat.); Akabbar Ali, 35 C.W.N. 752, 134 I.C. 1196, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 642, 1931 Cr.C. 842, 33 Cr.L.J. 90, 59 Cal. 19. Section 413 curtails the right of appeal only in cases in which there is no sentence upon any convicted person above the limit prescribed by sec. 413; but if any of the punishment above that limit, the sentence below that limit is not at all, her punishment has the right uncontrolled and uncurtailed—Pheku, 4 P.L.J. 435, 20 Cr.L.J. 545 (per Jwala Prasad, J.). This view has been adopted in the present section.

The contrary view was taken in In re Uruma, 15 Cr.L.J. 371, 16 M.L.T. 33; Venkatkrishnaya, 40 Mad. 591; Pheku, 4 P.L.J. 435 (per Atkinson, J.); Husain Khan, 39 All. 293; Unar, 18 Cr.L.J. 72, 10 S.L.R. 156; In re Annasami, 7 L.W. 571; Jhagru, 24 Cr.L.J. 679 (All.); in these cases it was held that the language of sec. 413 was imperative and took away the right of appeal under such circumstances, and the accused against whom non-appealable sentences were passed could not acquire the right by reason of the fact that they were tried jointly with some other persons who received appealable sentences—Annasami, 7 L.W. 571, 19 Cr.L.J. 623. This view has not been accepted by the Legislature and is overruled by the present section.

Where a person has been ordered to be released on probation of good conduct under sec. 562 (which order is appealable under sec. 408) and other persons have been awarded non-appealable sentences, the latter persons also will be entitled to appeal, by operation of this section—Bahadur v. Ismail, 52 Cal. 463, 29 C.W.N. 151, 26 Cr.L.J. 455; Mayandi v. Pala, 36 Cr.L.J. 589, 154 I.C. 879, 1934 M.W.N. 1318, 41 M.L.W. 22, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 157, 1935 Cr.C. 179; Shankar Sukul v. The King, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 223, 41 Cr.L.J. 877, 190 I.C. 226, 1940 Rang.L.R. 381. But there is no provision for an appeal against an order under section 562, Criminal Procedure Code, made by a Presidency Magistrate. Therefore an accused, who is given a non-appealable sentence by a Presidency Magistrate who makes an order under sec. 562, Cr. P. C., against the co-accused in the same trial, has no right of appeal under this section—Kali Kumar Mitter v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 876, 170 I.C. 26, 10 R.C. 122, I.L.R. (1937) 1 Cal. 123, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 413. Where more persons than one are jointly convicted in one trial by the High Court criminal sessions, and leave to appeal is granted to one of them under sec. 449 (1) on the ground of his being an European British Subject, such leave should also be granted to the other accused (even if they are not European British Subjects) in view of the provisions of sec. 415A—Gallagher, 54 Cal. 52, 28 Cr.L.J. 481, 101 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 307.

416. [Repealed].

This section, which has been repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923 stood as follows :—

"416. Nothing in secs. 413 and 414 applies to appeals from sentences passed under Chapter XXXIII on European British subjects"

That is, it laid down that in respect of those sections which were non-appealable in the case of Indian subjects, an European British subject had a right of appeal. Thus distinction is now abolished and both European and Indian subjects are placed on the same footing, and given equal rights of appeal.

417. The Provincial Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original or appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court.

Appeal on behalf of Government in case of acquittal.

Changes:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by section 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Scope of the section:—No appeal lies under this section against an order of acquittal passed by a Special Magistrate appointed under the provisions of the Bengal Act XII of 1932—Lachmi Narayan, 34 Cr.L.J. 1070, 38 C.W.N. 107, 145 I.C. 773, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 776, 1933 Cr.C. 1327.

The terms of sec. 417 are unqualified by any restriction which may be derived from a consideration of the terms of sec. 414. Had the Legislature intended to limit the right of the Local Government to appeal against the order of the lower Appellate Court in a criminal case, it would have said so specifically—Nur Ahmad, 35 Cr.L.J. 1229 (1231), 151 I.C. 114, 7 R.A. 88, A.I.R. 1934 All. 842, 1934 A.L.J. 839, 1934 Cr.C. 1028.

If one of two accused is acquitted, and appeal is preferred by the Government against his acquittal, he must be deemed to be innocent of the charge made against him, and the Sessions Judge (in an appeal by the other accused against his conviction) ought not to pass any remarks impugning the correctness of the acquittal. If the Session Judge passes any such remarks, the High Court will order those remarks to be expunged from the record—Abdul Aziz, 25 Cr.L.J. 1245, 82 I.C. 173, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 129.

1116. Only Government can appeal:—The High Court has no authority to entertain an appeal under this section except upon an appeal by the Local Government—Okhoy v. Madhoo, 19 W.R. 55; A. David, 6 C.L.R. 245; Thandavan v. Periamma, 14 Mad. 363. The intention of the Legislature is that there should be no interference by the High Court with an order of acquittal, even though improper, except upon a formal appeal by the Local Government—Miyaji, 3 Bom. 150. The law, by limiting the right of appeal against judgments of acquittal to the Local Government, prevents personal vindictiveness from seeking to call in question judgments of acquittal by way of appeal, and evidently intends that such interference shall take place only in those cases where there has been a miscarriage of justice so grave as would induce the Local Government to move in the matter—Karuna, 22 Cal. 164.

Even the District Magistrate is not competent to refer the case to the High Court. See Note 1197 under sec. 438. Where the prisoners convicted by a Magistrate are acquitted on appeal by the Sessions Judge, it is not competent for the District Magistrate to transmit the proceeding to the High Court to have the Sessions Judge's order of acquittal set aside—A. David, 6 C.L.R. 245.

The power of appeal under this section should be sparingly used by the Government, but the discretion to exercise that power is not subject to the control of the High Court—Sakharam, 21 Bom.L.R. 1054; Moti, 26 Bom.L.R. 113, 25 Cr.L.J. 786; Arjan, 1917 P.R. 43, 19 Cr.L.J. 85, 43 I.C. 245; Mayandi, 34 Cr.L.J. 948, 145 I.C. 371, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 230, 1933 Cr.C. 288.

If a Judge or the Executive Government find that an obvious error in a decision has been committed, whether the question involved is of greater or lesser public importance, a case of injustice is established and one in which it is the duty of Government to make an appeal. A case, however petty it may appear to an administrator, is often a matter of great importance to the party affected by the decision and it is the duty of the Executive Government to view the matter from this angle when considering the question of an appeal under sec. 417, Cr. P. Code—Sham Lal v. Chaman Lal, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 406 (409), 41 P.L.R. 175, I.L.R. 1939 Lah. 116, 40 Cr.L.J. 942, 184 I.C. 358.

As to the High Court's power of revising an order of acquittal, either at the instance of the Local Government, or at the instance of a private complainant, see Notes 1204 and 1219 under sec. 439.

1117. Public Prosecutor:—Only the Public Prosecutor can file an appeal under this section. The Local Government cannot direct any other person to appeal. The Legal Remembrancer is a Public Prosecutor within the meaning of this section—Tularam, 23 C.W.N. 96, 46 Cal. 544. But the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal cannot be deemed to be the Public Prosecutor for the province of Behar, from the mere fact that he has been directed by a letter of the Government of Bihar to file an appeal in the Calcutta High Court under section 417 against an order of acquittal passed in a Behar case, when the letter did not specially appoint him as such, and especially when there is already a Public Prosecutor for the province of Behar. And the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal therefore cannot file the appeal—Gaya Prasad, 41 Cal. 425.

A private prosecutor can neither present an appeal under this section nor apply in revision—Thandavan v. Perianna, 14 Mad. 363; In re Poona Churn, 7 Cal. 447.

1118. High Court:—An appeal will lie under this section only to the High Court. Where a District Magistrate entertained an appeal from an order of acquittal passed by the subordinate Magistrate, it was held that the District Magistrate acted without jurisdiction—Rangasami, 7 Mad. 213; Sami Ayya, 26 Mad. 478. A District Magistrate is not justified in setting aside an order of acquittal on his own initiative without moving the Local Government to file an appeal under this section for setting aside the same order—Kallu, 35 Cr.L.J. 1151 (1152), 150 I.C. 852, 11 O.W.N. 818, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 327. So also, a Sessions Judge has no right to entertain an appeal against an order of acquittal—Baijanath v. Gouri Kanta, 20 Cal. 633; Baroda, 2 C.W.N. cclvi.

1119. Order of acquittal:—The withdrawal of a complaint by a complainant operates as an order of acquittal—Luchi, 19 W.R. 55. A judgment passed by the Sessions Judge, following the verdict of the jury acquitting the accused, is a judgment of acquittal for the purpose of appeal by the Local Government—Judoonath, 2 Cal. 273. The words 'appellate order of acquittal' mean and include all judgments of an Appellate Court by which a conviction is set aside—Gokool, 24 W.R. 41.

The 'acquittal' contemplated by this section need not be acquittal upon all the charges. Where in a case tried by jury, an accused charged with murder was acquitted of that charge but was convicted of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, this section would apply and an appeal by the Local Government would lie in respect of the charge of murder, even though the judgment of the Sessions Judge was not a judgment of absolute acquittal—Judoonath, 2 Cal. 273; Sitaram, 12 O.L.J. 421, 2 O.W.N. 550, 26 Cr.L.J. 1364.

The acquittal in this section means the particular acquittal complained of by the Government. Where the accused is charged under secs. 211 and 500, I. P. C., and acquitted of both the offences, but the Government preferred an appeal against the acquittal under sec. 500, I. P. Code, the High Court cannot question the propriety of the acquittal under sec. 211, I. P. Code—Karigowda, 19 Bom. 51.

An order of a Sessions Judge passed on appeal under sec. 406 discharging an accused who was ordered by a Magistrate under sec. 118 to furnish security for good behaviour, cannot be considered to be an original or an appellate order of acquittal within the meaning of sec. 417, so as to give the Local Government a right of appeal to the High Court—Samai Deen, 1 Luck. 231, 13 O.L.J. 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 626, 94 I.C. 402. See also Babu Ram, A.I.R. 1928 All 1.

Interlocutory orders:—This section allows an appeal only from an order of acquittal but not from any interlocutory order (e.g., an order refusing to amend the charges) which has been passed in a case which has ended in an acquittal. Any objection to such an interlocutory order cannot be included in the grounds of appeal against the order of acquittal. An order refusing to add to or amend the charges is not an "order of acquittal"; it is not even an order which can be said to form the basis of the order of acquittal or a necessary condition of its tenability. It cannot be said that the acquittal was due to the circumstance that the amendment was not allowed. But an order excluding as irrelevant a body of evidence tendered for the Crown, which had led to an acquittal as a logical and inevitable consequence, stands on a different footing. In such a case the Government, on its appeal against the acquittal, can also take objection to the order excluding the evidence—Vajiram, 16 Bom 414 (428), followed in Stewart, 21 S.L.R. 55, 27 Cr.L.J. 1217 (1228), 97 I.C. 1041, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 28 (per Rupchand, A.J.C.). In the latter case, Kincaid, J.C., is of opinion (dissenting from 16 Bom. 414) that although an order refusing to add or alter charges is not appealable under sec. 417, still if such order is followed by an order of acquittal, the Local Government may appeal.

1120. When appeal will lie:—An appeal against acquittal is a special weapon which the Local Government judiciously reserves for exceptional occasions and which is used after most anxious consideration and in cases which are themselves of great public importance or in which a principle is involved. It cannot be expected that the Government will utilise it freely in cases which, though of importance to individual subjects, are of little or no general interest—Siban Rai v. Bhagwat, 5 Pat. 25 (32), 92 I.C. 219, 6 P.L.T. 833, A.I.R. 1926 Pat 176, 27 Cr.L.J. 235. The High Court will not interfere merely because it might itself, sitting as a Court of original jurisdiction, have arrived at a different conclusion—Mangat, 1903 P.R. 11; Jawai, 19 Cr.L.J. 275, 44 I.C. 179, 1918 P.L.R. 70; Bishen Singh, 1914 P.L.R. 125, 15 Cr.L.J. 203 (207); Ram Karan, 26 P.L.R. 295, 7 Lah.L.J. 528, 26 Cr.L.J. 1141; Robinson, 16 All. 212; Gayadin, 4 All. 148; Ramudu, 1931 M.W.N. 729; U Ba U, 35 Cr.L.J. 855, 148 I.C. 1069, 1934 Cr.C. 267, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 44; Kunja Dusadh, 23 Cr.L.J. 410, 3 P.L.T. 396; Sheo Sewak Singh, 40 Cr.L.J. 772 (776), 183 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1939 All. 457; but it must be shown, before an appeal can be accepted, that the judgment of the Lower Court was so clearly wrong or perverse or unreasonable that its maintenance would amount to a miscarriage of justice—Ghulam Muhammad, 1897 P.R. 10; Ram Karan, supra; Gayadin, 4 All. 148; Bishen Singh, supra; Robinson, 16 All. 212; Kunja Dusadh, 23 Cr.L.J. 410, 3 P.L.T. 396; Sundardas, 26 Cr.L.J. 1028, 87 I.C. 96, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 295; Sardara Singh, 39 P.L.R. 776. In respect to pure questions of fact, the power of Government to appeal from an acquittal should be limited to those cases where through the incompetence, stupidity or perversity of a subordinate tribunal such unreasonable and distorted conclusions have been drawn from evidence as to produce a positive miscarriage of justice. Where the decision of the Subordinate Court is an honest and not an unreasonable one, of which the facts were susceptible, the High Court will not interfere—Robinson, 16 All. 212; Baldeo, 32 Cr.L.J. 1073, 133 I.C. 795, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 747, A.I.R. 1931 All. 712, 1931 Cr.C. 1048, 1931 A.L.J. 1002. The interference of the High Court should be limited to those instances in which the Lower Court has so obstinately blundered and gone wrong as to produce a result mischievous at once to the administration of justice and to the interests of the public—Gayadin, 4 All. 148. In a Punjab case, however, it has been held (dissenting from 4 All. 148) that sec. 417 appears to place the Local Government in no better or worse position in appealing from a conviction, and it would be legislating rather than interpreting the law, to weigh a Government appeal with the necessity of showing that the Court below 'obstinately blundered' or 'has so gone wrong as to produce a result mischievous to the administration of justice and to the interests of the public'—Uttam, 1885 P.R. 29. In some other Punjab cases it has been held (dissenting from the Allahabad ruling) that in order to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal on a question of fact, it is sufficient if the finding is clearly wrong on the evidence and unreasonable in the opinion of the Appellate Court, whether or not the unreasonableness amounts to perversity, stupidity or incompetence or whether the Court below can be said to have obstinately blundered in coming to it—Chatter, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781, 1904 P.L.R. 97; Bakhtawar, 28 P.L.R. 313, 28 Cr.L.J. 556 (561), 102 I.C. 492, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 196, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 549; Muzaffar, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 296, 1933 Cr.C. 396, 36 Cr.L.J. 626, 148 I.C. 36; Rai Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 871 (874), 1933 Cr.C. 1116, 146 I.C. 665, 35 Cr.L.J. 137, 34 P.L.R. 1010. In an appeal by the Government from acquittal, the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case, and until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt the accused must be presumed to be innocent; and secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court, the superior Court will not interfere until the Crown shows conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible—Ghulab Nabi, 6 Pat. 768, 29 Cr.L.J. 301 (305), 107 I.C. 835, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 146, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 385. Before the High Court will interfere with an acquittal, the culpability of the accused must be very clear and indubitable—Lachhman Das, 1918 P.W.R. 30, 19 Cr.L.J. 710.

In an appeal from an order of acquittal it ought to be remembered that there is always a presumption in favour of the innocence of the accused. This presumption very materially affects the question of onus, which except within a limited range of cases lies upon the Crown, and where the finding of the subordinate tribunal is in favour of the accused, the burden lies upon the prosecution to prove that the finding, reached by the Court below, was not justified by the evidence. Where the evidence against the accused is too scanty or insufficient to support the charge, the finding of the Court below cannot be displaced. Again, where the case is somewhere on the border line or very near it and it was possible for the Court, upon a balance of probabilities, to hold a person guilty or not guilty, the reversal of the order of acquittal is not only undesirable and inexpedient but is calculated to cause a miscarriage of justice. Where, however, the balance of evidence is distinctly against the accused or where material evidence has been misappreciated, overlooked or ignored, the High Court is bound to step in as much in the interest of the administration of justice as of the public generally—Ram Adhin, A.I.R. 1931 All. 439 (441), 1931 Cr.C. 711. In dealing with appeals from acquittal, the High Court in India, in view of well recognised principles of criminal jurisprudence, have always insisted that the Public Prosecutor must make out strong and cogent grounds to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal. One of the cardinal principles of criminal law is that an accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is satisfactorily established. If there is any room for reasonable doubt the accused must have the benefit of it. The trial Court which has the opportunity of seeing the witnesses is in a much better position to judge of their veracity than a Court of Appeal, and the Appellate Court should, therefore, be slow to differ from the value of their testimony unless there are good grounds for it—Bharat Singh, 33 Cr.L.J. 932, 139 I.C. 740, 9 O.W.N. 145, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 390; Paragi, 33 Cr.L.J. 929, 9 O.W.N. 321, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 391, 139 I.C. 756; Hub Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 858, 144 I.C. 942, 10 O.W.N. 323, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 254, 1933 Cr.C. 560. An appeal against an acquittal, which turns on the facts, would only succeed where the order of acquittal was clearly wrong and involved a miscarriage of justice—U. San Win, 33 Cr.L.J. 701, 138 I.C. 523, 10 Rang. 312, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 146, 1932 Cr.C. 709, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 170; Chattar Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 384, 142 I.C. 312,

A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 27, 1933 Cr.C. 327, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pesh. 10; Superintendent and Rem., Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Bhagirath Mahto, 35 Cr.L.J. 1367 (1372), 151 I.C. 662, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 610, 38 C.W.N. 854, 1934 Cr.C. 908, 59 C.L.J. 482; U Ba U, 35 Cr.L.J. 855, 148 I.C. 1096, 1934 Cr.C. 267, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 44; Natha Singh, 35 Cr.L.J. 349 (352), 147 I.C. 234, A.L.R. 1934 Lah. 192, 35 P.L.R. 75, 1934 Cr.C. 447, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 212; Kura, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 523, 36 Cr.L.J. 635, 155 I.C. 118, 35 P.L.R. 581, 1934 Cr.C. 809; Mt. Giji, 17 N.L.J. 189; Nga Po Yin, 35 Cr.L.J. 786, 148 I.C. 806, 1933 Cr.C. 1477, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 387. The decision of the trial Court is entitled to great weight and the High Court should interfere only when it is satisfied that the view of the trial Magistrate was wrong and that it was contrary to the weight of the evidence—Sheo Sewak Singh, 40 Cr.L.J. 772 (776), 183 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1939 All. 457.

If the Appellate Court, after bearing in mind that there is the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, still further strengthened by his acquittal, and that the trial Court was in a better position to judge of the credibility of the witnesses examined before it and, therefore, great weight has to be attached to its view, is nevertheless fully convinced that the conclusion of the trial Court was clearly wrong and its conclusion was contrary to the weight of the evidence, it would be fully justified in setting aside the order of acquittal. The mere fact that it is not possible to hold that lower Court has been incompetent, stupid or perverse or has come to an unreasonable and distorted conclusion or has obstinately blundered, would not be sufficient to prevent the Appellate Court from allowing an appeal against an acquittal if it were fully convinced that the Court below has been misled by the extremely clever nature of some false evidence supported by a forged document—Shew Janak, 35 Cr.L.J. 364 (373), 147 I.C. 238, 1933 A.L.J. 1573, A.I.R. 1934 All. 27, 56 All. 354, A.L.R. 1934 All. 89, 1934 Cr.C. 59 (F.B.); Sheo Sewak Singh, 40 Cr.L.J. 772 (773), 183 I.C. 405, A.I.R. 1939 All. 457, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 305. There is no indication in the Code of any limitation or restriction on the High Court in the exercise of its powers as an Appellate tribunal. No distinction is drawn as regards the powers of the High Court in dealing with an appeal, between an appeal from an order of acquittal and an appeal from a conviction. There is no foundation for the view that the High Court has no power or jurisdiction to reverse an order of acquittal on a matter of fact, except in cases in which the lower Court had "obstinately blundered," or has "through incompetence, stupidity or perversity" reached such "distorted conclusions as to produce a positive miscarriage of justice," or has in some other way so conducted or misconducted itself as to produce a glaring miscarriage of justice, or has been tricked by the defence so as to produce a similar result. Sections 417, 418 and 423 of the Code give to the High Court full power to review at large the evidence upon which the order of acquittal should be reversed. No limitation should be placed upon such power, unless it be found expressly stated in the Code. But in exercising the power conferred by the Code and before reaching its conclusion upon fact, the High Court should and will always give proper weight and consideration to such matters as (1) the views of the trial Judge as to the credibility of the witnesses; (2) the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, a presumption certainly not weakened by the fact that he has been acquitted at his trial; (3) the right of the accused to the benefit of any doubt; and (4) the slowness of an Appellate Court in disturbing a finding of fact arrived at by a Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses—Sheo Swarup, 36 Cr.L.J. 785, 151 I.C. 322, 55 All. 645, 39 C.W.N. 15, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 227, 60 C.L.J. 276, 67 M.L.J. 664, 15 P.L.T. 607, 1934 Cr.C. 1134, 36 Bom.L.R. 1185, 1934 M.W.N. 1017, A.L.R. 1934 P.C. 193, 4 A.W.R. 471, 1934 A.L.J. 905, 151 I.C. 322, 11 O.W.N. 1119, 40 M.L.W. 436. (H.C.) 305. In case of appeals at the instance of the Government under this section, as a matter of jurisdiction, the whole case is at large before the High Court both as to the facts and as to the law. But it is impossible to refuse to face the fact that there is a difference between the consideration of a case upon an appeal of this kind and its consideration when 'res integra' in the Court below. As the Privy Council has pointed out in the first and fourth of the matters it has expressly alluded to, the Appellate Court will be slow to disturb a finding of fact arrived at by a Judge who has had opportunities for assessing the value of evidence which the Appellate Court has not had. An Appellate Court pursuing this principle will be slow to substitute a view of the facts of its own for an opposite view of the facts held by the Judge below, where the latter are, upon the evidence, reasonable views, even though the Judges in the Appellate Court might have preferred a view of their own if the matter had been 'res integra'. Moreover, as has also been pointed out by the Judicial Committee, the presumption of innocence and the title of the accused to the benefit of any doubt are certainly not lessened by the fact that they have been acquitted at their trial—Aftab Mohammad Khan, 41 Cr.L.J. 647 (654), 188 I.C. 549, A.I.R. 1940 All. 291, 1940 A.L.J. 206. In an appeal against a conviction, it is only necessary to satisfy the Appellate Court that there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused to induce the Appellate Court to interfere but when there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the Appellate Court will not interfere with an acquittal. Nor will the Court in this or any other proceedings forget that the burden of proof lies upon the prosecution. It is for the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused; it is not for the accused to prove his innocence. The High Court will not interfere and reverse an order of acquittal merely because there is room for an honest difference of opinion, merely because upon the evidence the Judge might have come to the conclusion that the accused was guilty. The High Court will not interfere unless it is quite clear that the Judge or Magistrate whose judgment of acquittal is appealed against is wrong and it must, in every case, assuming that Government have appointed competent Judges and competent Magistrates, give careful consideration and due weight to the findings of lower Courts. It is not intended that this section should be used in every case where Government thinks there should be a conviction. It is not a power lightly to be used. It should be used only when there can be no reasonable doubt upon the record as to the guilt of the accused, bearing in mind that when considering whether there is or is not such a doubt, the Appellate Court will bear in mind those rules both of justice and prudence to which the Privy Council in the case of Sheo Swarup v. Emp., supra, refers—Gulab Shah Kadir Shah, 39 Cr.L.J. 504, 174 I.C. 835, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 80, 32 S.L.R. 689, 10 R.S. 269. It is an admitted principle of law that in an appeal by Government from acquittal the accused starts with the double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case, and until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt, the accused must be presumed to be innocent, and secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from Court, the superior Court will not interfere until the Crown shows conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible. Where two opinions can be formed on the same evidence and one of them has been formed by the trial Court, the authorities are consistent that the Appellate Court would not disagree, even if the balance of probabilities be in favour of the opposite view. On the other hand, if only one opinion could be formed on the material on the record and the trial Court has gone counter to it, it would be presumed that the Court has acted perversely in weighing the proof and its judgment will be liable to interference—Amir, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 129 (132), 1932 Cr.C. 1402, 36 Cr.L.J. 443, 153 I.C. 35. In a case in which the result depends upon the appreciation of the evidence by the trial Judge, the High Court would be slow to interfere with his order of acquittal. But where the only question for decision is the proper or legal inference to be drawn from the facts proved in the case and the trial Judge has erred in failing to draw the "clear, indubitable and irresistible" inference from the facts established according to him by the prosecution, the High Court will interfere and set aside the order of acquittal in appeal—Public Prosecutor v. Rowthula Kondalrao, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 96, 1938 M.W.N. 1121, 48 M.L.W. 754, 1938 M.Cr.C. 334, 48 M.L.W. 754, 180 I.C. 631, 40 Cr.L.J. 458. Appeals by the Crown against acquittals on question of fact and fact alone are not often encouraged by Appellate Courts—Supdt. & Rem., L. A., Bengal v. Jatindra Mohan Ray, 38 Cr.L.J. 638, 168 I.C. 738, 9 R.C. 874, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 156.

In appeal against an order of acquittal it is for the Crown to show that the judgment of acquittal is wrong—Sultan, 36 Cr.L.J. 1243 (1245), 157 I.C. 691, 8 R.L. 137, 37 P.L.R. 632. No condition is imposed on the High Court in an appeal against acquittal by a Judge trying the case with assessors. All that the High Court has to see is whether the offence charged is proved against each of the accused persons and for this purpose the High Court has to take the definition of "proved" given in the Indian Evidence Act—Shea Dayal, A.I.R. 1933 All. 535 (538), 55 All. 689, 147 I.C. 15, 1933 Cr.C. 870.

The High Court is loath to interfere and will only do so if it is proved without any doubt not only that the accused person is guilty, but that he has been acquitted on unreasonable grounds—Ghafoor, 32 Cr.L.J. 694 (697), 131 I.C. 436, 8 O.W.N. 101, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 116, 1931 Cr.C. 276, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 196; Ram Dat, 34 Cr.L.J. 538 (540), 143 I.C. 129, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 161, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 340, 1933 Cr.C. 775, 10 O.W.N. 585; Parmeshwar Din, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 372, 1933 Cr.C. 1049, 146 I.C. 431, 35 Cr.L.J. 66, 10 O.W.N. 742; Rama Murti v. Jai Indra, 34 Cr.L.J. 661, 143 I.C. 852, 10 O.W.N. 345, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 257, 1933 Cr.C. 562, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 215.

Where there has been acquittal by a unanimous verdict of the jury accepted by the Sessions Judge, the mere fact that there has been a misdirection to the jury will not justify the reversal of the verdict, unless the misdirection has in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Shyam Sundar, 26 C.W.N. 558. The High Court will not accept an appeal against an acquittal merely because the trial in the Court was illegal on account of misjoinder of charges; the Appellate Court will interfere only where it is satisfied that the order of acquittal is obviously erroneous or is one which should not be maintained owing to the trial Court having omitted to consider material evidence—Jagat Ram, 48 I.C. 167, 19 Cr.L.J. 987 (Lah.). Where no evidence whatsoever was produced against the accused owing to the neglect or omission of the Crown, and he was acquitted, the High Court would not accept an appeal against the acquittal and remand the case to the lower Court on the ground that there had not been a proper trial of the accused. Such a procedure would expose the accused to a further ordeal and expenses, and he ought not to be made to suffer because of the deficiencies of the prosecution in the conduct of the trial—Jaswant Rai, 5 Lah. 404. The High Court will not interfere unless the judgment of the Court below was wrong and perverse and without jurisdiction and based upon obvious errors in procedure; it will not interfere where the decision of the Magistrate even though wrong was based at the most on a doubtful weighing of facts and not on any irregularity or negligence or other matter going to the jurisdiction or the regularity of the trial—Amulya, 18 C.W.N. 666, 15 Cr.L.J. 160. Where the question involved in the case is not of any public interest, and the parties have a remedy in a Civil Court, no interference with the order of acquittal is necessary—Ganga Singh v. Ramzan, 26 Cr.L.J. 337, 84 I.C. 641, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 601. Where the evidence is all oral and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion without involving other considerations, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses must be treated as almost conclusive and the High Court should not interfere—Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Bishen Singh, 1914 P.L.R. 125, 15 Cr.L.J. 203 (207); Samand, 22 Cr.L.J. 172 (Lah.); Jauat, 44 I.C. 179, 19 Cr.L.J. 275, 19 P.R. 1918 (Cr.), 70 P.L.R. 1918. But where the evidence of a large number of eye-witnesses including persons injured in the attack is discarded mainly on the ground that they belong to the party opposed to the accused persons and where the testimony of the disinterested witnesses supporting them is not acted upon, a Court of Appeal is clearly entitled to decide whether it will or will not attach the same importance as the Court below to an argument of a general nature based on enmity between the parties—Bhaikhan, 32 Cr.L.J. 485 (490), 130 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 18, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 260, 31 P.L.R. 1026, 1931 Cr.C. 82. Before the High Court could interfere, it must be satisfied that the indications of mistake are obvious or the evidence is too strong to be rejected—Chatter Singh, supra; Bishen Singh, supra; Muhammad Shaffi, 1918 P.R. 25, 19 Cr.L.J. 723; Pallia, 20 Cr.L.J. 188, 49 I.C. 604, 1919 P.W.R. 12; Samand, 22 Cr.L.J. 172 (Lah.), 59 I.C. 924. An appeal will lie under this section when there is an error of law on the part of the Lower Court—Timmal, 21 All. 122; Kandaswami, 1933 M.W.N. 242; Supdt. & Rem. Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Ratsalle, 34 Cr.L.J. 631, 143 I.C. 774, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 145, 60 Cal. 44, 1933 Cr.C. 222, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 477. Where the Sessions Judge has overlooked the main and crucial circumstance which goes to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice and has acquitted the accused, the High Court will entertain the appeal from acquittal, and determine one way or the other the guilt of the accused—Gobardhan, 9 All. 528. The Crown coming in appeal against an order of acquittal ought to show that the view taken by the first Court as to the reliability of the approvers is erroneous—Wajid, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 500 (503). Where the Lower Court has considered the evidence from a wrong angle, and has come to an erroneous decision, an appeal will lie, and the High Court has jurisdiction to convict the accused—Sunderdas, 21 S.L.R. 111, 87 I.C. 916, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 295, 26 Cr.L.J. 1028 (1029); Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, 32 I.C. 137.

Where there are facts or circumstances disclosed by the evidence which may not unreasonably be accepted as grounds for the conclusion arrived at by the Sessions Judge, the High Court should treat the application by the Crown for the admission of an appeal from an acquittal on the same footing as the application of a convicted person against his conviction and sentence and should decline to interfere—Maung Aung Gyaw, 38 Cr.L.J. 295, 166 I.C. 645, 9 R.R. 278, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 7.

Where the question involved in the case is one of great importance in view of the scope of an Act under consideration and of the necessity, in the interests of the community, of the strict observance of its provisions, the High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal—The Supdt. & Remem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. The Bengal Salt Co., Ltd., 63 C.L.J. 188.

The High Court should be somewhat less reluctant to interfere with acquittals in appellate than in original cases—Chattar Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 384, 142 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 27, 1933 Cr.C. 327, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pesh. 10.

1121. Appeal from acquittal and appeal from conviction compared:—The Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and one from a conviction. Any rule of Court which differentiates their position would be tantamount to an usurpation of legislative function by the Court. If there is any difference in the respective positions of Government as appellant under sec. 417 and a convict appealing from the judgment convicting and sentencing him, it takes its rise from the principles of judicial construction and adjudication in criminal cases, with which the statute law has no concern. There are certain rules of adjudication and conduct which Judges in India invariably follow. One of these is that every man is to be presumed innocent until his guilt is established; another is that if there is a reasonable doubt, the accused must have the benefit of that doubt. An appellant from a judgment of conviction can always invoke the support of these principles, if he can show that the facts of his case come within their purview. If he makes out that the essential evidence against him is not sufficiently reliable, as the lower Court thought, or that all reasonable doubt as to his guilt is not removed thereby, he is bound to succeed on these principles. An appellant from a judgment of acquittal has, on the contrary, to work in the face of these principles and to satisfy the Court that the accused can derive no benefit from them on the facts of the case under appeal. His task is thus naturally more difficult than that of the convict appellant. In all questions of fact, the Court of first instance, which has all the witnesses before itself, has a great advantage over the Court of appeal, which deals with the evidence second hand; great regard is therefore paid to the opinion of the first Court on the oral evidence, and a Court of appeal is ordinarily reluctant to differ from its opinion, unless for cogent grounds. In an appeal from a conviction this regard is tempered somewhat by considerations of fairness to the accused in deciding the question of his guilt which the highest principles of criminal law enjoin on the Courts. But such considerations have no application in an appeal from an acquittal where naturally the Court is chary of disturbing a finding of the first Court rejecting the evidence against the accused as unreliable and declaring his innocence. The cumulative effect of these considerations creates a considerable difference between an appeal from a conviction and one from an order of acquittal as regards the decision or their subject matter, though both appeals are placed on the same footing in the statute law of procedure—Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1904 P.L.R. 97, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Harnaman, 1909 P.R. 15, 4 I.C. 864, 11 Cr.L.J. 66. According to a large volume of case-law on the subject appeals against acquittal are to be judged by a standard different from that applicable to those against conviction—Muzaffar, 32 Cr.L.J. 1079 (1081), 133 I.C. 865, 32 P.L.R. 405, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 465, 1931 Cr.C. 689, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 833. Though the Code makes no distinction between a Government appeal from an acquittal and a convict's appeal against his conviction, the High Courts have always insisted that the Public Prosecutor must make out a strong and cogent ground to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal. The initial presumption of innocence is strengthened by the verdict of acquittal from the trial Court, and the Court of Appeal will interfere only if it is proved without any doubt not only that the accused person is guilty but that he has been acquitted on unreasonable grounds—Maqbool Ahmad, 7 Luck. 511, 1932 Cr.C. 872, 9 O.W.N. 3, 139 I.C. 751, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 317, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 383, 33 Cr.L.J. 920. Under sound principles of criminal jurisprudence, the indication of error in the judgment of acquittal ought to be clearer and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction—K-E v. Chatter Singh, supra; Bakhtawar, 28 P.L.R. 313, 102 I.C. 492, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 196, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 549, 28 Cr.L.J. 556 (561); Turezi, 1920 P.L.R. 125, 21 Cr.L.J. 349, 55 I.C. 685. Apart from these considerations, there is no distinction as to the mode of procedure between the two classes of appeals. Both appeals are governed by the same rules and subject to the same limitations. There is nothing in the Code which indicates that an appeal from an acquittal allowed in the interest of public safety, peace and order, should receive any different treatment from any other appeal or class of appeals—Harnaman, supra; Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Prag Dat, 20 All. 459; Uttam, 1885 P.R. 29; Lakshmi Narasimham, 2 Weir 462; Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Ram Adhin, A.I.R. 1931 All. 439 (441), 1931 Cr.C. 711; Sheo Swarup, 39 C.W.N. 15, 60 C.L.J. 276, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 227, 61 M.L.J. 664, 15 P.L.T. 607, 1934 Cr.C. 1134, 36 Bom.L.R. 1185, 1934 M.W.N. 1017, A.L.R. 1934 P.C. 193, 4 A.W.R. 471, 1934 A.L.J. 905, 151 I.C. 322, 11 O.W.N. 1119, 40 M.L.W. 436. In both kinds of appeals, the appellant has to satisfy the Court that there does exist some good and strong ground apparent upon the record for interfering with the deliberate determination by the Judge who has had all the evidence before him and has arrived at that determination with that great advantage in his favour—Prag Dat, 20 All. 459. So also, with regard to the considerations of evidence, an appeal from an acquittal does not stand on a different footing from an appeal from a conviction. No distinction is drawn in the Code between the two kinds of appeal, as regards dealing with the evidence—Matukdhari, 20 C.W.N. 128, 17 Cr.L.J. 9; Sakharam, 21 Bom.L.R. 1054, 21 Cr.L.J. 17, 54 I.C. 161. If the High Court thinks that the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence and should have convicted, the High Court can convict the accused, in the same way as it can acquit an accused in an appeal against a conviction, if it thinks that the lower Court ought to have acquitted. In this respect the Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction—Moti, 26 Bom.L.R. 113, 25 Cr.L.J. 786; Sakharam, supra; Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, A.I.R. 1915 Sind 8, 32 I.C. 137. This no doubt is to some extent correct but as has been pointed argument of a general nature based on enmity between the parties—Bhaikhan, 32 Cr.L.J. 485 (490), 130 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 18, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 260, 31 P.L.R. 1026, 1931 Cr.C. 82. Before the High Court could interfere, it must be satisfied that the indications of mistake are obvious or the evidence is too strong to be rejected—Chatter Singh, supra; Bishen Singh, supra; Muhammad Shaffi, 1918 P.R. 25, 19 Cr.L.J. 723; Pallia, 20 Cr.L.J. 188, 49 I.C. 604, 1919 P.W.R. 12; Samand, 22 Cr.L.J. 172 (Lah.), 59 I.C. 924. An appeal will lie under this section when there is an error of law on the part of the Lower Court—Timmal, 21 All. 122; Kandaswami, 1933 M.W.N. 242; Supdt. & Rem. Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Raisalle, 34 Cr.L.J. 631, 143 I.C. 774, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 145, 60 Cal. 44, 1933 Cr.C. 222, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 477. Where the Sessions Judge has overlooked the main and crucial circumstance which goes to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice and has acquitted the accused, the High Court will entertain the appeal from acquittal, and determine one way or the other the guilt of the accused—Gobardhan, 9 All. 528. The Crown coming in appeal against an order of acquittal ought to show that the view taken by the first Court as to the reliability of the approvers is erroneous—Wajid, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 500 (503). Where the Lower Court has considered the evidence from a wrong angle, and has come to an erroneous decision, an appeal will lie, and the High Court has jurisdiction to convict the accused—Sunderdas, 21 S.L.R. 111, 87 I.C. 916, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 295, 26 Cr.L.J. 1028 (1029); Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, 32 I.C. 137.

Where there are facts or circumstances disclosed by the evidence which may not unreasonably be accepted as grounds for the conclusion arrived at by the Sessions Judge, the High Court should treat the application by the Crown for the admission of an appeal from an acquittal on the same footing as the application of a convicted person against his conviction and sentence and should decline to interfere—Maung Aung Gyaw, 38 Cr.L.J. 295, 166 I.C. 645, 9 R.R. 278, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 7.

Where the question involved in the case is one of great importance in view of the scope of an Act under consideration and of the necessity, in the interests of the community, of the strict observance of its provisions, the High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal—The Supdt. & Remem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. The Bengal Salt Co., Ltd., 63 C.L.J. 188.

The High Court should be somewhat less reluctant to interfere with acquittals in appellate than in original cases—Chaitar Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 384, 142 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 27, 1933 Cr.C. 327, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pesh. 10.

In all questions of fact, the Court of first instance, which has all the witnesses before itself, has a great advantage over the Court of appeal, which deals with the evidence second hand; great regard is therefore paid to the opinion of the first Court on the oral evidence, and a Court of appeal is ordinarily reluctant to differ from its opinion, unless for cogent grounds. In an appeal from a conviction this regard is tempered somewhat by considerations of fairness to the accused in deciding the question of his guilt which the highest principles of criminal law enjoin on the Courts. But such considerations have no application in an appeal from an acquittal where naturally the Court is chary of disturbing a finding of the first Court rejecting the evidence against the accused as unreliable and declaring his innocence. The cumulative effect of these considerations creates a considerable difference between an appeal from a conviction and one from an order of acquittal as regards the decision or their subject matter, though both appeals are placed on the same footing in the statute law of procedure—Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1904 P.L.R. 97, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Harnaman, 1909 P.R. 15, 4 I.C. 864, 11 Cr.L.J. 66. According to a large volume of case-law on the subject appeals against acquittal are to be judged by a standard different from that applicable to those against conviction—Muzaffar, 32 Cr.L.J. 1079 (1081), 133 I.C. 865, 32 P.L.R. 405, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 465, 1931 Cr.C. 689, Ind. Rul 1931 Lah. 833. Though the Code makes no distinction between a Government appeal from an acquittal and a convict's appeal against his conviction, the High Courts have always insisted that the Public Prosecutor must make out a strong and cogent ground to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal. The initial presumption of innocence is strengthened by the verdict of acquittal from the trial Court, and the Court of Appeal will interfere only if it is proved without any doubt not only that the accused person is guilty but that he has been acquitted on unreasonable grounds—Maqbool Ahmad, 7 Luck. 511, 1932 Cr.C. 872, 9 O.W.N. 3, 139 I.C. 751, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 317, Ind. Rul 1932 Oudh 383, 33 Cr.L.J. 920. Under sound principles of criminal jurisprudence, the indication of error in the judgment of acquittal ought to be clearer and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction—K-E v. Chatter Singh, supra; Bakhtawar, 28 P.L.R. 313, 102 I.C. 492, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 196, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 549, 28 Cr.L.J. 556 (561); Turezi, 1920 P.L.R. 125, 21 Cr.L.J. 349, 55 I.C. 685. Apart from these considerations, there is no distinction as to the mode of procedure between the two classes of appeals. Both appeals are governed by the same rules and subject to the same limitations. There is nothing in the Code which indicates that an appeal from an acquittal allowed in the interest of public safety, peace and order, should receive any different treatment from any other appeal or class of appeals—Harnaman, supra; Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Prag Dat, 20 All. 459; Uttam, 1885 P.R. 29; Lakshmi Narasimham, 2 Weir 462; Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Ram Adhin, A.I.R. 1931 All. 439 (441), 1931 Cr.C. 711; Sheo Swarup, 39 C.W.N. 15, 60 C.L.J. 276, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 227, 61 M.L.J. 664, 15 P.L.T. 607, 1934 Cr.C. 1134, 36 Bom.L.R. 1185, 1934 M.W.N. 1017, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 193, 4 A.W.R. 471, 1934 A.L.J. 905, 151 I.C. 322, 11 O.W.N. 1119, 40 M.L.W. 436. In both kinds of appeals, the appellant has to satisfy the Court that there does exist some good and strong ground apparent upon the record for interfering with the deliberate determination by the Judge who has had all the evidence before him and has arrived at that determination with that great advantage in his favour—Prag Dat, 20 All. 459. So also, with regard to the considerations of evidence, an appeal from an acquittal does not stand on a different footing from an appeal from a conviction. No distinction is drawn in the Code between the two kinds of appeal, as regards dealing with the evidence—Matukdhari, 20 C.W.N. 128, 17 Cr.L.J. 9; Sakharam, 21 Bom.L.R. 1054, 21 Cr.L.J. 17, 54 I.C. 161. If the High Court thinks that the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence and should have convicted, the High Court can convict the accused, in the same way as it can acquit an accused in an appeal against a conviction, if it thinks that the lower Court ought to have acquitted. In this respect the Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction—Moti, 26 Bom.L.R. 113, 25 Cr.L.J. 786; Sakharam, supra; Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, A.I.R. 1915 Sind 8, 32 I.C. 137. This no doubt is to some extent correct but as has been pointed argument of a general nature based on enmity between the parties—Bhaikhan, 32 Cr.L.J. 485 (490), 130 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 18, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 260, 31 P.L.R. 1026, 1931 Cr.C. 82. Before the High Court could interfere, it must be satisfied that the indications of mistake are obvious or the evidence is too strong to be rejected—Chatter Singh, supra; Bishen Singh, supra; Muhammad Shaffi, 1918 P.R. 25, 19 Cr.L.J. 723; Pallia, 20 Cr.L.J. 188, 49 I.C. 604, 1919 P.W.R. 12; Samand, 22 Cr.L.J. 172 (Lah.), 59 I.C. 924. An appeal will lie under this section when there is an error of law on the part of the Lower Court—Timmal, 21 All. 122; Kandaswami, 1933 M.W.N. 242; Supdt. & Rem. Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Ratsalle, 34 Cr.L.J. 631, 143 I.C. 774, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 145, 60 Cal. 44, 1933 Cr.C. 222, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 477. Where the Sessions Judge has overlooked the main and crucial circumstance which goes to corroborate the evidence of an accomplice and has acquitted the accused, the High Court will entertain the appeal from acquittal, and determine one way or the other the guilt of the accused—Gobardhan, 9 All 528. The Crown coming in appeal against an order of acquittal ought to show that the view taken by the first Court as to the reliability of the approvers is erroneous—Wajid, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 500 (503). Where the Lower Court has considered the evidence from a wrong angle, and has come to an erroneous decision, an appeal will lie, and the High Court has jurisdiction to convict the accused—Sunderdas, 21 S.L.R. 111, 87 I.C. 916, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 295, 26 Cr.L.J. 1028 (1029); Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, 32 I.C. 137.

Where there are facts or circumstances disclosed by the evidence which may not unreasonably be accepted as grounds for the conclusion arrived at by the Sessions Judge, the High Court should treat the application by the Crown for the admission of an appeal from an acquittal on the same footing as the application of a convicted person against his conviction and sentence and should decline to interfere—Maung Aung Gyaw, 38 Cr.L.J. 295, 166 I.C. 645, 9 R.R. 278, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 7.

Where the question involved in the case is one of great importance in view of the scope of an Act under consideration and of the necessity, in the interests of the community, of the strict observance of its provisions, the High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal—The Supdt. & Remem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. The Bengal Salt Co., Ltd., 63 C.L.J. 188.

The High Court should be somewhat less reluctant to interfere with acquittals in appellate than in original cases—Chattar Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 384, 142 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 27, 1933 Cr.C. 327, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pesh. 10.

1121. Appeal from acquittal and appeal from conviction compared:—The Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and one from a conviction. Any rule of Court which differentiates their position would be tantamount to an usurpation of legislative function by the Court. If there is any difference in the respective positions of Government as appellant under sec. 417 and a convict appealing from the judgment convicting and sentencing him, it takes its rise from the principles of judicial construction and adjudication in criminal cases, with which the statute law has no concern. There are certain rules of adjudication and conduct which Judges in India invariably follow. One of these is that every man is to be presumed innocent until his guilt is established; another is that if there is a reasonable doubt, the accused must have the benefit of that doubt. An appellant from a judgment of conviction can always invoke the support of these principles, if he can show that the facts of his case come within their purview. If he makes out that the essential evidence against him is not sufficiently reliable, as the lower Court thought, or that all reasonable doubt as to his guilt is not removed thereby, he is bound to succeed on these principles. An appellant from a judgment of acquittal has, on the contrary, to work in the face of these principles and to satisfy the Court that the accused can derive no benefit from them on the facts of the case under appeal. His task is thus naturally more difficult than that of the convict appellant. In all questions of fact, the Court of first instance, which has all the witnesses before itself, has a great advantage over the Court of appeal, which deals with the evidence second hand; great regard is therefore paid to the opinion of the first Court on the oral evidence, and a Court of appeal is ordinarily reluctant to differ from its opinion, unless for cogent grounds. In an appeal from a conviction this regard is tempered somewhat by considerations of fairness to the accused in deciding the question of his guilt which the highest principles of criminal law enjoin on the Courts. But such considerations have no application in an appeal from an acquittal where naturally the Court is chary of disturbing a finding of the first Court rejecting the evidence against the accused as unreliable and declaring his innocence. The cumulative effect of these considerations creates a considerable difference between an appeal from a conviction and one from an order of acquittal as regards the decision or their subject matter, though both appeals are placed on the same footing in the statute law of procedure—Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1904 P.L.R. 97, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Harnaman, 1909 P.R. 15, 4 I.C. 864, 11 Cr.L.J. 66. According to a large volume of case-law on the subject appeals against acquittals are to be judged by a standard different from that applicable to those against conviction—Muzaffar, 32 Cr.L.J. 1079 (1081), 133 I.C. 865, 32 P.L.R. 405, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 465, 1931 Cr.C. 689, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 833. Though the Code makes no distinction between a Government appeal from an acquittal and a convict's appeal against his conviction, the High Courts have always insisted that the Public Prosecutor must make out a strong and cogent ground to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal. The initial presumption of innocence is strengthened by the verdict of acquittal from the trial Court, and the Court of Appeal will interfere only if it is proved without any doubt not only that the accused person is guilty but that he has been acquitted on unreasonable grounds—Maqbool Ahmad, 7 Luck. 511, 1932 Cr.C. 872, 9 O.W.N. 3, 139 I.C. 751, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 317, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 383, 33 Cr.L.J. 920. Under sound principles of criminal jurisprudence, the indication of error in the judgment of acquittal ought to be clearer and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction—K-E v. Chatter Singh, supra; Bakhtawar, 28 P.L.R. 313, 102 I.C. 492, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 196, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 549, 28 Cr.L.J. 556 (561); Turezi, 1920 P.L.R. 125, 21 Cr.L.J. 349, 55 I.C. 685. Apart from these considerations, there is no distinction as to the mode of procedure between the two classes of appeals. Both appeals are governed by the same rules and subject to the same limitations. There is nothing in the Code which indicates that an appeal from an acquittal allowed in the interest of public safety, peace and order, should receive any different treatment from any other appeal or class of appeals—Harnaman, supra; Bibhuti, 17 Cal. 485; Prag Dat, 20 All. 459; Uttam, 1885 P.R. 29; Lakshmi Narasimham, 2 Weir 462; Chatter Singh, 1904 P.R. 7, 1 Cr.L.J. 781; Ram Adhin, A.I.R. 1931 All. 439 (441), 1931 Cr.C. 711; Sheo Swarup, 39 C.W.N. 15, 60 C.L.J. 276, A.I.R. 1934 P.C. 227, 61 M.L.J. 664, 15 P.L.T. 607, 1934 Cr.C. 1134, 36 Bom.L.R. 1185, 1934 M.W.N. 1017, A.L.R. 1934 P.C. 193, 4 A.W.R. 471, 1934 A.L.J. 905, 151 I.C. 322, 11 O.W.N. 1119, 40 M.L.W. 436. In both kinds of appeals, the appellant has to satisfy the Court that there does exist some good and strong ground apparent upon the record for interfering with the deliberate determination by the Judge who has had all the evidence before him and has arrived at that determination with that great advantage in his favour—Prag Dat, 20 All. 459. So also, with regard to the considerations of evidence, an appeal from an acquittal does not stand on a different footing from an appeal from a conviction. No distinction is drawn in the Code between the two kinds of appeal, as regards dealing with the evidence—Matukdhari, 20 C.W.N. 128, 17 Cr.L.J. 9; Sakharam, 21 Bom.L.R. 1054, 21 Cr.L.J. 17, 54 I.C. 161. If the High Court thinks that the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence and should have convicted, the High Court can convict the accused, in the same way as it can acquit an accused in an appeal against a conviction, if it thinks that the lower Court ought to have acquitted. In this respect the Code makes no distinction between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction—Moti, 26 Bom.L.R. 113, 25 Cr.L.J. 786; Sakharam, supra; Kadir Bux, 9 S.L.R. 17, 16 Cr.L.J. 604, A.I.R. 1915 Sind 8, 32 I.C. 137. This no doubt is to some extent correct but as has been pointed out in various rulings of the High Courts yet there is a real distinction, apart from the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Every man is to be presumed innocent until his guilt is established; if there is a reasonable doubt, the accused must have the benefit of that doubt. An appellant from a judgment of conviction can always invoke the support of these principles. If he can show that the essential evidence against him is not sufficiently reliable, as the lower Court thought or that all reasonable doubt as to his guilt is not removed thereby, he is bound to succeed on these principles. An appellant from a judgment of acquittal has, on the contrary, to work in the face of these principles and to satisfy the Court that the accused can derive no benefit from them on the facts of the case under appeal. His task is thus naturally more difficult than that of the convict appellant. The effect of this and other considerations is to make in fact a considerable difference between an appeal from a conviction and one from an order of acquittal though both appeals are placed on the same footing in the statute law of procedure—Ghulamali Bahawal, 39 Cr.L.J. 462 (465), 174 I.C. 694, 32 S.L.R. 694, 10 R.S. 261, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 67. An appeal by Government against acquittal must be considered on its merit just as any other appeal always must be. The onus is on the appellant, and the onus is all the heavier if the judgment appealed from is one which approaches the consideration of the question from a correct point of view and gives the accused the benefit of a reasonable doubt which exists in the mind of the Judge—Autar, 47 All. 306, 23 A.L.J. 25, 26 Cr.L.J. 676.

In an appeal from an acquittal, as in an appeal from a conviction, the appellant is entitled to go into facts and ask the appellate Court to take a view of facts different from that taken by the trial Court. But the accused in an appeal from acquittal retains his right of being presumed to be innocent until the charge is fully brought home to him; he has the right of being given the benefit of any reasonable doubt as to his guilt; he has also the benefit of the opinion of the trial Court upon the credibility of the witnesses whom that Court had the advantage of seeing face to face; and he has the right to ask the Appellate Court that the acquittal should not be set aside unless the trial Court has taken a perverse view of the evidence and has arrived at an unnatural and distorted conclusion—Deboo Singh, 8 Pat. 496, 1929 Cr.C. 243 (248), 120 I.C. 634, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 491, 10 P.L.T. 838, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 58; Maung Tun Hyan, 32 Cr.L.J. 929, 132 I.C. 547, 8 Rang. 671, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 86, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 179, 1931 Cr.C. 374; Chaturbhuj Naram, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 350 (353), 15 Pat. 108, 17 P.L.T. 302.

Examination of rulings shows that in the High Courts at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad and Patna, the weight of authority is for the principle that there is no difference between the treatment by a High Court of an appeal against a verdict of acquittal and that of an appeal from a conviction and that in the Lahore High Court the weight of authority is also on the same side, the inclination being, perhaps, in the interests of the person acquitted to attach more value and give greater prominence than other High Courts to the judgment of the lower Court—Bhai Khan, 32 Cr.L.J. 485 (490), 130 I.C. 324, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 18, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 260, 31 P.L.R. 1026, 1931 Cr.C. 82, where all previous rulings on the point were discussed. Although an appeal from an acquittal stands on the same footing as one from a conviction sound principles of criminal jurisprudence require that the indications of error in a judgment of acquittal ought to be more clear or more palpable in order to justify its being set aside—Ramzan, 32 Cr.L.J. 1130 (1131), 134 I.C. 112, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 880, 32 P.L.R. 877, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 12; Rai Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 871 (874), 1933 Cr.C. 1116, 146 I.C. 665, 35 Cr.L.J. 137, 34 P.L.R. 1010, following Harnama, 15 P.R. 1909 (Cr.), 11 Cr.L.J. 66, 4 I.C. 864; Sher Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 598, 143 I.C. 499, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 388, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 361, 1933 Cr.C. 632, 34 P.L.R. 704. Although there is no difference in law between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction, it is not the practice to interfere with an order of acquittal unless the indications of error in the judgment are clear and the evidence too strong to be rejected—Muhammad Khan, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 710 (715), 35 P.L.R. 641, 1934 Cr.C. 1020, 36 Cr.L.J. 419, 153 I.C. 889.

In a criminal appeal by the Government to the High Court, the arrest of the accused may be ordered pending appeal—Gobin, 1 Cal 281; Mungu, 2 All. 340. In capital cases, in which the Government appeals under this section, it is undesirable that the prisoner's fate should be discussed while he remains at large; in such cases, the Government should apply for the arrest of the accused under sec. 427—Gobardhan, 9 All 528. Where, on an appeal under this section, the accused is arrested and convicted, and sentence is passed on him, the sentence will run from the date of the committal of the accused to jail and not from the date of the arrest or of the sentence—Mahuddi, 6 C.L.R. 349.

Scope of appeal:—It is clear that in an appeal against acquittal the accused is entitled to ask the Court to consider all the evidence before it and all the possible grounds which may be raised against the conviction—Public Prosecutor v. Panchaksharam, 39 Cr.L.J. 871, 177 I.C. 432, A.I.R. 1938 Mad 723, 1938 M.W.N. 605, 48 M.L.W. 142, 11 R.M. 323, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 225. It would not be proper for the High Court to consider the appeal on grounds not contained in the objections urged on behalf of Government—Queen-Empress v. Karigowda, 19 Bom. 51.

It is not proper in an appeal against an acquittal for Government to attempt to snatch a conviction by making out another case against the accused. An appeal against an acquittal is a serious matter. The liberty of a person once acquitted is again to be put in jeopardy, and the High Court is justified in asking that cases, in which an appeal against an acquittal is to be made, should be carefully considered in all their aspects before the appeal is filed, and that Government should be bound in argument and should consider themselves bound in argument to the grounds raised in the memorandum of appeal—Pursumal Germal, 39 Cr.L.J. 630 (635), 175 I.C. 620, 10 R.S. 298, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 108.

Time of filing appeal:—An appeal under sec. 417, Cr. P. C., for conviction for a major offence can be preferred, although an appeal preferred by the accused against his conviction for a minor offence has already been heard and decided by the High Court. Appeals should, however, be preferred with all reasonable expedition possible. Where in the opinion of the Standing Counsel it is likely that Government will appeal against the acquittal, the appeal against the conviction should be postponed in order that both appeals may be heard together: but there should be no postponement if there is only a possibility that the Local Government may desire to appeal—Mohammadi Gul, 33 Cr.L.J. 849, 140 I.C. 49, A.I.R. 1932 Nag 121, 1932 Cr.C. 672, 28 N.L.R. 233, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 118 (F.B.), dissenting from Modkya, 139 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 73, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 85, 33 Cr.L.J. 728, 1932 Cr.C. 346.

Limitation:—An appeal under this section must be presented within six months from the date of the order appealed against (see Art. 157 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908). See Bhagirath Mahto's case cited in Note 1227A.

It is true that a period of six months is the limitation allowed by law for appeals from acquittals, but it is earnestly recommended to the attention of Government the policy of and necessity for, such appeals, when made, being preferred with all reasonable expedition possible, not only in the public interest, but in justice to the persons whose acquittal it is sought to reverse—U San Win, 33 Cr.L.J. 701, 138 I.C. 523, 10 Rang. 312, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 146, 1932 Cr.C. 709, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 170, following Yakub Khan, 5 All. 253 (255); Maung Aung Gyaw, 38 Cr.L.J. 295, 9 R.R. 278, 166 I.C. 645, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 7. See also Nga Tok Hla, 39 Cr.L.J. 490, 174 I.C. 839, 10 R.R. 437, A.I.R. 1938 Rang 109.

418. (1) An appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law, except where the trial was by jury, in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only.

Appeal on what matters admissible.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) or in section 423, sub-section (2), when, in case of a trial by jury any person is sentenced to death, any other person convicted in the same trial with the person so sentenced may appeal on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law.

Explanation.—The alleged severity of a sentence shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a matter of law.

Change:—Sub-section (2) has been added by sec. 115 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reason is stated below.

1122. Scope of section:—This section is applicable alike both to appeals by Government (sec. 417) against an order of acquittal and to appeals by convicted persons against a conviction and sentence—Gubbi, 17 C.P.L.R. 75 (92). Therefore, where in a case tried by jury, the Local Government appealed to the High Court under sec. 417 against an order of acquittal, and the grounds of appeal were all questions of fact, the High Court rejected the application because under this section, an appeal in the jury-case could lie only on a question of law—Parmeshur, 10 Cal 1029; Theri, 36 Cr.L.J. 1467 (1469), 158 I.C. 913, 1935 O.W.N. 1153, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 108, 1935 O.L.R. 684.

A Judicial Commissioner sitting on the original side and holding a Sessions trial is to be deemed a Sessions Judge and not a Judge of the High Court, and an appeal from his decision lies under this section to a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court—Khudabux, 19 S.L.R. 309, 85 I.C. 706, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 249, 26 Cr.L.J. 562 (F.B.).

An appeal from the verdict and judgment in a trial held at the Sessions of the High Court does not lie under the provisions of this section—Scott, 36 Cr.L.J. 595, 154 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 67, 13 Rang. 104, 1935 Cr.C. 167 (F.B.), overruling Zagariya, 89 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 239, 26 Cr.L.J. 1371, 3 Rang. 220.

1123. Trial by jury:—Where the trial was by jury, the appeal would lie on a matter of law only. By restricting appeals from cases triable by jury to matters of law only, this section gives finality to the verdict of the jury, where there has existed no error of law nor misdirection, and where the Judge has concurred with the majority—Balappa, Ratanlal 730. It is not for the High Court to adjudicate on the merits of the verdict of the jury. Unless the High Court finds a misdirection or a material non-direction which has vitiated the trial, the jury's verdict ought not to be disturbed—Ebadi Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 674 (676), 176 I.C. 104, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 460, 11 R.C. 36.

The words 'where the trial was by jury' mean 'where the trial was in fact held by jury' and not 'where the trial ought to have been held by jury.' And, therefore, where the accused was tried by jury in a case which ought to have been tried with the aid of assessors, no appeal would lie except on a question of law; the trial would be treated as one by a jury—Parbhushanker, 25 Bom. 680, 3 Bom.L.R. 278 (F.B.); Jeyram, 23 Bom. 696; Surja Kurmi, 25 Cal. 555; Ramanna, 1931 M.W.N. 129; Dakhani, 34 Cr.L.J. 441, 142 I.C. 800, 1932 A.L.J. 1103, A.I.R. 1933 All. 128, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 155, 1933 Cr.C. 283, 55 All. 68; Mavsang Bechar, 33 Bom. 423, 2 I.C. 480, 11 Bom.L.R. 350. But in Mohim Chunder, 3 Cal. 765; Goshain Luchman, 21 W.R. 30; Barabhai, Ratanlal 951; Narkoo, 18 W.R. 59, it was held that in such a case the trial would be deemed as one held with the aid of assessors, treating the verdict of the jury as the opinion of the assessors, and the prisoner would not lose his right of appeal on the facts. The view expressed in Mohim Chunder, supra, was not followed by the Calcutta High Court in Ekabbar Mondal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 756, 1 L.R. (1937) 2 Cal. 315, 172 I.C. 891, 39 Cr.L.J. 182, where Henderson, J., observed: "The wording of sec. 418 is perfectly plain. It does not say that an appeal is limited to a question of law in a case triable by jury. The words used are 'except where the trial was by jury'. That to my mind is perfectly conclusive. I therefore hold that there is no appeal on facts on the conspiracy charge." In Goloke Behari Takal v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 161, 173 I.C. 65, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 51, 66 C.L.J. 225, 42 C.W.N. 129, 10 R.C. 441, 1 L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290, Macnair,

J., agreed with the view expressed in the Full Bench decision in Parbhushanker, supra, but Biswas, J., after reviewing all the rulings mentioned above, interpreted the words "where the trial was by jury" in sec. 418 (1), Cr. P. C., as meaning "where the trial was lawfully by jury" and held that the accused had not lost the right of appeal on facts in such a case. In Pattikadan Ummaru, 26 Mad 243, 2 Weir 463, where a person was charged with an offence triable by jury, and the jury acquitted him of that charge but found him guilty of an offence triable with the aid of assessors, Benson, J., held that the verdict was to be treated as an opinion of assessors, and that an appeal lay on questions of facts; but Bhashyam Aiyanger, J., held that the jury had authority under sec. 238, in trying an offence triable by jury, to find as an incident to the trial that certain facts were proved in the trial which constituted a minor offence, and to return a verdict of guilty on such offence, though such offence might not be triable by a jury; and, therefore, in this case the verdict was to be treated as a verdict on a trial by jury and an appeal would lie only on a point of law. The latter view was followed in Narayan, 31 Cr.L.J. 557, 123 I.C. 477, A.I.R. 1929 Nag 295.

In a case where a person is tried by a jury, and there is also another charge which is tried by the Judge with the same jury as assessors, an appeal will lie on a question of fact—Karuppa Goundan, 18 Cr.L.J. 346 (Mad).

1124. Matter of law:—An appeal under this section from cases tried by jury lie on matters of law only, and the Appellate Court, cannot go into the facts of the case. If it were to do so, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury who had the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appellate Court can arrive at a decision only on a perusal of the paper-evidence—Waladar, 21 Cal 955; Ikrumuddin 39 Ail 348; Ramesh Chandra, 46 Cal 895, 23 C.W.N. 661. It is not open to the High Court to go behind the findings of fact arrived at by the jurors—Shubrati 35 Cr.L.J. 566, 147 I.C. 1176, 11 O.W.N. 202, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 122. Where the Sessions Judge convicted the accused accepting the unanimous verdict of the jury no appeal lies on the merits of the case under this section—Chubai, 35 Cr.L.J. 285, 147 I.C. 53, 10 O.W.N. 971. If there is no question of law involved in the case, the High Court has no power to interfere, however absurd or perverse the verdict may be—Chinna Tevan, 14 Mad 36. But this section does not prohibit the High Court, in a case in which an appeal lies on a question of law, from deciding questions of fact which other sections of the Code require the Court to decide in order to do justice in the case—Smither, 26 Mad 1 (14).

In a trial by jury before the conviction is set aside the High Court must be satisfied that there is some misdirection on the part of the Sessions Judge or that there is improper admission or exclusion of some evidence—Golam Ashbia 33 Cr.L.J. 477, 137 I.C. 497, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 295, 1932 Cr.C. 264, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 336.

Every petition of appeal in cases tried by jury should state clearly in what respect the law has been contravened. The Court will not hunt through the records and find out the illegality if any. The parties must point out in their petition of appeal wherein there has been a departure from the law. Unless the exact contravention of law is pointed out, the petition of appeal is liable to be rejected—Gopal, 1 W.R. 21.

Instances of "matters of law":—The question as to the admissibility of evidence which has been rejected by the Sessions Judge is a matter of law—Pitambar, 2 Bom. 61; so also, the question as to whether the evidence which had been admitted by the Sessions Judge ought to have been admitted is a matter of law—Waman, 27 Bom. 626; Ramesh, 46 Cal. 895, 23 C.W.N. 661; so also, a misdirection to the jury—Ali Fakir, 25 Cal. 230; Ramesh, supra; or a non-direction by the Judge on question of prime importance in favour of the prisoner—Malgouda 27 Bom. 644. A conviction must be set aside on account of the admission of inadmissible evidence, damaging to the accused in the eyes of the jury and referred to in his charge by the Sessions Judge—Ohedali, 32 Cr.L.J. 421, 129 I.C. 680, 52 C.L.J. 423, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 65, 1931 Cr.C. 63. But the High Court will not interfere with the verdict of the jury merely because the Sessions Judge admitted an inadmissible evidence regarding an unimportant matter which had only a remote bearing on the question in issue and the admission of which could not have affected the verdict of the jury—Keramat, 27 Cr.L.J. 277, 92 I.C. 439, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 320, 42 C.L.J. 524.

The High Court on a point of law as to the admissibility of evidence can review the whole case and determine whether the admission of rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial—Pitambar, 2 Bom. 61; Ram Chandra Gooma, 19 Bom. 749.

When the High Court can go into facts :—Where a Judge does not agree with the verdict of the jury and submits the case to the High Court under sec. 307, the whole facts of the case may be gone into by the High Court. The clear provisions of sec. 307 allowing the High Court to consider the entire evidence are not in any way curtailed by sec. 418 or 423 and the High Court can interfere with the verdict of the jury if it thinks proper to do so—McCarthy, 9 All. 420; see also Ikramuddin, 39 All. 348. So also, the High Court can go into the facts when a case is referred to it under sec. 374 for a confirmation of the sentence of death—Jaffir Ali, 19 W.R. 57; Chattradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49. In short, in a case tried by a jury, the High Court can enter into facts only on a reference under sec. 307 or 374, and not on an appeal under this section.

Sub-section (2) :—Where in a Sessions trial of several accused, one of the accused was sentenced to death, and the other to lower punishments, and all of them appealed, it was held under the old law that the High Court, on a reference under sec. 374 in respect of the person sentenced to death, could go into the facts, but in dealing with the appeal of the other persons the High Court must be confined to matters of law and could not enter into the facts—Chattradhari, 2 C.W.N. 49. This anomaly is now removed by sub-sec. (2). "This clause provides that when in the case of a trial by jury, one person is sentenced to death and another to a lower punishment, the second accused may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. This is intended to remove the anomaly under the existing law that a High Court acting under sec. 374 could consider the facts of the case as regards the former accused, but on an appeal of the second accused could only intervene on a point of law"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). See Rashbehari Lal, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 302, 13 P.L.R. 440, 1932 Cr.C. 774, 140 I.C. 846, 34 Cr.L.J. 83 and Khadim v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 808 (810), 169 I.C. 716, 31 S.L.R. 82, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 162 in Note 1059.

419. Every appeal shall be made in the form of a petition in writing presented by the appellant or his pleader, and every such petition shall (unless the Court to which it is presented otherwise directs) be accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, and, in cases tried by a jury, a copy of the heads of the charge recorded under section 367.

1125. Scope of section :—This section prescribes the form under which a petition of appeal is to be presented. It applies even where the accused is in jail; sec. 420 deals only with the manner in which the petition of appeal is to be presented when the petitioner is in jail, and does not dispense with the other formalities prescribed by this section. Section 420 is not derogatory to the general rule laid down in sec. 419—Pokpi, 13 All. 171 (179).

1126. Contents of petition :—A petition of appeal in a case tried by jury can be made only on a question of law, and the petition should state clearly in what respect the law has been contravened. The Court will not hunt through the records to find out the illegality, if any. If the contravention of law is not stated in the petition, it will be rejected—Gopal, 1 W.R. 21. But where a ground is not taken in the petition by the appellant, that would not debar him from urging it in the appeal—Jhina Soma,

A petition of appeal containing defamatory statements against the Magistrate will not be entertained. Such petition may be returned for representation after eliminating the scandalous remarks—In re Clive Durant, 15 Bom. 488. A petition of appeal containing a false statement will not make the petitioner liable to punishment for the false statement; because a criminal appeal is a continuation of the criminal case, and the appellant has got all the privileges of the accused—Subbayya, 12 Mad. 451 (cited in Note 981 under sec. 342).

1127. Presentation of petition:—As regards presentation, no special method is enjoined in the Code, and the question is one of administrative convenience alone. Therefore, an actual presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a Bench Clerk (in the High Court) or to one of the Judges, its members, is valid—Kadinkoya, 39 Mad. 527, 29 M.L.J. 101. But depositing a petition of appeal in a box for the convenience of parties (in the compound of a Court-house) and intended for the deposit of papers for the Court is not a proper presentation, because the box is not intended for appeals and also because a petition of appeal might have been deposited there by a person who could not legally present it—Vasudevayya, 19 Mad. 354.

The petition should be presented in person; the transmission of it by post is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section—Lurissetti Pitchaya, 2 Weir 467; Bhagwan, Ratanlal 464; Arappa, 15 Mad. 137.

A joint appeal by persons with common interests convicted at the same trial is in accordance with law and should be heard. This rule has no application where the interests of any of the appellants conflict with each other—Multhe, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 859, 38 Cr L.J. 115, 166 I.C. 46, 1936 Cr C 877, 17 Lah 771, 39 P.L.R. 105, 9 R.L. 330, following Sitaram, 5 Bom L.R. 704; Mt. Batasha, A.I.R. 1917 Oudh 329, 39 I.C. 480, 18 Cr.L.J. 512, 4 O.L.J. 82 and Hira Singh, 13 P.R. 1890 (Cr).

Presentation by Pleader—The petition should be delivered to the proper officer of the Court, either by the appellant or by his pleader—Aripa, 15 Mad. 137. Presentation of an appeal by the vakil's gomasta or clerk is equivalent to presentation by pleader, if the vakil has signed the petition and has been duly authorised by a vakalat-nama—Gudiyati Samuel, 2 Weir 469; Karuppa Udayan, 20 Mad. 87. But presentation of the petition through a person who is not the clerk of the pleader, and over whose action and conduct the pleader has no control, is not a proper presentation—Ramasami, 21 Mad. 114. Where a petition of appeal was prepared on behalf of three accused and signed under vakalat by their pleader, and was presented by another pleader who held vakalat only from one of the accused, it was held that there was a proper presentation of the petition of appeal on behalf of all the accused—Muthu Mira, 2 Weir 470 (471). But where the prisoners had conflicting interests to each other, e.g., where each of the prisoners made confessions exonerating himself and incriminating the other, it would be improper for one pleader to present an appeal on behalf of both and to represent both who had conflicting interests—Hira, 1890 P.R. 13.

The word 'pleader' includes a 'mukhtar' as well as any other person authorised by the appellant, and the presentation of the petition through them would be proper—Sivaram, 6 Bom. 14; Suba Astala, 1 Mad. 304. This is now made clear by the present definition of the word 'pleader' in sec. 4 (r) as amended in 1923, by which a mukhtar has been placed on the same footing as a pleader.

1128. Copy of judgment:—It is in the discretion of the Appellate Court to admit an appeal without its being accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against, where injustice might accrue to the appellant by insisting on a strict compliance with this section. But in such cases, before hearing the appeal, the Court should have before it a copy of such judgment or order which it may get by sending for the record—Sitaram, 5 Bom L.R. 704. Where there are several accused, in a case, and all of them prefer a joint appeal, only one copy of judgment appealed against is required to be filed, and it is not necessary that there shall be a distinct petition of appeal by each of the convicted persons separately accompanied by a separate copy of the judgment—Sitaram, 5 Bom L.R. 704; Batasha, 18 Cr.L.J. 512 (Oudh). Where the order appealed against is not complete in itself, and the reasons of the dismissal are given in another judgment to which the order refers, a copy of such judgment also must be filed—Paramanand v. Mohan Lal, 30 Cr.L.J. 235 (236), 114 I.C. 61, Ind Rul. 1929 Lah. 221, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 614.

The Appellate Court has a discretion to dispense with the copy or order appealed against not only at the time of filing the appeal but even at any subsequent stage—Parmanand, supra.

A copy furnished in the prisoner's own language is sufficient—Ratanlal 82. See Notes under sec. 371.

It is open to the Appellate Court to reject an appeal where the copy of the judgment or order appealed against is not supplied at the time of presentation of the appeal or within the time allowed by the Appellate Court to file it. The order rejecting the appeal cannot be held to be an order amounting to a judgment within the meaning of sec. 369, Cr. P. C., and cannot prevent the Appellate Court from considering the appeal on the merits subsequently—Bansgopal, 35 Cr.L.J. 441, 147 I.C. 347, 6 R.A. 458, A.I.R. 1934 All. 206, 1934 Cr.C. 254, 1934 A.L.J. 329, 56 All. 299.

420. If the appellant is in jail, he may present his petition of appeal and the copies accompanying the same to the officer in charge of the jail, who shall thereupon forward such petition and copies to the proper Appellate Court.

1129. This section deals with the manner of presentation of an appeal by a prisoner in jail, but it does not dispense with the formalities prescribed by sec. 419. These formalities must be observed; see 13 All. 171 cited in Note 1125 under sec. 419.

Where the petitioner is in jail, every facility such as pen, ink, paper and even a writer should be allowed to him to enable him to prepare the petition of appeal—Nitto Gopaul, 13 W.R. 69; Shek Dadabhai, 1 B.H.C.R. 16.

Where a jail appeal has been presented through the officer-in-charge of the jail and has been dismissed under sec. 421 no further appeal can be preferred through Counsel under sec. 419—Khiali, 20 A.L.J. 739, 68 I.C. 41, A.I.R. 1922 All. 480, 44 All. 759, 23 Cr.L.J. 505; Gaya Din, 9 O.L.J. 1, 65 I.C. 612, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 56, 24 O.C. 304, 23 Cr.L.J. 148; In re Kunhammad, 72 I.C. 599, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 426, 24 Cr.L.J. 439, 1923 M.W.N. 94, 44 M.L.J. 450, 46 Mad. 382 (392); Ram Autar, 11 O.L.J. 536, 1 O.W.N. 354, 25 Cr.L.J. 1313, 82 I.C. 545, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 425; Bhimappa, 19 Bom. 732; Prem Mahlon, 14 Pat. 392, 159 I.C. 241, 16 P.L.T. 683, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 426, 1935 Cr.C. 1123, 37 Cr.L.J. 58; Ram Jas, 37 Cr.L.J. 362, 160 I.C. 969, 1936 O.W.N. 194, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 219, 1936 O.L.R. 125, 1936 Cr.C. 344. The reason is that when a right of appeal has once been exercised, and that appeal has been disposed of, the accused will not be allowed to appeal again—Khiali, supra. See also Note 1133 under the heading "Appeal from jail" where recent rulings have been inserted.

A jail appeal can be heard and disposed of by a Vacation Judge—In re Kunhammad, supra.

A jail appeal was preferred by some of the prisoners and while the appeal was pending, a petition of appeal on behalf of some of the prisoners was filed through a mukhtear. The Sessions Judge rejected the jail appeal in ignorance of the fact that an appeal had been filed through a mukhtear. Held that the High Court in its revisional powers would set aside the order of dismissal of the jail appeal, and direct the Sessions Judge to re-hear both the appeals—Mewa Ram, 48 All. 208, 23 A.L.J. 1051, 26 Cr.L.J. 1621. See also Lachman, cited in Note 1133.

When a prisoner sentenced to death subject to confirmation of the High Court presents his appeal from jail under the provisions of this section, and the Local Government has granted him the privilege of being presented by a Counsel at the expense of the Crown, but the accused refuses to give any instruction to such counsel, stating that he does not wish to be represented by him, it is the duty of the counsel to conduct the appeal on behalf of the accused, without in the least considering what the accused's views may be on the subject. The concession of the Crown towards the accused may or may not be appreciated by the accused, but it in no way affects the conduct of the appeal—Ram Prasad, 4 O.W.N. 638, 28 Cr.L.J. 679 (680), 103 I.C. 407, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 312.

421. (1) On receiving the petition and copy under section 419 or section 420, the Appellate Court shall peruse the same, and, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, it may dismiss the appeal summarily:

Provided that no appeal presented under section 419 shall be dismissed unless the appellant or his pleader has had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the same.

(2) Before dismissing an appeal under this section, the Court may call for the record of the case, but shall not be bound to do so.

1130. Appellant not bound to appear:—Once an appeal is received, it should not be dismissed merely because the appellant or his pleader failed to appear to support the petition; but the Appellate Court must consider whether there exist sufficient grounds for its interference, and must judicially determine the appeal on the merits—Deoshanker, Ratanlal 593; Ram Bharose, 14 A.L.J. 327, 17 Cr.L.J. 353; Ratan Chand, 9 Cr.L.J. 553, 5 N.L.R. 76; In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad 382 (402); Baldeo, 24 Cr.L.J. 475 (Pat.); Koura, 1895 P.R. 21. If the appellant does not appear but leaves the question of admission or rejection of the appeal to be determined by the Appellate Court on the papers, the Appellate Court is bound to peruse the papers and cannot dismiss the appeal summarily under this section on the ground of non-appearance of the appellant by counsel or in person—Vali Mahomed, Ratanlal 739 (740).

There is no provision for the dismissal of appeals on default of prosecution. The law requires that before an Appellate Court dismisses an appeal summarily, it shall read a copy of the judgment, and then, if there is no sufficient ground for interfering, it may dismiss the appeal summarily. But, clearly, the law requires that the dismissal of the appeal shall depend upon the exercise by the Judge of his independent and impartial judgment after he has read a copy of the judgment, and not upon the failure of the accused to prosecute his appeal—Balumal Hotchand, 39 Cr.L.J. 890 (891), 177 I.C. 346, 11 R.S. 58, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 171.

'No sufficient ground for interfering':—The appellant's pleader should be allowed, if necessary, to refer to the certified copies of the evidence to show that there were sufficient grounds for interfering. Where the Judge disallowed the pleader to refer to the evidence, he acted erroneously—Manga, 11 O.C. 360, 9 Cr.L.J. 55.

Where there are in the memorandum of appeal allegations of withholding witnesses, of refusal to grant warrants and summonses to witnesses, and of disregard of certain evidence filed in the case, there were sufficient grounds for interference—Aham Isaq, Ratanlal 916. So also, where the grounds of appeal disclose reasons for discrediting the witnesses for the prosecution, there are sufficient grounds for interference and the Appellate Court ought not to dismiss the appeal—Rangachariu, 29 Mad. 236.

If no sufficient grounds for interference are shown, the Appellate Court should not interfere, but should dismiss the appeal—Sayman, 5 All. 386.

1131. Summary dismissal of appeal:—This section applies to all appeals unless it is specifically provided otherwise. So an appeal under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., can be disposed of summarily under this section—Baidyanath, 32 Cr.L.J. 735, 131 I.C. 536, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 144, 12 P.L.T. 336, 1931 Cr.C. 360, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 216; Mahomed Boyetulla, 32 Cr.L.J. 325, 129 I.C. 317, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 3, 34 C.W.N. 923, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 157, 58 Cal. 402, 1931 Cr.C. 35. The law does not mean to fetter the discretion of a Court receiving jail appeals which may also be summarily dismissed under this section—Alla Bakhsh, A.I.R. 1931 All. 555, 1931 A.L.J. 644, 1931 Cr.C. 897, 53 All. 797, 33 Cr.L.J. 259, 136 I.C. 281, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 169. Although this section gives the Appellate Court power to dismiss an appeal summarily, that power must be exercised with judicial discretion. Appeals which are complicated both in law and fact ought not to be summarily dismissed—Kailash, 19 Cr.L.J. 228 (Cal.); Sukhdeo, 3 P.L.J. 389, 19 Cr.L.J. 209; Rahimaddi, 22 Cr.L.J. 349 (Cal.). An Appellate Court should exercise its power under this section with great care—Thakuri, 34 Cr.L.J. 1017, 145 I.C. 652, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 160, 1933 Cr.C. 402. Where there has been a dispute as to facts and where the credibility of witnesses for the prosecution has been impugned, it is proper for the Appellate Court to call for the record and look at the evidence, and not to dismiss the appeal summarily—Padarath, 24 Cr.L.J. 477 (Pat.). The summary dismissal of an appeal is not justified where there were disputed questions of fact in the case, and the number of witnesses and documents were large, and the Court of first instance had discussed the evidence and come to certain findings—Rahimaddi, 22 Cr.L.J. 349 (Cal.). Where questions of title to immovable properties are raised by the defence the lower appellate Court will not be justified in rejecting an appeal summarily without recording its findings on the defence and without considering the defence which may have some bearing on the question of dishonest intention necessary to sustain a conviction for theft—Abdul Latif v. Ahmed, 34 Cr.L.J. 812, 144 I.C. 704, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 515, 37 C.W.N. 235, 1933 Cr.C. 859, where it has also been laid down that the practice of admitting appeals without any hearing except on the question of bail cannot be defended, regard being had to this section.

An order of summary rejection of appeal under this section is final. Such an order is not open to review and it is immaterial whether such order is made before or after the papers have been called for—Mahomed Yashin, 4 Bom. 101; Bhimappa, 19 Bom. 732; Clegg, 1887 P.R. 24. But the Madras High Court holds that if the appeal has been dismissed for default of the pleader's appearance, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the Appellate Court that there is a reasonable excuse for the non-appearance of the pleader, the Appellate Court may re-hear the appeal on the merits—Anonymous, 2 Weir 471, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29; In re Kuhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (403).

When an appeal is dismissed under this section, the Court has no power to alter the conviction and sentence—Naga, 2 Weir 475; Govindrao, Ratanlal 304 (305); Bana, Ratanlal 384 (385); Mathuralaldas, Ratanlal 74.

Withdrawal of appeal:—A petition of appeal presented for admission may be withdrawn, before it is dismissed under this section—Chundernath, 5 C.L.R. 372.

Admission of a connected appeal:—Where two co-accused presented two appeals, the fact that the Appellate Court admitted the appeal of one of the appellants, does not affect his power to dismiss the other appeal summarily under this section—Jagat Chandra v. Lal Chand, 5 C.W.N. 332.

Piecemeal disposal of appeal:—A person was convicted in one trial on two separate charges of cheating. On appeal the Sessions Judge summarily dismissed the appeal on one charge and admitted the appeal on the other, and the appeal on this charge was ultimately allowed. Held that the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court in disposing of the appeal piecemeal was no doubt unusual and undesirable, but not illegal—Ismail, 5 Rang. 274, 28 Cr.L.J. 765 (766), 103 I.C. 845, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 239.

Summary dismissal of appeal and reduction of sentence:—Upon the true construction of the Cr. P. Code, the Appellate Court is not entitled to dismiss an appeal summarily in terms of this section unless the Court is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for interfering in accordance with the relief sought in the appeal, and where the appeal is not dismissed summarily, the Court is bound, in order to the disposal of the appeal to comply with the provisions of sec. 422 as to notice, and with the provisions of sec. 423 as to sending for the record, if such record is not already in Court. The terms of this section exclude the possibility of partial summary disposal, e.g., so far as the conviction is appealed against. Where the High Court in its Appellate jurisdiction dismissed an appeal summarily under this section but reduced the sentences passed on the appellant without any notice to the Crown, held that the procedure of the High Court was in violation of their statutory duty in respect of their failure to comply with the provisions of sec. 422 as to notice to the Crown, and the provisions of sec. 423 as to sending for the record—K.-E. v. Dahu Raut, 39 C.W.N. 626 (632), 1935 M.W.N. 469, 1935 Cr.C. 551, 68 M.L.J. 653, 62 Cal. 983, A.I.R. 1933 P.C. 89, 36 Cr.L.J. 838, 37 Bom.L.R. 557, 62 I.A. 129, 7 R.P.C. 194, 41 M.L.W. 792, 37 P.L.R. 314, 17 P.L.T. 387, 1935 A.L.J. 802, 1935 O.L.R. 340, 1935 A.L.R. 438, 1 B.R. 487, 155 I.C. 386, 1935 O.W.N. 576, 61 C.L.J. 250 (P.C.), overruling Dahu Raut, 38 C.W.N. 25, 34 Cr.L.J. 1100, 145 I.C. 937, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 870; Baldeo Singh v. Dhenoo Coalm., 37 Cr.L.J. 234, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 109, 160 I.C. 152. According to the Bombay High Court in such cases the correct procedure is that when the appeal first comes on for hearing it should not be dismissed summarily, but should be directed to stand over, and at the same time notice should be served on Government under the revisional powers conferred upon the Court by sec. 439, Cr. P. C., to show cause why the sentence should not be reduced. At the same time it will be convenient to send for the record. The notice and the appeal will then be heard on the same day. If after hearing the Government Pleader, the Court comes to the conclusion that the sentence ought to be reduced, it can be reduced under the revisional powers. Having reduced the sentence the Court can then, if so minded, say that it sees no ground for interfering with the conviction or sentence, and can dismiss the appeal summarily under sec. 421, Cr. P. C.—Bai Dhankor v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 572, 168 I.C. 504, 39 Bom.L.R. 74, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 148, 9 R.B. 372, 1 I.R. 1937 Bom. 365

1132. Judgment and record of reasons:—An Appellate Court in rejecting an appeal summarily under this section is not bound to write a judgment—Rash Behari v. Balgopal, 21 Cal. 92; Waruba, 20 Bom. 540; Annatarapa Krishnayya, 25 Mad. 534; Bala Subbanna, 2 Weir 473; Nazar Mohd v. Hara Singh, 26 P.L.T. 616, 27 Cr.L.J. 23; Gurbari, 2 P.L.J. 695; Nitya Pal v. Beni Madhab, 9 C.W.N. 623; Ramrao, 13 N.L.R. 169, 18 Cr.L.J. 993; Nga Ba, 19 Cr.L.J. 316 (Bur.); Nga Sein, U.B.R. (1906) 2nd Qr. 49. But it is advisable that a Court which dismisses an appeal under this section should briefly record its reasons for such dismissal, in view of the possibility of such order being challenged by an application for revision—Ram Narain, 8 All. 514; Kundan, 36 All. 496, 15 Cr.L.J. 512; Guru Bari, 43 I.C. 439, 19 Cr.L.J. 151, 2 P.L.J. 695, 4 P.L.W. 153; Krishna, 32 Cr.L.J. 86, 127 I.C. 847, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 520, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 473; Thakuri, 34 Cr.L.J. 1017, 145 I.C. 652, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 160, 1933 Cr.C. 402; Abdul Latif v. Ahmed, 34 Cr.L.J. 812, 144 I.C. 704, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 515, 37 C.W.N. 235, 1933 Cr.C. 859; Jaganathan, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 32, 152 I.C. 801, 36 Cr.L.J. 191; Maroti v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 380, 173 I.C. 751, 4 B.R. 331, 10 R.P. 444, 19 P.L.T. 28, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 176; Bala Bux v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 732 (733), 176 I.C. 558, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 366, 19 P.L.T. 395, 4 B.R. 734, 11 R.P. 85. Though ordinarily an Appellate Court in rejecting an appeal summarily is not bound to record a judgment, still the Court should not dispose of an appeal under this section otherwise than by a judgment showing on the face of it that it has applied its mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record, and of the pleas raised by the accused both in the Court below and in his memorandum of appeal—Lal Behari, 33

All. 393, 17 Cr.L.J. 309; Janesh Ram v. Gyan Chand, 21 Cr.L.J. 139 (Pat.); Chandrasekhar v. Rajaram, 30 Cr.L.J. 791, 117 I.C. 279, A.I.R. 1929 Nag 150, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 231; Gobind, 2 P.L.T. 10, 61 I.C. 49, 22 Cr.L.J. 321; Brijmohan Singh v. Dasrath Singh, 38 Cr.L.J. 232, 166 I.C. 494, 9 R.P. 304, 3 B.R. 172. Where in a case in which the evidence was voluminous, the Appellate Court, without considering either the evidence of the witnesses or the documents, disposed of the appeal practically in a single paragraph, held that the appellate judgment was not in accordance with law and the appeal must be reheard—Narain Prasad, 1 P.L.T. 716, 57 I.C. 664, 21 Cr.L.J. 648.

The Appellate Court need not go to the length of writing an elaborate judgment, but should notice briefly and clearly what objections were urged on appeal and how they were disposed of—Ekkowrie, 32 Cal. 178. It should record at least so much as would satisfy the High Court, when an application for revision is made, that it has fully considered all the questions in issue and has appreciated the simplicity or gravity of the case—Gurbari, 2 P.L.J. 695, 19 Cr.L.J. 151. Where no reason is given for the summary dismissal, the High Court will either remand the appeal to the Appellate Court to be admitted and heard, or will itself examine the evidence—Ramkant, 19 Cr.L.J. 304 (Pat.); Nga Ba, 19 Cr.L.J. 316. See also Brijmohan Singh v. Dasrath Singh, supra.

The provisions of the Code with reference to the judgment of a subordinate Court do not apply to the judgment of a High Court; the High Court can undoubtedly dismiss an appeal by an order without giving reasons—Kuldip, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 38 (40), 11 Pat. 697, 141 I.C. 154, 1933 Cr.C. 54, 34 Cr.L.J. 118.

Where the Appellate Court simply noted "Heard. I see no reason to interfere," held that this was not a sufficient compliance with the requirements of this section, in a case where both oral and documentary evidence had been produced by both sides and where the memorandum of appeal contained a number of grounds that admitted of argument—Barji, 36 Cr.L.J. 261, 153 I.C. 152, 7 R.P. 304, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 37, 16 P.L.T. 72, 1935 Cr.C. 77, 1 B.R. 131.

1133. Proviso—Right of appellant to be heard:—This proviso is an embodiment of the legal means "Audi alteram partem," i.e., no man shall be condemned unheard. This maxim derives its origin from the saying of Seneca to the following effect: "Whoever may have decided anything, the other side remaining unheard, granted that his decision may have been just, will not have been just himself"—Pohi, 13 All. 171 (175).

Appeal from Jail:—The proviso lays down that no appeal under sec. 419 shall be dismissed without giving the appellant or his pleader an opportunity of being heard. But this proviso does not apply to jail appeals presented under sec. 420; and, therefore, the Appellate Court is not bound to give the accused any time to engage counsel. But under Rule 50 of the Madras Rules and Practice, seven days' time is allowed before a jail appeal is circulated to the Judges. So an appellant has sufficient opportunity of engaging counsel if he wishes to do so—In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (400).

As to the question whether notice should be given to an appellant filing his appeal from jail, it has been held in some Madras cases, that sec. 419 (which is referred to in this proviso) is of general application and embraces the cases of all appellants whether in or out of jail, and there is nothing in sec. 420 to indicate that it was intended to deprive appellants who are in jail of the opportunity of being heard on their appeal. Notice is, therefore, necessary to be given to the accused though he is in jail and there is nothing in this section to prevent the prisoner from being heard in person—Kolina Dutchaiya, 2 Weir 472 (473); if the prisoner is not represented by a pleader, the Appellate Court has power to direct that the prisoner be brought before it—Anonymous, 2 Weir 473. If the convict files a petition of appeal from jail through a legal practitioner, the Appellate Court is not competent to dismiss the jail appeal summarily, but should hear the convict's pleader—Bhauani, 3 A.L.J. 693, 4 Cr.L.J. 373. But Mahmood, J. has expressed the opinion in Pohji, 13 All. 171 (180) that as this proviso does not apply to an appeal presented from jail, neither the prisoner nor his pleader, if he engages one, has the right to insist that he shall be heard. The Sind Court is of opinion that this proviso is confined to sec. 419, and does not apply to an appeal preferred by the accused from prison under sec. 420. If the accused is in jail, and has no pleader, any notice to him is useless, because he cannot appear in Court and cannot give any further information to the Court. Consequently, the Appellate Court can summarily dismiss such appeal on perusal of the papers, without calling upon him to appear—Loung, 20 S.L.R. 189, 27 Cr.L.J. 933 (934), 96 I.C. 389.

The express reference in the substantive part of sec. 421, Cr. P. C., to a petition presented under sec. 419 or sec. 420, Cr. P. C., indicates that the omission of any reference to sec. 420, Cr. P. C., in the Proviso to sec. 421, Cr. P. C., is deliberate, and that the Proviso is only intended to apply to an appeal presented under sec. 419, Cr. P. C., that is an appeal presented direct to the Court, and not through the officer-in-charge of the jail. Therefore, where the Court is dealing with an appeal under sec. 421, Cr. P. C., it is entitled to dismiss the appeal summarily without hearing the accused, who presents his appeal under sec. 420, Cr. P. C., and the accused has no right to insist on being heard. Where a man has already been condemned and deprived of his liberty, it requires some statutory provision to entitle him to insist upon leaving the place where he is confined and being brought to the place where his appeal is to be heard. The Court will always consider whether the ends of justice require that an appellant should be heard. If the Court thinks that there is any possibility of its decision being influenced by anything the accused may say, then the Court can always direct him to be brought before it when his appeal is being heard in the first instance—Jalam Bharatsingh v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 578, 175 I.C. 352, I.L.R. 1938 Bom. 357, 10 R.B. 535, 40 Bom.L.R. 317, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 279.

The dismissal of the jail appeal must be deemed to be a provisional dismissal in no way affecting the right of the appellant to have his counsel heard under the proviso to this section in connection with the appeal under sec. 419, Cr. P. C. The practice in the Allahabad High Court is that a summary dismissal of a jail appeal by a Judge does not in any way debar the hearing of an appeal filed by counsel—Lachhman, A.I.R. 1934 All. 488, 4 A.W.N. 344, 1934 Cr.C. 1305, 36 Cr.L.J. 300, 153 I.C. 153; Bhawani Dihal, 1906 A.W.N. 303. But see Khiyal v. Emp., 20 A.L.J. 739, 68 I.C. 41, 23 Cr.L.J. 505, A.I.R. 1922 All. 480, 44 All. 759. After reviewing the previous rulings on this point a contrary view was taken by the Patna High Court in Pem Mahton, 37 Cr.L.J. 58, 159 I.C. 241, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 426, 14 Pat. 392, 2 B.R. 62, 8 R.B. 259, 16 P.L.T. 683, 1935 Cr.C. 1123, where it has been laid down that this Code does not confer more than one right of appeal to any accused person from a conviction and sentence passed on him nor does the Code or the Letters Patent of the High Court permit an appeal in a criminal matter from an order of one or more Judges of the High Court to other Judges of the same Court. The High Court has no power to entertain an appeal from the conviction and sentence passed on the appellants after the dismissal of the appeal which they preferred from jail and neither the Bench hearing the appeal nor the Bench which admitted it has power to review the order of dismissal. The Madras High Court as well as the Chief Court of Oudh have also held that once an appeal presented by a convict from jail has been dismissed it is not open to the same prisoner to file another memorandum of appeal through a Counsel—Queen-Empress v. Bhimappa, 19 Bom. 732; Kanhamad Haji v. Emp., 46 Mad. 382, 72 I.C. 599, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 426, 24 Cr.L.J. 439, 1923 M.W.N. 94, 44 M.L.J. 450; Ganga Din v. Emp., 9 O.L.J. 1, 65 I.C. 612, 24 O.C. 304, A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 56, 23 Cr.L.J. 148; Ram Autar v. Emp., 11 O.L.J. 536, 82 I.C. 545, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 425, 25 Cr.L.J. 1313, 1 O.W.N. 354; Ram Jas v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 362, 160 I.C. 969, 1936 O.W.N. 194, 1936 O.L.R. 125, 8 R.O. 292, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 219, 1936 Cr.C. 344, dissenting from Hulai v. Emp., 3 O.L.J. 326, 36 I.C. 133, 17 Cr.L.J. 453, A.I.R. 1916 Oudh 85; Rajkumari v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 682, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 371, 1940 O.L.R. 389, 1940 O.W.N. 520, 183 I.C. 760; Jodha v. King-Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 711, A.I.R. 1940 Oudh 369, 1940 O.L.R. 403, 189 I.C. 83, 1940 O.W.N. 594. The practice which has been followed in recent years of treating jail appeals summarily dismissed by the Judges of the Oudh Chief Court as not finally dismissed unless and until they are sealed at the end of period of limitation has no justification in law. Such appeals, as soon as a Judge or a Bench of Judges has decided them and signed and dated their order are decided appeals and in such cases a represented appeal subsequently filed is not maintainable—Jodha v. King-Emp., supra; Rajkumari v. Emp., supra. See also Note 1129.

Notice to the Crown:—Where on presentation of an appeal the Sessions Judge appoints a day for hearing the appellant's pleader and after hearing him dismisses the appeal summarily but his judgment is a complete one dealing with the evidence in detail and with the points raised on behalf of the appellants, no grievance can be made of the fact that the Appellate Court did not issue notice to the Crown, considering it unnecessary to call upon the Public Prosecutor to reply to the arguments adduced on behalf of the appellants—Sonu Kurmi v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 950, 177 I.C. 697, 5 B.R. 12, 11 R.P. 176, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 24.

Other Appeals:—It is not competent to the Appellate Court to reject an appeal summarily without giving a reasonable opportunity to the appellant or his pleader of being heard—Rangachari, 29 Mad. 236; Gobind, 2 P.L.T. 10, 61 I.C. 49, 22 Cr.L.J. 321; Rajkumar v. Tinkowri, 12 C.W.N. 248; Ranga Row, 23 M.L.J. 371, 13 Cr.L.J. 710. If the appeal is rejected under this section without hearing the appellant or his pleader, the Appellate Court may be directed to rehear the petition of appeal, and to give the appellant an opportunity of being heard—Fakira, Ratanlal 703. An appeal should not be dismissed merely because the appellants do not appear to support the petition, but the Appellate Court should consider whether there was sufficient ground for interfering which would imply judicial consideration of the appeal on the merits. Where the order of the District Magistrate does not indicate that he gave any consideration to the merits of the case and it appears that he dismissed the appeal summarily merely for default, the High Court directed the re-hearing of the appeal—Gulab Das, 37 Cr.L.J. 93, 159 I.C. 334, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 460, 16 P.L.T. 607, 1935 Cr.C. 1169. Where the Appellate Court rejected the appeal summarily owing to default of the pleader's appearance, and satisfactory reason for his non-appearance was shown, the Court should rehear the appeal on the merits—Anonymous, 2 Weir 471, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29; In re Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382; Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553. Where the accused's pleader presents a time-barred appeal, together with an application for excusing the delay under sec. 5, Limitation Act, on the ground that the accused under a bona fide mistake had presented proceedings in a wrong Court, the Appellate Court should not dismiss the appeal summarily, but should give the pleader an opportunity of being heard as to the allegation of there being sufficient cause for excusing the delay—Nurudin, 29 Bom.L.R. 701, 103 I.C. 109, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 445, 28 Cr.L.J. 653 (655). Where the notice for hearing the appeal was served in the afternoon of 21st March on the appellant's pleader at Amalner asking him to be present on the 22nd March at Jalgaon or any other place where the camp of the District Magistrate might be, and on the day in question the District Magistrate was encamped at Edlabad, at a considerable distance from Amalner, so that the appellant's pleader could not appear at the place and the appeal was consequently dismissed, held that the order of dismissal must be set aside as there was no sufficient notice to the appellant's pleader of the date and place of hearing—In re Arjun, 22 Bom.L.R. 188, 55 I.C. 853, 21 Cr.L.J. 373. Where the District Magistrate called upon the appellant's pleader to argue the appeal on the same day that it was presented, and on the pleader asking for time, the Magistrate refused to grant him time and rejected the appeal, it was held that the appellant's pleader was not afforded a reasonable opportunity of being heard—Gurshida, 2 Cr.L.J. 58, 7 Bom.L.R. 89; Ramatchand, 36 Cal. 385, 13 C.W.N. 684; In re Turka Hussan, 48 Mad. 385, 47 M.L.J. 661. But this section does not contemplate that an appeal cannot be heard on the very day on which it is presented, and that notice must be given of some future date on which the appellant or his pleader may be heard. There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time when he presents the appeal, if the pleader desires that course; if he does not desire to be heard at once,

'then certainly the Court should appoint a future date of which notice is to be given to the appellant or his pleader,' so that he may be heard on that date—Basavansappa, 29 Bom.L.R. 488, 101 I.C. 595, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 361, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 81, 28 Cr.L.J. 467 (468); Kolappalli, 53 Mad. 865, 32 Cr.L.J. 40, 127 I.C. 803, 32 M.L.W. 20, 1930 M.W.N. 686, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 863, Ind. Rul. 1930 Mad. 1043, 59 M.L.J. 836, 1930 Cr.C. 1049.

A particular date should be fixed, on which the appeal is to be heard. A general notice posted in the Court that appeals will be heard for admission only on the first Court-day next after presentation is not a compliance with the provisions of this section. The Court should fix a time in each particular case, so as to enable the appellant or his pleader to be heard—Malam, 5 Mad. 11.

1134. Sub-section (2):—Although the Legislature does not make it obligatory on the part of the Appellate Court to send for the records before dismissing an appeal, still the practice of summarily dismissing an appeal without calling for the records is always inconvenient and must not be adopted—Jugal Kishore, 1883 A.W.N. 145. If questions of fact are argued in the appeal, the appeal ought not to be disposed of under sec. 421 without sending for the original records of the Court below—Turka Husain, 48 Mad. 385, 47 M.L.J. 661, 26 Cr.L.J. 411, 84 I.C. 1051, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 895, 20 M.L.W. 623, 1924 M.W.N. 893. The Appellate Court is, however, not bound to send for the papers before taking action under this section—Kolapalli, 32 Cr.L.J. 40, 127 I.C. 803, 32 M.L.W. 20, 1930 M.W.N. 686, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 863, Ind. Rul. 1930 Mad. 1043, 53 Mad. 865, 59 M.L.J. 836, 1930 Cr.C. 1039. Where the grounds of appeal disclose reasons for discrediting the witnesses for the prosecution, the Appellate Court ought to call for the records—Rangachari, 29 Mad. 236.

An Appellate Court is not bound to call for the record in an appeal in which the only question is a question of fact and the judgment of the Court below is so plain and clear that calling for the record would be a mere waste of time. But when the judgment of the lower Court is a long and intricate judgment requiring careful consideration, the Appellate Court ought not to refuse to call for the record—Sukhdeo, 3 P.L.J. 389, 19 Cr.L.J. 269.

Where the Appellate Court sent for the record and ordered notice to be given to the appellants' pleader before admitting the appeal but refrained from issuing any notice to the Public Prosecutor, held that it was perfectly justified in adopting such an intermediate course—Maroti v. Kasabai, 27 Cr.L.J. 1404, 93 I.C. 716, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 88.

After the record is sent for and received, the Appellate Court ought to hear the pleader and cannot dismiss the appeal summarily without hearing him; if the Appellate Court so dismisses the appeal, the order of dismissal must be set aside and the appeal will be directed to be reheard—Lalit Kumar, 92 I.C. 894, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 174, 42 C.L.J. 551, 27 Cr.L.J. 382; Surendra, 42 C.L.J. 554, 93 I.C. 76, 27 Cr.L.J. 412, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 161; Hatem Ali, 33 Cr.L.J. 602, 138 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 397, 1932 Cr.C. 344, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 450. The same High Court has taken a different view in Monmotha v. Dhatrigram U. B., 40 C.W.N. 128, 37 Cr.L.J. 904, 164 I.C. 270, where it has been held that there is nothing contained in the section about the right of the appellant or his pleader to have two reasonable opportunities of being heard by the Court. The earlier view was, however, followed in the case of Jitendra Nath Gorai, 37 Cr.L.J. 831, 163 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 294, 1936 Cr.C. 531. Discussing the rulings quoted above the Calcutta High Court has recently held that all that the statute requires with reference to this matter is that the Appellate Court before dismissing an appeal summarily must afford the appellant or his pleader a reasonable opportunity of being heard. That being the case it would be a sufficient compliance with the statute if such reasonable opportunity is afforded either on the first presentation of the appeal or if the Appellate Court sends for the record, after the record has been received. Where, therefore, the Appellate Court allowed the pleader for the appellant to argue his clients' case in full on the day of presentation of the appeal, it was unnecessary to hear the appellant or his pleader again after the arrival of the record in the Appellate Court as the appellant was allowed a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of his appeal within the meaning of this section—Akramaddin v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 541, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 314, 40 Cr.L.J. 839, 183 I.C. 742. The Patna High Court has also held that such a procedure was not an illegality—Dewal Mahton v. Emp., 12 P.L.T. 147, 126 I.C. 911, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 499, 1930 Cr.C. 927, 9 Pat. 768, 31 Cr.L.J. 1311, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 671. But it is desirable in all cases where a busy Sessions Judge sends for the record in a criminal appeal, which is presented to him for admission, that he should note in the order-sheet the points for which he is sending for the record in order to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the submissions made by the appellants before him. It will be difficult, in many cases, if not in all, for a busy Sessions Judge to remember the submissions which were advanced by the Appellants' Advocate which had satisfied him to this extent that he was forced to send for the record—Basdeo Koiri v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 254, 172 I.C. 944, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 12, 18 P.L.T. 915, 4 B.R. 204, 10 R.P. 369, 1938 P.W.N. 113. The Bombay High Court is also of opinion that it is not imperative on the Appellate Court to hear the appellant's pleader, after the record is called for, and there would be no illegality on the part of the Court in dismissing the appeal after perusal of the record, without giving the pleader another opportunity of being heard, especially when the pleader had been heard before the records were called for, because his arguments about the evidence can then be better appreciated—Bosavanappa, 29 Bom.L.R. 488, 101 I.C. 595, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 361, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 81, 28 Cr.L.J. 467 (468). The Sind Court is also of opinion that although the records have been called for, still as the case is not fixed for hearing under sec. 423, it is not obligatory on the Court to give the pleader a hearing before dismissing the appeal, especially where the pleader has once been heard before the records were sent for—Jivaya, 2 S.L.R. 39, 10 Cr.L.J. 204.

1135. Review:—An order passed under this section, dismissing an appeal filed under sec. 419, is prima facie final. Such an order cannot be vacated under sec. 561A unless it is proved that either of the conditions precedent to the passing of the order as laid down by this section has not been fulfilled and this is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. The burden of proving that either of the conditions has not been complied with, lies heavily on the person challenging the finality of the order. Where it is proved that either of the conditions precedent has not been complied with, the High Court has power to interfere under sec. 561A and in such a case it is immaterial whether the Bench which is called upon to interfere is composed of the same or different Judges. Where there is no proof that either of the conditions have not been complied with, the High Court, whether the Bench is composed of the same or other Judges, has no power to interfere—Shahu, 36 Cr.L.J. 831 (836), 155 I.C. 736, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 84, 1935 Cr.C. 370 (F.B.). See Note 1433A.

1135A. Revision:—Where an appeal has been dismissed summarily under this section without recording any reasons or judgment, the High Court can either go into the case on its own account and examine the evidence, or can remand the appeal to the Lower Appellate Court to be admitted and heard—Ram Kant, 19 Cr.L.J. 304 (Pat.). Though the practice usually is to remand the case to the Lower Appellate Court and ask for a judgment from that Court after a regular hearing, the High Court has discretion to go into the case itself, and, if necessary, to consider the question of fact as if in first appeal—Aman Ali, 13 O.C. 309, 11 Cr.L.J. 631; Nga Ba, 19 Cr.L.J. 316 (Bur.). If the High Court finds that the case should not have been dealt with summarily, the High Court will send back the case ordering the Appellate Court to hear it on its merits and pass a judgment—Nga Ba, 19 Cr.L.J. 316 (Bur.). Where the Sessions Judge summarily dismissed an appeal from the conviction of a Magistrate, the High Court itself finding that the evidence on which the conviction was based was insufficient, set aside the conviction and acquitted the accused, instead of remanding the appeal for a rehearing on the merits—Iswar Chandra, 10 C.W.N. 446 (448), 3 Cr.L.J. 385. See also Aman Ali, supra.

Where it does not appear from the order of the Sessions Judge dismissing an appeal summarily that he examined the record of the case or that he tested arguments on questions of fact by examination of the evidence actually given by the witnesses, the High Court is practically obliged, if the appellate order of the Sessions Judge is to be supported, itself to hear the appeal on questions of fact, which is not the procedure prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order is liable to be set aside in such cases—Chhathu Gope v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 380, 173 I.C. 751, 4 B.R. 331, 10 R.P. 444, 19 P.L.T. 28, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 176. See also Note 1132.

422. If the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause notice to be given to the appellant or his pleader, and to such officer as the Provincial Government may appoint in this behalf, of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, and shall, on the application of such officer, furnish him with a copy of the grounds of appeal; and, in cases of appeals under section 417, the Appellate Court shall cause a like notice to be given to the accused.

Notice of appeal.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by section 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Scope:—This section deals only with appeals and there is no similar section dealing with revisions, nor does any section apply this procedure to revisions—Sat Narain Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 All. 426, 1940 A.L.J. 462, 190 I.C. 225, 41 Cr.L.J. 876

1136. Restricted order for admission:—A restricted order for admission of a criminal appeal is not contemplated by this section, and must be deemed to be ultra vires. Therefore, where a criminal appeal was admitted for consideration of the sentence only, it was held that the whole appeal should have been heard and that the appellant could not be restricted to any selected ground out of those specified in his petition—Nafar, 20 I.C. 741, 14 Cr.L.J. 485, 18 C.L.J. 582, A.I.R. 1914 Cal. 276, 41 Cal. 406, 18 C.W.N. 147; Gaya Singh, 4 Pat. 254, 6 P.L.T. 381, 26 Cr.L.J. 862, 86 I.C. 718, 6 P.L.T. 381, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 453, 3 Pat.L.R. 8 (Cr.); Riyhu, 32 Cr.L.J. 1017, 133 I.C. 163, 12 P.L.T. 536, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 351, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 323, 1931 Cr.C. 799; Harnam Singh, 40 Cr.L.J. 760, 183 I.C. 318, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 295, I.L.R. 1939 Lah. 148, 41 P.L.R. 487. But where the Bench, which admitted the appeal on the question of sentence, did not only determine adversely all other considerations which could be advanced in favour of the appellants but dismissed the appeal summarily in respect of them under sec. 421, Cr. P. C., it is not open to the High Court to go behind such an order of dismissal even if passed by the same Bench at an earlier stage, and still less if passed by a different Bench. Section 422 only applies if and in so far as an appeal has not been dismissed summarily. If in part it has not been so dismissed, the provision will apply in respect of such part: it cannot, however, operate to nullify a definite order of dismissal under sec. 421—Kuldip, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 38, 11 Pat. 697, 141 I.C. 154, 1933 Cr.C. 54, 34 Cr.L.J. 118. Except where there are express words as in secs. 412 and 418, the Code does not provide for an appeal of the limited purpose of reviewing only a part of the judgment. The appellant has a right to be heard fully on the merits and the Judge is bound by sec. 424 to record a complete judgment—Dagdu Gangaram, Ratanlal 826.

1137. Notice:—Notice to the appellant of the time and place of hearing is obligatory, and an order disposing of an appeal without giving such notice is illegal. The appeal must be restored to the file and disposed of according to law—Venkataramudu, 2 Weir 475 (476). Where a criminal appeal filed through a counsel is admitted, it cannot be dismissed summarily without giving notice to the accused; for, after an appeal is admitted, the Court cannot act under sec. 421—Ta Pu, 3 Bur.L.J. 18, 25 Cr.L.J. 933, 81 I.C. 549, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 294.

- To whom to be given :—Notice must be given to the appellant or his pleader. But the attention of the pleader should be directed to the notice, when notice is given to the pleader only; the mere fact that the pleader of the appellant is present in Court when an order is made admitting an appeal, is not sufficient—Gopal Chunder, 10 C.L.R. 57.

The word 'pleader' includes a mukhtar, and notice to the mukhtar is sufficient for the purposes of this section—Shivram, 6 Bom. 14.

In case of appeals under sec. 417, notice must be given to the accused.

Where the Court passes an order, awarding compensation to the accused under sec. 250, and the complainant appeals, it is desirable that notice should be given to the accused so as to afford him an opportunity of supporting the order passed in his favour, although there is no express provision of law to that effect—Palaniappavelan, 29 Mad. 187; Venkatarama v. Krishna, 38 Mad. 1091; Ram Chand v. Jesa Ram, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 675 (676), 76 I.C. 641, 25 Cr.L.J. 609; Monoon v. Ibrahim, 20 S.L.R. 41, 92 I.C. 424, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 143, 27 Cr.L.J. 248. But the absence of notice to the accused will not vitiate the appellate proceedings—Nagi Reddi v. Basappa, 33 Mad. 89; Krishna v. Narayana, 41 M.L.J. 172, 22 Cr.L.J. 583, 62 I.C. 823; Rashid, 8 Lah. 568, 101 I.C. 192, 28 P.L.R. 177, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 357, 28 Cr.L.J. 416. So also, no notice to the Crown is necessary, because it is a matter in which the Crown is very little interested—Palaniappavelan, supra; Krishna v. Narayan, supra; Gurusami v. Tirumurthi, 27 M.L.J. 629, 15 Cr.L.J. 648.

Although this section does not require any notice to be given to the complainant, still in appeals from orders under sec. 545, (directing that the expenses properly incurred by the prosecution be defrayed out of the fine), it would be better in practice to give notice to the complainant also. But the absence of such notice will not afford any ground for interference in revision—Mangalchand, 14 N.L.R. 131, 19 Cr.L.J. 927, A.I.R. 1917 Nag. 122, 47 I.C. 443; Htinda Meah v. Anamale Chettyar, 37 Cr.L.J. 832, 163 I.C. 242, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 247, 1936 Cr.C. 523. In Baluant v. Motilal, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 144, 19 N.L.J. 140, 1936 Cr.C. 694, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 147, 9 R.N. 93, 38 Cr.L.J. 76, 165 I.C. 641, it has been held that, in such a case, the complainant is entitled to appear both on the question of the amount of compensation to be awarded and also to be heard in support of the conviction. It is the settled practice of the Calcutta High Court that where compensation has been awarded to the complainant under sec. 545, and an appeal is preferred, the notice of the appeal must be given to the complainant, and an order of acquittal in the absence of such notice may be set aside by the High Court in revision—Bharasa v. Sukdeo, 53 Cal. 569, 43 C.L.J. 583, 27 Cr.L.J. 1086, 97 I.C. 62, A.I.R. 1926 Cal 1054. See also Venkatavarada v. Vengai, 1933 M.W.N. 729.

Notice should also be given to such officer as the Local Government appoints—Palaniappavelan, 29 Mad 187. In Bengal, notice should be given to the Legal Remembrancer so far as the High Court is concerned. In other cases, the District Magistrate has been appointed as the officer to receive notices of appeals. If the rule is granted against the order of a Sessions Judge, he is the proper person to show cause—Bepin Behari v. Nendi, 7 C.W.N. 80; Calcutta Gazette, 1883, Part I, page 1200. Where an appeal is preferred to the District Magistrate, notice must be given to the Public Prosecutor—Bharasa v. Sukhdeo, 53 Cal. 569, 43 C.L.J. 583, 27 Cr.L.J. 1086. In Bombay, District Magistrates should be served with notice—Bombay Gazette, 1883, Part I, page 182; Shivlingappa Basappa, 24 Bom.L.R. 1150, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 74. The same is the rule in the Punjab, Oudh and C. P. See Punjab Gazette, 1883, Part I, page 53; Oudh Crim. Digest, p. 27; C. P. Gazette, 1883, Part II, page 101. In Madras, the Public Prosecutor is the officer to be served with notice in case of appeals to the Sessions Court and the High Court—Fort St. George Gazette, 1887, Part I, page 30. In other cases, the District Magistrate is the proper officer. Thus, in an appeal before the Joint Magistrate, notice should be served on the District Magistrate—Vellayan v. Solai, 39 Mad. 595, 16 Cr.L.J. 600.

∴ Omission to give notice to the District Magistrate is a mere irregularity, according to the Madras High Court—Vellayan v. Solai, 39 Mad. 505, 28 M.L.J. 693. The fact that notice of the appeal was not served on the complainant or on the officer appointed under this section, is no ground for interference with an order of acquittal where no injustice has been occasioned—Para Kanakkan v. Amir Bi, 84 I.C. 249, 20 M.L.W. 327, A.I.R. 1924 Mad 37, 26 Cr.L.J. 249. See also Peria Kalathi v. Venkatesa, 33 Cr.L.J. 596, 138 I.C. 385, 1932 M.W.N. 722, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 561, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 277. But according to the Bombay High Court, such omission is an illegality and not merely an irregularity—Shivlingappa, 24 Bom.L.R. 1150, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 74, 24 Cr.L.J. 700. But objection on the ground of absence of notice should be made by the District Magistrate and not by the complainant; and the High Court will not interfere in revision at the instance of the complainant where the objection on the ground of absence of notice to the District Magistrate comes not from the District Magistrate but from the complainant—Devendra v. Shetappa, 25 Bom.L.R. 251, 26 Cr.L.J. 751, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 264, 86 I.C. 287. See also Peria Kanakkan v. Amir Bi, supra. But where an appeal is heard by the District Magistrate who is himself the officer authorised to receive notice no formal notice to him is necessary—Krishna v. Narayana, 41 M.L.J. 172, 22 Cr.L.J. 583, 62 I.C. 823. But in another Madras case, where an appeal was originally heard by the District Magistrate and was ultimately heard by a Joint Magistrate, it was held that this fact did not relieve the Joint Magistrate of his duty of giving notice to the District Magistrate—Mohammad Mustafa v. Shanmuga, 25 Cr.L.J. 1389, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 375, 83 I.C. 349.

Notice to appellant in jail :—If the appellant is in jail and is not represented by a pleader, notice must be given to him—Kotina Butchayi, 2 Weir 472 (473); Lal Bahadur, 50 All. 543, 29 Cr.L.J. 384 (385), 108 I.C. 122, A.I.R. 1928 All. 84, 26 A.L.J. 275 (F.B.). The obligation imposed on the Court under sec. 422, Cr. P. C., of giving notice to the appellant, if he has no pleader, involves that the appellant must have a right to act upon the notice and come to the Court to argue his appeal if he so desires—Jalam Bharatsing v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 578, 175 I.C. 352, I.L.R. 1938 Bom. 357, 10 R.B. 535, 40 Bom.L.R. 317, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 279. The Sind Court is, however, of opinion that no notice is necessary to be given to the appellant in jail—Loung, 20 S.L.R. 189, 27 Cr.L.J. 933 (934), 96 I.C. 389.

Time and place of hearing :—The notice must specify the exact date of hearing. It is not enough that the Magistrate had directed that the appeal would be heard in a certain month (e.g., in January)—Wazir Khan, 1881 A.W.N. 46. So also, a general notice posted in the Court-house that the appeal will be heard on the first Court day next after presentation of the appeal is not sufficient. A particular date must be fixed—Malan, 5 Mad. 11.

It is imperative on a criminal Appellate Court to hear the appeal at the time and place named in the notice of appeal—Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553. Therefore, where a notice is issued fixing a particular place for the hearing of the appeal, the Court ought not to hear the appeal at a different place without giving notice of the change of place—Bahaval, 1891 P.R. 7; or on a date previous to the date fixed for hearing—Shanmugam v. Alaga, 2 Weir 475. If notice has been issued to an appellant to appear at the head quarters on a particular date, and if on that particular date, the officer who will hear the appeal moves out into camp, he should not dismiss the appeal for default of the appellant's appearance at the camp, but should fix a fresh date and issue a fresh notice. A general order directing appellants to follow the officer into camp is not sufficient—Nihal Singh, 1905 P.R. 11, 2 Cr.L.J. 66.

Where a Sessions Division covers two districts an appeal can, as a matter of law, be heard at any one of the places. It is a matter of discretion for the Sessions Judge, or the Additional Sessions Judge to whom the appeal is transferred, when the matter comes before him on appeal, to decide in which district it shall be heard; but that discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner and reasonable attention must be paid to the interest of the appellant. Where the discretion is exercised wrongly the High Court will interfere—Doodhari, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 643, 15 P.L.T. 604, 1934 Cr.C. 1321.

423. (1) The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court. After perusing such record, and hearing the appellant or his pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor, if he appears, and, in case of an appeal under section 417, the accused if he appears, the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal, or may—

- (a) in an appeal from an order of acquittal, reverse such order and direct that further inquiry be made, or that the accused be retried or committed for trial, as the case may be, or find him guilty and pass sentence on him according to law;
- (b) in an appeal from a conviction, (1) reverse the finding and sentence, and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence, or (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of section 106, subsection (3), not so as to enhance the same;
- (c) in an appeal from any other order, alter or reverse such order;
- (d) make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper.

(2) Nothing herein contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him.

Scope:—As for the applicability of this section to an appeal arising under secs. 476, 476A and 476B, see Note 1257.

1138. Powers and duties of Appellate Court:—It is the duty of the Appellate Court to look into the evidence of both sides in order to come to a decision. Where the Appellate Court did not think it necessary to deal with the evidence adduced by the defence in the case, because no reference to that evidence was made by the counsel of the appellant, and that evidence was practically ignored by him, held that the Appellate Court acted illegally in doing so—Fidoi Hossein, 40 Cal. 376, 14 Cr.L.J. 419. The rule by which a Criminal Appellate Court is to be guided in dealing with a criminal appeal is that it has to come to a conclusion for itself upon the evidence on the record, assisted so far as it might be, by such reasons or arguments as it might elicit from the conclusions and reasons contained in the judgment of the original Court. If the Appellate Court entertains any doubt about the correctness of the conviction or the commission of the offence, it should discharge the accused—Milan v. Sagai Bepari, 23 Cal. 347; Maula Baksh, 1898 P.R. 6; Ma Ka v. Po Shaw, 4 L.B.R. 340, 9 Cr.L.J. 25,

It is the duty of the Appellate Court in every case to examine the evidence for itself and to give to the accused person the benefit of any reasonable doubt which it may entertain after such examination. Doubtless, an Appellate Court should not lightly disturb the conclusion of a Court of first instance, and should give due weight to the fact that the witnesses received credit from the Court before which their depositions were given but in every case it is the duty of an Appellate Court to arrive at an independent opinion—Yacoub, 2 Weir 535. The Appellate Court should ordinarily have very strong grounds for differing from the appreciation of evidence of the trial Court which had the advantage of seeing the witnesses and noting their demeanour; but where such grounds exist, it should interfere—Jalal, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 22 (25), 30 S.L.R. 456, 167 I.C. 75, 9 R.S. 162. In an appeal from a conviction and sentence, it is for the Appellate Court to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond all reasonable doubt. It is not for the appellants to satisfy the Appellate Court that the first Court had come to a wrong finding—Kanchan, 42 Cal. 374. It is the duty of the Appellate Court to consider the evidence both oral and documentary, and to apply its mind to the case before recording a judgment therein. Where the Appellate Court fails to do this, the judgment cannot be said to be a judgment in accordance with law—Naram, 21 Cr.L.J. 648, 57 I.C. 664, 1 P.L.T. 716. An accused is entitled to the judgment of an Appellate Court in every case in which an appeal is open to him. But if the Appellate Court does not do its duty the remedy lies only in an application for revision under sec. 439, Cr. P. C. It is true the accused can approach the Sessions Judge for a reference to the High Court under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., but in the end it is the High Court which deals with the matter, and its powers are contained in sec. 439. Under that the High Court may, if it so desires, exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by this section; that is, it may itself hear the appeal and dispose of it—Bapurao Annaji Khond, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 160, 1936 Cr.C. 715, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 38.

In all cases in which the Court sits in criminal appeal, it has to consider the case against the appellant bearing in mind exactly the same principles as must be borne in mind by the Court of trial in the first instance. The appellant does not come here as one who has been convicted and has to satisfy the Court beyond all reasonable doubt that he has been wrongly convicted. If after a conviction before a Subordinate Court the Court of Appeal comes to the conclusion that there may have been a miscarriage of justice, the Appellate Court cannot allow the conviction to stand. The task of the appellant is, therefore, to bring before the consideration of the Appellate Court such matters as may cast a reasonable doubt of his guilt, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. It is true that a Sessions Judge hears and sees the witnesses and in many cases his opinion as to their demeanour or truthfulness may be of the highest value, and an Appellate Court should not lightly disregard the conclusion at which for properly expressed reasons he arrived. On the other hand, that does not absolve the Appellate Court from an independent duty of scrutinizing the evidence with care and of being satisfied not that a reasonable person might have come to the conclusion which the Sessions Judge came to, but that no reasonable person could have come to any other conclusion but that the accused was guilty of the offence charged against him—Nga Kjaw Hla v. The King, 39 Cr.L.J. 248 (250), 173 I.C. 94, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 45, 10 R.R. 306.

It is somewhat unusual, though quite legal course of hearing and deciding certain law points by a preliminary order before proceeding to hear the appeal on the merits—Nana v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 197 (198), 179 I.C. 317, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283, 1938 N.L.J. 90.

When an inspection of the scene of the occurrence is material either to the case for the prosecution or for the defence, it is desirable that the Appellate Court should inspect the spot—Bhagwan Kaur, 1911, P.W.R. 16, 12 Cr.L.J. 412 (F.B.).

When an Appellate Court does not dismiss an appeal summarily, it must dispose of it in the manner provided by this section. It has no power to refer to the High Court for decision on a question of law arising in an appeal—Sulaiman, 7 L.B.R. 251, 15 Cr.L.J. 667.

In dealing with a case under this section, there is no restriction on the powers of the Appellate Court to dispose of the case in any of the manners provided by this section; it can acquit the accused, or order a retrial or order the accused to be committed, etc.—Taju Pramanik, 25 Cal. 711; Ramprasad, 26 Cr.L.J. 1090 (1091), 88 I.C. 178, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 53.

The Appellate Court can hear the respondent on other legal points besides replying to the points specifically taken in the grounds of appeal—Terhi, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 108 (110), 1935 O.W.N. 1153, 1935 O.L.R. 684, 158 I.C. 913.

The power given to an Appellate Court under this section is not an unlimited power, but is to be taken as giving the Appellate Court power to do only that which the lower Court could and should have done. The Court of Appeal is not competent to alter the finding of a Magistrate so as to convict an accused person of an offence which the Court whose order is under appeal was not competent to try—Muthia Chetty, 29 Mad. 190, 3 Cr.L.J. 461; Maung E Maung v. The King, 41 Cr.L.J. 621 (623), 188 I.C. 539, A.I.R. 1910 Rang. 118, 1940 Rang. 215.

Sentence :—The power of an Appellate Court to pass sentence is measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment or order the appeal has been made. Therefore, an Appellate Court when passing a sentence on appeal cannot pass a sentence which the original Court was not competent to pass—Muhammad Yakub, 45 All. 594; Mehi Singh v. Mangal, 39 Cal. 157; Subbaya, 12 Mad. 451; Sitaram, 11 I.C. 788, 7 N.L.R. 109, 12 Cr.L.J. 444; Maung E Maung v. The King, supra. Thus, where a second class Magistrate passed a sentence of 4 months' imprisonment, but the District Magistrate on appeal altered the sentence into a fine of Rs. 400, held that the sentence passed by the Appellate Court was ultra vires, because the second class Magistrate could not have awarded a fine of Rs. 400 (sec. 32)—Muhammad Yakub, 45 All. 594.

Perusal of record :—The Appellate Court must peruse the whole record, and not merely the judgment of the Lower Court. A decision based upon a perusal of the judgment alone is not valid, and the appeal must be reheard—Abbash Ali, 14 Cr.L.J. 182 (183) (Cal.). An appeal may be dismissed summarily under sec. 421 without perusal of the record, and upon perusal of the copy of the judgment alone. But under sec. 423, the records must be called for and perused. If the records of the case are lost, it is the duty of the Appellate Court to order a new trial—Khimat Singh, 1889 A.W.N. 55.

No dismissal for default of appearance :—If the appeal is not dismissed summarily under sec. 421, the Appellate Court is bound to peruse the record and consider whether there is any ground for interference with the acquittal or conviction, even though the appellant does not appear. The Appellate Court must dispose of the appeal on the merits, and is not entitled to dismiss an appeal for default of appearance of the appellant—Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (187) (F.B.); Bansi Mirdha, 50 Cal. 927, 27 C.W.N. 947; Ramchandra, 24 Cr.L.J. 662, 21 A.L.J. 100; Ram Bharose, 14 A.L.J. 327, 17 Cr.L.J. 353; Trimbak, 50 Bom. 673, 27 Cr.L.J. 1167; Kuldip, 6 Pat. 16, 100 I.C. 831, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 176, 8 P.L.T. 376, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 473, 28 Cr.L.J. 351; Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553; Balkaran, 6 O.L.J. 370, 20 Cr.L.J. 744, 50 I.C. 152; Din Muhammad, 35 Cr.L.J. 963, 148 I.C. 1078, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 21, 1934 Cr.C. 522, A.L.R. 1934 Pesh. 37.

Adjournment :—If the hearing of the appeal is adjourned to another date, notice of the adjournment should be given to the appellant—Shambehari, 20 Cr.L.J. 271 (Pat.). Where a Magistrate disposed of an appeal before the day fixed for the adjourned hearing, and without giving notice to the appellant or his pleader, it was held that the procedure was illegal—Shanmugam v. Alagia, 2 Weir 475.

Sufficient ground for interference :—An appellant is not precisely in the same position before an Appellate Court as he is before the Court trying him, but must satisfy the Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the order of conviction. If no sufficient ground has been shown, it is the duty of the Appellate Court not to interfere—Sajwan, 5 All. 386.

1139. Dismiss the appeal:—Where an appeal is admitted and dealt with under this section, the Appellate Court can dismiss the appeal only on the merits, and has no power to dismiss it summarily (e.g., without perusing the records and without giving notice under sec. 422)—Gopala, 1 Bom.L.R. 225; Ram Hari v. Santosh, 23 Cr.L.J. 733 (Cal.); Virasami, 2 Weir 474 (475); Neua Lal, 4 P.L.T. 552, 24 Cr.L.J. 453, A.I.R. 1923 Pat. 363; Ta Pu, 3 Bur.L.J. 18, 81 I.C. 549, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 294, 25 Cr.L.J. 933. An appeal can be summarily dismissed only under sec. 421; whereas sec. 423 contemplates the regular hearing or consideration of the appeal which has not been summarily dismissed under sec. 421.

1140. Right of parties to be heard:—If the appellant is present or is represented by a pleader, the appellant in person or his pleader must be heard—Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (187), 20 Cr.L.J. 271 (F.B.). But where the Appellate Court disposed of the appeal on the merits after perusing the records and considering the grounds of appeal, the judgment of the Appellate Court would not be set aside on the mere ground that the pleader for the accused was not heard in the Appellate Court (the pleader being prevented from appearing in time on account of a railway strike)—Olayet Khan, 1 Pat. 589 (590), 24 Cr.L.J. 118. But see Venkatakrishnayya v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 91 where the High Court ordered a re-hearing of the appeal by a different Judge as it was dismissed at 7-30 A.M. on the fixed date on the merits without hearing the pleader who appeared before the Court on the same day at 10 A.M. and pleaded for a hearing on the ground that he was not aware of the fact that the time of hearing was 7-30 A.M. Where the appellant's Counsel was not prepared to, and did not, argue the case on the merits, after he had failed to persuade the Appellate Court that his client was entitled to a postponement of the hearing until an investigation had been made into the allegations which he then made and the judgment of the Appellate Court, however, showed that without the assistance of the appellant's Counsel the Judge himself examined the evidence against the appellant and satisfied himself that the convictions were well-founded, it could not be said that there had been no hearing of the appeal against the conviction within the meaning of this section—Kewal Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 1354 (1355), 153 I.C. 324, 16 P.L.T. 693, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 515.

If the appellant is in jail and is not represented by a pleader, he may be heard in person—Kotina, 2 Weir 472 (473); and the Appellate Court has power to direct that the prisoner be brought before it—Anonymous, 2 Weir 473. If the appellant, who is in jail, is not represented by a pleader, and if on receipt of the notice under sec. 422, he desires to be heard in person, he must be allowed to appear in person at the hearing of the appeal, and the Appellate Court must arrange for the appellant to be produced in Court—Lal Bahadur, 50 All. 543, 26 A.L.J. 275, 29 Cr.L.J. 384 (385) (F.B.), dissenting from Pohpi, 13 All. 171 (F.B.) and Ram Prasad, 4 O.W.N. 638, 103 I.C. 477, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 312, 28 Cr.L.J. 679, where it has been held that an appellant from jail has no right to appear at the hearing of the appeal. The Sind Court is of opinion that an appellant in jail cannot appear in person in Court—Loung, 20 S.L.R. 182, 27 Cr.L.J. 933 (934), 96 I.C. 389.

A complainant cannot claim as of right to be heard in the appeal. The matter is one which may be left in each case to the discretion of the Court—Anonymous, 2 Weir 476, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 42. A private prosecutor as such has no right to be heard, but the Court may grant permission in any particular case—Akbar, 1886 P.R. 23; Dowlatabam, 9 C.W.N. 1x. It is true that in some cases it has been held that it may be advantageous to the Appellate Court to allow the complainant to support the judgment. But where the Appellate Court did not exercise its discretion on the point in favour of the complainant it cannot be said that it did something that was wrong in law—Behari v. Her, 33 Cr.L.J. 305, 136 I.C. 474, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 61, 35 C.W.N. 976, 54 C.L.J. 1932 Cr.C. 9.

If the Public Prosecutor does not appear on behalf of the Government, a vakil privately instructed to support the prosecution may be heard—Anonymous, 2 Weir 476.

There is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for allowing the complainant to be heard when the Crown does not wish to argue the case. It is, however, open to the Appellate Court to hear the complainant in suitable cases, and a discretion in this matter is left to the Appellate Court and it is for the Appellate Court's consideration whether in the circumstances of the case it should not allow the complainant to be represented—Raghunathmal Shermal Marwadi v. Putiram Sadaram, A.I.R. 1937 Nag 394 (396), 172 I.C. 177, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 157, 10 R.N. 172, 39 Cr.L.J. 219. The strict rule is that in an appeal against a conviction only the Crown is entitled to be served with notice, and heard. Notice is served on an officer on behalf of the Local Government under sec. 422, Cr. P. C., and nobody but the Crown is entitled to be heard, because no private citizen is technically interested in upholding a conviction. The true rule, which should be followed in all Courts, is that in private prosecutions the Court in its discretion may allow the complainant to appear by an Advocate, but it is not in any case bound to do so—Paragji Bhulabhai v. Bhagwanji Bawabhai, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 14, 41 Bom.L.R. 1231, 41 Cr.L.J. 245, 185 I.C. 795.

The counsel for the appellant has a right of reply. There is nothing in the language of this section to preclude the appellant or his pleader from replying to the arguments of the Public Prosecutor, and as a matter of principle such right of reply should be conceded to him. The practice of the High Court has been uniformly in favour of allowing this right to the appellant or his pleader—Buta Singh, 18 Cr.L.J. 3, 1917 P.R. 21; Amanat v. Vagendra, 38 Cal 307. The Oudh Court holds that although the appellant's counsel has no right of reply, still it is a privilege which should not be ordinarily be refused—Prag, 11 O.L.J. 693, 1 O.W.N. 473, 25 Cr.L.J. 1169; Bahra, 25 Cr.L.J. 1173, 82 I.C. 37, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 50.

If the parties are to be heard at all, they must be heard in each others' presence and if the respondent is heard the appellant shall have a right to reply—Bhotali v. Kalu, 33 Cr.L.J. 775, 36 C.W.N. 699, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 856, 1932 Cr.C. 887, 139 I.C. 493, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 621.

The respondent is entitled to raise other legal points, besides replying to the points specifically taken in the grounds of appeal—Terhi, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 108 (110), 158 I.C. 913, 1935 O.L.R. 684, 1935 O.W.N. 1153, 36 Cr.L.J. 1467.

1141. Clause (a)—Appeal from acquittal:—Clause (a) of this section can apply only to the High Court, because sec. 417 which provides for appeals against orders of acquittal requires that such appeals shall be to the High Court—Rangasami v. Narasimhalu, 7 Mad 213, 2 Weir 477.

Clause (b) of sec. 423 (1), Cr. P. C., does not apply to cases of acquittal, partial or total, but to cases of conviction, and clause (a) applies to cases of acquittal; and if the appellate powers of the High Court are to be exercised to convert an acquittal into a conviction, then they should be exercised on an appeal against an acquittal under sec. 423 (1) (a) and not on an appeal against a conviction under sec. 423 (1) (b) Cr. P. Code—Jado Rahim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Sind 202, 178 I.C. 520, 40 Cr.L.J. 93.

As to the grounds on which the High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal, see Note 1120 under sec. 417.

An appeal against an order of acquittal in a case tried by jury must be supported by a ground which is covered by sec. 418, which provides in cases of trial by jury, for an appeal on a matter of law only. Where the Local Government appealed against an order of acquittal, and the grounds upon which the appeal was sought to be preferred were questions of fact, the High Court rejected the appeal—Parmeshur, 10 Cal. 1029.

The High Court, in exercising jurisdiction in the matter of appeals against acquittals, should confine its exercise to the particular acquittal complained of by the Government. At the same time it would not be proper for the High Court to consider the appeal on grounds not contained in the objection urged on behalf of the Government—Karigowda, 19 Bom. 51 (68). But see Jhina Soma, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 457 (459), I.L.R. 1939 Bom. 648, 41 Cr.L.J. 176, 185 I.C. 382, 41 Bom.L.R. 965.

The words "that the accused be re-tried" in this clause do not apply to a case where the order of acquittal is passed on appeal and the High Court is, therefore, bound to come to a decision on the facts—U Kadoo, 37 Cr.L.J. 1008 (1009), 164 I.C. 769, A.I.R. Rang. 369, 1936 Cr.C. 771.

Acquittal :—This clause confers a power to direct further inquiry only in respect of a case of an appeal from an order of acquittal, and not in a case in which an order of discharge or dismissal may have been passed—Charanbala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126.

'Find him guilty' :—These words do not necessarily mean that the Appellate Court can find the accused guilty only of the offence of which he has been acquitted by the trial Court, and not of any other offence. The Appellate Court can certainly convict the accused of another offence or of a minor offence covered by the offence of which he has been acquitted, under the provisions of sec. 237 or 238, read with sec. 423, provided no prejudice has been caused to the accused—Ismail, 52 Bom. 385, 29 Cr.L.J. 403 (405), 30 Bom.L.R. 330; Kauromal, 25 Cr.L.J. 1057 (1059), A.I.R. 1925 Sind 105, 81 I.C. 881.

1142. Clause (b)—Appeal from conviction:—If an accused, who is charged with several offences, is convicted of some of the offences and acquitted of the others, and appeals, the case is one of 'appeal from conviction' and not of appeal from acquittal; consequently sec. 417 does not apply—Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975 (978, 980).

When the prosecution brings a false case it is almost impossible to bring out a new one in the Court of appeal—Moslem Khalife v. Emp, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 350, 41 Cr.L.J. 792, 189 I.C. 734.

In an appeal from a conviction, the Appellate Court may, if it likes, take further evidence (sec. 428) but cannot direct further inquiry—Muhammad Ata, 19 A.L.J. 961, 23 Cr.L.J. 402.

An Appellate Court is not competent to set aside a conviction merely on the ground that all the witnesses cited for the defence have not been examined. The proper course in such a case is to have the evidence taken of the other witnesses before disposing of the appeal—Turaka Pakir, 2 Weir 481. A conviction ought not to be reversed unless the admission of the rejected evidence would have affected the result of the trial—Pitambar, 2 Bom. 61. The proper procedure on appeal in a case where the Lower Court had refused to take the defence of the accused, is to set aside the conviction and sentence passed by the Lower Court, and order the Magistrate to begin the proceedings anew against the accused from the stage when his evidence was refused—Gohar, 1884 P.R. 28.

Appellate Court cannot itself try the accused :—After reversing the finding and sentence, the Appellate Court can order the accused either to be retried by a competent Court or to be committed for trial. The Appellate Court cannot itself frame a charge against the accused, and hold a regular trial and convict the accused of another offence—C. C. Sircar, 3 Rang. 68, 4 Bur.L.J. 29, 26 Cr.L.J. 1119 (1120).

Power to acquit :—When an Appellate Court set aside a verdict of the jury on the ground of misdirection, it is open to that Court to acquit the accused. At the same time, as a matter of practice the proper course in such cases is to direct a re-trial. It is only in special circumstances that an Appellate Court would be justified in acquitting—Dhiraji v. Akasi, 24 A.L.J. 506, 27 Cr.L.J. 785, 95 I.C. 385, A.I.R. 1926 All. 429.

Power to consider case of non-appealing accused :—See Note 1213 under sec. 439 and Jalal in Note 1147.

1143. Re-trial:—A Sessions Judge has power to order a new trial when the case comes before him in appeal. This power should, however, be sparingly exercised and a re-trial should not be ordered unless there are grave reasons for doing so—Moman Lal, 13 A.L.J. 477, 16 Cr.L.J. 433.

Before quashing a conviction and ordering a new trial on the ground that the accused has been convicted under a wrong section, the Appellate Court must come to a certain conclusion as to the offence which the accused was shown by the evidence to have committed, and it ought to consider whether, if the evidence showed that the accused should properly have been convicted of other offence than that he was charged with, he would be prejudiced by amending the conviction. Before ordering a re-trial, the Appellate Court is bound to see what possible object could be served by a fresh trial—Iyachikone, 2 Weir 480.

The order directing a partial re-trial can certainly not be supported. The Appellate Court can either direct a complete re-trial or call for further evidence to be placed before itself—Ramchandra Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 657 (658), 168 I.C. 979, 3 B.R. 508, 18 P.L.T. 483, 9 R.P. 522, 1937 P.W.N. 519, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 246.

When retrial may be ordered:—It is rather for supplying formal defects that an Appellate Court orders retrial—Dara Lakshmi v. Garine Satyakarayan, 32 Cr.L.J. 749, 131 I.C. 454, 1930 M.W.N. 1215, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 227, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 518, 1931 Cr.C. 323, following Varadarajulu, 51 Mad. 343, 42 Mad. 885, 20 Cr.L.J. 455, 37 M.L.J. 81, 1919 M.W.N. 669. A retrial may be ordered where the trial is held to be illegal on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the Court that tried the case—Sukha, 8 All. 14; Hamdu, 3 Bur.L.T. 9, 11 Cr.L.J. 684. Thus, where an offence triable only by a Magistrate of the 1st class or Court of Session was tried by a second class Magistrate, the Appellate Court may order the accused to be retried by a 1st class Magistrate or by the Court of Session—Sukha, 8 All. 14 (17). The power of the Appellate Court is not confined to cases where the conviction and sentence are set aside for want of jurisdiction in the trying Magistrate. It may order a retrial if it is of opinion that much necessary evidence had not been adduced and much documentary evidence had not been exhibited in the trial Court, and that a full and complete inquiry into the real facts is advisable—Satish Chandra, 27 Cal. 172 (174); Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (468). But it is an established principle of criminal law that if the evidence actually adduced by the prosecution is insufficient to support a conviction, a re-trial cannot be ordered simply to give the prosecution another chance of producing further and better evidence—Tripurari Bhattacharjee v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 604 (605), 175 I.C. 514, 10 R.C. 797, 42 C.W.N. 812, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 361. Where the case originally made out against the appellant has failed through the absence of sufficient evidence, the appellant should be acquitted, and no order of remand for the purpose of allowing the prosecution to supply deficiencies in their original case should be passed—Suresh Chandra De v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 56, 178 I.C. 415, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 782. See also Sochiram v. Emp., under the heading "when re-trial should not be ordered." A retrial would be proper where the accused was rightly acquitted of one offence, but the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that he ought to have been tried for another, or where persons who ought not to have been tried together have been so tried—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (468). A retrial should be ordered if the Appellate Court is of opinion that the applicant ought to have been convicted of an offence different from that with which he was charged in the Lower Court—Ram Prasad, 1882 A.W.N. 112; or where there has been a misdirection to the jury—Sadhu Sheikh, 4 C.W.N. 576 (582); or if there was a misjoinder of charges or misjoinder of parties in the trial Court, and the Judge's charge to the jury was defective—Birendra, 30 Cal. 822 (830); Kumudini Kanta, 28 Cal. 104; Hamdu, 3 Bur.L.T. 9, 8 I.C. 594. An Appellate Court may order a retrial on the ground that the trial Court had omitted to consider an important piece of documentary evidence, and that there was a gross mistake in drawing up the charge—Sheoparsan, 28 Cr.L.J. 893, 104 I.C. 909, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 50, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 40; or on the ground that the Lower Court has committed an error in procedure in convicting the accused upon evidence which was not given in their presence—Pera Naicken, 2 Weir 481 (482); or on the ground that in the trial Court there was an irregularity in the procedure by which material evidence was excluded—Sadashiv, Ratanlal 938 (939); or on the ground that there has been no fair trial of the accused—Najab Gul Mohammad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 741, 169 I.C. 257, 9 R.Pesh. 143, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 71. A Sessions Judge has power to direct a retrial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner he thinks fit, on the ground that the accused has been misled in their defence by the absence of a charge or by a defect in the charge—Sarat Chandra, 7 C.W.N. 301; see also Manna, 9 N.L.R. 42, 14 Cr.L.J. 230. Where the trial Court has failed to record a judgment in conformity with section 367, the proper procedure for the Appellate Court is to reverse the order of the Court below and to remand the case for a trial de novo—Karupiah, 1920 M.W.N. 120, 21 Cr.L.J. 52, 54 I.C. 404.

The power of setting aside convictions and ordering a new trial for any error or defect in the Judge's charge to the jury will be exercised by the High Court, only when the Court is satisfied that the accused has been prejudiced by error or defect or that a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby—Samarendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 673 (681), 169 I.C. 48, 15 Pat. 817, 18 P.L.T. 535, 9 R.P. 526, 3 B.R. 514, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 263. But where the evidence would not, on any proper view of the case, support of conviction, it would be worse than useless to send back the case for a new trial in order that a jury may have the opportunity of convicting upon such evidence on a proper summing-up—Queen v. Elahi Bux, 5 W.R. 80 (88) (Cr.), Beng.L.R. Sup. Vol. 459; Goloke Behari Takal v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 161 (168), I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 290, 173 I.C. 65, 10 R.C. 441, 66 C.L.J. 225, 42 C.W.N. 129, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 51.

Where the High Court on appeal set aside the verdict of the jury who convicted the accused, and observing that it would be open to the Crown to proceed further with the case if so advised, directed the petitioner to be released on bail until fresh trial, if any, it was held that the order amounted to an order of retrial—Beni Madhab, 46 Cal. 212, 23 C.W.N. 94, 20 Cr.L.J. 225.

Scope of retrial:—Where an Appellate Court reverses the verdict of a jury and orders a retrial, such retrial, unless the Appellate Court has limited the scope, must be taken to be one upon all the charges originally framed—Krishna Dhan, 22 Cal. 377; Nizamuddin, 15 I.C. 641, 13 Cr.L.J. 497, 40 Cal. 163; Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975; Jamiruddi, 16 I.C. 523, 16 C.W.N. 909, 13 Cr.L.J. 715; Abdul Khan, 39 C.W.N. 677, 62 Cal. 928, 62 C.L.J. 217, 37 Cr.L.J. 707, 162 I.C. 931.

In Abdul Khan's case Lord-Williams, J. (Jack, J. dissenting) has held that when an accused is tried by jury under two charges and on being acquitted under one and convicted under the other, he appeals and on such appeal his conviction and sentence are set aside and a re-trial ordered, such order cannot cover or authorise a re-trial under the charge of which the accused was acquitted and re-trial under that charge is illegal. This view was also taken in Nitya Gopal, 36 Cr.L.J. 553, 154 I.C. 609, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 120, 38 C.W.N. 1128, 1935 Cr.C. 155; Naimuddin Biswas, 40 C.W.N. 666, 63 C.L.J. 124, 63 Cal. 112. The Allahabad and Lahore High Courts have also taken the same view—Lala, A.I.R. 1933 All. 941, 148 I.C. 339, 56 All. 210, 1933 Cr.C. 1561, 1933 A.L.J. 1446, 35 Cr.L.J. 668; Motiram, 38 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1936 All. 758, 165 I.C. 734, 1936 A.L.J. 1083, 1936 Cr.C. 999; Ali Muhammad, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 945, 37 P.L.R. 564, 37 Cr.L.J. 303, 160 I.C. 363, 1935 Cr.C. 1284.

In Kamala Kanta v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 1112 (1115) the Calcutta High Court has, however, laid down that it is only common sense that, when once the conviction and sentence have been set aside and a retrial ordered, the whole matter should be re-opened. In this case all the previous rulings of the Calcutta High Court on this point were discussed and the rulings mentioned in the last paragraph were dissented from and those mentioned in the last but one paragraph were followed.

But it cannot be laid down as a general rule that a retrial necessarily opens up the whole case. In cases falling within sec. 236 of this Code, where a retrial is ordered without any express limitation, it must be taken to mean the retrial of the whole case. But in cases not falling under sec. 236, that is, where an accused person is charged at one trial with distinct offences constituted by distinct acts, a different principle would apply—Krishna Dhan, supra. In cases falling within sec. 236, there is one set of facts which may be viewed in different ways. When a retrial is ordered, the whole facts are necessarily reopened and nothing can prevent the jury in the second trial from coming to any verdict that they consider right upon the facts proved before them. But where there are two different sets of facts and a verdict has been given on one set which no one impugns, then there is no reason why, when an appeal is brought on the other set of facts, the order for retrial should reopen both—Abdul Hamid, 6 Pat. 208, 27 Cr.L.J. 1100 (1102), 97 I.C. 364, A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 13, 8 P.L.T. 12.

It is doubtful whether the Appellate Court can order a retrial of the accused for a graver offence than that for which he has been convicted—Bir Singh, 28 P.L.R. 166, 28 Cr.L.J. 575, 102 I.C. 511, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 733.

Where an order of retrial is passed by an Appellate Court, the Court cannot restrict the evidence to be taken to that mentioned in its order, but it should order the case to be retried in view of the instructions contained in its order. The accused is entitled to adduce such additional evidence as he may desire—Mir Sarwarjan, 3 C.L.J. 303. Thus, where in an appeal from a conviction, the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and ordered a retrial, but at the same time directed that the evidence already on the record should be treated as evidence in the case, it was held that the direction was contrary to the provisions of secs. 423 and 428 and was therefore illegal—Bhado, 3 P.L.W. 224, 19 Cr.L.J. 77, 43 I.C. 109; Potram, 36 Cr.L.J. 740 (742), 155 I.C. 258, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 125. When the Appellate Court thinks that two documents, admitted in evidence without objection, ought to be proved, that the examination of the accused under sec. 342 had not been satisfactory and that the accused should be examined afresh, two courses are open to it. One is to proceed under sec. 428, that is to say, to keep the appeal pending on his own file while directing additional evidence to be taken by a Magistrate and duly certified to the Appellate Court which would then dispose of the appeal under sec. 428 (2), Cr. P. C. The other course is under this section to set aside the conviction and order the accused to be re-tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction. The Appellate Court cannot, however, pass an order setting aside the conviction and sending the case back for further evidence but not for complete re-trial—Sri Krishna Prasad Sinha, 37 Cr.L.J. 906, 164 I.C. 184, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 438, 17 P.L.T. 444, 1936 Cr.C. 699, following Gajanand Thakur, 1 Pat.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1916 Pat. 219, 35 I.C. 508, 17 Cr.L.J. 332. If there is to be a re-trial, the accused is entitled to demand that there shall be a de novo trial—Potram and Sri Krishna Prasad Sinha, supra.

When retrial should not be ordered:—After reversing a conviction and sentence an Appellate Court cannot order an innocent man to be re-tried without formulating a charge—Dara Lakshmi v. Garine Satyanarayana, 32 Cr.L.J. 749, 131 I.C. 454, 1930 M.W.N. 1215, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 227, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 518, 1931 Cr.C. 323. A re-trial in a criminal case should not be ordered too lightly and should be avoided, as much as possible. A re-trial certainly should not be ordered where it can be established that there is really no evidence to go before a jury; because, to order a re-trial in such circumstances would be to put the accused to unnecessary harassment—Rafiqueuddin, 40 C.W.N. 368 (374), 36 Cr.L.J. 808, 155 I.C. 687, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 184, 1935 Cr.C. 241, 62 Cal. 572. See also Dharanidhar, 59 C.L.J. 15. The mere fact that the Appellate Court finds the decision of the Lower Court not so satisfactory as it should have been, does not authorise the Appellate Court to pass an order remanding the case to the Lower Court with instructions to write out a proper judgment—Tara Chand, 32 Cal. 1069. Where a Sessions Judge on appeal thinks that the evidence of some more witnesses, who were not examined in the Lower Court, is necessary, he should proceed under sec. 428 (1) and cannot order retrial on that ground—Luchman, 31 Cal. 710; Israr Prasad, 16 A.L.J. 325, 19 Cr.L.J. 485, 45 I.C. 149. Where the prosecution wanted to let in evidence necessary to prove the offence, but the Magistrate refused to take that evidence, stating that it was unnecessary, the case was a proper one in which retrial could be ordered or in which the Court could properly call for additional evidence under sec. 428; but as a new trial would involve much unnecessary delay and expense, it is more convenient to order additional evidence to be taken than to order a retrial—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (450). Where the evidence recorded by the Magistrate as full as the law requires and there is no irregularity in the procedure, it is not competent to a Sessions Judge on appeal to order a retrial. He must consider the case on the evidence before him and proceed to judgment—Maganlal, Ratanlal 530; Boudville, 1 Bur.L.J. 32. In the absence of any material irregularity in a trial in which all available evidence was produced, an order of re-trial would merely amount to an expression of dissatisfaction with the result. It is established practice in all the High Courts in India that an order of re-trial should not be given merely because the revisionable authority disagrees with the trial Judge as to the offences constituted by proved facts—Bauar Shah, 37 Cr.L.J. 1039 (1043), 164 I.C. 889, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 172. See also Molniam, 38 Cr.L.J. 71 (72), 165 I.C. 734, A.I.R. 1936 All 758, 1936 A.L.J. 1083, 1936 Cr.C. 999. The mere fact that an inadmissible or irrelevant evidence has been admitted by the Lower Court does not justify a retrial. Such evidence may be left out of consideration—Boudville, 1 Bur.L.J. 32; Wajadar, 21 Cal. 955 (970); Ramaswami Ayyar v. Chittoor Municipality, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 685, 1940 M.W.N. 386, 51 M.L.W. 542, 1940 M.Cr.C. 108, 41 Cr.L.J. 897, 190 I.C. 317. The Appellate Court ought not to send the case back for retrial unless there is some material already on the record tending to indicate that the offence has been committed, or unless the Appellate Court was given by the prosecution sufficient assurance indicating that there would be produced practically unimpeachable evidence of the offences if a retrial is ordered—Mogambara, 28 M.L.J. 379, 17 Cr.L.J. 193. Where the prosecution has failed to prove its main case, the Appellate Court should acquit the accused without ordering a retrial on the chance that some better evidence may be produced by the prosecution—Subramanyam, 1931 M.W.N. 517. See also Tripurari Bhattacharjee v. Emp., and Suresh Chandra De v. Emp., under the heading "when the re-trial may be ordered". Where the prosecution has failed to adduce the necessary evidence which would justify the conviction of the accused, they should not be allowed another opportunity to fill in the gaps which were deliberately left by them. The prosecution must realize that they are required and expected to produce all the relevant and available evidence in order to bring home the charge to the accused and they cannot be allowed to produce evidence at their pleasure piece-meal—Sochnam v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 278, 173 I.C. 12, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 39, 18 P.L.T. 871, 4 B.R. 218, 10 R.P. 389. Where far from there being a certainty, there is not even much probability that, in the event of a retrial, there would be a conviction, the Appellate Court should refrain from ordering a retrial, especially when the first trial had taken up a considerable portion of public time and the expense of a new trial would be very heavy—Khim Chand, 35 Cr.L.J. 1477 (1479), 151 I.C. 934, A.L.R. 1934 Bom. 308, 36 Bom.L.R. 639, 1934 Cr.C. 1036, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 303.

Where there is undoubtedly enmity between the parties in the case and the Court is very doubtful as to the value of any evidence adduced upon a re-hearing in the case, it would be dangerous to order a re-hearing—Feroze Kazi v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 267 (271).

Where the prosecution is launched not with any desire to vindicate the law in the public interest but only with a view to humiliate the accused, it is not fair or advisable for the High Court to play into the hands of a party by ordering a re-trial in order to enable him to satisfy his grudge, especially where the public interest has been sufficiently protected for future—Ghaziabad Municipality v. Harsaran Das, A.I.R. 1939 All. 19 (21), 1939 A.L.J. 1034, 41 Cr.L.J. 281, 186 I.C. 261.

By a Court of competent jurisdiction:—Under this section, when an Appellate Court orders a retrial, it can specify the Court by which the appellant is to be retried. There is nothing in this section which prevents such specification—Kasturbhai, Ratanlal 367. See also Amor, 34 Cr.L.J. 320 (322), 142 I.C. 310, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 259, 37 C.W.N. 481, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 364, 1933 Cr.C. 500, 60 Cal. 814.

If the Appellate Court finds that the accused had committed an offence triable by a Magistrate of the first class but has been tried by a 2nd class Magistrate through oversight or under a misapprehension, the Appellate Court may order the accused to be retried by a Court competent to try the offence, i.e., by a first class Magistrate—

Sukha, 8 All. 14 (17). Even if the Lower Court was competent to try the offence, the Appellate Court may order the retrial by another Court of competent jurisdiction—Shaik Ali, L B R. (1893—1900) 238.

Under the provisions of this section, the retrial, if ordered, must be by a Court of competent jurisdiction 'subordinate to the Appellate Court,' and, therefore, an Appellate Court cannot direct a case to be retried by itself—Fakira, Ratanlal 982; Dhiraji v. Akasi, 24 A.L.J. 506, 95 I.C. 385, A.I.R. 1926 All. 429, 27 Cr.L.J. 785. But in Manikka, 30 Mad. 228 and Vedakadeth Kanaran, 2 Weir 481, it has been held that the words 'Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court' are not to be taken as words of limitation, and do not exclude the power of the Appellate Court of itself trying the offender when the offence is within the jurisdiction of the Appellate Court. But if the accused has been tried before a jury, and the High Court, on appeal, sets aside the conviction on the ground of misdirection, the accused is entitled to be re-tried before a jury, and as a matter of procedure and in justice to the accused, this course should be adopted. It is doubtful whether the High Court can, under this section, retry the case itself—Sadhu Sheikh, 4 C.W.N. 576 (581, 582). An order of retrial which directs that a case which has originally been heard before a jury should be reheard before a Court without a jury, is an order that ought not to be made unless it is justified by exceptional circumstances. There is jurisdiction to make it, but it is obvious that it has, and is likely to have, a very serious effect upon the rights of the accused, and his privilege which he previously enjoyed of trial by a jury he ought in general to retain—Hari, 36 Cr.L.J. 978 (980), 156 I.C. 3, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 122, 1935 O.W.N. 744, 39 C.W.N. 929 (P.C.).

If an order for re-trial is made by the High Court and it is not stated in the order whether the re-trial is to be held by the same Magistrate or by some other Magistrate, then it should not be presumed that it was the intention of the High Court to direct that the re-trial should be held by the same Magistrate. Under these circumstances the matter is left entirely in the discretion of the Magistrate who has got to appoint the Court by which the case is to be tried—Bali Ram Kalwar v. Sitaram Kalwar, 30 C.W.N. 1002 (1003), A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1173.

The question whether a trial before a particular Magistrate is expedient for the ends of justice or not is a question which has got to be considered from the point of view of the accused person as well, and unless it is impossible to get a Magistrate other than the one who has already convicted the accused person on the same charge at a previous trial, or unless there be circumstances which would necessitate the trial of the same case before the same Magistrate over again, it is desirable that the trial should not be held before the same Magistrate—Bali Ram Kalwar v. Sitaram Kalwar, supra.

The Appellate Court may order the retrial to be held by any Court of competent jurisdiction. The High Court has power under this section to order a retrial of the appeal by the Lower Appellate Court—Chanda Singh, 1913 P.L.R. 7, 13 Cr.L.J. 737. See Note 1091.

1144. Order of commitment:—If the Appellate Court finds that the accused has committed an offence which the Lower Court was not competent to try, the Appellate Court may order a retrial by a Court of competent jurisdiction; and if there is no Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to the Appellate Court, it ought to direct the committal of the accused to the Sessions—Chinna, 2 Weir 484 (485). Where the accused who has committed an offence triable solely by the Sessions Court, has been tried by a Magistrate, the Appellate Court is competent to direct a committal to the Sessions—Sukha, 8 All. 14 (17); Hasan Raza, 20 A.L.J. 568. In Sukha, supra, Brodhurst, J., expressed the opinion that an Appellate Court can order a commitment only where the offence committed by the accused is triable exclusively by the Court of Session. But this view has been dissented from in the following cases, where it has been laid down that even if the offence be not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, the Appellate Court is still competent to direct a committal to the Sessions—Misri Lal v. Lachmi, 23 Cal. 350 (351); Maula Baksh, 15 All. 205 (206); Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580 (584). This section gives the Appellate Court the power to order an accused person to be committed to the Sessions, when it considers that that is the procedure which should have been adopted by the Magistrate in the case—Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580 (584). Thus, a commitment may be ordered by the Appellate Court, if it is of opinion that the Magistrate, though of competent jurisdiction to try the case, was not competent to punish the accused adequately—Dani, 1895 P.R. 16; Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580 (584). See also Salon, 34 Cr.L.J. 640, 143 I.C. 649, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 128, 1933 Cr.C. 242, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 375, where the Sessions Judge dealt with the case under sec. 423 as well as under sec. 437, Cr. P. Code.

Where the Appellate Court directs a commitment to the Court of Session, an investigation preliminary to commitment is not necessary. The commitment can be made on the evidence already recorded—Anonymous, 2 Weir 479. The Appellate Court under this section may either itself commit the accused for trial before the Sessions Court or it may direct a Magistrate to do so. But where it adopts the latter course, it does not give the Magistrate any jurisdiction to make any further enquiry and that the enquiry held is sufficient for the purpose of Chap. XVIII. The Magistrate then frames a charge or amends the charge under sec. 210, Cr. P. C., and under sec. 211 requires the accused to give in his list of witnesses and the Magistrate makes a formal order of commitment under sec. 213. To hold otherwise would also lead to the conclusion that although the Appellate Court had ordered that the accused should be committed for trial, the Magistrate would have jurisdiction to decide whether the accused person should be committed for trial or not and if he thought fit to disregard the order of the Appellate Court and discharge the accused person—Sahadeo Ram, 35 Cr.L.J. 1013 (1016), 156 I.C. 849, A.I.R. 1935 All. 579, 1935 Cr.C. 598, 1935 A.L.J. 618, 58 All. 23. But see Note 694A under sec. 207.

An order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge on appeal under this clause can be revised by the High Court under sec. 439—Ram Samujh, 11 O.L.J. 748, 1 O.W.N. 525, 25 Cr.L.J. 1375.

Commitment to itself.—The Appellate Court has power of ordering the accused appellant to be committed to the Court of Session, even though the Court of Session is the Appellate Court itself—Moula Bakhsh, 15 All. 205 (207). But the Appellate Court cannot itself commit a case to itself, but, as a Court of Appeal, can only direct a competent Magistrate to make a commitment to itself. Reading this section with sec. 193 it is manifest that except in cases in which a Court of Session is expressly empowered to take cognizance of an offence as a Court of original jurisdiction, it has no power to do so unless a commitment has been made by a Magistrate duly empowered in this behalf—Maula Khan, 1907 A.W.N. 178, 6 Cr.L.J. 7.

1145. Alteration of finding:—Where the accused were charged by the lower Court with several offences, and were convicted of the graver offences and acquitted of the minor charges, the Appellate Court can alter the finding of the lower Court and convict the accused of the minor charges, and acquit them of the graver offences—Golla Hannappa, 35 Mad. 243. An Appellate Court can convict the accused for a lesser offence than that which was found by the Court of first instance to have been committed by the accused—Jawad Husain, 2 Luck. 503, 103 I.C. 401, 1 Luck. Cas. 159, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 296, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 321, 28 Cr.L.J. 673. But in convicting an accused of an offence with which he was not charged in the lower Court, the Appellate Court can act only in accordance with the provisions of secs. 237 and 238—Padmanabha, 33 Mad. 264; Sakharam, 8 Bom.L.R. 120; C. C. Sircar, 3 Rang. 68, 4 Bur.L.J. 29, 26 Cr.L.J. 119; Mahabir, 49 All. 120, 24 A.L.J. 998, 27 Cr.L.J. 1118, A.I.R. 1927 All. 35, 97 I.C. 430; Nand Kishore v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 710 (712), 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 661, 185 I.C. 151, 41 Cr.L.J. 111, 1939 A.L.J. 941. The powers of an Appellate Court under this section are very wide and are only subject to the provisions of sections 234 to 238, Criminal Procedure Code—Shco Narain, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 44.

(47), 1935 O.W.N. 1177, 158 I.C. 945, 1935 O.L.R. 630. See also Diwan Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 132 (134), 19 N.L.J. 84; Muthia Chetty, 29 Mad. 190, 3 Cr.L.J. 461 and Maung E Maung v. The King, 41 Cr.L.J. 621 (623), 188 I.C. 539, A.I.R. 1940 Rang 118, 1940 Rang. 215 in Note 1138. Thus, where on an appeal from a conviction of murder, the Appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the offence of murder is not proved but that there is evidence on the record to support a conviction for an offence against property, the Appellate Court ought to acquit the accused of murder, but it cannot alter the conviction of murder into a conviction of an offence against property, because the latter offence is so widely different from the former that it is illegal under sec. 237 or 238 to convict the accused of the latter offence when he is charged only with the former—Wallu, 4 Lah. 373; Ghaus, 7 Lah. 561, 27 P.L.R. 610, 27 Cr.L.J. 1004; Yusuf, 20 All. 107. It has, however, been laid down that sec. 423 (1) (b) is not in any way dependent upon or restricted and controlled by secs. 236, 237 and 238, Cr. P. C. So the Appellate Court can alter a conviction under sec. 302, I. P. C., to one under sec. 366/109, I. P. C.—Sharif, 34 Cr.L.J. 266 (269), A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 9, 1933 Cr.C. 151, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pesh. 5, following Krishna Chetty, 35 I.C. 816, 17 Cr.L.J. 384, 1916 M.W.N. 267, 4 M.L.W. 373; or to one under sec. 307, Indian Penal Code—Sheo Narain, supra. But see Sheo Narain, 37 Cr.L.J. 12, 158 I.C. 945, 1935 O.W.N. 1177, A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 44, 1935 O.L.R. 630, where it has been laid down that the powers of an Appellate Court under this section are very wide and are only subject to the provisions of secs. 234 to 238. It is not open to an Appellate Court to find a man guilty of the abetment of an offence, on a charge of the substantive offence itself—Padmanabha, 33 Mad. 264. See Note 771 under sec. 238. It is not competent to an Appellate Court to alter a conviction into a conviction of an entirely different offence. And so, where the Sessions Judge had convicted an accused of an offence under sec. 409, I. P. C., the High Court on appeal refused to alter the finding into a conviction for an offence under sec. 161, I. P. Code, for which the accused has not been charged or tried in the original Court and which was of an entirely different nature from the offence with which he was charged—Imdad Khan, 8 All. 120. When the accused was charged with and convicted of an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C., and on appeal the Sessions Judge altered the charge and recorded a conviction under section 411, Indian Penal Code, held that the Appellate Court had no power to so alter the charge as to make it necessary for the accused to meet an entirely different case from that with which he was charged in the trial Court—Mula, 23 A.L.J. 924, 90 I.C. 150, A.I.R. 1926 All. 33, 26 Cr.L.J. 1494. Where in the trial Court the case for the prosecution was that the person, for attempting to cheat whom, the petitioner and his co-accused were being tried, was A and the finding of the Magistrate was also to the same effect and, on appeal, the Sessions Judge altered the conviction holding that the person cheated was B, held that the conviction could not be maintained in as much as the nature of the charge was charged entirely and the petitioner was materially prejudiced by this procedure—Rattan Singh, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 833, 35 P.L.R. 666, 1934 Cr.C. 1180, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 421. But where the prosecution has established certain acts constituting an offence, and the Court has misapplied the law to those acts by charging and convicting the accused for an offence other than that for which he should have been charged, and it appears that inspite of such error of the Court, the accused has by his defence endeavoured to meet the accusation of the commission of those acts, then the Appellate Court may alter the charge or finding and convict him for an offence which those acts properly constitute, if the accused is not at all prejudiced by the alteration of finding—Lala Ojha, 26 Cal. 863. Such an error is one of form rather than of substance, and the alteration by an Appellate Court of the charge or finding into a more serious offence would not necessitate a retrial for that offence. Therefore, where a person is convicted of an attempt to commit an offence, the Appellate Court, if it thinks that the acts of the accused constitute the substantive offence itself, may convict him of the substantive offence without ordering a retrial—Lala Ojha, supra. Where the accused has been convicted by the trial Court of an offence under sec. 380, I. P. C., the Appellate Court can alter the conviction into one under sec. 403, I. P. Code, as the two offences are of the same nature and the appellant cannot be taken by surprise by such a procedure—Biru, 30 Cr L.J. 413 (414), 11 Lah L.J. 113, A I R. 1929 Lah. 508, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah 361. See Notes under secs. 237 and 238

The Appellate Court in altering a finding under this clause cannot act in contravention of the provisions of sec. 239. Thus, the petitioner and four others were tried jointly, the other four being convicted of an offence under sec 454 of the I. P. Code and the petitioner was convicted of abetment thereof. On appeal the Appellate Court acquitted the petitioner of the offence of abetment but convicted him under secs. 411 and 414, I P. C. Held, that the conviction by the Appellate Court cannot be maintained, because under sec. 239 the petitioner could not have been tried in the original Court jointly with the four accused under secs 411 and 414, I P. C., while the latter were being tried under sec 454, I. P. C.—Salub Singh, 1905 P.R. 38, 1905 P.L.R. 115.

If the Appellate Court alters the finding, it cannot maintain the conviction (though it can maintain the sentence). Thus, the trying Magistrate convicted the accused of theft of mangoes and of rioting, the common object of the unlawful assembly being the taking of mangoes; on appeal the Sessions Judge disbelieved the evidence relating to the taking of mangoes and came to a finding that the cause of the riot was a dispute relating to a land; but the Judge confirmed the conviction and sentence. The High Court held that the Sessions Judge was wrong in confirming the conviction on a different finding of fact to which the accused were never called upon to plead and to defend themselves, because the result of the Judge's action was that the accused were convicted by him of an offence for which they had never been tried. The High Court acquitted the accused—Rahimuddi v. Asgar, 27 Cal. 990 (991), 5 C.W.N. 31; Poresh Nath, 33 Cal. 295, 2 C.L.J. 516.

Under clause (b) the Appellate Court can, in an appeal from a conviction, alter the finding of the Lower Court and find the appellant guilty of any offence of which he has been acquitted by that Court. Sec 417 does not stand in the way, because that section applies only where there has been a complete acquittal and not where an appeal is preferred in a case in which the Magistrate has acquitted the accused of one offence but convicted him of another—Jabanulla, 23 Cal 975 (979, 980); Sardar, 34 All 115 (117), 12 IC 836, 8 A.L.J. 1239, 12 Cr L.J. 572; Golla Hanumappa, 10 IC. 372, 35 Mad. 243, 10 M.L.T. 66, 1911 M.W.N. 106, 12 Cr L.J. 269; Raghunath, 34 Cr L.J. 1064, 55 All 834, 6 R.A. 174, 145 IC 849, A I R. 1933 All 565, 1933 Cr C 897, 1933 A.L.J. 1377; Lakhan, 35 Cr L.J. 973 (979), 149 IC 533, 11 O.W.N. 534, A I R. 1934 Oudh 200, 1934 Cr C. 587. Thus, where the Sessions Judge acquitted the appellant of the charge under sec. 376, I P C., but convicted him under sec 354, I P C., the High Court, on appeal, altered the conviction under sec. 354, I P. C., to one under sec. 376/511, I P. C.—Hanuman, A I R 1932 Cal 723, 36 C.W.N. 1152, 1932 Cr C 728, 141 IC 622. Where the accused were charged in the alternative under sec. 366 or sec. 366A or sec. 498, I. P. C., but was convicted under sec. 366A, I. P. C., without a finding one way or the other, whether specifically or in the alternative, under sec. 498, I. P. C., the Appellate Court is competent under sec. 423 (1) (b), Cr. P C., to alter the conviction under sec. 366A, I. P. C., into a conviction on the alternative charge under sec. 498, I. P. C.—Jagannath Gir, 38 Cr L.J. 621 (626), 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 203, 1937 A Cr C. 39, 168 IC. 833, 9 R.A. 676, 1937 A.L.J. 547, 1937 A.L.R. 417, A I R. 1937 All. 353. Where the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec. 148, I. P. C., and convicted him under sec. 325, I. P. C., it was open to the Sessions Judge to alter the conviction under sec. 325 into one under sec 148, I P. C.—Appanna v. Pitkani, 34 Mad. 545. Similarly, where in such a case the Lower Court has found only one of the accused guilty of murder and acquitted the others of murder but convicted them of other offences, an appeal against the conviction of murder opens out the entire case and the Appellate Court may find all the three persons guilty of murder—Dulli, 16 A.L.J. 918, 20 Cr L.J. 22, 48 IC. 502, A I R. 1918 All 65. Where in the trial Court the accused was charged with murder (section 302, I. P. C.) but was convicted of culpable homicide (section 304), the Appellate Court can convict the accused of murder—On Shive, 1 Rang. 436, 25 Cr.L.J. 247, 76 I.C. 411, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 93.

The Allahabad High Court has, however, taken a different view. It has laid down that where the Court below has either acquitted an accused expressly or by necessary implication, then, unless there is an appeal from acquittal, the finding cannot be converted into one of conviction. There is clearly a distinction between reversing a finding and merely altering it. Where an order of acquittal is to be converted into an order of conviction, it amounts to a reversal of the order. On the other hand, where the conviction under one section is altered to a conviction under some other section maintaining the sentence or reducing it or altering it, it amounts merely to an alteration of the finding and not to a reversal of the finding. It is clear that sub-sec. (1)(b) of this section is not applicable to a case where there is an express order of acquittal and no appeal from a conviction pending before the Appellate Court. In such a case the Appellate Court has no power to reverse the finding at all. It cannot by convicting the accused of the offence of which he has been acquitted, reverse the finding, by regarding it as if it were merely an alteration of the finding. Where the accused was charged of separate offences under each section but the Court below has wrongly acquitted him of one offence, the Appellate Court may report the case to the High Court for proper orders to be passed. But the Appellate Court cannot itself set aside the acquittal and convict the accused of the offence of which he had been charged and acquitted—Sarda Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 521 (524), 168 I.C. 17, 1937 A Cr.C. 1, 9 RA 623, 1937 A.L.R. 309, A.I.R. 1937 All. 240, 1937 A.L.J. 143, following Kishen Singh v. Emp., 50 All 722, 111 I.C. 332, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 254, 29 Cr.L.J. 828, 55 I.A. 390, 5 O.W.N. 911, 28 M.L.W. 396, 1928 M.W.N. 749, 29 P.L.R. 575, 33 C.W.N. 1, 48 C.L.J. 397, 30 Bom.L.R. 1572, 55 M.L.J. 786, 26 A.L.J. 1099 (P.C.) and Sheedarshan Singh, 44 All. 332, 65 I.C. 858, A.I.R. 1922 All. 487, 23 Cr.L.J. 202, 20 A.L.J. 190.

If Appellate Court finds that the sentence is illegal or inadequate, it may alter the conviction (if the facts found justify such alteration) in order to legalise the sentence—Kyaw Hla, 3 L.B.R. 112, 3 Cr.L.J. 348 (349).

In altering the finding of the Lower Court, the Appellate Court is not bound by any preliminaries of complaint under sec. 198. Thus, on an appeal from a conviction under sec. 182, I. P. C., the Appellate Court is competent to alter the conviction into one under sec. 500, I. P. C., notwithstanding that there was no complaint by the aggrieved party—Gura Narain, 25 All. 534 (536). The Appellate Court is also competent to change the conviction from sec. 181, I. P. C., to sec. 193, I. P. C. There is no reason for thinking that the Appellate Court cannot exercise this power simply because the prosecution has been launched under an inappropriate section—Nathu Singh, A.I.R. 1936 Nag 263, 1936 Cr.C. 1025. But the Oudh Chief Court has held that the Appellate Court cannot alter a conviction of rape into a conviction of adultery, where there was no formal complaint by the husband in respect of the latter offence, as required by section 199—Baji, 10 O.W.N. 107, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 163, 143 I.C. 73, 34 Cr.L.J. 496, 1933 Cr.C. 318 (320); cannot alter a conviction of simple hurt into a conviction of grievous hurt—Hasan Khan, 33 Cr.L.J. 162, 135 I.C. 382, 8 O.W.N. 1299, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 25, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 30, 1932 Cr.C. 57. See Note 1219 under the heading "Converting acquittal into conviction."

The word 'finding' is not limited to a finding upon a point of law, as distinct from a finding upon a point of fact—Mahangu Singh, 3 P.L.J. 565, 19 Cr.L.J. 735. But when the prosecution bring a false case it is impossible to bring out a new one in the Court of appeal—Moslem Khalifa v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 792, 189 I.C. 734, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 350.

Under sec. 423 (b), Cr. P. C., in an appeal from conviction the Appellate Court may alter the finding maintaining the sentence or with or without altering the finding reduce the sentence. Where, therefore, the accused were tried by a Magistrate who convicted them under secs. 363 and 498, I. P. C., and sentenced them under sec. 363, I. P. C., to rigorous imprisonment for one year and six months each and awarded no separate sentence under sec. 498, I. P. C., and in appeal the Sessions Judge found them not guilty under sec. 363, I. P. C., but guilty under sec. 498, I. P. C., and felt that he had no authority to pass a proper sentence as the Magistrate had not passed any sentence under that section, held that what the Sessions Judge did was to alter the conviction from secs. 363 and 498, I. P. C., to a conviction under sec. 498, I. P. C., and that in such a case he could have maintained the sentence of one and a half years which had been passed by the Magistrate or given a reduced sentence—Supdt. & Remembr. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Hossein Ali, 39 Cr L.J. 684, 175 I.C. 799, 11 R.C. 38, 42 C.W.N. 1040, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 439.

1146. Alteration when improper:—(1) It is improper for the Appellate Court to alter the finding so as to convict the accused of an offence of an entirely different character. See Note 1145. Thus, under the provisions of secs. 237 and 238, it is illegal to alter a conviction under sec. 376, I. P. C., into one under sec. 366, I. P. C., because the charge under the latter section involves different elements and different questions of fact from the former—Sakharam, 8 Bom L.R. 120; C. C. Sircar, 3 Rang 68, 4 Bur.L.J. 29, 26 Cr L.J. 1119; so also, it is illegal to alter a conviction under sec. 379, I. P. C., into one under sec. 143, I. P. C.—Jatu v. Mahabir, 27 Cal. 660. So again, it is improper to alter a conviction under secs. 211 and 109, I. P. C., into one under sec. 193, I. P. C.—Manoranjan, 3 C.W.N. 367; or to alter a conviction under sec. 468, I. P. C., into a conviction under sec. 471, I. P. C.—Akbar, 8 N.L.J. 87, 26 Cr L.J. 1358, 89 I.C. 398, A.I.R. 1925 Nag 294; or to alter a conviction under sec. 147 into one under secs. 448 and 323, I. P. C.—Yakub Ali v. Lethu, 30 Cal 288 (289); or to alter a conviction for wrongful confinement into one for assault—Rameswar v. Jogi, 5 C.W.N. 296.

(2) It would be improper and unfair to the accused for the Appellate Court to convict him of a more serious offence to which he had never pleaded at the trial, especially if the new offence was not cognate to the offence for which he was tried and convicted, and if there were circumstances of aggravation to which he had not pleaded guilty—Lala Ojha, 26 Cal 863; Po Yin, 3 L.B.R. 232.

(3) An Appellate Court is not competent to alter the finding of a Magistrate, so as to convict an accused person of an offence which the Lower Court is not competent to try—Pershad, 7 All. 414, 1885 A.W.N. 105 (F.B.)

(4) When a person has been charged with a certain offence and has been convicted of that offence, the Appellate Court cannot, on finding that the conviction is not sustainable, convict the accused of abetment of that offence—Mahabir, 24 A.L.J. 998, 49 All. 120, 27 Cr.L.J. 1118; Padmanabha, 33 Mad 264; Chand Nur, 11 B.H.C.R. 240. See Note 771 under sec. 238.

(5) It is not illegal for the Appellate Court to convict a man of an offence under sec. 452, I. P. C., in a case in which he has been charged under sec. 323, I. P. C., in the light of the wording of secs. 236 and 237, Cr. P. C., but the question which is to be decided in each case is whether the accused has or has not been prejudiced in his trial by the fact that the charge was framed under the wrong section—Shankar Dayal, 39 Cr.L.J. 937, 177 I.C. 616, 1938 A.Cr.C. 100, 11 R.O. 59, 1938 O.A. 740, 1938 O.L.R. 432, 1938 O.W.N. 960, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 263.

(6) The Appellate Court has power to alter a conviction under sec. 353, I. P. C., to one under sec. 352, I. P. C., and to reduce the sentence—Maung Ba v. The King, 39 Cr.L.J. 761, 176 I.C. 670, 1938 Rang L.R. 139, 11 R.R. 69, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 281. But see In re Akbar Momin, 6 C.W.N. 202, where the facts were different.

(7) When a Second Class Magistrate convicts an accused under sec. 414, I. P. C., the Appellate Court cannot alter the conviction to one under sec. 409 read with sec. 109, I. P. C., as the offence under sec. 409, I. P. C., is not triable by the Magistrate of the Second Class—Ponnuswami Servai v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 465, 174 I.C. 776, 10 R.M. 742, 1938 M.W.N. 223, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 315.

(8) Where the complainant had put forward a very clear and definite case of cheating and never alleged that the accused had either concealed or removed the property within the meaning of sec. 424, I. P. C., and no evidence was produced to prove it, the Appellate Court had no power to alter the conviction under sec. 418, I. P. C., into one under sec. 424, I. P. C., though the accused were not charged under the latter section—Nand Kishore v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All 710, 1939 A.L.J. 941, 41 Cr.L.J. 111, 185 I.C. 151.

Notice to appellants:—If a Judge on appeal finds that the evidence recorded discloses a different offence, he may alter the finding of the Court below; but in doing so, he ought to give information to the accused or to his pleader of what he proposes to do, and thus give him an opportunity of showing cause against the new conviction—Mi Mo Da, 3 L.B.R. 283, 5 Cr.L.J. 420. The powers conferred by this section on an Appellate Court are not intended to be used in such a way as to spring up a new case on the accused without giving him any notice of the charge he has to meet—Debi Singh, 16 Cr.L.J. 599 (All.). Where the accused had a good answer to the only charge made against him and he was acquitted of that charge, the High Court ought not to interfere with his acquittal and cannot at the stage ascertain under what section his offence fell and convict him under it—Ahmad Din, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 843, 152 I.C. 615, A.L.R. 1934 Lah. 419, 1934 Cr.C. 1184.

1147. Reduction of sentence:—Where the Lower Court passes only a single sentence on a conviction for two offences, the Appellate Court, if it acquits the appellant of one of the offences, ought not to maintain the sentence in its entirety but must make some reduction of sentence, unless it thinks that the sentence ought not to be reduced, in which case it should refer the matter to the High Court for enhancement of the sentence—Paramasiva Pillai, 30 Mad. 48; Ramanujan, 2 Weir 487a. But no reduction of sentence by the Appellate Court is necessary, if the inference can be drawn that the trying Magistrate did not intend to pass any sentence on the conviction which is set aside on appeal—Mari, 7 M.L.T. 81, 11 Cr.L.J. 243. Where a Magistrate in convicting a person of two offences passed a single sentence of imprisonment and fine, it was held that separate sentences ought to have been passed, and that the Appellate Court in reversing the conviction for one offence cannot regard the imprisonment as imposed for one offence and the fine for the other, and reduce the sentence by eliminating the fine—Pascoe, Ratanlal 409.

Where the proceedings had been unduly prolonged in the trial Court owing to delays and adjournments for which the accused were not wholly responsible, and the accused were put to severe strain, anxiety and mental suffering during this long time, the High Court on appeal reduced the sentence of one year to nine months—Billinghurst, 27 C.W.N. 821 (852), 25 Cr.L.J. 1313, 82 I.C. 545, A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 18.

But a sentence will not be reduced on the ground of high birth and social position of the accused. Where a man of high family and position committed an act of criminal breach of trust upon a defenceless old lady, who was his relative, whose interest he was bound to protect, and who reposed utmost confidence in him, and the Sessions Judge passed a sentence of 5 years' rigorous imprisonment, the High Court on appeal held that though the sentence was heavy it was deservedly heavy, that in the interests of the public the sentence must be carried out as it stands, and that no consideration of the high birth or previous position of the accused should operate for its reduction—Mohammad Hadi Husain, 3 Luck. 491, 29 Cr.L.J. 983 (937), 112 I.C. 103, 5 O.W.N. 281, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 277.

In Jalal, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 615, 1932 Cr.C. 921, the Lahore High Court reduced the sentences passed on two accused while hearing the appeal filed by only one of them.

1148. Clause (b) (3):—No power to enhance the sentence:—The words "so as not to enhance the same" imply that no Appellate Court can enhance the sentence passed by the Lower Court. (That power is now vested only in the High Court in the exercise of its power of revision). And, therefore, if the Appellate Court finds the appellant to be guilty of a graver offence, the Court has no power to enhance the sentence; the proper course would be to let the conviction stand as it is, or to have the case referred to the High Court—Chadalavada Ramanappa, 2 Weir 486. See also Ramji Vala, 41 Cr.L.J. 916, 190 I.C. 412, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 279, 42 Bom.L.R. 475, 11 L.R. 1940 Bom. 500.

In an appeal from an order of acquittal passed by the Appellate Court the High Court need not necessarily pass the same sentence which was passed by the trying Court but, under the provisions of this section, is empowered to pass a new sentence within the powers of the Magistrate who tried the case—Local Government v. Abasalli, 36 Cr.L.J. 867 (868), 156 I.C. 184, 7 R.N. 224, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 139, 1935 Cr.C. 667, 31 N.L.R. 312.

The High Court has power under the combined provisions of secs. 423 and 439, Cr. P. C., to alter the conviction under sec. 326 to one under sec. 302, I. P. C.—Mehdi, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 661, 1933 Cr.C. 883, 146 I.C. 949, 35 P.L.R. 238, 6 R.L. 29, 35 Cr.L.J. 250, following Bah. Reddi, A.I.R. 1914 Mad. 258, 22 I.C. 756, 15 Cr.L.J. 180, 37 Mad. 119 and On Shive, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 93, 76 I.C. 711, 25 Cr.L.J. 247, 1 Rang. 436 and explaining Kishen Singh, 50 All. 722, 55 I.A. 390, 111 I.C. 332, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 254. The powers relating to appeals under this section are given to the Appellate Court, and the Appellate Court may include a Court subordinate to the High Court, and the Appellate Court, as such, has no power to enhance a sentence, differing from the provision which was in the old Cr. P. C. of 1872. On the other hand, the powers of revision are given to the High Court alone, and the powers of revision are given to the High Court in the case of any proceeding, the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. When the High Court has before it on appeal a record of a criminal proceeding, the condition precedent is performed, and the High Court can then, though the record has only come to its knowledge in the appellate proceeding, proceed to exercise its revision powers if it chooses to do so—Chunbidva, 36 Cr.L.J. 482 153 I.C. 936, 1935 O.W.N. 205, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 35, 68 M.L.J. 166, 41 M.L.W. 188, 37 Bom.L.R. 160, 1935 M.W.N. 177, 1935 Cr.C. 199 (P.C.). But the Privy Council did not approve the exercise of these combined powers, while in a recent case the Privy Council approved, not the exercise by a High Court of its combined powers as a mixed Court of Appeal and revision, but the exercise by the High Court of its powers in appeal and its powers in revision, not simultaneously but in succession—Jado Rahim v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 93 (96), 178 I.C. 520, A.I.R. 1938 Sind. 202. The question was discussed at great length in Ambika Thakur v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 611 (621), 18 Pat. 544, 1939 P.W.N. 747, but no conclusion was arrived at.

It is difficult to read into sec. 423 (1)(b), Cr. P. C., the power to convert an acquittal into a conviction on an appeal against a conviction. The words "alter the finding, maintaining the sentence" occurring in sec. 423 (1)(b)(2), Cr. P. C., must be read as a whole. The better view to take is that cl. (b) of sec. 423 (3), Cr. P. C., does not apply to cases of acquittal, partial or total, but to cases of conviction, and that cl. (a), applies to cases of acquittal; and that if the appellate powers of the Court are to be exercised to convert an acquittal into a conviction, then they should be exercised on an appeal against an acquittal under sec. 423 (1)(a), Cr. P. C., and not on an appeal against a conviction under sec. 423 (1)(b), Cr. P. C.—Jado Rahim v. Emp., supra.

Thus restriction on the power of the Appellate Court to enhance the sentence in some cases prevent that Court from altering the finding. Thus, if the accused is charged with murder and grievous hurt, but is acquitted of the former offence and convicted of the latter, and sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment by the trial Court, the Appellate Court cannot on the appeal of the accused, alter the finding into one of murder, because, as it cannot enhance the sentence, the result will be that a person charged with murder, for which the only punishment is either death or transportation for life, will be punished merely with 7 years' imprisonment—a sentence which is not a punishment with law—Jabanullah, 23 Cal. 975 (979).

What amounts to enhancement of sentence:—The test of enhancement of sentence must be found not among the technicalities of penal definition, but by answering the broad question: "For this man's offence has the Appellate Court inflicted punishment more severe than that originally awarded"?—Rangaswami, 53 M.L.J. 694, 104 I.C. 440, 39 M.L.T. 20, A.I.R. 1927 Mad 789, 28 Cr.L.J. 824 (825).

(1) When an accused is convicted and sentenced by the lower Court for two distinct offences on two separate charges, and the Appellate Court reverses the conviction on one of the charges, it cannot retain intact the whole sentence but must reduce the sentence; the retention of the sentence has virtually the effect of enhancement of sentence—Hanma, 22 Bom. 760; Ramchandra, 30 Bom.L.R. 967, 112 I.C. 586, 30 Bom.L.R. 967, A.I.R. 1928 Bom 346, 29 Cr.L.J. 1082 (1083); Ramzan v. Ram Khelawan, 24 Cal. 316; Mrs Torpey, 49 All. 484, 101 I.C. 671, 25 A.L.J. 396, A.I.R. 1927 All. 375, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 339, 28 Cr.L.J. 495 (496); Paramasiva, 30 Mad 48; Samasundaram, 3 M.L.T. 312, 7 Cr.L.J. 361; Prola Narasimham, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 97, 12 Cr.L.J. 454; Varadan, 8 M.L.T. 117, 11 Cr.L.J. 483; Bechu Singh, 10 P.L.T. 587, 120 I.C. 753, 31 Cr.L.J. 173 (174); Mangal Singh, 1916 P.R. 31, 18 Cr.L.J. 372; Balbhaddri v. Tribhuvan, 3 N.L.R. 67, 6 Cr.L.J. 43. Thus, where a person was convicted by a Magistrate of rioting and theft and was sentenced for the first offence to four months' and for the latter offence to two months' rigorous imprisonment, and the District Magistrate on appeal acquitted the accused of rioting but upheld the conviction for theft and the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment, it was held that the effect of the order was to enhance the sentence for theft from 2 months' to 4 months' rigorous imprisonment, which he had no authority to do under this section—Ramzan v. Ram Khelawan, 24 Cal. 316. See also Kehr Singh, A.I.R. 1933 Lah 933, 1933 Cr.C 1392, 146 I.C. 442, 35 Cr.L.J. 108. But where only one offence has been committed, and the Magistrate erroneously splits it up into two offences, and passes two sentences, the Appellate Court can join the two offences into one offence and maintain the whole of the original sentence: such maintaining of sentences does not amount to an enhancement of sentence (because no conviction has in fact been reversed)—Balbhaddri v. Tribhuvan, supra.

(2) Where an Appellate Court reduced a sentence of 4 months' rigorous imprisonment into one of 3 months, but added a sentence of fine or in default six weeks' rigorous imprisonment, such sentence amounted to an enhancement of the original sentence, and was in excess of the powers of the Appellate Court—Ishtri, 17 All. 67, 1904 A.W.N. 202; Meda, 1887 A.W.N. 100. Where the Court of first instance sentenced the accused to rigorous imprisonment for 2 months and to a fine of Rs. 50 or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment, and on appeal the Appellate Court changed the sentence to one of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200 or in default 2 months' rigorous imprisonment, held that the Appellate Court's sentence amounted to an enhancement of the sentence passed by the trial Court, for supposing the fine was not paid, the accused would still have to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment and still be liable to pay the fine—Bhola Singh, 3 Pat. 638 (639), 5 P.L.T. 622, 25 Cr.L.J. 1186, 82 I.C. 50, A.I.R. 1924 Pat 563. See also Sagawa, 23 All. 497, 1901 A.W.N. 176; Stamlay, 3 N.L.R. 60, 6 Cr.L.J. 100; Man Chand, 1916 P.W.R. 5, 17 Cr.L.J. 212. It is objectionable on appeal to enhance the sentences of fine, even in lieu of imprisonment—Abdul Rahman v. Emp., 37 Cr.L.J. 950, A.I.R. 1936 Lah 729, 164 I.C. 462, 38 P.L.R. 247, 9 R.L. 130, 1936 Cr.C. 764. Contra—Chagan, 23 Bom. 439. [But now see the proviso to sec. 386 which lays down that if the accused has undergone the full term of imprisonment awarded in default of payment of fine, the fine will not be levied.] If the aggregate sentence of imprisonment (i.e., the substantive sentence of imprisonment plus the imprisonment in default of fine) imposed by the Appellate Court is less than the period of the original sentence, the imposition of fine does not amount to an enhancement of sentence—Bhaktavatsalu, 30 Mad. 103, 5 Cr.L.J. 36, 16 M.L.J. 560, 1 M.L.T. 375 (F.B.); Rakkhal v. Khirode, 27 Cal. 175; Mehar Chand, 24 I.C. 607, 15 Cr.L.J. 519, 36 All. 485; Kirpa Ram, 1915 P.R. 7, 19 Cr.L.J. 603; Prabhu Dayal v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 428, 167 I.C. 723, 9 R.L. 541, 38 P.L.R. 1051, A.I.R. 1937 Lah.

195. Where a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and Rs 50 fine or six months' further imprisonment in default was altered by the Appellate Court to a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine or six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, there was no enhancement of sentence—Mohammad Hussain, 32 Cr.L.J. 1217, 134 I.C. 792, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 159, 32 P.L.R. 165, 12 Lah. 449, 1931 Cr.C. 271, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 1000. See also Satyawan, 7 R.A. 496, 36 Cr.L.J. 335, 153 I.C. 411, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1031, 4 A.W.R. 488, 1934 Cr.C. 1338, where it has been held that no general rule can be laid down to determine what is or what is not an enhancement of sentence in matters like these.

To impose a substantial fine in place of a sentence of imprisonment and maintain the same sentence of imprisonment in default of payment does amount to enhancement. For the appellants may not be able to pay the fine, then they will have to undergo the imprisonment and their property is liable to attachment for payment of the fine as well. The question depends on the circumstances of each case. If the argument, that the appellants themselves asked the Appellate Court to impose a fine in place of imprisonment and, therefore, they can have no complaint, were correct, an absolutely crushing fine might be imposed—Shanker Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 935, 170 I.C. 538, 10 R.O. 35, 1937 O.L.R. 452, 1937 A Cr.C. 104, 1937 O.W.N. 754, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 462.

There is thus a conflict of rulings on this point :

(3) A sentence of fine is always considered lighter than a sentence of imprisonment—Chagan, 23 Bom. 439; therefore, the alteration of a sentence of fine into one of imprisonment is an enhancement of sentence within the meaning of this clause, and the Appellate Court has no power to alter a sentence in this way—Lachmi Kant, 18 All. 301; Dhansang, 18 Bom. 751.

(4) Where the Lower Court imposed fine and imprisonment, and the Appellate Court, in lieu of imprisonment, imposed an additional fine, thus increasing the amount of fine imposed by the Lower Court, it amounted to an enhancement of sentence—Ramasami, 2 Weir 487; Abdul Rahman, 37 Cr.L.J. 950, 164 I.C. 462, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 729, 38 P.L.R. 247, 1936 Cr.C. 764.

(5) The addition of imprisonment (even one day's imprisonment) by the Appellate Court to a sentence of fine only imposed by the Lower Court is an enhancement of sentence—Chandalavadda Ramanappa, 2 Weir 486.

(6) The addition of a sentence of whipping by the Appellate Court, although the sentence of imprisonment is reduced, that is, the alteration of a part of the imprisonment into a sentence of whipping, amounts to an enhancement of the sentence—Appu, 2 Weir 487. The Rangoon High Court also holds that the alteration of the whole or part of the sentence of imprisonment into a sentence of whipping amounts to an enhancement—K'yang, 30 Cr.L.J. 328 (329), 114 I.C. 523, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 265, Ind. Rul. 1929 Rang. 91. See also Banda Ali, 15 W.R. 7, where their Lordships expressed a doubt as to which sentence was the more severe "The Legislature has not supplied us with any data from which the comparative severity of the two sentences of whipping and rigorous imprisonment can be determined, and it is impossible to say how many lashes would be equivalent to a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a specified period"—Mitter, J. Recently a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court has attempted to find out a standard of comparison, and by applying the provisions of sec. 395, has laid down that the substitution of 30 stripes for a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment or more, or the substitution of 25 stripes for a sentence of 9 months' imprisonment or more, or the substitution of 20 stripes for a sentence of six months' imprisonment or more, would not ordinarily amount to an enhancement of sentence. But a substitution of 30 stripes for a sentence of 3 months' imprisonment is manifestly an enhancement and is therefore illegal—Chit Pan, 7 Rang. 319, 119 I.C. 209, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 177, Ind. Rul. 1929 Rang. 289, 30 Cr.L.J. 986 (989) (F.B.). But in deciding what sentence of whipping to pass, the Appellate Court would be bound to consider the imprisonment already undergone—Nga Aung Myat, 33 Cr.L.J. 758 (760), 139 I.C. 284, 10 Rang. 317, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 150, 1932 Cr.C. 711, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 177.

(7) Where in a criminal appeal, the terms of imprisonment are reduced but a punishment of solitary confinement is imposed, it amounts to an enhancement of the sentence—Peman, 1890 A.W.N. 170. Where a person was tried and convicted by a second class Magistrate on a charge under sec. 406, I. P. C., and sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment and the Appellate Court altered the sentence to a fine of four hundred rupees with an alternative term of rigorous imprisonment, held that the sentence passed by the Appellate Court was ultra vires of that Court in as much as the Appellate Court, in varying the sentence, was bound by the limitations imposed by sec. 32, Cr. P. C., on the trial Court—Muhammad Yakub Ali, 45 All. 594.

(8) The substitution of rigorous imprisonment in place of simple imprisonment amounts to an enhancement of sentence—Muhammad Yakub Ali, 45 All. 594.

(9) Where an accused had been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment and whipping for an offence where whipping could not be awarded in addition, and on appeal the Sessions Judge commuted the sentence of whipping to one of a further sentence of imprisonment, held that as the additional punishment of whipping was illegal, the Judge could not legally commute it and that he could only set the sentence of whipping aside, and if he considered enhancement necessary he should have referred the proceedings to the High Court in revision—Ba Chao, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 64, 12 Rang. 607, 153 I.C. 516, 36 Cr.L.J. 366.

(10) Where an accused was dealt with under sec 562, Cr. P. C., by the trying Magistrate, although the imposition of fine by the Appellate Court in the circumstances of the case can hardly be said to be an enhancement of sentence, as no sentence was given to the accused by the trying Magistrate, still the imposition of fine entails a greater burden on the accused than the execution of a bond under sec. 562, Cr. P. C.—Shital Prasad v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 889, 177 I.C. 386, 11 R.O. 48, 1938 O.A. 699, 1938 A.Cr.C. 98, 1938 O.W.N. 919, 1938 O.L.R. 421, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 233.

What does not amount to enhancement:—(1) An additional order passed by the Appellate Court directing the accused to furnish security to keep the peace does not amount to an enhancement of sentence—Miran Bakhsh, 1905 P.R. 21, 2 Cr.L.J. 190; Zafar Hussain, 20 Cr.L.J. 302 (All); Maharaj Singh, 20 Cr.L.J. 760 (Nag.). Such power has been expressly conferred on a Court of Appeal by sec. 106 (3) and a Judge is competent in appeal to demand such security—Ibid.

(2) An order passed by the Appellate Court directing the accused person to pay the costs of the complainant under sec. 31 of the Court Fees Act (now sec. 545A of this Code) does not amount to an enhancement of sentence, because the order of costs is not a penalty or sentence passed in the case but is an incidental order under clause (d) of this section—Karuppanna, 29 Mad. 188; Thimiah, 47 Mad. 914 (915). Although the fees ordered to be paid are to be recovered as if they were fines, still there is no warrant for treating the same as part of the fine imposed as punishment for the offences—Vemuri Sheshanna, 26 Mad 421; Thimiah, 47 Mad 914 (915).

(3) Where an Appellate Court adopts the view taken by the original Court as to the acts committed by the accused, and only differs from it in its application of the law, and maintains the sentence, neither the letter nor the spirit of sec. 423 is broken by the Appellate Court in maintaining the sentence. There is no enhancement. Thus, where the accused was convicted by the trial Court for voluntarily causing hurt with a dangerous weapon under sec. 324, I. P. C., and was sentenced to 2 months' imprisonment, and in appeal the Appellate Court altered the conviction into one for simple hurt under sec. 323, I. P. C., but the sentence was maintained, held that it did not amount to an enhancement of sentence—Rangaswami, 53 M.L.J. 694, 104 I.C. 440, 39 M.L.T. 20, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 789, 28 Cr.L.J. 821 (825).

(4) An order for detention in a Borstal School for any period permitted by the provisions of the Act can never amount to an enhancement of sentence. So the Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by sec. 25 of the Burma Prevention of Crimes (Young Offenders) Act (III of 1930) and order detention of an accused in a Borstal School for any period which is legal under the provisions of sub-sec. (1), sec. 25 of the said Act, in substitution of a sentence of imprisonment passed on him by the trial Court—Ah Hwe, 37 Cr.L.J. 790, 163 I.C. 74, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 227, 14 Rang. 119, 1936 Cr.C. 527.

If conviction is confirmed, some sentence must be passed:—If the Court of Appeal affirms a conviction, it should, if it disapproves of the sentence passed by the Lower Court, pass some other sentence, even though a nominal one. It cannot set aside the sentence absolutely while upholding the conviction. Every conviction must be followed by sentence—Lakshimibai, Ratanlal 545. See Note 1221.

Clause (c):—An order requiring a person to furnish security falls under this clause. The Appellate Court can either reverse (i.e., set aside) the order or alter the order, e.g., by reducing the amount of security. But an order remanding the case for fresh inquiry is bad in law. But, of course, fresh proceedings can be started under sec 110 on receiving fresh information—Chandan, 30 P.L.R. 416, 115 I.C. 544, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 28, Ind. Rul 1929 Lah 416, 30 Cr.L.J. 491; Narappa, 34 Cr.L.J. 947, 145 I.C. 206, 1933 M.W.N. 241. For contra see Bhagwant Singh, cited below in Note 1150 (2).

A suspect, who has been ordered to give security under Chap. VIII, and, on failure to give security, has been ordered to suffer simple imprisonment, is not a convict and has not been sentenced. Where, therefore, a Sessions Judge made a reference to the High Court for substitution of rigorous imprisonment in place of simple imprisonment in such a case, the High Court is not limited in the exercise of its revisional powers by the conditions in cl. (b), sub-sec. (1) of this section. But the clause under which it can act is cl. (c) of this sub-section. Under this sub-section it is competent to the High Court as a revisional Court, reading this section with sec. 439, to alter or reverse an order other than the order referred to in cls (b) and (a) and to give effect to the recommendation of the Sessions Judge—Manu Chabilo, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 188, 1936 Cr.C. 973, 166 I.C. 298.

1149. Clause (d)—Amendment:—Under this clause the Court can make any amendment that may be just or proper. Thus, where the accused was convicted under sec 325, I.P.C., and on appeal the parties applied to compromise the case, the High Court acting under sec 423 (d) amended the order of conviction by substituting for it an order that the offence should be compromised—Ram Piyari, 32 All 153. Where the Sessions Judge had directed certain property to be handed over to the Magistrate as unclaimed property, the High Court amended the order by directing that the Magistrate should dispose of the property according to law—Abadi Begam v. Ali Husen, 1897 A.W.N. 26. The Sessions Judge can amend the order of the Magistrate by directing a greater amount of property to be restored to the complainant than the amount restored by the Magistrate—Gopi Nath, 3 A.L.J. 770, 4 Cr.L.J. 370.

'Amendment' means amendment of the main order of the Court below; and the Appellate Court cannot make any amendment when there has not been an appeal against the main order of the lower Court. Thus, where the Magistrate in passing a judgment of acquittal has made some unfavourable remarks about the credibility of certain witnesses, it was held that the High Court could not amend the judgment by directing those remarks to be expunged from the judgment, when there has been no appeal to the High Court against the main order of acquittal—Dunn, 44 All. 401 (405, 406), 20 A.L.J. 261, 23 Cr.L.J. 319. But this is no longer good law in view of sec. 561A which empowers the High Court to pass any orders that may be just (and thus to expunge remarks from the lower Court's judgments) irrespective of the fact whether there has been an appeal against the main order or not. But see Rogers v. Shrinivas Gopal Kawale in Note 1433A. See also Notes 1214 and 1433A and the report of the Joint Committee cited under sec. 561A. But the ruling in 44 All. 401 would apply to lower Appellate Courts, and those Courts would have no power to expunge remarks from the trial Court's judgment unless there be an appeal from the main order in the case.

1150. Incidental or consequential orders:—An incidental order is an order which is liable or likely to follow as a result of the main order—The King v. Maung Khin Maung, A.I.R. 1940 Rang 278 (279), 1940 Rang.L.R. 502.

(1) An order under sec. 106 demanding security from the appellant is an incidental order. Sec. 106 (3) gives the Appellate Court power to pass such order in appeal, even where the original Court was not competent to do so. So also, an order under sec. 106 passed by the Original Court may be set aside in appeal; and the appellate order setting aside the order for security is an incidental order within the meaning of this section—Abdul Wahed v. Amiran, 30 Cal. 101.

(2) On an appeal against an order binding over a person to keep the peace under sec. 107, the Appellate Court can reverse the order of security and order a retrial. The order of retrial is an incidental order under clause (d) of sec. 423. It does not fall under clause (b), because the case is not one of 'appeal from conviction,' the person proceeded against under sec. 107 not being a person convicted of any offence—Bhagwant Singh, 48 All. 501, 24 A.L.J. 566, 96 I.C. 497, A.I.R. 1926 All. 403, 27 Cr.L.J. 945. But see the rulings cited in Note 1148 under the heading "Clause (c)" where a contrary view was adopted.

(3) If an order awarding a sum of money as compensation to the accused under sec. 250 is passed illegally, the Appellate Court in setting aside that order can direct the money to be refunded to the complainant—Safdar Husain, 25 All. 315 (316).

(4) An order under sec. 471 (1), directing the accused to be committed to a lunatic asylum, is clearly an order which the acquitting Court, whether original or appellate, not only has the power to make, but is bound to make under sec. 423 (d)—Nga E. Maung, 8 Bur.L.T. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 670.

(5) An order under sec. 517, 520 or 522 is a consequential or incidental order within the meaning of this clause and can be passed by the Appellate Court—Gourhari, 29 Cal. 724; Arunachala Thevan, 46 Mad. 162 (164). Therefore, an order in a case of criminal misappropriation, directing restoration of property which is found to have belonged to the complainant, is clearly a consequential or incidental order and one which is under the circumstances just and proper—Gopi Nath, 3 A.L.J. 770, 4 Cr.L.J. 370.

An order of the Appellate Court setting aside an order passed by the Lower Court under sec. 522, is an incidental order within the meaning of this clause—Ujir v. Syed Ali, 19 C.W.N. 990, 16 Cr.L.J. 607. See also Gourhari, 29 Cal. 724. Where the accused was convicted under secs. 352 and 448, I. P. C., and the convicting Magistrate passed an order under sec. 522 of this Code restoring possession of the property (which was the subject-matter of the offence under sec. 448, I. P. C.) to the complainant, but the accused was afterwards acquitted on appeal, it was held that the Appellate Court had power, under sec. 423 (d) and sec. 522 read together, to order restitution of the property to the accused—Manki v. Bhagwanti, 27 All. 415.

(6) Under this clause, the Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by sec. 562—Birch, 24 All. 306. 'The Court before which he is convicted' in sec. 562 is not limited to the Court of first instance, but includes the Court of Appeal—Narayana-swami, 29 Mad. 567. This is now expressly provided by sub-sec. (2) of sec. 562.

(7) An order by the Appellate Court directing the accused to pay the costs of the complainant under sec. 31 of the Court Fees Act (now sec. 546A of this Code) is no part of the penalty or sentence passed in the case and therefore not an enhancement of sentence, but is an incidental order under this clause—Karuppana, 29 Mad. 188; Thimiah, 47 Mad. 914 (915). The contrary view taken in Tangavelu, 22 Mad. 153, decided under the Code of 1882 which did not contain clause (4), is no longer correct.

(8) Where a case was tried by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates and the judgment being signed by one of them only, the District Magistrate on appeal, without in any way interfering with the judgment of the Bench of Magistrates, passed an order sending back the case so that the judgment might be signed by the other Magistrates, held that there was nothing wrong in the order of the District Magistrate. It was an incidental order under this clause—Gopal Das, 41 All. 217 (219).

Order which cannot be passed:—The only consequential or incidental orders which fall within the purview of this clause are orders which follow as a matter of course being necessary complements to the main orders passed, without which the latter would be incomplete and ineffective (such as directions as to the refund of fines realised from acquitted appellants, or on the reversal of acquittals, any direction as to the restoration of compensation paid under sec. 250) for which no separate authority is needed—Dunn, 44 All. 401 (405). But an Appellate Court cannot award compensation under sec. 250, because such order is not a necessary complement of the main order of acquittal; only the Magistrate by whom the case is heard in the first instance can pass such order—Balli Pande v. Chittan, 28 All. 625; Mehm Singh v. Mangal, 39 Cal. 157, 14 C.L.J. 437, 16 C.W.N. 10, 15 Cr.L.J. 529, 12 I.C. 297. This view of law was doubted in Ma Mya Khin v. Maung Po Htwa, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 288 (290), 11 Rang. 361, 1933 Cr.C. 1084, 145 I.C. 837, 35 Cr.L.J. 1 (F.B.). According to the recent view of the Rangoon High Court, sec. 423 (1)(d), Cr. P. C., does amplify the powers of Appellate Courts but it does not invest an Appellate Court with authority to make any order which might have been made by the Court below. As a matter of construction, an order for compensation under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., is not an order consequential or incidental to an order of discharge or acquittal passed by the High Court in revision or appeal. The High Court has, therefore, no power to award compensation under that section—The King v. Maung Khin Maung, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 278 (279), 1940 Rang.L.R. 502. See Note 808. An order of confiscation under the Indian Forests Act, VII of 1878, cannot be regarded as an order incidental on a conviction under that Act; under sec. 54 of that Act, the confiscation is regarded as a punishment in addition to any other punishment prescribed for the offence. Therefore, an Appellate Court cannot pass such order—Anuddi, 27 Cal. 450. The High Court cannot award the costs incurred in a revision petition filed against an order passed under Chap. XII—Vecrappa v. Arudayammal, 48 Mad. 262. See this case cited in Note 478 under sec. 148.

1151. Sub-section (2)—Interference with verdict of jury:—See Notes 916 and 917. The considerations governing an appeal from a trial held with the aid of assessors differ greatly from those governing an appeal from a trial by jury. In the latter case the appeal is restricted by the provisions of sec. 423 (2), whereas in the former case the whole case is before the Appellate Court—Champa Pasin, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (329), 108 I.C. 81, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 326, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 545. While on an appeal against the finding of a Judge sitting alone the appellant has to satisfy the Appellate Court that the Judge was wrong, on an appeal against a jury's verdict following on a properly directed charge, the appellant has the burden of showing that the verdict is unreasonable. Upon an appeal from a conviction founded on a jury's verdict the proper way of approaching it is to accuse that the findings of fact are correct and reasonable and lay the burden on the appellant of showing them to be otherwise. In other words, it means that the Appellate Court in reaching its conclusions must give full weight and consideration to the unanimous opinions of the Judge and the jury—James Dowdall, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 103 (106), 37 Cr.L.J. 607, 162 I.C. 430, 31 N.L.R. Sup. 215. The High Court will only interfere with a verdict of a jury when such verdict is obviously perverse or manifestly wrong or unreasonable—Ramadhan Brahmin v. Emp., A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 36, 29 Cr.L.J. 963 (964), 112 I.C. 51. In a trial by jury appeal is limited to questions of law and the Appellate Court is also limited by the provisions of this sub-section and sec. 537, Cr. P. Code—Nanak, 35 Cr.L.J. 1104, 150 I.C. 687, 15 P.L.T. 264, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 309, 1934 Cr.C. 730, 13 Pat. 529. By the provisions of sec. 537 (d), Cr. P. C., the Appellate Court cannot set aside the verdict of the jury merely because there was a misdirection unless it finds that the misdirection had in fact occasioned a failure of justice—Hari, 37 Cr.L.J. 320, 160 I.C. 675, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 46, 1936 Cr.C. 70. The High Court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of the jury unless it is of opinion that the verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge—Bongiri Pattakadar, 32 Mad. 179; Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (15); Shabhu, 10 Bom.L.R. 565; Waman, 27 Bom. 625; Rallansabapathy Goundan v. Public Prosecutor, 37 Cr.L.J. 909 (911), 164 I.C. 243, 1936 M.W.N. 459, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 516, 44 M.L.W. 155, 71 M.L.J. 231, 1936 Cr.C. 635. When the Court is of that opinion, it can reverse the verdict, but the power ought not to be exercised lightly, especially when the verdict is one of acquittal and unanimous—Shambhu, 10 Bom L.R. 565. The High Court cannot, on an appeal from the unanimous verdict of the jury, interfere with it, in the absence of a misdirection by the Judge, where there is some circumstantial evidence of the guilt—Mohini Mohan, 46 Cal. 635, 21 Cr.L.J. 8. Where there is evidence on the record to justify the jury's verdict, and the Judge's charge to the jury was fair and accurate, and the jury arrived at an eminently reasonable conclusion, the High Court will not interfere—Babban, 4 O.W.N. 901, 28 Cr.L.J. 937, 105 I.C. 457, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 101, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 549.

If there has been no misdirection by the Sessions Judge nor a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him, the High Court cannot reverse the verdict; but if it is of opinion that the accused should have been acquitted and the verdict was against the weight of the evidence, it can direct a copy of its judgment together with a copy of the paper book to be sent to the Local Government for such action as the latter may like to take—Ram Charitar, 8 P.L.T. 691, 28 Cr.L.J. 691 (691). Unless there has been a misdirection on the part of the Judge, the High Court cannot go into the question of fact and examine the evidence. By merely showing that the prosecution story was improbable or that there were material discrepancies or even contradictions in the evidence, Counsel for the accused cannot succeed in persuading the High Court to set aside the conviction—Bansidhar, 36 Cr.L.J. 322, 153 I.C. 364, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1032, 1934 A.L.J. 1160, 1934 Cr.C. 1339, 4 A.W.R. 788. The Appellate Court cannot go into the facts of the case except to see whether there has been any misdirection by the Judge—Ratnasabapathy v. Public Prosecutor, A.I.R. 1936 Mad 516 (519), 1936 M.W.N. 459. No Court will interfere with the verdict of a jury, even if it may itself think differently of the evidence, or because it thinks that another jury may have come to a different conclusion. To lightly interfere with the verdict of a jury with which the Sessions Judge has agreed would be to reduce trial by jury in this country to a farce—Jhina Soma, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 457 (460), 41 Bom L.R. 965, I.L.R. 1939 Bom 648, 41 Cr.L.J. 176, 185 I.C. 382.

The Appellate Court is also not entitled to go into the facts of the case and reverse the findings of the jury because a criminal revision case has been filed by the Crown for enhancement of the sentence calling upon the High Court to exercise its powers of revision under sec. 439, Cr. P. Code—Ratnasabapathy v. Public Prosecutor, supra, following Khodabux Haji, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 105, 147 I.C. 1124, 35 Cr.L.J. 554, 1934 Cr.C. 156, 61 Cal. 6, 37 C.W.N. 1122. See also Note under sec. 439 (b).

"Alter or reverse" :—The word 'reverse' evidently means to set aside, to make null; the word 'alter' is intended to mean the substitution of a finding of 'guilty' for 'not guilty' or vice versa. The verdict may be reversed, i.e., set aside, or it may be altered, i.e., another finding may be substituted for that of the jury—Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (15).

"Erroneous" :—To enable the Appellate Court to interfere with the verdict of the jury, the verdict must be erroneous. The High Court will not set aside the verdict, if it is not erroneous in spite of the misdirection—Naimuddi, 22 C.W.N. 572, 19 Cr.L.J. 649. The effect of this clause is to prevent the High Court from reversing the verdict of the jury, on account of any misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding of the law by the jury, unless such misdirection or misunderstanding is on points material to the verdict, so that the verdict may be said to be tainted with error in the process in which it has been arrived at—Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (977). The word 'erroneous' is not to be read as meaning 'wrong on the facts'. It must be read in connection with the words that follow, as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law—Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (977); Waman, 27 Bom. 626; Lalsingh, Ratanlal 452 (454). The Lahore High Court, however, holds that the general trend of authorities appears to suggest that the term "erroneous" is practically synonymous with "incorrect," which is the normal dictionary meaning. It is possible perhaps to go a little further and say that one meaning of sec. 423 (2), Cr. P. C., would appear to be that if the Court after examining the evidence finds that, even if the misdirection had not occurred, the jury could not reasonably without being perverse or unduly foolish have come to any other decision it will not interfere—A. M. Mathew v. Emp., A I R. 1940 Lah. 87 (89), 41 Cr.L.J. 482, 187 I C 456. It is the duty of the Appellate Court to ascertain whether the process or method which the Judge directed the jury to follow as to the acceptance or discarding of evidence, or as to the view taken of the law, was erroneous on any material point; but it is not the duty of the Appellate Court to determine for itself whether the verdict as a conclusion of fact was right or wrong. To hold the latter view would be tantamount to hold that an appeal would lie upon the facts from the verdict of the jury, in the face of the provisions of sec. 418—Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (977). Where there is no error in matter of law, and there was some evidence to go to the jury, the High Court cannot interfere—Choonee, 5 W R. 13; Jaspath, 14 Cal. 164.

Misdirection :—See Notes under sec. 297. Both secs 423 (2) and 537 require that before the verdict can be set aside on the ground of misdirection, the Court must be satisfied that the misdirection is of such a nature that it may be reasonably supposed that the verdict was erroneous by reason of such misdirection, or in other words, there has been a failure of justice by reason of such misdirection—Ali Fakir, 25 Cal. 230; Biru Mandal, 25 Cal. 561; Shyam Sundar, 26 C.W.N. 558. In determining whether the verdict ought to be set aside and a new trial granted, on the ground of defective summing up of the evidence, the question to be considered is not whether upon a proper summing up of the whole evidence a jury might have given a different verdict, but whether the legitimate effect of the evidence would require a different verdict. If the evidence is such that the High Court would have affirmed the conviction if the trial had been before a Judge and assessors, instead of a trial by jury, the High Court ought not to set aside a verdict given by a jury merely because the Judge has not, in summing up, given a proper caution or advice to the jury as to the weight which they might properly give to the evidence—Elahee Buksh, 5 W R. 80 (per Peacock, C.J.); followed in Jamiruddin Masali, 29 Cal. 782. On a question of misdirection as to evidence the High Court has to see whether it is reasonably probable that the jury would not have returned the verdict but for the misdirection complained of—Ilu, 36 Cr.L.J. 358 (359), A I R. 1934 Cal. 847, 1934 Cr.C. 1364, 153 I C. 454.

As to the effect of admission of inadmissible evidence see Note 920.

Misunderstanding :—There must be misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge; the verdict will not be set aside on the ground that the counsel for the accused (and not the jury) had misunderstood the expressions used by the Judge, especially when it appeared that the expression used by the Judge was perfectly intelligible and could not have the meaning suggested by the counsel for the accused—Shib Chunder, 10 Cal. 1079. In no case the verdict of the jury should be set aside solely on the ground that the heads of the charge were in the form "Sections 141, 142, 146 to 148, 319 to 322, 326, 201, Indian Penal Code, explained secs. 96, 97, 99 to 106, Indian Penal Code, explained Charges explained"—Hafezali, 32 Cr.L.J. 236, 129 I.C. 109, A I R. 1930 Cal. 712, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 125, 1930 Cr.C. 1112.

Verdict must be set aside in its entirety :—The term 'verdict' in this sub-section means a verdict on all the charges, and not merely the verdict upon each charge separately. Therefore if in a trial there are several charges in which there is an acquittal on some and a conviction on the other charges, and the verdict is found to be erroneous on appeal, the Appellate Court must set aside the verdict in its entirety. Where the Appellate Court in such a case reverses the verdict of the jury and orders a retrial, the retrial, unless the Appellate Court has limited the scope, must be taken to be one upon all the charges originally framed—Krishna Dhan, 22 Cal. 377; Jamiruddi Biswas, 16 C.W.N. 909, 13 Cr.L.J. 715; Bhola, 1904 P R. 12, 1 Cr.L.J. 942. The Lahore High Court has, however, held that where the High Court finds the verdict by jury on one of the charges to be erroneous it can set aside that verdict and uphold conviction on other charges on which the verdict is not found to be erroneous and need not send the case for retrial after setting aside the whole trial and the verdict on all charges—A. M. Mathews v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah 87 (90), 41 Cr.L.J. 482, 187 I.C. 456.

Misconduct of the jury :—See Notes 889 and 886B. Where in a trial by jury some of the accused were acquitted and some convicted, and it appeared that the foreman of the jury was subsequently convicted of having taken bribe in connection with that very trial, it was not possible to let the verdict stand—Hafez Molla, 34 Cr.L.J. 1072, 145 I.C. 816, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 639, 60 Cal 751, 1933 Cr.C. 1038.

Bias of the jury :—Where the Sessions Judge strongly expressed his opinion as regards the atmosphere of bias and prejudice in which a jury trial took place, it is impossible to uphold the trial, quite apart from the merits of the case. A verdict obtained on a trial by jury cannot possibly be sustained where the jurors were influenced by their private knowledge based on what they had heard outside Court and they were prepared to make an assumption against the accused without any evidence to support it—Dharanidhar, 59 CL.J. 15.

Interference by the Privy Council :—In the case of misdirection, as in any other case of an alleged failure in the proper trial of a criminal case, the Board give advice to His Majesty to intervene only if there is shown to be such a violation of the principles of justice that grave and substantial injustice has been done. The Board has repeatedly declined to act as a general Court of Appeal; and if English Law were shown to be applicable in all its details a failure to state the law in the summing up to the jury in the terms carefully considered, and expounded in Bateman's case [19 Cr. App. Rep 8 at p 13] or to insist more clearly on the onus of proof lying upon the prosecution would not in the opinion of their Lordships necessarily establish that there had been a serious miscarriage of justice. Apart from the circumstance that a summing up in the dominions or abroad is often imperfectly reported (if it is reported at all), admissions by the prosecuting Counsel or other incidents in the course of the trial may well have sufficiently brought home to the minds of a jury some factor in the case or some principle such as that of the onus of proof which might appear to have been omitted from the summing up of the Judge—Dennis Romain Renouf v. Attorney-General of Jersey, 37 Cr.L.J. 679 (687) (P.C.). See also Note 1099.

1152. Power of High Court after reversal of verdict :—Once the verdict of the jury is set aside under this sub-section there is no restriction on the power of the Appellate Court to deal with the case, of which it has complete seisin, in any of the manners provided in this section. Its power is not restricted to directing a retrial, and it may also reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried, or alter the finding and maintain the sentence, or, without altering the finding, reduce the sentence—Taju Pramanik, 25 Cal. 711. Sub-section (2) contains no provision as to what the Court is to do, or has power to do, when it reverses or alters the verdict of the jury. To ascertain that, it is necessary to revert to the language of sub-section (1), and in it no distinction is made between the powers of an Appellate Court in a case tried by jury and in any other case. And so, after reversal of the verdict of the jury, in an appeal against an acquittal, the High Court may under clause (a) order further inquiry or retrial or commitment or may find the accused guilty and pass sentence on him according to law—E. W. Smither, 26 Mad 1 (15).

Power to order retrial .—The High Court, on setting aside a verdict of the jury on the ground of irregularity, has jurisdiction to order a retrial—Bani Madhab, 46 Cal. 212; Topandas v. Emp., A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116, 81 I.C. 249, 25 Cr.L.J. 761; Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (216), 184 I.C. 474, 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 12 RS. 107. It is open to the High Court to order a new trial by a new jury, when it is found that the verdict of the jury is tainted with prejudice and is based on rumours as to the prisoner's previous conduct—Anchala Nallacharlu, 2 Weir 381. But it is not always obligatory on the High Court to order a retrial, whatever may be its view as to the weight to be attached to the evidence. To do so would be an intolerable hardship on the accused person in a case where the High Court (in an appeal from verdict of acquittal) is satisfied of his innocence and that the acquittal was right, or that the conviction (in an appeal against a conviction) was not justified by the evidence. Thus, it would be unreasonable to hold that once a misdirection is established, the High Court is bound mechanically to order a retrial, even though in its opinion the evidence for the prosecution is untrustworthy—Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (15, 16). If the verdict is set aside on the ground that there was a defective summing up by the Judge and that the error of the Judge has caused a failure of justice, it may be necessary in some cases to grant a new trial. But if the High Court is satisfied that no failure of justice has been caused and that the evidence is wholly insufficient to support a conviction, and would upon the same evidence have reversed a conviction if the case has been tried without the intervention of a jury, it would be unnecessary and improper to grant a new trial—Elahee Buksh, 5 W.R. 80; Jamruddi, 29 Cal 782, 6 C.W.N. 553. See also Sita Ram, 33 Cr.L.J. 167 (169), 135 I.C. 392, 8 O.W.N. 1215, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 23, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 40, 7 Luck 390, 1932 Cr.C. 55; Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (217), 41 Cr.L.J. 28, 184 I.C. 474, 12 R.S. 107. A retrial will not be ordered on the mere ground that the deposition of a witness which was not admissible was allowed to be put in as evidence in the Sessions Court, if there is plenty of other evidence to the same effect, and there is nothing to show that this deposition had any effect on the verdict of the jury as bearing on the guilt or innocence of the accused—Wafadar, 21 Cal 955 (970).

Where much depends upon the impression made by the witnesses in their evidence and the accused in their statements upon the Court, it is not a case where the High Court should proceed to decide upon the paper record after setting aside the verdict of the jury but it is essentially a case where the guilt or innocence of the accused should be determined by a Judge and jury, who have seen the witnesses and heard them give their evidence, who have seen the accused and who have heard them give their statements. It is a case in which there should be a retrial—Shewaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 209 (217), 184 I.C. 474, 12 R.S. 107, 41 Cr.L.J. 28.

An order, which directs that a case which has originally been heard before a jury should be re-heard before a Court without a jury, is an order that ought not to be made unless it is justified by exceptional circumstances. There is jurisdiction to make it, but it is obvious that it has, and is likely to have, a very serious effect upon the rights of the accused, and his privilege which he has previously enjoyed of trial by a jury he ought in general to retain—Hart, 39 C.W.N. 929 (933), 36 Cr.L.J. 978, 156 I.C. 3, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 122, 1935 O.W.N. 744 (P.C.).

See Note 1061.

Power to try the case itself—The Calcutta High Court has expressed a doubt as to whether the High Court has power to retry the case itself. When a case has been tried before a jury, and the conviction has been set aside on the ground of misdirection, the accused is entitled to have his case retried before a jury, and as a matter of procedure and in justice to the accused this course should be adopted—Sarku, 4 C.W.N. 576 (581, 582). But the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts hold the view that if a verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, the Appellate Court has no option but to set aside the verdict and order a retrial. Were the Appellate Courts to go into the facts in such a case, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the jury, who have the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appellate Court can only arrive at a decision on a perusal of the paper evidence—Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (978) (following Makin v. Attorney-General of N. S. Wales, L.R. [1894] A.C. 57); Krishna Dhan, 22 Cal. 377; Ikramuddin, 39 All. 348 (351), 18 Cr.L.J. 491, 39 I.C. 331. The Calcutta High Court seems to have modified its view by holding that there is no reason why in a proper case the Court may not assume to deal with the whole case itself under the powers and duty conferred upon it by law—Govt. of Bengal v. Santiram, 32 Cr.L.J. 10 (18), 127 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 370, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 865, 1930

Cr.C. 634, 58 Cal. 96. See also Saroj Kumar, 35 Cr.L.J. 854, 139 I.C. 873, 1932 Cr.C. 464, 59 Cal 1361, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 474, 55 C.L.J. 439, Ind Rul. 1932 Cal. 667. See also Benoyendra, 40 C.W.N. 432 (446), A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 73, cited in Note 1059. The Madras High Court is of opinion that the High Court has power to try the case itself. It is true that the High Court, not having an opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witnesses, is at a disadvantage in weighing the evidence, but it is the same in all cases where an Appellate Court deals with the facts and is no worse in a case triable by jury than in one triable by a Judge with the aid of assessors. Further, if it is said that in weighing the evidence the High Court would be assuming the function of the jury, the answer is that it is a duty so frequently cast upon the High Courts (Cf. sec 307) that no adverse argument can be drawn from it—Smither, 26 Mad 1 (16). In this case the Madras High Court added (at p. 18) that the dicta of the Judicial Committee in the case of Makin v. Attorney-General, supra, ought not to be applied in India. The same view has been taken by the Bombay High Court in Ram Chandra, 19 Bom. 749 (763). In a case of trial by jury the Appellate Court has power in the event of any misdirection or admission of inadmissible evidence either to convict or acquit the accused according as the evidence is or is not sufficient for conviction, or where the facts have to be determined and the evidence is of such a character as to render it difficult to pronounce any opinion on its character without hearing witnesses, a new trial may be ordered—Ramchandra, 35 Cr.L.J. 747 (749), 148 I.C. 553, 35 Bom.L.R. 174, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 153, 1933 Cr.C. 465. Where the evidence is practically undisputed, and the result depends upon the inference to be drawn from that evidence, the High Court can itself decide the case, and there is no necessity of ordering a retrial—Ram Chandra, supra. Where illegal admission of evidence, misdirection and non-direction seriously prejudiced the accused, or their omission would possibly have led to a different result, or they caused any failure of justice, it would be necessary to order a new trial. Where the decision, however, does not really turn upon questions about the veracity of witnesses or upon the finding of doubtful facts, but upon the question what inference is to be drawn from well-established facts about the existence of which there is not and cannot be any reasonable doubt, the Court is at least as well, if not better, qualified than the jury to draw the necessary inference—Benoyendra, 40 C.W.N. 432 (441), A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 73, 37 Cr.L.J. 394, 161 I.C. 74, 1936 Cr.C. 145, 64 C.L.J. 154. The Sind Court is also of opinion that whether the High Court should itself decide the case or order a retrial depends upon the facts of each case. When a case is complicated, a fresh trial may be advisable; but in a simple case the High Court has jurisdiction to decide the case, and a fresh trial would only cause unnecessary trouble and expense—Saran, 21 S.L.R. 356, 28 Cr.L.J. 66 (69); Murid, 3 S.L.R. 125, 11 Cr.L.J. 15; Topandas, 25 Cr.L.J. 761, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116.

Power to go into facts :—From the above remarks it is evident that the question whether the High Court can go into the facts depends upon the question whether it can try the case itself. The Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts are of opinion that the High Court is not competent to go into facts of the case; and the appeal must be limited, as laid down in sec. 418, to points of law—Ikramuddin, 39 All. 348 (352), A.I.R. 1917 All. 173, 39 I.C. 331, 15 A.L.J. 205; Nasadar, 21 Cal 955 (976); Krishna Dhan, supra. Even the High Court is not competent to go into the facts to ascertain whether the verdict of the jury is actually erroneous on the facts—Ali Fakir, 25 Cal. 230. It is not competent for the Appellate Court to look at the evidence with a view to see whether another jury might not have arrived at a different verdict—Ikramuddin, 39 All. 318 (351). But the Madras High Court is of opinion that in order to determine whether the verdict is erroneous and has in fact occasioned a failure of justice (sec. 537), it is absolutely necessary for the High Court to go into the facts and to consider the evidence in the case before passing orders on it—Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (14, 18), 2 Weir 521 (dissenting from 21 Cal. 955 and 25 Cal. 230, cited above). The Sind Court, the Nagpur Court and the Bombay High Court have also held that the Judge has full powers to go into the case in such circumstances once he finds that there has been a misdirection. Vide Topan Das v. Emp., A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116, 81 I.C. 249, 25 Cr.L.J. 761; Ramprasad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1925 Nag 53, 88 I.C. 178, 26 Cr.L.J. 1090; and Ramchandra v. Emp., A.I.R. 1933 Bom 153, 1933 Cr.C. 465, 148 I.C. 553, 35 Cr.L.J. 747, 35 Bom.L.R. 174. Even the Calcutta High Court has also come round to this view in a recent case reported in A.I.R. 1932 Cal 474, 1932 Cr.C. 464, 139 I.C. 873, 33 Cr.L.J. 854, 59 Cal. 1361, 55 C.L.J. 439 (Saroj Kumar v. Emp.) The latter and better view therefore seems to be that if the Court finds there is a misdirection it has to examine the evidence to see whether the verdict was erroneous and has caused a failure of justice. If it cannot so find it cannot interfere—A. M. Mathews v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah 87 (89), 41 Cr.L.J. 482, 187 I.C. 456.

It has been said by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts that the powers of the High Court under section 423 (2) are not so wide as the powers under section 307. When a reference is made under sec. 307, the power of the High Court is not restricted, as under this section, only to cases where there has been an error of law in the proceeding below, but the High Court is authorised under that section to go into the facts. See Wajadar, 21 Cal 955 (977); Ikramuddin, 39 All 348 (351); MacCarthy, 9 All. 420. But the Bombay High Court has said that the power under sec. 423 is identical with the power under sec. 307, viz., the power of determining the facts or of ordering retrial—Ram Chandra, 19 Bom 749 (762), dissenting from 21 Cal 955.

In cases, however, where the appellants have been sentenced to death they have in the High Court an appeal on matter of fact as well as of law. Section 374 read with sec. 418 (2), supports this view. In disposing of a reference under sec. 374, and the appeals by the persons sentenced to death the High Court is, therefore, obliged to come to its own independent conclusions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused independently of the verdict of the jury or of the opinion of the Judge. In these cases the questions of misdirection are of less importance. But though the High Court is not bound by the verdict of the jury it must attach greatest possible weight to the verdict of the jury if it answers a reasonable test—Benoyendra, 37 Cr.L.J. 394 (403), 40 C.W.N. 432, A.I.R. 1936 Cal 73, 161 I.C. 74, 1936 Cr.C. 145, 64 C.L.J. 154.

424. The rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court:

Provided that, unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused shall not be brought up, or required to attend, to hear judgment delivered.

1153. Appellate judgment:—When an appeal is dismissed summarily under sec. 421, no judgment is required to be written. See Note 1132 under sec. 421.

But if the appeal is dismissed not summarily but under sec. 423, after notice given under sec. 422, the Court must deliver a judgment that would fulfil the conditions laid down in sec. 367. Omission to write a judgment is not an irregularity cured by sec. 537 (a)—Devendra, 17 Bom.L.R. 1085, 16 Cr.L.J. 832. See Note 1051.

Appellate Court:—Judges of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting as Sessions Judges for the district of Karachi, should follow as closely as possible the provisions of sec. 367 and 424. But the omission to do so cannot nullify the whole proceeding before the Sessions Court. The clause "so far as may be practicable" occurring in sec. 424 would certainly bring the error within the scope of sec. 537—Fakir Bux, 20 S.L.R. 261, 27 Cr.L.J. 833.

Contents of judgment:—The judgment must fulfil the requirements of sec. 367; that is, it must contain the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum

Cr.C. 634, 58 Cal. 96. See also Saroj Kumar, 35 Cr.L.J. 854, 139 I.C. 873, 1932 Cr.C. 464, 59 Cal. 1361, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 474, 55 C.L.J. 439, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 667. See also Benoyendra, 40 C.W.N. 432 (446), A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 73, cited in Note 1059. The Madras High Court is of opinion that the High Court has power to try the case itself. It is true that the High Court, not having an opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witnesses, is at a disadvantage in weighing the evidence, but it is the same in all cases where an Appellate Court deals with the facts and is no worse in a case triable by jury than in one triable by a Judge with the aid of assessors. Further, if it is said that in weighing the evidence the High Court would be assuming the function of the jury, the answer is that it is a duty so frequently cast upon the High Courts (Cf. sec. 307) that no adverse argument can be drawn from it—Smither, 26 Mad 1 (16). In this case the Madras High Court added (at p. 18) that the dicta of the Judicial Committee in the case of Makin v. Attorney-General, supra, ought not to be applied in India. The same view has been taken by the Bombay High Court in Ram Chandra, 19 Bom 749 (763). In a case of trial by jury the Appellate Court has power in the event of any misdirection or admission of inadmissible evidence either to convict or acquit the accused according as the evidence is or is not sufficient for conviction, or where the facts have to be determined and the evidence is of such a character as to render it difficult to pronounce any opinion on its character without hearing witnesses, a new trial may be ordered—Ramchandra, 35 Cr.L.J. 747 (749), 148 I.C. 553, 35 Bom.L.R. 174, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 153, 1933 Cr.C. 465. Where the evidence is practically undisputed, and the result depends upon the inference to be drawn from that evidence, the High Court can itself decide the case, and there is no necessity of ordering a retrial—Ram Chandra, supra. Where illegal admission of evidence, misdirection and non-direction seriously prejudiced the accused, or their omission would possibly have led to a different result, or they caused any failure of justice, it would be necessary to order a new trial. The Sind Court is also of opinion that whether the High Court should itself decide the case or order a retrial depends upon the facts of each case. When a case is complicated, a fresh trial may be advisable; but in a simple case the High Court has jurisdiction to decide the case, and a fresh trial would only cause unnecessary trouble and expense—Saran, 21 S.L.R. 356, 28 Cr.L.J. 66 (69); Murid, 3 S.L.R. 125, 11 Cr.L.J. 15; Topandas, 25 Cr.L.J. 761, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116.

Power to go into facts :—From the above remarks it is evident that the question whether the High Court can go into the facts depends upon the question whether it can try the case itself. The Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts are of opinion that the High Court is not competent to go into facts of the case; and the appeal must be limited, as laid down in sec. 418, to points of law—Ikramuddin, 39 All. 348 (352), A.I.R. 1917 All. 173, 39 I.C. 331, 15 A.L.J. 205; Nafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (976); Krishna Dhan, supra. Even the High Court is not competent to go into the facts to ascertain whether the verdict of the jury is actually erroneous on the facts—Ali Fakir, 25 Cal. 230. It is not competent for the Appellate Court to look at the evidence with a view to see whether another jury might not have arrived at a different verdict—Ikramuddin, 39 All. 348 (351). But the Madras High Court is of opinion that in order to determine whether the verdict is erroneous and has in fact occasioned a failure of justice (sec. 537), it is absolutely necessary for the High Court to go into the facts and to consider the evidence in the case before passing orders on it—Smither, 26 Mad. 1 (14, 18), 2 Weir 521 (dissenting from 21 Cal. 955 and 25 Cal. 230, cited above). The Sind Court, the Nagpur Court and the Bombay High Court have also held that the Judge has full powers to go into the case in such circumstances once he finds that there has been a misdirection. Vide Topan Das v. Emp, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 116, 81 I.C. 249, 25 Cr.L.J. 761; *Ramprasad v. Even the Calcutta High Court has also come round to this view in a recent case reported in A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 474, 1932 Cr.C. 464, 139 I.C. 873, 33 Cr.L.J. 854, 59 Cal. 1361, 55 C.L.J. 439 (Saroj Kumar v. Emp.) The latter and better view therefore seems to be that if the Court finds there is a misdirection it has to examine the evidence to see whether the verdict was erroneous and has caused a failure of justice. If it cannot so find it cannot interfere—A. M. Mathews v. Emp, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 87 (89), 41 Cr.L.J. 482, 187 I.C. 456.

It has been said by the Calcutta and Allahabad High Courts that the powers of the High Court under section 423 (2) are not so wide as the powers under section 307. When a reference is made under sec 307, the power of the High Court is not restricted, as under this section, only to cases where there has been an error of law in the proceeding below, but the High Court is authorised under that section to go into the facts. See Wafadar, 21 Cal. 955 (977); Ikrumuddin, 39 All 348 (351); MacCarthy, 9 All. 420. But the Bombay High Court has said that the power under sec. 423 is identical with the power under sec 307, viz., the power of determining the facts or of ordering retrial—Ram Chandra, 19 Bom 749 (762), dissenting from 21 Cal. 955.

In cases, however, where the appellants have been sentenced to death they have in the High Court an appeal on matter of fact as well as of law. Section 374 read with sec. 418 (2), supports this view. In disposing of a reference under sec 374, and the appeals by the persons sentenced to death the High Court is, therefore, obliged to come to its own independent conclusions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused independently of the verdict of the jury or of the opinion of the Judge. In these cases the questions of misdirection are of less importance. But though the High Court is not bound by the verdict of the jury it must attach greatest possible weight to the verdict of the jury if it answers a reasonable test—Benoyendra, 37 Cr.L.J. 394 (403), 40 C.W.N. 432, A.I.R. 1936 Cal 73, 161 I.C. 74, 1936 Cr.C. 145, 64 C.L.J. 154.

424. The rules contained in Chapter XXVI as to the judgment of a Criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of any Appellate Court other than a High Court:

Provided that, unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused shall not be brought up, or required to attend, to hear judgment delivered.

1153. Appellate judgment:—When an appeal is dismissed summarily under sec. 421, no judgment is required to be written. See Note 1132 under sec. 421.

But if the appeal is dismissed not summarily but under sec. 423, after notice given under sec. 422, the Court must deliver a judgment that would fulfil the conditions laid down in sec. 367. Omission to write a judgment is not an irregularity cured by sec. 537 (a)—Devendra, 17 Bom.L.R. 1085, 16 Cr.L.J. 832. See Note 1051.

Appellate Court:—Judges of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting as Sessions Judges for the district of Karachi, should follow as closely as possible the provisions of sec. 367 and 424. But the omission to do so cannot nullify the whole proceeding before the Sessions Court. The clause "so far as may be practicable" occurring in sec. 424 would certainly bring the error within the scope of sec. 537—Fakir Bux, 20 S.L.R. 261, 27 Cr.L.J. 833.

Contents of judgment:—The judgment must fulfil the requirements of sec. 367; that is, it must contain the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal, the decision thereon and the reasons for that decision—Devendra, supra; Kalu Mirza, 37 Cal. 91; Jairam, 8 N.L.R. 84, 13 Cr.L.J. 559. See Note 1051 under sec. 367, under heading "Appellate judgment." An appeal under sec. 476B must be dealt with as an ordinary appeal under sec. 424, and cannot be disposed of summarily without giving any reason. If it is so disposed of, the case will be remitted to the Appellate Judge so that he may rehear the appeal and write a judgment in accordance with law—Hamid Ali v. Madhusudan, 54 Cal. 355, 31, 31 C.W.N. 281.

If the appellate judgment is not in accordance with law, the High Court may remand the appeal for rehearing and delivery of a proper judgment—Bholanath, 7 C.W.N. 30; Ram Lal v. Haricharan, 37 Cal. 194; Chandra Singh, 1913 P.R. 2, 13 Cr.L.J. 737; Gopala, 1 Bom.L.R. 255.

See also Note 1044 regarding the delivery of judgment by the successor of the Judge or the Magistrate who wrote it.

It is improper for an Appellate Court to record in its judgment grave imputations on the motives of the trying Magistrate, when such imputations have no other foundation than suspicion. If the Appellate Magistrate considers that the trying Magistrate is actuated by improper considerations in the performance of his judicial functions, it is his duty to report his opinion to the District Magistrate, but any imputations ought not to find a place in the judgment—Yacoub, 2 Weir 535.

425. (1) Whenever a case is decided on appeal by the High Court under this Chapter, it shall certify its judgment or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order appealed against was recorded or passed. If the finding, sentence or order was recorded or passed by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, the certificate shall be sent through the District Magistrate.

(2) The Court to which the High Court certifies its judgment or order shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the judgment or order of the High Court, and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

426. (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person, the Appellate Court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended and, also, if he is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

(2) The power conferred by this section on an Appellate Court may be exercised also by the High Court in the case of any appeal by a convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto.

(3) When the appellant is ultimately sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, the time during which he is so released shall be excluded in computing the term for which he is so sentenced.

1154. 'Pending an appeal' :—A sentence cannot be suspended until an appeal has been actually preferred and is pending. Where a Magistrate postponed the execution of the sentence for a stated period, at the request of the accused, to allow him to appeal, it was held that the suspension of the sentence was bad in law—Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47. A sentence cannot be suspended in the absence of an appeal—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 1.

"Convicted person" :—See Note 240 regarding the power of the Appellate Court to suspend the order relating to the furnishing of security

"Appellate Court" :—The power conferred by this section to suspend the sentence can be exercised only by the Appellate Court—2 Weir 536. The sentence cannot be suspended by the Magistrate or Judge who passed it—Kishen Soonder, 12 W.R. 47; Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 1. So also, a Sessions Judge has no power to suspend the execution of a sentence passed by a second class Magistrate, because the appeal from that Magistrate will not lie to the Sessions Judge—Kodu Moidin, 2 Weir 536.

Sentence :—An order of detention passed by a District Magistrate under sec. 10 of the Reformatory Schools Act (VIII of 1897) is not a 'sentence' within the meaning of this section, nor is it a punishment enumerated in sec. 53 of the Penal Code. A Sessions Judge has therefore no power to suspend its operation under this section—Krishna Pandaram, 16 Cr.L.J. 134 (Mad.).

Release on bail :—The Appellate Court can exercise the powers conferred by this section and release the accused on bail, whether the offence is bailable or not—Anonymous, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 1.

Exclusion of time :—See sub-section (3). It is only when the convicted person has been released (and not where his sentence has been illegally suspended) that the term during which the sentence is suspended shall be excluded in computing the sentence—Kodu Moidin, 2 Weir 536.

This clause does not lay down that the period during which a person is released shall be excluded from the term; what it lays down is that this period will be excluded in computing the term which means that this period will be left out in making calculation. On the plain interpretation of the clause the period during which a person is released on bail cannot reduce the term of the sentence. On the other hand, it will not affect the term at all as it will not be taken into consideration in computing the period of the term which the accused has to serve on the dismissal of his appeal—Naram Singh, A.I.R. 1936 All. 12, 158 I.C. 906, 36 Cr.L.J. 1479, 1935 A.L.J. 1168. See also Note 296.

427. When an appeal is presented under section 417, the Arrest of accused in appeal from acquittal

High Court may issue a warrant directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal, or admit him to bail.

428. (1) In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter,

Appellate Court may take further evidence or direct it to be taken.

the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reasons, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate.

(2) When the additional evidence is taken by the Court of Session or the Magistrate, it or he shall certify such evidence to the Appellate Court, and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal.

(3) Unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused or his pleader shall be present when the additional evidence is taken; but such evidence shall not be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors.

(4) The taking of evidence under this section shall be subject to the provisions of Chapter XXV, as if it were an inquiry.

1155. Object and scope of Section:—Section 423, Cr. P. C., is not exhaustive of the methods by which a Court can deal with an appeal. Section 423, Cr. P. C., deals with the disposal of an appeal, and sec. 428, Cr. P. C., provides powers for the Appellate Court to call for further evidence before the appeal is disposed of. An Appellate Court can direct the taking of further evidence in support of the prosecution; a fortiori it is open to the Court to direct that the accused persons may be given a chance of adducing further evidence—Sheoram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1058 (1059), 10 R.N. 102, I.L.R. 1927 Nag. 541, 171 I.C. 262, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 285.

The object of this section is the prevention of a guilty man's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings of a Magistrate, or the vindication of an innocent person wrongfully accused, where the Magistrate through the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to record the circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth—Wooday Chand, 18 W.R. 31; Akhatar, 6 P.L.T. 431, 26 Cr.L.J. 1171; Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 885 (892). The intention of the Legislature in enacting this section is to empower the Appellate Court to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted, and if the Appellate Court finds that certain evidence is necessary in order to enable it to give a correct finding, it would be justified in taking action under this section—Dulla, 7 Lah. 148, 27 Cr.L.J. 463. But this section cannot be invoked to cure an illegality. Thus, where the Magistrate committed an illegality in procedure by not allowing the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, the Sessions Judge cannot remand the case to the Magistrate with a direction to allow the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses and to certify the additional evidence so taken by the Sessions Judge. The proper course for the Sessions Judge is to set aside the conviction and order the Magistrate to commence from the stage when the illegality occurred or to hold a de novo trial—Lakshman, 53 Bom. 578, 1929 Cr.C. 130 (134), 121 I.C. 588, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 309, 31 Cr.L.J. 309, 31 Bom.L.R. 593, Ind. Rul. 1930 Bom. 76. But see Munshi v. Muzaffar in Note 1156.

In ordering additional evidence to be taken it would be quite proper to direct a further examination of the accused at the same time—Sri Krishna Prasad Sinha, 37 Cr.L.J. 906, 164 I.C. 184, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 438, 17 P.L.T. 444, 1936 Cr.C. 699.

It is clear from the very language of this section that only when the Court of Session is sitting to hear an appeal from a judgment of a Magistrate has it got power under this section to record additional evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, and it is only the High Court, which is the Appellate Court of the Court of Session, that can under this section, direct a Court of Session or a Magistrate, to record additional evidence in a case pending before it in appeal. The Sessions Judge is not legally authorised to record additional evidence in hearing an appeal from a judgment of an Assistant Sessions Judge who tried the case with the aid of assessors—Hori Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 844, 155 I.C. 753, 1935 O.W.N. 592, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 402. The power under this section can be exercised only by the Appellate Court. A Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate not acting as an Appellate Court is not authorised to take additional evidence or order it to be taken—Moni Mohan, 6 C.L.J. 251. But the High Court acting as a Court of revision, under sec. 439, has the power of an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken—Ibid. See Bal Krishna, 36 Cr.L.J. 1048 (1049), 156 I.C. 1001, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 208, 16 P.L.T. 151. The power to take or call for additional evidence given by this section is expressly limited to appeals under this Chapter; see Krishna, 33 Mad. 90.

A proceeding under sec. 125 is neither appellate nor revisional: consequently, this section has no application to an order under sec. 125. Therefore, when a District Magistrate finds that an order directing the furnishing of security is irregular, he should set it aside; he has no jurisdiction to remand the case to the Magistrate for further evidence—Nasir, 20 Cr.L.J. 221, 49 I.C. 221 (Pat.).

Enquiry by Police:—This section does not warrant an Appellate Court sending a case to the Police for investigation, if it has been originally started by a complaint in Court—Maheshri, 1900 A.W.N. 130.

Powers of Civil and Criminal Courts compared:—A Civil Court has ordinarily no power to take evidence of its own motion; it has to decide the case on the evidence adduced by the parties. But a Criminal Court stands on a different footing. Section 540 enables the Magistrate at any stage of the inquiry or trial to examine any witness he may find necessary, in order to come to a proper conclusion. Section 428 also in general terms empowers the Appellate Court to take additional evidence—Bhami Laxman, 1910 M.W.N. 819, 11 Cr.L.J. 511.

1156. When additional evidence may be taken and when not:—This section gives a discretion to the Appellate Court, and this discretion is not to be exercised against the accused and in favour of the prosecution, unless in exceptional cases and where the merits are clearly against the accused—Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 885 (892). An Appellate Court cannot decide whether it should exercise the discretion under this section unless it has heard the appeal on the merits. Specially in a case involving the consideration of a very difficult question (e.g., a case of sedition) it is almost impossible, before the appeal is heard on the merits, to hold any definite view as to the prima facie guilt of the accused or whether his guilt is grave enough to justify the view that it is desirable to allow additional evidence in order to prevent the offence from going unpunished—Varadarajulu, supra. Additional evidence may be taken under this section only if the Appellate Court thinks it to be necessary, and the necessity for taking such evidence must be apparent from something on the record and cannot be derived from external information—Po Gyi, 3 L.B.R. 114. The mere fact that some fresh evidence has been discovered after the filing of the appeal does not empower the Appellate Court to allow the fresh evidence to be adduced, unless the Court thinks it necessary—Gurumurthi v Read, 9 M.L.T. 323, 12 Cr.L.J. 40. When the Original Court has taken all the evidence produced by the prosecution which had ample opportunities to do so, and that evidence has failed to sustain the charge, an Appellate Court will not, except in very exceptional circumstances, direct that additional evidence should be taken—Fateh, 5 All. 217. This section merely enables an Appellate Court, if it thinks necessary, to call for additional evidence which will explain or clear up or perhaps supplement within limitation the evidence for the prosecution in support of a charge which has resulted in a conviction and which conviction is the subject of an appeal and it does not enable an Appellate Court to substitute an offence in respect of which there has not been a conviction and then say that additional evidence must be called which may support such an offence—Konda v Mangala, 32 Cr.L.J. 109, 128 I.C. 159, 59 M.L.J. 458, 32 M.L.W. 534, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 854, 1930 M.W.N. 1209, 54 Mad. 63, 1930 Cr.C. 1149, Ind Rul 1931 Mad 15. Where evidence which should not have been admitted was tendered by the prosecution, and was admitted by the Magistrate, the Appellate Court can discard that evidence, and supply the gap in the prosecution evidence by taking further evidence. Thus, where the report of an excise analyst to the effect that a certain bottle contained cocaine was improperly admitted by the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge on appeal may call in the excise analyst to have him examined as to the contents of the bottle—Bansal, 52 Bom. 686, 29 Cr.L.J. 990 (991). Where the Appellate Court thinks that the evidence of some more witnesses who were not examined in the Lower Court is necessary, it cannot order a retrial on that ground, but should proceed under this section by summoning and examining those witnesses—Iskwar Prasad, 16 A.L.J. 325, 19 Cr.L.J. 485, 45 I.C. 149; Luchman, 31 Cal. 710 (713). Where the Lower Court has refused to examine certain important witnesses for the defence, and the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by such refusal, the Appellate Court may direct the Lower Court to take the evidence of such witnesses and to certify the same to it—Sirasami, 19 Mad. 375; Mahomed, 3 P.L.J. 632, 19 Cr.L.J. 902. Similarly, where the prosecution was prepared to adduce evidence necessary to prove the offence, but the Magistrate intervened stating that such evidence was unnecessary, and refused to take it, the case was one in which the Appellate Court could properly call for fresh evidence under this section—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (470), 12 I.C. 961, 10 M.L.T. 506, 22 M.L.J. 75, 12 Cr.L.J. 585. But this section does not apply where the prosecution having had ample opportunities to produce evidence has failed to do so—Jeremiah v. Vas, 36 Mad. 457 (467); Bansi Lal, 52 Bom. 686, 29 Cr.L.J. 900, 112 I.C. 110, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 241; United Motor Finance Co., A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 325, 68 M.L.J. 336, 1934 M.W.N. 183. The object of sec. 428, Cr. P. C., is not for the purpose of enabling the prosecution to produce evidence which could easily have been produced at the first trial. It is not to enable the prosecution, having failed once, to have an opportunity of trying the case all over again—Pujari Hanumathappa, 38 Cr.L.J. 257, 166 I.C. 623, 9 R.M. 385, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 181, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 75, 1936 M.W.N. 1149, 44 M.L.W. 884, following Jeremiah v. Vas, supra, and V. M. Rathnavelu Mudaliar v. Emp., 1930 M.W.N. 47 (Cr.). In other words, this section cannot be utilised for excusing the negligence of the prosecution—Varadarajulu, 42 Mad. 885 (894). An Appellate Court ought not to give the complainant an opportunity to fill up gaps in his evidence by directing a retrial. So the order, giving the trial Court liberty to hear other evidence to "complete the inquiry" is improper—Muhammad Din, 35 Cr.L.J. 1166, 150 I.C. 973, 1934 Cr.C. 548, A.I.R. 1934 Lah 316. See also Hari Lal, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 402 (404), 36 Cr.L.J. 844, 155 I.C. 753, 1935 O.W.N. 592. An Appellate Court can call for additional evidence by directing the Sessions Judge to bring upon his record the statements of witnesses as given in the Court of the committing Magistrate, under sec. 288, after giving notice to the accused—Nagina, 19 A.L.J. 947, 27 Cr.L.J. 813 (814). An Appellate Court can admit additional evidence in order to ascertain the value of statements made by a defence witness—Subramania, 55 M.L.J. 676, 30 Cr.L.J. 133 (134).

The Appellate Court has jurisdiction to proceed under this section in cases where the prosecution witnesses have not been cross-examined at the trial and the appellant wishes for this additional evidence to be brought before the Court. Where, therefore, the Appellate Court recorded an order under this section, asking the Magistrate to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses who were not cross-examined during the trial, to certify the evidence and to re-submit it to him and, on receipt of the further evidence, heard and dismissed the appeal, there was no want of jurisdiction in the Appellate Court or any illegality in the procedure—Munshi v. Muzaffar, 40 Cr.L.J. 47, 178 I.C. 422, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 781, 43 C.W.N. 85, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 205, distinguishing Laxman Ramshet, 53 Bom. 578, 121 I.C. 588, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 309, 1929 Cr.C. 130, 31 Cr.L.J. 309, 31 Bom.L.R. 593, Ind. Rul. 1930 Bom. 76 cited in Note 1155.

There may be some doubt as to the duty of the Public Prosecutor to call witnesses who know important facts but are not likely to turn hostile, but there is a duty cast upon the Court to arrive at the truth by all lawful means and one of such is the examination of witnesses of its own accord when for certain obvious reasons neither party is prepared to call witnesses who are known to be in a position to speak to important relevant facts. Where the trial Court fails to do this, the Appellate Court should avail itself of the power conferred by this section—Donald Dixon, 40 Cr.L.J. 35, 178 I.C. 341, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 900, 1938 M.W.N. 817, 48 M.L.W. 363.

When the Appellate Court thinks that some documents which had been marked as exhibits had not been proved according to law although they had been admitted in evidence without objection and that the examination of the accused under sec. 312, Cr. P. C., had not been satisfactory, two courses are open to it. One is to proceed under this section, that is to say, to keep the appeal pending on its own file while directing additional evidence to be taken by a Magistrate and duly certified to the Appellate Court which would then dispose of the appeal under cl. (2) of this section.

In ordering additional evidence to be taken it would be quite proper to direct a further examination of the accused at the same time. The other course is under sec. 423, Cr. P. C., to set aside the conviction and order the accused to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction. Such a re-trial, if ordered, would be a de novo trial. Where the Appellate Court has done neither of these things but has passed an order setting aside the conviction and sending the case back for further evidence but not for complete re-trial, the order is illegal—Sri Krishna Prasad Sinha, 37 Cr.L.J. 906, 164 I.C. 184, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 438, 17 P.L.T. 444, 1936 Cr.C. 699, 2 B.R. 715, 9 R.P. 91, following Gajanan Thakur v. Emp., 1 P.L.J. 99, A.I.R. 1916 Pat. 219, 35 I.C. 508, 17 Cr.L.J. 332. See also Ramchandra Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 657 (658), 168 I.C. 979, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 246, 3 B.R. 508, 9 R.P. 522, 18 P.L.T. 483, 1937 P.W.N. 519.

Where it was the duty of the prosecution to have placed before the Court the first report made by the complainant in a case under sec. 358, I.P.C., and it did not do so, the Appellate Court should have taken additional evidence on the point as the accused had not come to know of this report at an earlier stage—Sarnam Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 117 (119), 152 I.C. 550, 4 A.W.R. 949, A.I.R. 1935 All. 63.

The Appellate Court may take additional evidence to supply a defect in formal proof (e.g., proof as to whether the sanction for prosecution required under sec. 196 was granted by the proper authority), when the conviction for a serious charge such as sedition, which is otherwise sustainable, is likely to be upset for want of such proof—Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 885 (889).

As for the power of the Appellate Court in the matter of taking additional evidence in an appeal under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., see Note 1257.

There is no provision in the Code under which an affidavit sworn by a prosecution witness declaring that the evidence given by her against the appellant at the trial was false and that it had been given under the influence of the police, can be produced or taken notice of—Moti Ram, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 993, 1933 Cr.C. 1513, 147 I.C. 692.

Recording reasons:—Before taking additional evidence the Court must record its reasons for so doing—Varadarajulu Naidu, 42 Mad. 885 (890); Dulla, 7 Lah. 148, 27 Cr.L.J. 463. But omission to do so is a mere irregularity curable by sec. 537—Karnam, 9 M.L.T. 406, 12 Cr.L.J. 240; Seeniah v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 483, 53 Mad. 688, 1930 M.W.N. 534, 31 Cr.L.J. 602, 123 I.C. 809, 31 M.L.W. 524, 58 M.L.J. 414, 1930 Cr.C. 507.

Revision of order allowing additional evidence:—The powers of an Appellate Court to take additional evidence should not be unduly restricted. The scope of sec. 428 is prima facie not limited by any consideration save that the Appellate Court should be of opinion that additional evidence is necessary and should record its reasons. Accordingly, if any restriction is to be placed upon the power conferred on the Appellate Court by sec. 428, it certainly cannot be that negligence or inadvertence on the part of the prosecution is to be allowed to effect a miscarriage of justice; on the contrary, the enactment is directed to the attainment of justice even at a late stage of the proceedings by the introduction of further materials which the Court considers to be essential to a just decision of the case. Consequently, the Court of Revision will not interfere with an order allowing additional evidence even where the Court of Revision might itself, as an Appellate Court, have declined to admit such evidence. To justify interference, the Revision Court must be satisfied that the Appellate Court committed an error of law which has prejudiced the accused on the merits—Akhlar, 6 P.L.T. 431, 26 Cr.L.J. 1171.

1157. Procedure:—This section empowers an Appellate Court to merely call for additional evidence and not to call upon the Lower Court to give its finding upon such evidence. Where the Appellate Court calls for such finding of the Lower Court, the order of the Appellate Court will be set aside—Karnam, 12 Cr.L.J. 240, 9 M.L.T. 406; Muthu Karappan v. Vellayya Kudumban, 16 Cr.L.J. 79, 1914 M.W.N. 778. When the subordinate Court is directed to take additional evidence, it shall merely certify evidence to the Appellate Court and is not entitled to give any finding on or to retry the case on such fresh evidence, such duty being left to the Appellate Court—Anonymous, 3 B.L.R. 62; and if the Magistrate gives any finding on such evidence, the Appellate Court cannot accept such finding but must form its own conclusion upon the evidence so taken—Muthu Karappan v. Vellayya, supra. This section does not empower an Appellate Court to take evidence regarding the proceedings before a Magistrate, such as to examine the accused as to the truth of an allegation that the Magistrate had refused to examine some witnesses—Subbaya, 12 Mad. 451.

The accused persons were convicted by the trial Court without any examination under sec. 342, and the Appellate Court directed as follows: "The Lower Court will examine the accused under sec. 342 and call upon them to adduce any defence evidence, if they choose to give any, and after examination of the defence witnesses, he will re-submit the record to this Court. The appeal will then be heard by me on the merits." Held that the Appellate Judge's procedure was erroneous. He appears to have followed the provision of the Civil Procedure Code rather than of the Criminal Procedure Code. He should have set aside the conviction and sentence and remanded the case to the first Court for that Court to deal with the case on the merits after compliance with sec. 342, as if it were before that Court for the first time—Abdus Samad, 40 C.L.J. 319, 26 Cr.L.J. 313 (314).

This section does not provide that the accused should be re-examined under sec. 342 after the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution is taken on remand. The examination of the witnesses after remand may be made even in the absence of the accused, and the provisions of sec. 342 do not apply to sec. 428—Mohiuddin, 4 Pat. 488, 6 P.L.T. 154, 26 Cr.L.J. 811 (813); Narayan, 52 Bom. 699, 29 Cr.L.J. 972 (973).

Where the Appellate Magistrate, having once passed an order for the evidence of certain witnesses being recorded by the trial Court, decides the appeal without that evidence being recorded, the procedure of the Magistrate is undoubtedly irregular—Madho Singh v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 725 (726), 189 I.C. 258, 1940 O.W.N. 607.

1158. Power of Appellate Court after taking additional evidence:—The Appellate Court cannot consider and determine a new case disclosed by the additional evidence, except in so far as to affirm or modify or set aside the sentence under appeal or to act as otherwise provided by sec. 423 (b). An Appellate Court cannot under this section pass a fresh sentence, which may be subject to further appeal. Under the 1898 Code the Appellate Court is directed to dispose of the appeal finally and not to pass a new judgment, sentence, etc., which may be further appealed against—Isahak, 27 Cal. 372.

The Appellate Court can re-hear the appeal after obtaining the additional evidence. Both under the Criminal Procedure and under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act of 1915, the High Court has full jurisdiction and power in criminal revision to direct the Lower Appellate Court to re-hear an appeal after obtaining additional evidence certified by the trial Court—Mahomed, 3 P.L.J. 632, 19 Cr.L.J. 902.

1159. No further appeal:—An appellant whose appeal is dismissed by an Appellate Court, after it has taken additional evidence under this section, has no further right of appeal. According to sec. 430, except in certain cases, judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal are final—Isahak, 27 Cal. 372. If additional evidence is taken, it does not entitle a party to appeal from a finding upon such evidence to the High Court upon the merits, treating it in substance as an original judgment—Natamram, 6 B.H.C.R. 64.

1160. Sub-section (3):—Where the Appellate (High) Court acting under this section, directs the Sessions Judge to bring upon the record under sec. 288 the statements of certain witnesses made in the Court of the committing Magistrate, those statements cannot be properly brought on the record until notice is given to the accused that it is proposed to use those statements against him; and so it will be necessary for the Sessions Judge to take those proceedings in the presence of the accused or his pleader. This is provided for in clause (3) of this section—Nagina, 19 A.L.J. 947, 27 Cr.L.J. 813

(815). Under this clause a Court of Session is authorised to record the additional evidence, in the absence of the jury or the assessors, and this is the only instance in which it can do so. But in no other cases can the presence of the jurors be dispensed with; and therefore, where in a trial for murder the Sessions Judge, relying on a statement made by the deceased, convicted the accused, and the necessary evidence to prove the statement was not recorded by the Judge until after the assessors had been discharged, it was held that the error vitiated the trial and was not covered by the provisions of sec. 537—Ram Lal, 15 All. 136.

429. When the Judges composing the Court of Appeal are equally divided in opinion, the case, with their opinion thereon, shall be laid before another Judge of the same Court, and such Judge, after such hearing (if any) as he thinks fit, shall deliver his opinion, and the judgment or order shall follow such opinion.

Procedure where Judges of Court of Appeal are equally divided.

1161. Scope of section:—This section applies not only to appeals but to revision proceedings as well. Therefore, if two learned Judges differ in a Criminal Revision case, sec. 439 read with sec. 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge—Dudikula Lalsaheb, 40 Mad. 976; Sukdeo Narain, 27 Cal 892 (at p. 910); Pandita v. Rahimulla, 27 Cal. 501 (at p. 505); Ganguly v. Watson, 53 Cal 929. See sec. 439 (1).

The principle of this section applies also to a reference under sec. 307. In case of difference between the High Court Judges on such reference, the rule of this section is to be followed—Dada Ana, 15 Bom 452

The third Judge to whom a case is referred cannot refer the case to a Full Bench. A Division Bench can alone do it; and a third Judge sitting singly is not a Division Bench—Ishan Chandra v. Hriday Krishna, 29 C.W.N. 475 (483), 26 Cr L J 915.

"Case":—Where upon a difference of opinion between two Judges, the case is laid before a third Judge, the whole case is referred to the third Judge and not merely the point or points on which the Judges differed, and it is the duty of the Judge to whom the case is referred, to consider all the points involved before he delivers his opinion, and it will be according to the opinion of such Judge that the judgment will follow—Sarat Chandra, 38 Cal 202, 15 C.W.N. 18, 11 Cr L J 515, 7 I C 641, 12 C.L.J. 294; Ganguly v. Watson, 53 Cal 929, 27 Cr L J 1268 (1272). But in another case of the same High Court it has been held that the third Judge cannot differ from the referring Judges on a point on which both the referring Judges are agreed, unless there are strong grounds for doing so—Venkataratnam v. Corporation of Calcutta, 22 C.W.N. 745 (756), 19 Cr L.J. 753. In other words, it lays down that the third Judge can consider only the points on which the referring Judges have disagreed, and not all the points. To remove this conflict of opinion it was proposed by the Select Committee of 1916 to add the following proviso to this section "Provided that, if either of the Judges composing the Court of appeal so require, the appeal shall be re-heard before them and another Judge or if the Chief Justice so directs, before three other Judges, and the judgment or order shall follow the opinion of the majority of the Judges so re-hearing the case." But the Joint Committee of 1922 deleted this proviso, as it was disapproved of by many Judges and also because the difficulty which the amendment intended to meet was of rare occurrence. A similar proviso was intended to be added to sec. 378 and it was omitted by the Joint Committee for the same reason. See clauses 98 and 113 of the Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

But there can be no question that where there are two accused, and the Judges are agreed in opinion with regard to one of them but are divided in opinion as regards the other, the case which is laid before the third Judge is only the case of the prisoner with regard to whom the Judges are divided in opinion—Sarat Chandra, 38 Cal. 202, 15 C.W.N. 18, 11 Cr.L.J. 515, 7 I.C. 641, 12 C.L.J. 294; Ahmad Sher, 32 Cr.L.J. 868, 132 I.C. 381, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 573, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 513, 1931 Cr.C. 737.

430. Judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in section 417 and Chapter XXXII.

Finality of orders on appeal.

1162. A sentence is said to be final when it cannot be set aside or interfered with by any Court or authority, whether on appeal or otherwise—Dular v. Najabat, 12 Cal 536.

Where the Sessions Judge rejected a criminal appeal on the ground that it was barred by limitation, the rejection was final and the Sessions Judge was not competent, on a later representation by the prisoner, to admit the appeal again—Bhimappa, 19 Bom 732; Clegg, 1887 P.R. 21. An order of summary rejection of an appeal is final; it is immaterial whether the order is passed before or after the papers are called for—Mahomed Yashin, 4 Bom 101. An order passed by a Sessions Judge declining to interfere with a sanction granted by the Lower Court is final and is not open to interference except in the manner laid down in Chap XXXII—Ganesh Ramkrishna, 23 Bom. 50. But an order rejecting an appeal summarily for non-appearance of the appellant is an improper order and it is open to the Court to re-hear the appeal and deal with it—Anonymous, 2 Weir 471, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 29; Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382 (403); Ratan Chand, 5 N.L.R. 76, 9 Cr.L.J. 553.

Even though this section does not apply to judgments in revision applications, the principle of finality of judgments there laid down must apply to judgments in revision applications also—Inderchand, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 471 (473), 36 Bom.L.R. 954, 1934 Cr.C. 1313, 36 Cr.L.J. 351, 153 I.C. 525.

See Note 1121 under the heading "Time of filing appeal".

431. Every appeal under section 417 shall finally abate on the death of the accused, and every other appeal under this Chapter (except an appeal from a sentence of fine) shall finally abate on the death of the appellant.

Abatement of appeals.

1163. The Code has made no provision for the continuance of the appeal by the heir of devisee or executor of the deceased convict or by any other person. The appeal abates on the appellant's death—Dongaji, 2 Bom. 564; Nabi Shah, 19 Bom. 714. But an exception is made as regards an appeal from a sentence of fine. "An appeal against a sentence of fine should not abate by reason of the death of the accused, because it is not a matter which affects his person, but one which affects his estate"—Select Committee's Report (1898). See also Daulat Ram, 20 Cr.L.J. 214, 1919 P.R. 8; Nurudin, 29 Bom.L.R. 701, 28 Cr.L.J. 653 (655).

The principle of this section applies also to revisions; and therefore, where a fine inflicted upon an accused was a heavy one and its recovery from the estate would entail hardship on the widow, it was held that the application for revision filed by the accused did not abate on his death as regards the sentence of fine; and the High Court in revision remitted the fine—Daulat Ram, 1919 P.R. 8, 20 Cr.L.J. 214, 49 I.C. 744.

Compensation awarded under sec. 250 is recoverable as if it were a fine; therefore, an application for revision against an order of compensation does not abate on the death of the applicant, but can be prosecuted by his legal representatives—Prem Singh v. Bhola, 1908 P.R. 24, 9 Cr.L.J. 103.

CHAPTER XXXII.

OF REFERENCE AND REVISION.

432. A Presidency Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, refer for the opinion of the High Court any question of law which arises in the hearing of any case pending before him, or may give judgment in any such case subject to the decision of the High Court on such reference and, pending such decision, may either commit the accused to jail, or release him on bail to appear for judgment when called upon.

1164. This section empowers only a Presidency Magistrate to refer a question of law. No other Magistrate has power to make a reference. A District Magistrate cannot refer; he can only bring a case before the High Court by way of revision—Bakuli, 1 S.L.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 248; Rahimuddin, 22 S.L.R. 201, 28 Cr.L.J. 978 (979). A Sessions Judge has no power to refer a case to the High Court on a point arising in an appeal pending before him—Mohan Lal, 13 A.L.J. 477, 16 Cr.L.J. 433.

Under this section there can be a reference to the High Court only on a question of law, and not on a question of fact—Sheikh Ibrahim, Ratanlal 838; Toja, Ratanlal 539. And the High Court, upon a reference under this section, can deal with the particular points of law referred to it; it cannot deal with the facts of the case, nor any other objection against the proceedings of the Court of the Presidency Magistrate—Molla Fuzla Karim, 33 Cal 193.

The Magistrate can refer a question which has arisen 'in the hearing of the case'; he cannot make a reference on a question of law where the accused has been merely placed before him and the hearing of the case has not begun—Nanu, 1 Bom.L.R. 521.

Although the Presidency Magistrates have, under this section, the power to refer for the opinion of the High Court any question of law which arises at the hearing of any case pending before them, it may be undesirable to make the reference in the form which involves giving a decision on law, divorced to some extent from the facts. The more desirable course is for the Magistrate to use the second part of this section which provides that he may give judgment in any such case subject to the decision of the High Court on such reference. By adopting this course, duplicity of hearing in both Courts would probably be avoided and all the facts would be before the High Court once for all—Hemendra Prosad Ghosh, 40 Cr.L.J. 782, 183 I.C. 349, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 529, 69 C.L.J. 599, 43 C.W.N. 950, 1 L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 411, 12 R.C. 153, 2 Fed.L.J. (Part II) 55.

433. (1) When a question has been so referred, the High Court shall pass such order thereon as it thinks fit, and shall cause a copy of such order to be sent to the Magistrate by whom the reference was made, who shall dispose of the case conformably to the said order.

Disposal of case according to decision of High Court.

Direction as to costs.

(2) The High Court may direct by whom costs of such reference shall be paid.

1165. On a reference by a Presidency Magistrate to the High Court as to whether on the facts stated any offence has been committed by an accused person, the prosecution has to make out that the accused has committed the offence, and, therefore, the counsel for the prosecution has the right to begin—Haradhan, 19 Cal. 380 (385).

The High Court sitting in appeal cannot review an order passed by it under this section—Canji, Ratanlal 638.

434. (1) When any person has, in a trial before a Judge of a High Court consisting of more Judges than one and acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, been convicted of an offence, the Judge, if he thinks fit, may reserve and refer for the decision of a Court consisting of two or more Judges of such Court any question of law which has arisen in the course of the trial of such person, and the determination of which would affect the event of the trial.

(2) If the Judge reserves any such question, the person convicted shall, pending the decision thereon, be remanded to jail, or, if the Judge thinks fit, be admitted to bail; and the High Court shall have power to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such question, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of original jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment or order as the High Court thinks fit.

1166. Reference discretionary:—The words 'may reserve and refer' show that it is in the discretion of the single Judge whether or not he will reserve a point of law for the opinion of the High Court consisting of two or more Judges—Pestonji, 10 B.H.C.R. 75; and this discretion of the single Judge is not reviewable under clause 26 of the Letters Patent—Ibid.

When reference can be made:—A reference can be made when the point of law has arisen in the course of the trial; where a point is raised before the accused is called upon to plead, it cannot be referred to the Full Bench, because the point cannot be said to have arisen in the course of the trial—Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211.

Right to begin:—Where, on the application of the prisoner's counsel, a question of law has been reserved for the decision of the Court under this section, the counsel for the prisoner has the right to begin—Appa Subhana, 8 Bom. 200.

1167. Sub-section (2):—High Court's power to review the case:—The High Court in considering a point of law reserved under this section can review the whole case, if it is of opinion that any evidence has been improperly admitted or rejected, and can affirm or quash the conviction—Hurribole, 1 Cal. 207; O'Lara, 17 Cal. 642; Patrick McGuire, 4 C.W.N. 433; Narayan, 32 Bom. 111; Fateh Chand, 44 Cal. 477.

This is the only section which enables the Division or Full Bench of the High Court to review the judgment of a single Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction. The powers of a single Judge in a matter with which he has jurisdiction to deal are the powers of the Court and cannot be in any way controlled (except as under this section) by a Division or Full Bench of the Court. As no appeal lies, no revision lies—Hale, 1909 P.R. 1, 9 Cr.L.J. 306; Press, 4 P.R. 1909, 9 Cr.L.J. 378 (380). In the absence of any reservation of a question of law by the trying Judge, the High Court is precluded from re-opening a question which has been decided by the single Judge presiding at the trial—Narayan, 32 Bom. 111.

The High Court can review the judgment or order of a Judge passed in the exercise of his original jurisdiction. A Division Bench of the High Court has no power to alter or review the order of a High Court pronounced in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction—Durga Charan, 7 All. 672; Fox, 10 Bom. 176; Godai, 5 W.R. 61; Ganesh Ram krishna, 23 Bom. 50; Nagangowda, 19 Bom.L.R. 695.

The Code does not make any provision for reviewing the judgment of subordinate Courts. The High Court can only revise such judgment under the ample powers conferred by sec. 439—Bhimappa, 19 Bom. 732.

435. (1) The High Court or any Sessions Judge or District Magistrate or any Subdivisional Magistrate empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding, before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court, and may, when calling for such record, direct that the execution of any sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record.

Explanation.—All Magistrates, whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this sub-section and of section 437.

(2) If any Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under sub-section (1) considers that any such finding, sentence or order is illegal or improper, or that any such proceedings are irregular, he shall forward the record, with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit, to the District Magistrate.

(3) Omitted.

(4) If an application under this section has been made either to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, no further application shall be entertained by the other of them.

Change:—The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) and the Explanation have been added, and sub-section (3) has been omitted, by sec. 116 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Sub-section (3) stood as follows—

“(3) Orders made under secs. 143 and 144 and proceedings under Chap. II and sec. 176 are not proceedings within the meaning of this section.”

The grounds for the omission of sub-sec. (3) have been thus stated by Dr. Gour : “The intention of this amendment is to preserve to the High Courts revisional jurisdiction in cases disposed of under secs 144, 145, etc. Honourable Members are aware that not only the Chartered High Courts but all the non-chartered High Courts such as the Chief Courts and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners do, under various local Acts, possess a statutory power of revision in such cases... Now, Sir, I ask the House a simple question. If it is a fact that all the Courts, chartered and non-chartered, possess this power, then I say clause (3) of sec. 435 is superfluous, nay misleading. If it is a fact that they do not possess that power, in that case I ask the House to endorse my opinion that this power is both salutary and necessary. It will not be denied that this power has in fact been exercised under section 107 of the Government of India Act and other Local Acts. If so, this clause conflicts with the express provisions of section 107 of the Government of India Act. It creates utter confusion. If the High Courts have power under section 107 of the Government of India Act to exercise the general power of superintendence over the Subordinate Courts,

The High Court sitting in appeal cannot review an order passed by it under this section—Canji, Ratanlal 638.

434. (1) When any person has, in a trial before a Judge of a High Court consisting of more Judges than one and acting in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, been convicted of an offence, the Judge, if he thinks fit, may reserve and refer for the decision of a Court consisting of two or more Judges of such Court any question of law which has arisen in the course of the trial of such person, and the determination of which would affect the event of the trial.

(2) If the Judge reserves any such question, the person convicted shall, pending the decision thereon, be remanded to jail, or, if the Judge thinks fit, be admitted to bail; and the High Court shall have power to review the case or such part of it as may be necessary, and finally determine such question, and thereupon to alter the sentence passed by the Court of original jurisdiction, and to pass such judgment or order as the High Court thinks fit.

1166. Reference discretionary:—The words 'may reserve and refer' show that it is in the discretion of the single Judge whether or not he will reserve a point of law for the opinion of the High Court consisting of two or more Judges—Pestonji, 10 B.H.C.R. 75; and this discretion of the single Judge is not reviewable under clause 26 of the Letters Patent—Ibid.

When reference can be made:—A reference can be made when the point of law has arisen in the course of the trial; where a point is raised before the accused is called upon to plead, it cannot be referred to the Full Bench, because the point cannot be said to have arisen in the course of the trial—Dolegobind, 28 Cal. 211.

Right to begin:—Where, on the application of the prisoner's counsel, a question of law has been reserved for the decision of the Court under this section, the counsel for the prisoner has the right to begin—Appa Subhana, 8 Bom. 200.

1167. Sub-section (2):—High Court's power to review the case:—The High Court in considering a point of law reserved under this section can review the whole case, if it is of opinion that any evidence has been improperly admitted or rejected, and can affirm or quash the conviction—Hurribole, 1 Cal. 207; O'Lara, 17 Cal. 642; Patrick McGuire, 4 C.W.N. 433; Narayan, 32 Bom. 111; Fateh Chand, 44 Cal. 477.

This is the only section which enables the Division or Full Bench of the High Court to review the judgment of a single Judge exercising original criminal jurisdiction. The powers of a single Judge in a matter with which he has jurisdiction to deal are the powers of the Court and cannot be in any way controlled (except as under this section) by a Division or Full Bench of the Court. As no appeal lies, no revision lies—Hale, 1909 P.R. 1, 9 Cr.L.J. 306; Press, 4 P.R. 1909, 9 Cr.L.J. 378 (380). In the absence of any reservation of a question of law by the trying Judge, the High Court is precluded from re-opening a question which has been decided by the single Judge presiding at the trial—Narayan, 32 Bom. 111.

The High Court can review the judgment or order of a Judge passed in the exercise of his original jurisdiction. A Division Bench of the High Court has no power to alter or review the order of a High Court pronounced in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction—Durga Charan, 7 All. 672; Fox, 10 Bom. 176; Godai, 5 W.R. 61; Ganesh Ram Krishna, 23 Bom. 50; Nagangowda, 19 Bom.L.R. 695.

The Code does not make any provision for reviewing the judgment of subordinate Courts. The High Court can only revise such judgment under the ample powers conferred by sec. 439—Bhimappa, 19 Bom. 732.

435. (1) The High Court or any Magistrate or any Power to call for records of inferior Courts. Magistrate or any empowered by the this behalf, may call for and examine the record of any proceeding, before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its or his jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself or himself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court, and may, when calling for such record, direct that the execution of any sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record.

Explanation.—All Magistrates, whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this sub-section and of section 437.

(2) If any Sub-divisional Magistrate acting under sub-section (1) considers that any such finding, sentence or order is illegal or improper, or that any such proceedings are irregular, he shall forward the record, with such remarks thereon as he thinks fit, to the District Magistrate.

(3) Omitted.

(4) If an application under this section has been made either to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, no further application shall be entertained by the other of them.

Change:—The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) and the Explanation have been added, and sub-section (3) has been omitted, by sec. 116 of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Sub-section (3) stood as follows:—

“(3) Orders made under secs. 143 and 144 and proceedings under Chap. II and sec. 176 are not proceedings within the meaning of this section.”

The grounds for the omission of sub-sec. (3) have been thus stated by Dr. Gour: “The intention of this amendment is to preserve to the High Courts revisional jurisdiction in cases disposed of under secs. 144, 145, etc. Honourable Members are aware that not only the Chartered High Courts but all the non-chartered High Courts such as the Chief Courts and the Courts of the Judicial Commissioners do, under various local Acts, possess a statutory power of revision in such cases. It will not be denied that this power has in fact been exercised under section 107 of the Government of India Act and other Local Acts. If so, this clause conflicts with the express provisions of section 107 of the Government of India Act. It creates utter confusion. If the High Courts have power under section 107 of the Government of India Act to exercise the general power of superintendence over the Subordinate Courts, what object is served by inserting this clause that orders under sections 143, 144 and 145 shall not be open to revision under section 435? I hope that the Government out of sheer consistency will accept my amendment."—Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February 1923, page 2076-2077.

By reason of the omission of this sub-section, the above orders and proceedings are now subject to revision under this Code. See Notes under secs. 143, 144, 145—148 and 176.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" in this section by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1167A. Object:—The object of this revisional legislation is to confer upon superior Criminal Courts a kind of paternal or supervisory jurisdiction, in order to correct miscarriage of justice arising from misconception of law, irregularity of procedure, neglect of proper precautions or apparent harshness of treatment, which has resulted on the one hand in some injury to the due maintenance of law and order, or on the other hand in some undeserved hardship to individuals—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447), 108 I.C. 567, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 305, A.I.R. 1928 All. 287. The Courts enumerated in this section have power to call for the records of subordinate Courts for the purpose of satisfying themselves as to correctness, legality or propriety of the orders passed by the lower Courts. The object of the Legislature in this section is to set right some patent defect or error. In the absence of some well founded suspicion it is inexpedient for the High Court to scrutinize orders of discharge or other orders passed by the lower Courts which upon the face of them bear token of careful consideration and appear good and lawful. This section does not give the High Court a roving commission either in the direction of stamping with approval the proceedings of a Lower Court or in the direction of questioning about and looking to see if possibly under a fair record there lies some trace of possible error—Dukes, 1899 A.W.N. 135.

1168. To whom application should be made:—The revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate and Sessions Judge is concurrent with that of the High Court; but although the three tribunals have concurrent powers, the aggrieved party should in the first instance seek his remedy before the lower tribunal and not in the High Court direct. In the matter of applications in criminal revision of the High Court, it is a recognised rule of practice that a previous application to the Lower Court (District Magistrate or Sessions Judge) should be considered an essential step in the procedure, irrespective of whether such lower Court has or has not power to grant the relief claimed; and that failure on the part of the applicant to submit his application to the Lower Court will operate as a bar to the application being entertained by the High Court—Sheriff Ahmed v. Qabul, 43 All. 497, 22 Cr.L.J. 715; Reolah, 14 Cal. 887; Abdus Sobhan, 36 Cal. 643; Rash Behari v. Phani Bhusan, 48 Cal. 534; Abdul Mutlab v. Nanda Lal, 50 Cal. 423; Chagan Dayaram, 14 Bom. 331; Jadunandan v. Sheopahal, 27 A.L.J. 514; Mansur, 41 All. 587 (591); Gullay v. Bakar, 28 All. 268; Shafaqat v. Wali Ahmed, 30 All. 116; Bepin Bihari, 3 P.L.J. 302; Muhammad Ishaq, 28 Cr.L.J. 815, 104 I.C. 255, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 689; Gopabandhu v. Venkatesam, (1923) M.W.N. 837, 18 L.W. 651; Sat Narain, 25 O.C. 37; Krishna v. Badri, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 418, 1931 Cr.C. 1053, 8 O.W.N. 1027, 135 I.C. 701; Bajras v. Dadibhai, 27 Cr.L.J. 71, 91 I.C. 247, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 285; Bepin Behari, 19 Cr.L.J. 589, 45 I.C. 397, 3 Pat.L.J. 302; Ajodhia, 35 Cr.L.J. 475, 147 I.C. 797, 10 O.W.N. 733; Haidari Begum v. Jawad Ali, 36 Cr.L.J. 554 (555), 154 I.C. 638, A.I.R. 1935 All. 55, 1934 A.L.J. 946, 1934 Cr.C. 525, 4 A.W.R. 1406. See also Mohiud-Din Lal Badshah v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 127, 178 I.C. 632, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 762, 40 P.L.R. 716, 11 R.L. 482. A person invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court is bound, according to the rules of that Court, to apply first to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate. If the latter considers that a case for revision is made out, he reports the matter to the High Court under section 438, with a view to the High Court exercising its revisional powers under sec. 439. If the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate considers that the application should not be entertained, he rejects it, leaving the aggrieved party to apply to the High Court direct—Abdulwahid v. Abdullah, 45 All. 656 (661, 662). So also, the High Court will not allow a point to be raised for the first time before it, when such point was not taken by the petitioner in his revision application presented to the Sessions Judge—Bhure Mal, 45 All. 526 (528). See also Note 1222 under the heading "New plea in revision." The object of requiring an application for revision to be presented first to the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, is firstly, to prevent the time of the High Court from being wasted over frivolous and unsustainable applications; and secondly, the High Court in dealing with the matter may have before it an expression of opinion by a Court of superior jurisdiction such as that of the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate—Mansur, 41 All. 587 (591); Sukhray, 28 Cr.L.J. 475, 101 I.C. 603, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 248, A.I.R. 1927 All. 834; Bhure Mal, supra. Thus, where the District Magistrate dismisses a complaint under the provisions of section 203, the High Court will not entertain an application by the complainant asking for further inquiry under section 436, when no application for that object has been made to the Sessions Judge—Gullay v. Bakar, 28 All. 268. But when an application to the High Court for revision has already been heard and the Rule granted, the High Court will not afterwards discharge the Rule on the ground that the petitioner ought to have moved the Sessions Court in the first instance, but will proceed to dispose of the Rule on the merits—Abdul Mallab v. Nanda Lal, 50 Cal. 423. It is not usual for the High Court to entertain revisional applications direct, but after they have been admitted, they must be disposed of on the merits—Chokat Ahir v. Suraj Singh, 41 Cr.L.J. 257, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 299, 1940 P.W.N. 271, 186 I.C. 182. Though it has been laid down that the High Court will not ordinarily entertain revision applications when the Sessions Court has jurisdiction to entertain them, it has also been laid down that the High Court will do so in special cases—Abdullakhan, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 28, 136 I.C. 513, 33 Cr.L.J. 298, 1932 Cr.C. 114, 25 S.L.R. 395, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 33. In observance of the well-established practice of the High Court, neither an application in revision by an accused nor an application by a third party for the purpose of informing the High Court, should be entertained, unless there are special reasons why the applicant should not have gone to the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge in the first instance, but if a Judge on very special grounds decides to intervene, he cannot be said to be acting illegally although it may be contrary to the practice. Once the application has been admitted and the record called for, such an objection should not be entertained—Shailabala, 34 Cr.L.J. 1115 (1122), 145 I.C. 977, A.I.R. 1933 All. 678, 1933 A.L.J. 1059, 1933 Cr.C. 1190 (F.B.). See R. N. Basu, 34 Cr.L.J. 1053, 145 I.C. 736, A.I.R. 1933 All. 612, 1933 Cr.C. 984, 1933 A.L.J. 1112.

Where the petitioners filed an appeal to the District Magistrate, who was sitting as a Court of Appeal, and the appeal having been dismissed, they moved the High Court in revision, held that although it might have been better if the petitioners had followed the usual rule of practice and moved the Sessions Judge before coming to the High Court still the High Court entertained the revision petition—Muhammad Ishaq, 28 Cr.L.J. 815, 104 I.C. 255, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 689; Mansur, 41 All. 587 (592); followed in Sharif Ahmad v. Qabul Singh, 43 All. 497, 19 A.L.J. 425, 22 Cr.L.J. 715, A.I.R. 1921 All. 258, 50 I.C. 875 and Balkrishna Sharma, 54 All. 331, 1932 Cr.C. 150 (151), A.I.R. 1932 All. 125, 1932 A.L.J. 39, 137 I.C. 686, 33 Cr.L.J. 28, 17 A.I.Cr.R. 48. In spite of the above rule of practice, it is competent to the High Court in the exercise of its discretion to entertain an application for revision, even though no petition has been made to the Sessions Judge; and if the High Court admits the application for revision (even though ex parte), it is not open to any party to call it in question—Mansur, supra. But in Sukhray, 28 Cr.L.J. 475, 101 I.C. 603, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 248, A.I.R. 1927 All. 834, where there was an appeal to the District Magistrate, and the appeal having been dismissed, the accused applied to the High Court in revision, it was held that the applicant not having made a previous application for revision to the Sessions Judge, the revision petition to the High Court must be dismissed. The Allahabad High Court has further held that an ex parte order of admission made by a Judge of the High Court under cl. (1) of this section will not be sufficient to take the case out of the operation of such rule of practice—Mohammad Hashim v. Notified Area, Moghal Serai, 34 Cr.L.J. 1048, 145 I.C. 726, 6 R.A. 152, 55 All. 261, 1933 A.L.J. 119, A.I.R. 1933 All. 283, 1933 Cr.C. 523; Natha Singh v. Emp., A.I.R. 1927 All. 829, 102 I.C. 123, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 438, 28 Cr.L.J. 544. This is also the view of the Oudh Chief Court—Raja Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1024, 171 I.C. 167, 1937 O.L.R. 523, 10 R.O. 92, 1937 A Cr.C. 153, 1937 O.W.N. 1044. But see Shailabala, supra.

1168A. When application can be moved:—See Sheo Mandil v. Emp., in Note 1224 and Khairat v. Wahed in Note 1205.

1169. Call for record:—The powers of a Sessions Judge to call for and examine the record under this section are powers which can be exercised at all times—Anonymous, 2 Weir 538. Records may be called for even after the prisoner has served out his sentence—Sinha, 7 All. 135. Even after the death of the prisoner pending an appeal before the Lower Appellate Court, the High Court has the right to call for the records and make such order thereon as it may deem to be due to justice—Dongaji, 2 Bom. 564. When records are called for under this section, the inferior Courts must forward the original records, and not merely copies thereof—Padmanabha, Ratanlal 128.

A Session Judge's action under this section is not limited to cases in which he happens to have personal knowledge leading him to suspect an irregularity nor to cases in which the persons directly interested as complainants or accused move him to call for records. Directly the Sessions Judge has any reasonable cause of suspicion that an irregularity has occurred he should call for the records irrespective of the source of his information—Roshan Lal, 32 Cr.L.J. 653, 131 I.C. 108, 12 Lah. 471, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 107, 32 P.L.R. 130, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 380, 1931 Cr.C. 171.

When an order is made by the District Magistrate under this section calling for the records of proceedings pending before a Magistrate with a view to withdrawing the case and transferring it to another Magistrate, the jurisdiction of the former Magistrate is suspended, and he is not therefore entitled to proceed any further in the case, e.g. to allow composition and to acquit the accused under sec. 345, even though the case may not have been actually transferred to some other Magistrate—Maruti, 49 Bom. 533, 26 Cr.L.J. 996.

"Any proceeding" :—It is competent to the High Court to call for the record of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court and revise the same, whether it is of a preliminary or final nature—Jagan Singh, 1892 A.W.N. 102. Hence, where the District Magistrate passed a preliminary order calling upon a witness who gave evidence before him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury, the High Court was competent to revise that order—T. N. Chadha, 14 A.L.J. 851, 18 Cr.L.J. 46.

1170. Power of revision after prior refusal:—An accused person has no right to come in revision more than once. Where his first application for revision has failed, the Court has a discretionary power not to entertain a second application at all, based on the same point as the first—Kohna Ram, 45 All. 11 (12). See also Ankamma, 1932 M.W.N. 1162. When a Magistrate has already dealt with a case in revision and decided that there was no cause for interference, he cannot subsequently direct further inquiry, because such an order would be one reviewing the prior order and is prohibited by sec. 369—Nga Than, 5 Bur.L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. Once a criminal revision case has been dismissed by the High Court for default of payment of printing charges, it is a final disposal and it is not competent to the High Court to re-hear the case or entertain a fresh application for revision, because there can be no review of the prior order of dismissal—Appayya v. Venkatappayya, 44 M.L.J. 27, 23 Cr.L.J. 746, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 276. The High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a revisional application through counsel after a similar application made by the applicant from jail was disposed of by it—Banwari Lal, A.I.R. 1935 All. 466, 36 Cr.L.J. 1286, 157 I.C. 1044, 1935 A.L.J. 317, 1935 Cr.C. 507. So also, if a revision petition is dismissed for default of appearance of the pleader who filed it, the High Court is not competent to restore to its file such a petition—Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371, 13 Cr.L.J. 710. But the Calcutta High Court holds that there being no provision in the Code for dismissing a revision petition for default of appearance, the order of dismissal is no 'judgment' at all within the meaning of sec. 369 and the High Court is not debarred from re-hearing the petition—Rajjabali, 46 Cal. 60, 20 Cr.L.J. 265. See Note 1433A.

The Allahabad High Court has laid down that if a matter has once come before the High Court in revision not on the application of the accused but on the motion of the Sessions Judge who has referred the matter to the High Court, and the High Court looks into the matter and comes to the conclusion that there is no ground for revision, the accused is not thereby deprived of his right to apply to the High Court in revision—Kohna Ram, 45 All. 11 (12), 20 A.L.J. 775, 23 Cr.L.J. 496. The Burma Chief Court likewise holds that where a Sessions Judge of his own motion called for proceedings in which a Magistrate had discharged certain accused persons, but finding on record no cause of interference returned the proceedings to the Magistrate without taking further action, and subsequently the complainant applied to him to have the case re-opened, it was held that the mere fact that the Judge had declined to interfere suo motu on a prior occasion did not preclude him from hearing the complainant, and, if the arguments led him to do so, from altering his view—Tun Myang v. Kauk San, 8 Bur.L.T. 243, 16 Cr.L.J. 711.

1171. Inferior Criminal Court:—Inferior:—The term 'inferior' must be interpreted to mean 'judicially inferior,' i.e., a Court over which the Court proceeding under sec. 435 has appellate jurisdiction—Nobin v. Russick, 10 Cal. 268. 'Inferior' means one who is statutorily incompetent to hold or exercise equal powers; it carries with it the idea of subordination which means 'inferiority in rank'—Prisya Gopal, 9 Bom. 100 (103). The term 'inferior' in this section includes the term 'subordinate' as used in section 436. The reason for the employment of the term 'inferior' in sections 435 and 437 is that in both these sections the Court of Session and the District Magistrate are combined, and the Magistrates other than the District Magistrate though subordinate to him are not directly subordinate to the Court of Session. It was therefore necessary to employ a term applicable to the relation of the Magistracy both to the supervising authority and to the appellate tribunal—Padmanabha, 8 Mad. 18.

The District Magistrate is competent under this section to call for and deal with the record of any proceeding before any Magistrate of whatever class in his own district—Opendra v. Dukhini, 12 Cal. 473 (F.B.). A first class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate for the purposes of this section—Waryam v. Amir, 1894 P.R. 10; Iaskari, 7 All. 835 (F.B.); Indar Singh, 30 Cr.L.J. 490, 30 P.L.R. 448. The District Magistrate can call for and examine the record of any first class Magistrate within the district even though the latter has been appointed as an Additional District Magistrate—Abdul Karim, 1908 P.R. 25. In Nawab Ali, 12 Bur.L.T. 56, 51 I.C. 478, 20 Cr.L.J. 494, it was held that a District Magistrate could not call for the record of any proceeding before an Additional District Magistrate. But under the new sub-section (3) of section 10 the Additional District Magistrate is deemed to be inferior to the District Magistrate.

A District Magistrate is not competent to refer the proceedings of a superior Court (Sessions Court) to the High Court. See Note 1198 under sec. 438.

As a Court of revision, the District Magistrate is not inferior to the Sessions Judge. But where he passes an order as a Court of original jurisdiction, he is inferior to the Sessions Judge—Balwant, 24 Cr.L.J. 616 (Oudh); Harkaram v. Harnam, 17 Cr.L.J. 223, 19 O.C. 108; Opendra v. Dukhini, 12 Cal. 473; Najib Khan, 1889 A.W.N. 100. This is now made clear by the Explanation newly added. Even a District Magistrate empowered under sec. 30 is also inferior to the Sessions Judge—Jalloo, 1904 P.R. 15. The Explanation further makes it clear that "for the purposes of this section a Magistrate under sec. 4 (2) of the Goondas Act he is given the powers of a Presidency Magistrate; therefore the High Court cannot interfere, under sec. 439, in the matter of the warrant issued by him—Bhimraj Benia, 51 Cal. 460 (467, 468), 83 I.C. 500, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 698, 26 Cr.L.J. 20. The term 'inferior Criminal Court' in this section does not include a Civil or Revenue Court exercising its powers under sec. 476. See Note 1254 under sec. 476.

In a Bombay case it has been said that even though the proceedings are of a civil nature, still if they are held in a criminal Court, they are subject to revision under sec. 435 (e.g., proceedings of a Magistrate under sec. 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act, or under sec. 448 of this Code). The test is not the nature of the proceeding held by the Court, but the nature of the Court in which that proceeding is held—Devappa, 43 Bom 607 (609).

When the District Magistrate passes orders under Rule 17 of the Rules for licensing and controlling places of public entertainment framed under sec. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act, the District Magistrate or Magistrate of the District whichever he may be called, is not acting as an inferior Court within the meaning of sec. 435, Cr. P. C.; he is acting as an executive officer in the exercise of powers conferred upon him under sec. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890)—Manghanmal Gianchand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 340, 185 I.C. 392

The District Magistrate in granting or refusing an application to take the name of a person out of the register kept under sec. 5 of the Criminal Tribes Act (III of 1911) does not perform any judicial functions, his functions are administrative and the High Court is not entitled to interfere with any order made by the District Magistrate in this respect—Hasan Ali Bepari v. The King-Emp., 24 C.W.N. 624 (625), 47 Cal. 843, 57 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1920 Cal 635, 21 C.L.J. 581; Bideshi Mian v. Emp., 34 Cr.L.J. 346, 142 I.C. 298, A.I.R. 1932 Pat 155, 1932 Cr.C. 272, 13 P.L.T. 119, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pat 138.

1171A. Finding, Sentence or Order:—The words "finding, sentence or order" in this section are three separate matters and are separated by the disjunctive conjunction "or"—"finding or sentence or order" There are, therefore, three matters in regard to which the revision may be heard One is the finding, another is the sentence and the third is an order—Sat Narain Lal v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 876, 190 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1940 All 426, 1940 A.L.J. 462

1172. Orders which are not open to revision:—The proceedings which are open to revision are the proceedings of a Court If an order is an executive order, it is clear that it is not revisable under this section—Mohammad Ahmad Khan v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 781, 189 I.C. 666, 1940 O.W.N. 652; Bejoy Krishna Das v. Shyam Narain Singh, 41 Cr.L.J. 442 (444), 187 I.C. 310, A.I.R. 1940 Cal 30, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 532. Therefore the following executive orders are not liable to revision under this section :—

(1) An order passed by a District Magistrate whereby he prohibited certain petition writers to carry on their business within the precincts of the District Court—Sukdeo Prasad, 1902 A.W.N. 175.

(2) An administrative circular issued by a District Magistrate prohibiting uncertificated pleaders from practising in the Criminal Courts in his district, is not open to revision by the High Court The proper course for the pleader who has been refused appearance in a particular case by a Magistrate in pursuance of such circular, is to apply for revision of the illegal or improper order of the Magistrate refusing to allow him to appear—Chinnasami, 19 M.L.J. 566, 4 I.C. 876, 11 Cr.L.J. 69.

(3) Proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act are neither civil nor criminal, and therefore an order passed under sec. 76 of that Act declaring a person to be a tout cannot be revised by the High Court either under sec. 439, Cr. P. Code or under sec. 115, Cr. P. Code, but may be revised by virtue of the wide powers of superintendence under sec. 13 of the Punjab Courts Act or sec. 15 of the High Courts Act—Man Singh, 1909 P.R. 11, 3 I.C. 977; Kedar Nath, 6 A.L.J. 22, 9 Cr.L.J. 22, 1 I.C. 143 (144). An order passed by a District Judge declaring a person to be a tout under sec. 32

Legal Practitioners' Act is capable of being revised by the High Court under sec. 115, C. P. Code. Section 439, Cr. P. C., would have no application to such a case—Adiraju, Somanna, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 634, I.L.R. 1938 Mad. 988, 177 I.C. 456, 11 R.M. 334, 1938 M.W.N. 426, 47 M.L.W. 578, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 100, 1938 M.Cr.C. 310.

(4) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec. 2 of the Sind Frontier Regulation (V of 1872) is an executive order, and not open to revision by the High Court—Jaro, 5 S.L.R. 54, 12 Cr.L.J. 558. But an order under sec. 23 of the Sind Frontier Regulation (III of 1892) declaring the forfeiture of a bond entered into by a person under secs. 20 and 21 of the Regulation, is revisable by the High Court under sec. 435, Cr. P. Code as the order is a judicial order virtually passed under sec. 514 of this Code—Imambux, 7 S.L.R. 194, 15 Cr.L.J. 544 (545).

(5) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec. 41 of the Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890) is an executive order and the High Court has no jurisdiction to interfere—Satan, 15 S.L.R. 126, 23 Cr.L.J. 39, A.I.R. 1922 Sind 21. So also, an order passed by a District Magistrate under sec. 41 of the Bombay District Police Act is not a judicial order, but a mere executive order made by him as the head of the Police, and is not revisable by the High Court under the present section—Pandurang, 12 Bom.L.R. 1029, 11 Cr.L.J. 705. So again, the High Court has no power to interfere with the District Magistrate's order duly made under sec. 43 of the Bombay District Police Act—Kaji Sultan, Ratanlal 540; nor can the Court of Session call for the records of proceedings taken by a Magistrate under sec. 46 of that Act—In re Haibati, Ratanlal 692. Orders passed by the District Magistrate under Rule 17 of the Rules for licensing and controlling places of public entertainment framed under sec. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890) are executive orders not revisable by the High Court under this section—Manghanmal Gianchand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 340, 185 I.C. 392, 41 Cr.L.J. 179.

(8) An order passed by the Collector under the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act (V of 1920) directing that certain huts erected on a disputed char should be sold and the sale proceeds credited to the Treasury, is not a judicial but an executive order—Osman v. Kader, 33 C.W.N. 836, 1929 Cr.C. 480.

(9) A Magistrate's order under sec. 17 of the Police Act (V of 1861) appointing certain persons as special constables is an order of an executive nature and an order made in a criminal proceeding—Parmeswar, 20 O.C. 229, 18 Cr.L.J. 900 (901). See also Rahman Sirkar, 18 W.R. 67, 10 Beng.L.R. App. 4.

(10) An order by a District Magistrate for execution of a warrant issued by a Political Agent under sec. 7 of the Extradition Act—Gulli Sahu, 42 Cal. 793 (798, 799); 26 I.C. 335, 16 Cr.L.J. 31, 19 C.W.N. 221, 21 C.L.J. 112; Sandal Singh v. District Magistrate, Dehra Dun, 35 Cr.L.J. 1296 (1299), 56 All. 409, 151 I.C. 279, A.I.R. 1934 All. 148, 1934 Cr.C. 214, 1934 A.L.J. 556, 7 R.A. 128. For contra see Bai Asha, 117 I.C. 321, 53 Bom. 149, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 81, 30 Cr.L.J. 772, 36 Bom.L.R. 62.

(11) An order of conviction made by the Union Bench under the Bengal Village Self-Government Act (V of 1919) as the High Court's revisional power under this section seems to be restricted by the provisions of secs. 71 and 93 of the said Act. The powers of superintendence given to the High Court under sec. 107, Government of India Act, might justify, in a proper case, interference with an order of conviction made by the Union Bench—Yasin Maral v. Isaf Khan, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 867, 59 Cal. 1080, 1932 Cr.C. 891, 34 Cr.L.J. 111, 140 I.C. 873. Section 71 of the Bengal Village Self-Government Act (V of 1919) bars any appeal by a person convicted by a Union Bench. The right to challenge any such decision is not taken away but it must be exercised in the manner provided in the Act itself. There cannot be any such challenge by way of invocation of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, the jurisdiction invoked in all such cases being a jurisdiction derived from the Code of Criminal Procedure, and outside Chap. XXXIII of that Code—Hari Sadhan Roy v. Probhakar Roy, 40 Cr.L.J. 359, 180 I.C. 408, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 259, I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal. 523. See also Badri Nath y. Sheopthal in Note 1171, (12) An order by which the names of persons cancelled from the list of jurors are restored—Nagendra Chandra v. Benamali, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 487, 38 C.W.N. 363, 152 I.C. 10, 1934 Cr.C. 695.

(13) Orders of convictions and sentences passed by a Special Magistrate under the Bengal Suppression of Terrorist Outrages (Supplementary) Act (XXIV of 1932) are not subject to revision by the High Court—Madan Mohan Ray, 63 Cal. 1086, 40 C.W.N. 735.

(14) The order passed by the Additional District Magistrate in the exercise of the special powers conferred upon the District Magistrate by sec. 4, U. P. Naik Girls' Protection Act (II of 1929), is an executive order passed by an officer of the Government specially designated to carry out the provisions of that Act and not a judicial order passed by an inferior Criminal Court constituted under the Cr. P. C., so that the revisional powers of the High Court under sec. 439, Cr. P. C., cannot be invoked for setting aside that order—Hazari v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 305, 180 I.C. 37, A.I.R. 1939 All. 124, 1938 A.L.J. 1147, 11 R.A. 407, I.L.R. 1939 All. 178.

(15) An order passed by the District Magistrate permitting the taking out of a certain procession under certain conditions in order to prevent any breach of the peace is purely an executive order for controlling the procession which he could pass as a District Magistrate and no revision against that order lies—Mohammad Ahmad Khan v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 781, 189 I.C. 666, 1940 O.W.N. 652.

(16) An order passed by the District Magistrate directing payment of costs of capture and feeding of an elephant, which escaped into the jungle from the custody of the servant of its owner and was captured by a person at some cost, is not even an executive order and is not liable to revision under this section—Bejoy Krishna Deb v. Shyam Narain Singh, 41 Cr.L.J. 442, 187 I.C. 310, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 30, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal. 532.

(17) An order made by the Magistrate under sec. 63 of the Indian Merchant Shipping Act (XXI of 1923)—A. F. Noronha v. Gladstone Wyllie, 45 C.W.N. 55.

See also Note 1207 under sec. 439.

1173. Orders which are open to revision:—The following orders being judicial orders, are open to revision:—

(1) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec. 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act—Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal. 287; Chuni Lal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341.

(2) The proceedings of a Magistrate under sec. 113 of the Railways Act (IX of 1890)—Grey v. N. W. Ry., 1891 P.R. 13; Horniman, 34 Bom L.R. 1666.

(3) An order passed by a Magistrate under E. B. and Assam Disorderly Houses Act—Rajani Khemtawali v. Pramatha, 37 Cal. 287.

(4) An order made by a District Judge under sec. 58 of the Forest Act (VII of 1878) on appeal from the order of a Magistrate passed under sec. 54 of that Act—Nathu Khan, 4 All. 417 (419).

(5) An order purporting to have been made under sec. 283 of the Cantonment Code (1899)—Mangi Ram, 1909 P.R. 9, 4 I.C. 611, 11 Cr.L.J. 17.

(6) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec. 161 (2) of the Bombay District Municipalities Act (III of 1901)—In re Dinbai, 43 Bom. 864 (866), 20 Cr.L.J. 702.

(7) An order passed by a Magistrate under sec. 2 of the Workmen's Breach of Contract Act (1859), directing either the return of the advance or specific performance of the contract—Devappa, 43 Bom. 607 (609), 20 Cr.L.J. 316. The Workmen's Breach of Contract Act has been repealed.

(8) An order passed by a Magistrate under the Upper Burma Ruby Regulation 1887 is open to appeal or revision under the Cr. Pro. Code, although under the Regulation no specific provision appears to have been made for appeal or revision—Maung Po Leone, 2 Rang. 321 (323), 26 Cr.L.J. 289.

(9) An order of a Magistrate acting under sec. 221 of the Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920)—Rangesa Rao v. Suaminatha, 27 L.W. 320, 29 Cr.L.J. 389 (390).

(10) An order passed under sec. 7 of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903) is a judicial and not an executive order and can be revised by the High Court under sec. 439, 491 or 561A—Bai Asha, 53 Bom. 149, 30 Cr.L.J. 772, 117 I.C. 321, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 81, 36 Bom.L.R. 62. Contra see Note 1172 (10).

(11) A Magistrate's order declining to stay proceedings—Louis Philip Dias v. Mahadev, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 485, 58 Bom. 49, 1933 Cr.C. 1589, 35 Bom.L.R. 1054.

• See also Note 1206 under sec. 439.

When an order passed by a judicial officer is a matter coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of the authority of the Courts, the mere fact that the officer passing the order states that he is acting not as a judicial officer but in his executive capacity does not oust the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court—Shiv Nath, 1903 P.R. 4, 7 Cr.L.J. 202 (201).

Powers of High Courts in revision:—See Notes under sec. 439.

1174. Powers of other Courts in revision:—Sessions Judges and District Magistrates when exercising their powers under this section should pay particular attention of the following points in the proceedings of the inferior Criminal Courts:—(1) the rash issue of process; (2) the dealing with disputed claims of right under colour of a charge of criminal trespass or mischief, and convictions held of the former offence without a finding as to the criminal intent; (3) the indiscreet imposition of fines beyond the means of offenders; (4) the light punishment by inferior Courts of offences requiring severe punishments in cases which ought to have gone up to a superior Court for enhanced punishment; (5) the imposition of heavy fines in addition to imprisonment, with a view, in default of payment, to extend the term of imprisonment beyond the ordinary powers of the Magistrate to inflict; (6) the exaction of excessive bail or excessive security for keeping the peace or for good behaviour; (1) unnecessary delay in the trial of cases—Mad. H. C. Rul 17-12-1884, para. 17.

Suspension of sentence—Release on bail:—By the italicised words added at the end of sub-sec. (1), "power is given to suspend a sentence or to release an accused on bail pending the examination of the record, thus avoiding the result, should delay occur, that the sentence may have been served before orders are passed"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1175. Sub-section (4):—The intention of the Legislature in enacting this clause is to prevent the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate from simultaneously exercising their powers of revision, and to prevent them from exercising their powers in such a way as would amount to one of them as it were hearing an appeal from or reviewing an order passed by the other—Debi Din, 4 O.C. 119.

The District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge cannot entertain a second application for revision on the same facts—Chunnu v. Kripa, 34 Cr.L.J. 923, 145 I.C. 280

Under this section, the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have co-ordinate powers; and therefore, after an application for revision has been made to the District Magistrate, no further application can be entertained by the Sessions Judge, even though the Sessions Judge was not asked to revise the order passed by the District Magistrate in revision but only to call for the record and report the Magistrate's order to the High Court—Karpurasundaram, 17 M.L.J. 153; nor can the Sessions Judge act suo motu to call for the records under this section, after an application has been made to the District Magistrate—Waryam, 1912 P.R. 10, 14 Cr.L.J. 134. Where a complaint having been dismissed by the Deputy Magistrate under sec. 203, a fresh complaint was made before the District Magistrate in revision, who again dismissed the complaint, it was not open to the Sessions Judge to order further inquiry into the complaint—Sheik Siddiq v. Sheikh Chakuri, 17 C.W.N. 451 17 Cr.L.J. 608. Similarly, the District Magistrate is prohibited by this sub-section from entertaining an application for a direction to commit the accused, after a similar application to the Sessions Judge has been refused, the reason for the prohibition being the avoidance of a conflict between the orders of the two District authorities having co-ordinate powers in the matter—Kalimuthu, 26 Mad.

477. But where an application for revision preferred to the Sessions Judge has been dismissed for want of prosecution, the District Magistrate is competent to entertain a second application for revision and exercise his powers under this section—Debi Din, 4 O.C. 119.

Where a District Magistrate called for the record of a case in which the accused had been discharged, and where the complainant subsequently presented an application to the Sessions Judge to have the order of discharge of the accused set aside, and the Sessions Judge sent for the proceedings and after a perusal of them ordered the committal of the accused for trial, it was held that the Sessions Judge's action was not illegal since no application was made to the District Magistrate, and as the District Magistrate's action in calling for the record was not equivalent to entertaining an application—Po Gyi, 8 L.B.R. 361, 17 Cr.L.J. 497.

The word "made" in this sub-section means not only "made" but "entertained and decided." Making an application does not merely mean presenting a petition to the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge but it must mean something more, i.e., that the application must be heard and determined. Thus, where a District Magistrate declined to consider a revisional application on the merits on the ground that it would be convenient to present the application to the Sessions Judge, this sub-section cannot operate as a bar to the entertainment of the application by the Sessions Judge—Appachi Goundan, 32 Cr.L.J. 1278, 134 I.C. 990, 34 M.L.W. 44, 1931 M.W.N. 771, 61 M.L.J. 123, 54 Mad. 842, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 772, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 878, 1931 Cr.C. 1028.

Revision and Appeal:—There is a distinction between a revision and an appeal. In the latter the appellant is given a statutory right to demand an adjudication from the Court either on a question of fact or on a question of law or upon both. When a matter comes up in revisional jurisdiction the appellant has no right whatsoever beyond the right of bringing his case to the notice of the Court. It is for the Court to interfere in exceptional cases where it seems that some real and substantial injustice has been done. That is the main point which the Court has to consider. A revisional application is not to be regarded as in some sort a second appeal on a question of law—Jafar Khan, 36 Cr.L.J. 907 (908), A.I.R. 1935 All. 814, 156 I.C. 101. Where it is an application in revision and not an appeal the main question which the High Court has to consider is whether substantial justice has been done. In the case of an appeal the applicants no doubt are entitled to demand an adjudication upon all questions of fact or law which they wished to raise but in revision the only question is whether the High Court should interfere in the interests of justice—Kewal Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1022, 164 I.C. 701, 9 R.A. 184, 1936 A.L.R. 798.

436. On examining any record under section 435 or otherwise, the High Court or the Sessions Judge may direct the District Magistrate by himself or by any of the Magistrates subordinate to him to make, and the District Magistrate may himself make or direct any subordinate Magistrate to make, further inquiry into any complaint which has been dismissed under section 203 or sub-section (3) of section 204, or into the case of any person accused of an offence who has been discharged:

Provided that no Court shall make any direction under this section for inquiry into the case of any person who has been discharged, unless such person has had an opportunity of shewing cause why such direction should not be made.

Change:—This is an old sec. 437; and the old sec. 436 has been renumbered as sec. 437.

The words "person accused of an offence" have been substituted for the words "accused person" occurring in the old section. "There have been different rulings as to whether the expression accused person in this section means any person accused of an offence, and it is now made clear that it does"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914). The proviso has been newly added. "We have added a proviso to this section to give effect to the rule laid down by the Courts that a fresh inquiry should not be made into the case of a person who has been discharged unless he has had an opportunity of showing cause"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

1175A. Scope:—This section does not speak of Presidency Magistrates, and the High Court has no power under this section to direct further inquiry into a case of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused by a Presidency Magistrate—Kedar Nath v. Khetranath, 6 C.L.J. 705; Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal. 1282 (1284); Charubala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126 (129); Mir Ahwad v. Mahomed Askari, 29 Cal. 726 (731, 734), 6 C.W.N. 633; Dole Gobind, 28 Cal. 211 (216). But the High Court can exercise such power under sec. 439—Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal. 994 (997); and if not under sec. 439 of this Code, at any rate under sec. 15 of the Charter Act—Charubala v. Barendra, supra; Debi Bux v. Jutmal, supra. See Note 682 under sec. 203.

A Sessions Judge can revise an order of discharge passed by a Magistrate, in a case instituted under sec. 476, even though he is moved by a private person to do so. There is nothing in this Code to limit the persons who can bring the matter (i.e., the order of discharge) to the notice of the Sessions Judge, and it is immaterial how these facts are brought to his notice—Peary Lal v. Sagar Mal, 49 All. 230, 25 A.L.J. 42, 27 Cr.L.J. 1130.

This section is only an enabling section and does not take away by implication the jurisdiction vested in a Magistrate to hear the complaint again—Harbai v. Raya Premji, 40 Cr.L.J. 745 (747), 183 I.C. 283, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 193, 12 R.S. 44, 1 L.R. 1940 Kar. 74 (F.B.), following Mir Ahwad v. Mahomed Askari, supra. See Notes under sec. 203.

1176. Who can direct further inquiry:—The mention of the three tribunals together, the High Court, the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate, shows that the Legislature intended them to have the same power with regard to the matter dealt with under this section—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608; Narayanawamy, 32 Mad. 220. But though the powers of the three tribunals are co-ordinate, still as a matter of procedure the application should be made at first to the lower tribunal. Thus, where a District Magistrate has dismissed a complaint under sec. 203, the High Court will not entertain an application for revision under this section unless a previous application has been made to the Sessions Judge. The High Court will interfere only as a Court of last resort—Gullay v. Bakar Husain, 28 All. 268; Kali Charan, 1904 A.W.N. 232. So also, where the District Magistrate and the Chief Court have concurrent jurisdiction, an order under this section will be more conveniently made by the District Magistrate than by the Chief Court—Rahim Ali, 1888 P.R. 7.

Where a person has been improperly discharged, no reference to the High Court is necessary; the District Magistrate can himself order a fresh inquiry—Raola Viskta, Ratanlal 213; Dajiba, Ratanlal 988. The intention seems to be to give revisional jurisdiction to the Sessions Court or District Magistrate in cases of improper discharge concurrently with that of the High Court, and thereby to obviate the expense and inconvenience which the necessity to resort to the High Court might in some cases entail—Balasinnatambi, 14 Mad. 334 (338).

Since the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have co-ordinate powers under this section to direct further inquiry, it follows that where a District Magistrate has directed an inquiry into a case and decided upon it, the Sessions Judge is not competent to order further inquiry under this section—Shaikh Siddiq v. Shaikh Chakuri, 17 C.W.N. 451, 17 Cr.L.J. 608. See Note 1175 under sub-sec. (4) to sec. 435. In like manner, when the Sessions Judge has made an order for further inquiry under this section, the District Magistrate cannot make a contrary order, but should submit the matter to the High Court through the medium of the Public Prosecutor—Prithi, 12 All. 434. When a further inquiry has been refused by one of the officers, it should not be ordered by the other; if the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order of the District Magistrate for further inquiry is wrong, it is open to the Judge to refer the matter to the High Court, under sec. 438, but he has no power to review the order passed by the District Magistrate under this section—Darbari v. Jagoo Lal, 22 Cal 573.

A District Magistrate can make a further inquiry not only in a case in which an order of discharge has been passed by a subordinate Magistrate but also in a case in which an order of discharge has been passed by himself. This section is not controlled by sec. 369. In other words, a further inquiry does not amount to a view of a judgment of discharge—Bidhu Chandanini v. Mati Sheikh, 28 Cal. 102 (104).

A Deputy Magistrate placed in charge of the current duties of the District Magistrate is not thereby invested with the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate under this section—Ramanand v. Koylash, 11 Cal. 236.

Further inquiry after prior refusal:—When a District Magistrate has once decided under this section that there is no case for further inquiry, he cannot subsequently order further inquiry; such an order would be an order reviewing the earlier one and is prohibited by sec. 369—Nga Than, 5 Bur.L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. So also, where a District Magistrate refuses to direct further inquiry, it is not competent to his successor-in-office, in the face of his predecessor's order, to direct a further inquiry—Ratta Singh v. Kari Singh, 4 C.W.N. 100. But a District Magistrate, who has once declined to order further inquiry on the ground that there was no cause for interference, is competent to order further inquiry on a new information being brought to his notice—Krishnaji, Ratanlal 522 (523).

1177. Who can be directed to make further inquiry:—The District Magistrate may be directed to make further inquiry, even though he exercises enhanced powers under sec. 30 of the Code—Jalloo, 1904 P.R. 15. The District Magistrate may direct a subordinate Magistrate to make further inquiry under this section. For the purposes of this section, a first class Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate—Laskari, 7 All 853; Padmanabha, 8 Mad 18. The District Magistrate has a discretion in selecting the particular Magistrate who is to make the further inquiry under this section, and this discretion in selection is vested in the District Magistrate and not in the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge has not the power of directing a particular subordinate Magistrate by name to make the further inquiry—Chundi Churn v. Hem Chandra, 10 Cal. 207; Queen-Emp v. Dorabji Hormasji, 10 Bom 131; Ramaswami v. Subban, 32 Cr.L.J. 226, 129 I.C. 79, 1930 M.W.N. 911, 32 M.L.W. 782, A.I.R. 1930 Mad 983, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 223. The language of this section is plain and leaves no room for doubt that the Sessions Judge has not the power in directing the same Magistrate to go on with the inquiry in the light of the observations he has made in his judgment. (Per Haveliwala, A.J.C.)—Jethanand Munjmal v. Shivram, 38 Cr.L.J. 596 (601), 168 I.C. 777, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 86, 9 R.S. 239. In the same case Mehta, A.J.C., took a different view and observed: "If a District Magistrate can select a Magistrate under him to make the further inquiry, there is no reason why the High Court and the Court of Session exercising the same power may not do so . . . Ordinarily when the Sessions Judge does not wish to send the case back to the same Magistrate he has no special choice and leaves the option to the District Magistrate, but that does not mean that the Sessions Judge cannot select the Magistrate himself. To deny the right of selection to the Sessions Judge, it must be remembered, is to deny the right to the High Court also, so far as the wording of sec. 436 goes." But where in case of a Sessions offence, the Sessions Judge directed the further inquiry to be made by a Magistrate specially empowered under sec. 30, because having formed an opinion on the evidence he considered that the case should be disposed of by a special power Magistrate rather than that it should be committed to him (Sessions Judge), held that the action of the Sessions Judge was not improper—Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493 (494) (distinguishing 10 Cal. 207).

The further inquiry should ordinarily be made by the same Magistrate who held the first inquiry—Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316 (319); Ram Bhagos v. Baban, 36 All. 129 (132); except in case of death or transfer of such Magistrate, in which case it may be conducted by another Magistrate—Erramreddi, 8 Mad. 296; Amir Khan, 8 Mad. 336. But it is not illegal for the Sessions Judge to direct the further inquiry to be made by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate who had discharged the accused—Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493 (494). Where the further inquiry involves the taking and weighing of additional evidence, the function will generally be best performed by the same Magistrate who made the previous inquiry; but peculiar or prejudiced views or even the possibility of them, may make it desirable to bring a fresh mind into the facts. Where the further inquiry involves the consideration of the same evidence or of the testimony of the same witnesses, it is usually desirable that the inquiry should be committed to a different Magistrate from the one who has made the first inquiry and has already formed an opinion on the case—Balkrishna, Ratanlal 328 (329). Where the Magistrate who had held the first inquiry had dealt with the case in a most unsatisfactory way, it was held to be a good ground for directing the further inquiry to be made by a different Magistrate—Narayanawamy, 32 Mad. 220. Where there were many irregularities in the proceedings before the Magistrate, the High Court ordered that the District Magistrate should direct the case to be tried by some other Magistrate—Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316 (320).

But the District Magistrate cannot direct the further inquiry to be held by a Magistrate inferior to the Magistrate who held the first inquiry. Where a case has been tried by a Magistrate specially empowered under sec. 30, and has ended in a discharge, the District Magistrate should order the further inquiry to be made by the same Magistrate or by another Magistrate equally empowered, but not by a Magistrate who is not empowered under sec. 30 and who is therefore in a sense a Court of inferior jurisdiction to the Court which ordered the discharge—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245.

When the District Magistrate has sent the case to a subordinate Magistrate for further inquiry under this section, the Sub-divisional Magistrate cannot withdraw the case to his own file from that of the subordinate Magistrate—Sentaram, Ratanlal 315. But when a case is sent to the Sub-divisional Magistrate for further inquiry, he can transfer the case to a 2nd class Magistrate subordinate to him—Karuppa, 2 Weir 563.

1178. Dismissal of complaint:—Further inquiry may be ordered when a complaint is dismissed under sec. 203 or 204 (3). But if a complaint was made in respect of one offence and the accused was convicted, further inquiry cannot be directed in respect of another offence for which no charge was made in the complaint—Har Kishore v. Jugal, 27 Cal. 658. Where a case was taken up not upon a complaint but upon a police-report, a Magistrate's order directing the case to be struck off is not a dismissal of complaint, and cannot be revised by the Sessions Judge—Kamru, Ratanlal 521. No further inquiry can be directed when no complaint was made against a person and no regular process was issued against him—Ambar Ali v. Anjab Ali, 39 Cal. 238. Where a complaint has been dismissed under sec. 203, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate may be exercised even though there may have been some irregularity on the part of the officer taking cognizance upon the complaint. This section also contemplates that where a complaint has in fact been dismissed under sec. 203, the revisional jurisdiction of the District Magistrate may be invoked irrespective of the consideration whether the dismissal is legal or illegal—Sadhu Charan v. Balai, 3 P.L.J. 346, 19 Cr.L.J. 874. Where a complaint which contained several charges was dismissed in respect of one of the charges, and the complaint was dismissed merely on the report of the President of a Panchayet without giving the complainant any opportunity to substantiate his case, it was held that there should be a further inquiry into the complaint—Purna Chandra v. Ambika, 23 C.W.N. 575. When ordering a further inquiry in respect of a complaint which has been dismissed under sec. 203, the Sessions Judge cannot direct that the accused be summoned, but his power is restricted to making an order for a further inquiry of the same nature as that which has been already made, i.e., a further inquiry under sec. 202—Bechu Mian v. Anwar, 30 C.W.N. 312, 26 Cr.L.J. 305.

Where on a complaint made against several persons the Magistrate proceeded against only one of them and convicted him, but refused to issue process against the others, held that the order of refusal was to all intents and purposes an order of dismissal of complaint against those persons under sec. 203—Griish Chandra, 29 Cal. 457, 6 C.W.N. 638; Hari Lal, 20 Cr.L.J. 835 (Pat.). See Note 675

This section does not lay down any rule that further inquiry should only be directed when it is found that the judgment of the Magistrate is perverse or foolish. But, as a rule of prudence, the superior Court should not lightly discard the estimate of the evidence appraised by the Court which heard it, and should not set aside the dismissal of a complaint simply because a different view of the evidence might be taken. Each case has to be decided upon its own merits—Radha Prasad, 28 Cr.L.J. 857 (858), 104 I.C. 633, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 12, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 61.

1179. Discharge of accused:—Section 203 contemplates a case in which the complaint is dismissed without process being issued to the accused. Under sec. 253 (2) it is open to the Magistrate to discharge the accused at any stage of the proceeding. Where the Magistrate merely dismissed the complaint after the accused appeared in answer to summons of Court, his order cannot be considered to be otherwise than an order discharging the accused under sec. 253 (2), Cr. P. C.—Bhagwan Das v. Chander Bhan, 35 Cr.L.J. 418, 147 I.C. 335, A.I.R. 1934 All. 51, 56 All. 285, 3 A.W.R. 137, A.L.R. 1934 All. 235, 1934 A.L.J. 69, 1934 Cr.C. 107. The District Magistrate may direct further inquiry where the accused has been discharged. But it is not in every case of discharge that a further inquiry may be directed. Where the order of discharge is not perverse or foolish, and where the Magistrate has made a full inquiry and dealt at length with the evidence and recorded what appears as sound reasons for the discharge, interference under this section is illegal—Nura, 1902 P.L.R. 101; Nasiruddin v. Abdul, 1916 P.W.R. 20, 17 Cr.L.J. 161; Dani, 3 Lah.L.J. 97, 22 Cr.L.J. 199, 60 I.C. 55; Kishan Chand, 21 Cr.L.J. 591 (Lah.), 57 I.C. 91; Faiz Muhammad, 7 Lah.L.J. 216, 26 P.L.R. 198, 26 Cr.L.J. 1328; Khan Zamman, 26 Cr.L.J. 1357, 89 I.C. 397, 1 Lah. Cas. 372, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 81. Although the word 'improperly' which occurs before the word 'discharged' in section 437, is omitted in this section, still it is illegal to direct a further inquiry unless the order of discharge was improper, i.e., manifestly perverse or foolish or based upon a record of evidence which was obviously incomplete—Kiru, 1911 P.R. 10, 11 I.C. 132 (138); Zahur v. Niadar, 9 Lah.L.J. 114, 28 Cr.L.J. 238; Sauan, 26 P.L.R. 291, 26 Cr.L.J. 1393; Nabi Bux, 1 Lah. 216; Gopal Das v. Maghi Ram, 26 P.L.R. 353, 26 Cr.L.J. 1508; Sheo Charan, 21 N.L.R. 88; Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245; Kallu, 4 Lah.L.J. 411, 23 Cr.L.J. 693; Mami, 27 P.L.R. 397, 27 Cr.L.J. 565. An order of discharge should not be set aside in revision except on such grounds as would justify the setting aside of an order of acquittal in appeal. That is, an order of discharge which is made after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution ought not to be set aside unless it can be said that the order is perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence before the Court—Parashram, 57 Bom. 430, 35 Bom.L.R. 245, 1933 Cr.C. 470 (473). See also Durgadas, cited in Note 1181. But the Allahabad High Court is of opinion that there is no rule that a Sessions' Judge cannot interfere with an order of discharge passed by a Magistrate unless the order is manifestly foolish and perverse. The Sessions Judge can revise the order of discharge passed by a Magistrate, where he disagrees with the finding of the Magistrate and points out considerations which in his opinion should have led to a different thing—Peary Lal v. Sagar Mal, 49 All. 230, 27 Cr.L.J. 1130. The word "improperly" which is to be found in sec. 437 has been omitted from this section, and the omission seems to indicate that it was intended by the Legislature to confer a very wide discretion, so as to meet not only the case in which an improper discharge has been made but also those cases in which upon the facts as they stand the discharge is proper but in the interests of justice and in regard to the peculiar and particular facts of the case it is right that the inquiry should be reopened—Chotu, 9 All. 52 (57, 58), 1886 A.W.N. 281 (F.B.).

No formal order of discharge is necessary, to enable the District Magistrate to direct further inquiry. When an order is one of discharge in substance, though not in form, the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate is competent, upon motion being made by the complainant, to make an order for further inquiry—Nogendra Nath v. Korb, 8 C.W.N. 456. Where after the issue of warrant against certain persons, the Magistrate does not think it proper to proceed further and stops further proceedings, the termination of the proceedings is in effect an order of discharge and is, therefore, subject to revision under this section—Moul Singh v. Mahabir, 4 C.W.N. 242. Where a Magistrate deliberately frames a charge on a minor section instead of on the major section on which the case starts, his action is equivalent to a discharge with regard to the major offence. The Sessions Court has power to interfere under this section in such a case—Ganga Datta, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 87, 37 Cr.L.J. 715, 162 I.C. 925, 1936 Cr.C. 552. Where, therefore, a person was charged with offences under secs. 323 and 307, I. P. C., and the Magistrate framed a charge under sec. 323 only and said nothing about sec. 307, held that this was equivalent to saying that there was no evidence against the accused of an offence under sec. 307, I. P. C., and that in effect the accused was discharged of that offence. The Court of revision could, therefore, order further inquiry in respect of that offence—Sheo Narain v. Radha Mohan, 42 All. 128 (130), 53 I.C. 618, 20 Cr.L.J. 778, A.I.R. 1919 All. 66, 17 A.L.J. 1093; Sukhlal, 35 Cr.L.J. 865, 148 I.C. 999, A.I.R. 1934 Cr.C. 193, 1934 A.L.J. 478.

This section applies where the accused has been discharged, i.e., discharged under sec. 209, 253 or 259—Velu v. Chidambaram, 33 Mad. 85; therefore, no further inquiry can be directed when the accused has been acquitted by a Magistrate—Bajjnath v. Gaurikanta, 20 Cal. 633; Erramreddi, 8 Mad. 296; Jaliram v. Rajkumar, 5 C.W.N. 72; Bishun Das, 7 C.W.N. 493; Kallu, 35 Cr.L.J. 1151, 150 I.C. 852, 11 O.W.N. 818, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 327, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 323. If the complainant is aggrieved by the dismissal of his complaint and the discharge of the accused under sec. 259, Cr. P. C., it is open to him to move the Sessions Court to order further inquiry under this section because this section is now amended and relates not only to a dismissal of complaint under sec. 203 or under sub-sec. (3) of sec. 204 but to any case where persons accused of an offence have been discharged—Chellomal v. Kewaimal Jeramdas, 40 Cr.L.J. 287, 179 I.C. 898, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 38, 11 R.S. 164, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 228. Thus, where a complaint in a summons case has been dismissed for default, the order is one under section 247 acquitting the accused. Such an order does not fall within the purview of section 436—Bindra v. Bhagawanta, 25 Cr.L.J. 359, 77 I.C. 295, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 44. Even, if an order of acquittal was passed in a warrant case without any charge having been framed or evidence for the defence taken, still it cannot be subject of revision under this section—Sayid Khan, 1 A.L.J. 415. Where an accused is discharged under circumstances which make the order of discharge equivalent to one of acquittal, no further proceedings should be taken against him under this section—Kiru, 10 P.R. 1911, 11 I.C. 132 (137), 12 Cr.L.J. 364; Dodd, 1900 P.L.R. 31; Pothuri Venkataramayya, 17 Cr.L.J. 95 (Mad.). Thus, where in a summons case, the Magistrate follows the procedure of a warrant case and discharges the accused, the order of discharge is one of acquittal, although he styles it as an order of discharge, and no order under this section can be passed—Venkataramaiyer, 8 M.L.T. 78, 11 Cr.L.J. 350. Similarly, after a charge has been framed in a warrant case, the accused can only be acquitted under sec. 258 and not discharged, and if the Magistrate erroneously passes an order of discharge, still there can be no order for further inquiry—Sriramulu v. Veerasalingam, 38 Mad. 585. Where after a full trial the accused persons were discharged, the discharge was for all practical purposes as good as an acquittal, and there should be no order for further inquiry—Sundar v. Bhaiyan, 4 Lah L.J. 331.

The discharge of the accused under sec. 494 (a) upon withdrawal of the case by the Public Prosecutor before the frame of charge does not amount to an acquittal, and further inquiry may be directed—Hata, 30 P.L.R. 58, 30 Cr.L.J. 233; Kanhaiya Lal v. Bajjnath, 34 Cr.L.J. 519, 143 I.C. 77, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 78, 1933 Cr.C. 315, 29 N.L.R.

201, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 149; Devendra Kumar Roy v. Yar Bakht Chaudhury, 40 Cr.L.J. 349 (353), 180 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 220, 43 C.W.N. 301, 11 R.C. 676, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 407. See also Dattatraya Govindrao Pakode v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 65 (67), 172 I.C. 130, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 76, 10 R.N. 167.

The circumstances under which an order of discharge under sec. 209, Criminal Procedure Code, will be set aside are exactly similar to those in which an order would be set aside which had been passed under sec. 253, Cr. P. C.—Zarin, 35 Cr.L.J. 1282, 151 I.C. 143, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 52, 1934 Cr.C. 884, following Parashram, 143 I.C. 28, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 158, 35 Bom.L.R. 245, Ind. Rul. 1933 Bom. 266, 34 Cr.L.J. 564, 1933 Cr.C. 470, 57 Bom. 430 and dissenting from Aulad Hussain, 32 Cr.L.J. 128, 1930 Cr.C. 955, 7 O.W.N. 749, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 415, 128 I.C. 285. But see Ramchandra, cited in Note 1190, which overruled Parashram, supra.

No further inquiry can be directed where the proceedings have been stopped under sec. 249 and the accused has been released—Achhu, 1913 P.R. 9, 13 Cr.L.J. 860.

No further inquiry can be directed in a case where the accused has been convicted. If in fact in such a case the Sessions Judge thinks that further inquiry is necessary, he must report the matter to the High Court, which Court alone can direct further inquiry in such a case—Valav, Ratanlal 407.

Where the order is neither one of dismissal of complaint nor one of discharge of accused, no order for further inquiry can be passed. Thus, where on the acquittal of an accused, the other accused against whom processes of arrest had been issued surrendered before the Deputy Magistrate, and he passed an order directing that the accused should not be proceeded against and that the warrant and other processes issued against him be withdrawn, the order was neither one of dismissal of complaint nor one of discharge of the accused, and the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under this section to direct further inquiry—Panchu v. Khoosdel, 12 C.W.N. 68.

When the Police refer a case as false and the Magistrate orders it to be so treated this is not a judicial act and such an order is not revisable by the Sessions Judge under this section—Venkata Subba Rao v. Anjanayulu, 33 Cr.L.J. 785 (788), 139 I.C. 500, 1932 M.W.N. 548, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 733, 36 M.L.W. 788, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 673, 63 M.L.J. 679, 1932 Cr.C. 831.

1180. No further inquiry where no accusation of 'offence':—Further inquiry can be directed only in the case of an accused person, the term 'accused' means a person accused of an offence and not a person against whom proceedings are taken under Chap. VIII—Imam Mandal, 27 Cal. 662; Dayanath, 33 Cal. 8. Therefore, sec. 436 does not enable a Court to order further inquiry to be made in a case of discharge of a person against whom security proceedings were taken under Chap. VIII, because such a person was not in the position of an accused person and could not be said to have committed an 'offence'—Imam Mandal, 27 Cal. 662; Dayanath, 33 Cal. 8; Roshan Singh, 46 All. 235; Mid. Yusuf v. Abdul Majid, 53 All. 148, 32 Cr.L.J. 570, 130 I.C. 630, 1930 A.L.J. 1475, A.I.R. 1931 All. 53, 1931 Cr.C. 125, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 294; Maung Than, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 207, 81 I.C. 970, 25 Cr.L.J. 1146, 2 Rang. 30 (31); Velu v. Chidambaram, 33 Mad. 85; Naram v. Durga, 1911 P.R. 6, 12 Cr.L.J. 232, 10 I.C. 178. The word 'discharged' in sec. 119 means only 'permitted to depart' and does not mean the discharge of an accused as contemplated by this section; therefore, further inquiry cannot be directed in a case of discharge under sec. 119—Velu v. Chidambaram, supra. This is now made clear by the present amendment by the use of the words "accused of an offence." (The contrary view taken in 21 All. 107, 24 All. 148, 36 All. 147, 16 Bom. 661, 35 Bom. 401, is no longer correct). If a District Magistrate, on examining the record of a security case, is of opinion that the person discharged by the subordinate Magistrate ought to be proceeded against, he can, under sec. 428, report the result of his examination of the record to the High Court, which will then pass the necessary orders. But he cannot direct further inquiry under sec. 435—Roshan Singh, 46 All. 235, 22 A.L.J. 129, 25 Cr.L.J. 467; Near Ahir, 51 All. 408, 30 Cr.L.J. 63 (64); Mid. Yusuf v. Abdul Majid, supra.

This section does not apply to proceedings under sec. 133 of the Code, since the person proceeded against under that section is not said to have committed an 'offence'. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he directs further inquiry into proceedings under that section—Srinath v. Ainaddi, 24 Cal. 395; Idranath, 25 Cal. 425; Prithipal, 2 O.W.N. 549, 26 Cr.L.J. 1251. The only action which a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate can take in such case will be under sec. 438—Prithipal, supra. Similarly, proceedings under sec. 144 do not refer to any offence; and no further inquiry can be directed in a case under that section—Har Kishore v. Jugal, 27 Cal. 658. So also, this section does not authorise a Magistrate to direct further inquiry into a case under section 145, as that section has no reference to any offence at all—Chathu v. Niranjani, 20 Cal. 729; Maung San v. Maung Mye, 30 C.L.J. 709, 117 I.C. 59, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 292, Ind Rul. 1929 Rang. 171. The proper procedure in such a case is to make a reference to the High Court under sec. 438—Maung San, supra. So again, the District Magistrate cannot direct further inquiry into cases under sec. 488, since refusal of maintenance is not an 'offence' and the application for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence—Parbati v. Chotey, 17 C.P.L.R. 127, 1 Cr.L.J. 864; Tokee Bibee v. Abdul Khan, 5 Cal. 536.

1181. When further inquiry may be directed:—A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has jurisdiction to direct further inquiry or a re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the subordinate Magistrate though there is no further evidence forthcoming—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608; Balasinnatambi, 14 Mad. 334; Dorabji, 10 Bom. 131; Chotu, 9 All. 52 (56) (F.B.); Dayanand, 23 A.L.J. 20, 25 Cr.L.J. 376; Sahib Kaur v. Md. Kasim, 14 P.R. 1891; Haider Khan, 25 Cr.L.J. 66, 75 I.C. 978, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 36; Po Yin, 3 L.B.R. 97. Further inquiry does not in all cases mean taking of additional evidence, but may mean rehearing and reconsideration of the evidence already taken—Dulla, 1901 P.R. 2; Sheocharan, 21 N.L.R. 88, 26 Cr.L.J. 1537, 90 I.C. 385, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 117; Begraj, 10 S.L.R. 68, 17 Cr.L.J. 349. But in Harbhanj v. Jowala, 1887 P.R. 68, and Amir Khan, 8 Mad. 336, it has been held that further inquiry means the taking of additional evidence and not a mere re-hearing of the same evidence, which is the same thing as retrial; and therefore, where there has been a full inquiry by a competent Court and the accused has been discharged, the Sessions Judge has no power to direct a further inquiry, unless further evidence has been disclosed—Dodd, 1900 P.L.R. 31. The Calcutta High Court has also held that in cases where the trying Magistrate has discussed the evidence carefully and has given sufficient reason for the discharge of the accused, and no fresh evidence is likely to be produced on further inquiry, the superior Court should hesitate before ordering further inquiry, unless there are palpable errors in the decision of the lower Court—Abdul Rashid v. Momtaz, 38 C.L.J. 206, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 229, 25 Cr.L.J. 191; Sulav v. Prafulla, 50 C.L.J. 284, 1929 Cr.C. 467, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 755.

Reference may be made to the case in Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608 (F.B.), the case in Queen-Emp. v. Chatu, 9 All. 52, 1886 A.W.N. 281 (F.B.), the case in Narayanaswamy Naidu v. Emp., 10 S.L.R. 68, 35 I.C. 525, A.I.R. 1916 Sind 63, 17 Cr.L.J. 349, in support of the statement that a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has jurisdiction to direct a further inquiry or re-hearing upon the same materials which were before the Subordinate Magistrate, though there is no further evidence forthcoming. But none of those cases is authority for the statement that any such further inquiry or re-hearing is justified when the order of the Magistrate upon the evidence appears to be a reasonable order—Azizuddin R. Faruqui v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 454 (455), I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 370, 180 I.C. 581, 11 R.S. 180, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 71.

Generally speaking, further inquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete—Kruu, 11 I.C. 132, 12 Cr.L.J. 364, 24 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.), 205 P.L.R. 1911, 10 P.R. 1911 (Cr.) This section does not apply to proceedings under sec. 133 of the Code, since the person proceeded against under that section is not said to have committed an 'offence'. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he directs further inquiry into proceedings under that section—*Srinath v. C.—Nazar Muhammad v. Jumma, supra; Mots Lal v. Emp, 29 Cr.L.J. 39, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 328 and 399, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 97, 106 I.C. 455, 9 Lah.L.J. 508, not following *Pearey Lal v. It may be that another view may be taken of the case than that which the Magistrate took; but that circumstance alone would not justify a retrial—Mubarak Jan v. Rahat Jan, 32 Cr.L.J. 302, 129 I.C. 300, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 543, 1930 Cr.C. 691, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 188, 31 P.L.R. 729; Ishar Singh, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 631. Where the Magistrate has not dealt with the evidence, it is certainly open to the District Magistrate to direct a further enquiry—Bhagawantrao, 37 Cr.L.J. 858, 163 I.C. 702, 18 N.L.J. 238, following Sheocharan, supra. Where a man is discharged under circumstances which make the order of discharge equivalent to one of acquittal, no further proceedings should be taken against him under this section—Kiru, supra. The mere fact that the District Magistrate places a different value on the evidence from that placed by the trial Court is not a good reason for directing further enquiry under this section—Dani, 60 I.C. 55, 22 Cr.L.J. 199, 3 Lah. 97. The order of the Magistrate may not commend itself to the District Magistrate, the Magistrate may or may not have attached too much importance to the discrepancies and too little to the probabilities, but unless the order can be said to be perverse or foolish, it will not be interfered with—Ghulam, 102 I.C. 783, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 815, 28 Cr.L.J. 607. See also Daulat Ram, 34 Cr.L.J. 190, 141 I.C. 253, 34 P.L.R. 148, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 166, 1933 Cr.C. 311, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 105. Unless the view taken by the Magistrate is palpably unreasonable or perverse, the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate should not order further enquiry on the same materials because he was inclined to take a view of the evidence different from that of the Magistrate—Diwan Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 735 (737), 144 I.C. 331, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 561, 34 P.L.R. 719, 1933 Cr.C. 819, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 446. It is not for the accused to convince the Court of Revision why further enquiry should not be ordered against him, but it is for the prosecution to bring the case within the rule laid down in Kiru's case—Diwan Singh, supra.

* An order of discharge should only be set aside very sparingly and only when it can be said either to be perverse or prima facie incorrect when there is a suggestion that any further evidence may be forthcoming. But in this section no distinction is drawn between a discharge where all the evidence had been heard for the prosecution and a discharge where it had not all been heard—Nazir Ahmad, 35 Cr.L.J. 202, A.I.R. 1934 All. 944, 4 A.W.R. 37, 152 I.C. 884, 1934 Cr.C. 1256. Where the trying Magistrate had not overlooked or ignored any evidence nor could it be said that the view taken by the trying Magistrate was palpably unreasonable or perverse and it was found that the trying Magistrate had seen and heard the witnesses and was not satisfied with their evidence and the order of discharge was one which could not be said to be either perverse or prima facie incorrect, a further enquiry under this section should not be ordered in the case—Kallu, 35 Cr.L.J. 1151, 150 I.C. 852, 11 O.W.N. 818, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 327, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 323.

When the complainant does not choose to be present for being examined on oath and his complaint is dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., he cannot be heard afterwards to say that the matter should be sent back to the Magistrate for further enquiry—Ram Prosad, 29 Cr.L.J. 798, 111 I.C. 126, 48 C.L.J. 90, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 569, 11 A.I.Cr.R. 48. Where the Magistrate did not personally examine the applicant and record his statement when the complaint was presented and did not take the applicant's evidence, these were

This section does not apply to proceedings under sec. 133 of the Code, since the person proceeded against under that section is not said to have committed an 'offence'. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he directs further inquiry into proceedings under that section—*Srinath v. The only action which a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate can take in such case will be under sec. 438—Prithipal, supra. Similarly, proceedings under sec. 144 do not refer to any offence; and no further inquiry can be directed in a case under that section—Har Kishore v. Jugal, 27 Cal. 658. So also, this section does not authorise a Magistrate to direct further inquiry into a case under section 145, as that section has no reference to any offence at all—*Chaitan v. The Calcutta High Court has also held that in cases where the trying Magistrate has discussed the evidence carefully and has given sufficient reason for the discharge of the accused, and no fresh evidence is likely to be produced on further inquiry, the superior Court should hesitate before ordering further inquiry, unless there are palpable errors in the decision of the lower Court—*Abdul Rashid v. This section does not apply to proceedings under sec. 133 of the Code, since the person proceeded against under that section is not said to have committed an 'offence'. A Sessions Judge or District Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he directs further inquiry into proceedings under that section—*Srinath v. But none of those cases is authority for the statement that any such further inquiry or re-hearing is justified when the order of the Magistrate upon the evidence appears to be a reasonable order—Azizuddin R. Faruqi v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 454 (455), I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 370, 180 I.C. 581, 11 R.S. 180, A.I.R. 1939 Sind. 71.

Generally speaking, further inquiry after discharge is improper unless the order of discharge is manifestly perverse or foolish or is based upon a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete—Kiru, 11 I.C. 132, 12 Cr.L.J. 364, 24 P.W.R. 1911 (Cr.), 205 P.L.R. 1911, 10 P.R. 1911 (Cr.) C.—Nazar Muhammad v. Jumma, supra; Moti Lal v. Emp., 29 Cr.L.J. 39, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 328 and 399, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 97, 106 I.C. 455, 9 Lah.L.J. 508, not following Pearey Lal v. Sagar Mal, 97 I.C. 650, 49 All. 230, 27 Cr.L.J. 1130, 25 A.L.J. 42, A.I.R. 1927 All. 38. But see Aulad Husam, 32 Cr.L.J. 128, 128 I.C. 285, 7 O.W.N. 749, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 415, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 45, 1930 Cr.C. 955; Dulu v. Khusal, 147 I.C. 447, 34 P.L.R. 833, 35 Cr.L.J. 449 (451); Sheocharan, supra; Nathu, 37 Cr.L.J. 89, 159 I.C. 238, 8 R.N. 124, 18 N.L.J. 90. It may be that another view may be taken of the case than that which the Magistrate took; but that circumstance alone would not justify a retrial—Mubarak Jan v. Rahat Jan, 32 Cr.L.J. 302, 129 I.C. 300, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 543, 1930 Cr.C. 691, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 188, 31 P.L.R. 729; Ishar Singh, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 631. Where the Magistrate has not dealt with the evidence, it is certainly open to the District Magistrate to direct a further enquiry—Bhagawantrao, 37 Cr.L.J. 858, 163 I.C. 702, 18 N.L.J. 238, following Sheocharan, supra. Where a man is discharged under circumstances which make the order of discharge equivalent to one of acquittal, no further proceedings should be taken against him under this section—Kiru, supra. The mere fact that the District Magistrate places a different value on the evidence from that placed by the trial Court is not a good reason for directing further enquiry under this section—Dani, 60 I.C. 55, 22 Cr.L.J. 199, 3 Lah. 97. The order of the Magistrate may not commend itself to the District Magistrate, the Magistrate may or may not have attached too much importance to the discrepancies and too little to the probabilities, but unless the order can be said to be perverse or foolish, it will not be interfered with—Ghulam, 102 I.C. 783, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 815, 28 Cr.L.J. 607. See also Daulat Ram, 34 Cr.L.J. 190, 141 I.C. 263, 34 P.L.R. 148, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 166, 1933 Cr.C. 311, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 105. Unless the view taken by the Magistrate is palpably unreasonable or perverse, the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate should not order further enquiry on the same materials because he was inclined to take a view of the evidence different from that of the Magistrate—Dewan Singh, 34 Cr.L.J. 735 (737), 144 I.C. 331, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 561, 34 P.L.R. 719, 1933 Cr.C. 819, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 446. It is not for the accused to convince the Court of Revision why further enquiry should not be ordered against him, but it is for the prosecution to bring the case within the rule laid down in Kiru's case—Dewan Singh, supra.

* An order of discharge should only be set aside very sparingly and only when it can be said either to be perverse or prima facie incorrect when there is a suggestion that any further evidence may be forthcoming. But in this section no distinction is drawn between a discharge where all the evidence had been heard for the prosecution and a discharge where it had not all been heard—Nazir Ahmad, 36 Cr.L.J. 202, A.I.R. 1934 All. 944, 4 A.W.R. 37, 152 I.C. 884, 1934 Cr.C. 1256. Where the trying Magistrate had not overlooked or ignored any evidence nor could it be said that the view taken by the trying Magistrate was palpably unreasonable or perverse and it was found that the trying Magistrate had seen and heard the witnesses and was not satisfied with their evidence and the order of discharge was one which could not be said to be either perverse or prima facie incorrect, a further enquiry under this section should not be ordered in the case—Kallu, 35 Cr.L.J. 1151, 150 I.C. 852, 11 O.W.N. 818, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 327, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 323.

When the complainant does not choose to be present for being examined on oath and his complaint is dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., he cannot be heard afterwards to say that the matter should be sent back to the Magistrate for further enquiry—Ram Prosad, 29 Cr.L.J. 798, 111 I.C. 126, 48 C.L.J. 90, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 569, 11 A.I.Cr.R. 48. Where the Magistrate did not personally examine the applicant and record his statement when the complaint was presented and did not take the applicant's evidence, these were technical irregularities in procedure and were no sufficient grounds for interference in revision when the Magistrate made local enquiries and came to the conclusion that the story was not true and the matter was more or less of a civil nature—Ram Gir v. Ravi Saran, 36 Cr.L.J. 1035, A.I.R. 1935 All. 883, 156 I.C. 948.

When a complaint has been dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., after a full enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., the District Magistrate can interfere. There is nothing in this section to support the view that it is only on the point of law that the District Magistrate can interfere—Durga Prasad, 36 Cr.L.J. 526, A.I.R. 1935 All. 439, 154 I.C. 513. But the discretion of Magistrates in dismissing complaints is not lightly to be interfered with. Where he has used his discretion in dismissing a complaint, if there is as much to be said in its favour as against it, the discretion should not be interfered with. Jurisdiction in revision is not lightly to be exercised—Sadhuram Chimandas v. Chimandas Budhuram, 38 Cr.L.J. 742 (744), 169 I.C. 112, 9 R.S. 277, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 81.

This section is limited by the words "on examining the record under sec. 435" and that section lays down that a Court may call for and examine the record for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order. And, therefore, a District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of discharge and direct further inquiry, if he finds no irregularity, illegality or impropriety in the proceedings—Pran Khan, 16 C.W.N. 1078, 13 Cr.L.J. 764.

Where a Magistrate had discharged the accused without considering the necessary evidence, the Sessions Judge ought to direct further inquiry in the case—Dhanias v. Clifford, 13 Bom 376. Section 253, Cr. P. C., gives the Magistrate power of discharge before the entire case is complete. The District Magistrate also acts legally when he directs a further enquiry on the ground that the enquiry before the Magistrate was not a complete one—Hakim Singh v. Lal Singh, 31 Cr.L.J. 239, 121 I.C. 289, A.I.R. 1930 Lah 158, 1930 Cr.C. 166.

Mere lapse of time (e.g., 6 months) is not a sufficient ground for refusal to order further inquiry, if the Court feels that an offence has been committed which should be inquired into—Brijbhukhan v. Jaurao, 23 Cr.L.J. 745 (Nag). But an order for further inquiry or retrial passed after the lapse of a year and a half from the date of discharge amounts to a travesty of justice—Bishan v. Abdul, 29 Cr.L.J. 895 (896), 111 I.C. 575, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 178, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 428.

Section 436, must be read with sec. 435, Cr. P. C., and the limitations within which jurisdiction in revision is to be exercised, are indicated by the words of sub-section (1) itself. It is true that these words are wide but they again are limited in their application by the fact that jurisdiction exercised in revision is an extraordinary jurisdiction and that that jurisdiction is to be exercised only in exceptional cases and sparingly—Azizuddin R. Faruqi, 40 Cr.L.J. 454 (455), I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 370, 180 I.C. 581, 11 R.S. 180, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 71. The power of ordering further inquiry should be used sparingly and with great circumspection. Therefore, where an accused person has been three times subjected to a Magisterial inquiry, it would be an oppression on the accused to send him a fourth time before the Magistrate for inquiry on the same evidence which has been thrice pronounced to be insufficient and untrustworthy—Balkrishna, Ratanlal 328 (330). Sessions Judges and District Magistrates should use the powers under this section sparingly and with great caution and circumspection, especially in cases where the questions involved are mere matters of fact—Chotu, 9 All. 52 (59) (F.B.); Alam, 49 All 879, 28 Cr.L.J. 601 (602). A District Magistrate cannot set aside an order of discharge passed by a Subordinate Magistrate and direct further inquiry solely on the ground that the latter has misappreciated the evidence—Lakshminarasappa, 31 Mad. 133. (But see Begraj, 10 S.L.R. 68, 17 Cr.L.J. 349, and Kallu, 4 Lah.L.J. 411, 23 Cr.L.J. 693, A.I.R. 1922 Lah 59). If on the prosecution evidence itself there is reasonable doubt as to whether the acts of the accused were merely negligent or dishonest, the accused even at that stage was entitled to the benefit of doubt. An order for further inquiry against a discharge in such a case is not warranted—Krishna Chetty v. Karur Vyasa Bank Ltd., 1937 MWN 871. Before an order of discharge can be set aside it must be shown that it is perverse—Daulat Ram, 34 Cr.L.J. 190, 141 I.C. 263, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 105, 34 PLR 148, AIR 1933 Lah. 166, 1933 Cr.C. 311. Further inquiry cannot be directed on the bare possibility of an offence being disclosed on further evidence being taken. There must be something on record to indicate that such an offence was committed or there must be something to show that further evidence is available which has not been taken and which would support a charge for that offence—In re Arumuga, 43 MLJ. 564. The powers conferred by this section are not to be exercised promiscuously in all cases wherever the District Magistrate, who has not seen the witnesses, forms a different opinion of the value of their evidence from that which was formed by the Magistrate who has seen them—Narainah Venkatesh, 18 Cr.L.J. 646 (647), 19 Bom.LR 350; Umrao Khan, 21 ALJ. 194; Uday Raj, 44 All. 691; Kallu, 4 Lah.L.J. 411, 23 Cr.L.J. 693. A District Magistrate would be wrong in directing further inquiry merely upon the strength of his own appreciation of the evidence, in a case where the accused had had a perfectly fair trial reaching a lawful conclusion and the trial Magistrate's discussion of the evidence had been quite reasonable—Narainah Venkatesh, supra. In directing a further inquiry, the true criterion is not whether the revising Court agrees with the order of discharge, but whether it is a reasonable order, in the sense that it cannot be described as perverse or contrary to evidence—Parashram, 57 Bom. 430, 1933 Cr.C. 470 (474), 143 I.C. 289, 35 Bom.LR 245, AIR 1933 Bom. 158, Ind. Rul. 1933 Bom. 266, 34 Cr.L.J. 564. An order of discharge made by a Magistrate after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution ought not to be set aside unless it can be said that the order was perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence before the Court—Durgadas, 35 Cr.L.J. 644, 148 I.C. 271, 35 Bom.LR. 1181, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 48. See also Zarin, 35 Cr.L.J. 1282, 151 I.C. 143, 1934 Cr.C. 884, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 52, and Gul Muhammad v. Habibullah Karim Ullah, 40 Cr.L.J. 674, 182 I.C. 522, 12 R.Pesh. 1, AIR 1939 Pesh. 16. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down. This section which empowers the High Court, the Sessions Judge, or the District Magistrate to direct a further inquiry into a complaint dismissed under sec. 203 or 204 does not lay down any rule that further inquiry should only be directed when it is found that the judgment is perverse or foolish. As a rule of prudence, however, it has often been held that the superior Court should not lightly discard the estimate of evidence appraised by the Court which heard it and should not set aside the dismissal of a complaint simply because a different view of the evidence might be taken—Radha Prasad Bhagat v. Emp., 28 Cr.L.J. 857, 104 I.C. 633, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 12, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 61, following Rubhajan v. Emp., 86 I.C. 822, 6 PLT. 570, 26 Cr.L.J. 886, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 599 and Queen-Emp. v. Chotu, 9 All. 52, 1886 A.W.N. 281, 5 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 465.

Though it may be said that it is wrong to say that a revising Court will not interfere with an order unless it can be fairly described as perverse or manifestly contrary to the evidence, it is clear that the Court will not interfere with a reasonable order made by a Magistrate in the exercise of his jurisdiction and that it will not interfere unless it is satisfied that the order is an unreasonable order, though it may not be necessary or proper to describe that order as perverse or manifestly contrary to the evidence—Azizuddin R. Faruqui v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 454 (456), I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 370, 180 I.C. 581, 11 RS 180, A.I.R. 1939 Sind. 71. When the circumstances and the evidence are such that two different Courts might take two different views of the evidence, and the order of discharge is neither perverse nor prima facie incorrect, and there is no suggestion that further evidence is forthcoming, a further inquiry should not be directed merely because the District Magistrate was inclined to take a different view of the evidence from that of the trying Magistrate—Ramanand, 9 O.W.N. 134, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh. 196, 137 I.C. 71, 33 Cr.L.J. 383, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh. 114, 1932 Cr.C. 187; Alam, 49 All. 879, 25 A.L.J. 703, 28 Cr.L.J. 601 (602); Mathura v. Chakra, 35 Cr.L.J. 1236, 150 I.C. 951, 10 O.W.N. 810; Bindeshri, 18 ALJ. 1135, 22 Cr.L.J.

49; Etrad Husain v. Amjad Husain, 33 Cr.L.J. 571, 138 I.C. 142, 9 O.W.N. 442, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 296; Chandan v. Kallu, 8 A.L.J. 45; Kumaraswami Mudali v. Kalammal, 1937 M.W.N. 332; Azizuddin R. Faruqui v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 454 (455), 180 I.C. 581, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 71, 11 R.S. 180, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 370. It is both legal and proper for a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate to set aside an order of discharge on the ground of misapprehension of evidence. It is, strictly speaking, legal for a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate to do so on the ground of misappreciation of evidence, but it is not proper to do so unless he is clearly of opinion that the misappreciation is so flagrant that in effect the order is perverse or manifestly unreasonable or foolish or prima facie incorrect. Where exactly to draw the line is a matter for the exercise of common sense. In the application of these principles there is no practical difference between sec. 436 and sec. 437, Cr. P. C. (Per Gruer, J.). Section 435, Cr. P. C., does not contemplate mere difference of opinion between the revisional authority and the inferior Courts but something more: the finding, sentence, order or procedure of the inferior Court must be intrinsically erroneous or defective. The material words must, therefore, be construed in an objective sense, i.e., the error or defect must be capable of being demonstrated. Such defect or error may arise from mere perversity, misconception of law or fact, illegality or material irregularity in procedure or undue harshness or leniency. There is obvious difference between "misapprehension" and "misappreciation." Misapprehension is misconception, i.e. to regard a thing as something different from what it is. Misappreciation is putting a wrong value on a thing. While the former is capable of objective demonstration, the latter is not, because appreciation is mostly, if not wholly, a subjective process. Section 435, Cr. P. C., clearly covers a case of misapprehension of evidence but does not cover a case of bare misappreciation of evidence. If, however, a District Magistrate sets aside an order of discharge on the sole ground of misappreciation of evidence, his action cannot be treated as illegal. He has power to send for the record, examine it and set aside the order of discharge. The legality of an order does not depend on the correctness of the reason given and therefore wrong reason cannot impair the legality of the order but only its propriety (per Niyogi, J.)—Sheoprasad v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 917 (920, 921), 177 I.C. 605, 1938 N.L.J. 250, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 394, I.L.R. 1938 Nag. 442, 11 R.N. 148. It is necessary that the District Magistrate should not be satisfied with the "correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order," and it is then his duty to exercise the discretion he possesses under this section and to order that further enquiry be made into the complaint that had been dismissed—Maung Su v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 709 (710), 169 I.C. 63, 9 R.R. 386, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 120.

In a private prosecution where the accused has been found by both the Courts below to be innocent the High Court will be reluctant to interfere—Brendra v. Umananda, 30 C.W.N. 120. The High Court will not interfere for the benefit of the complainant with an order which was passed upon his own request by the trial Court—Dagar v. Budh, 34 Cr.L.J. 718, 144 I.C. 289, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 323, 34 P.L.R. 181 and 680, 1933 Cr.C. 585, Ind. Rul. 1933 Lah. 436.

The mere fact that an accused person has been exonerated in a previous departmental inquiry is not sufficient ground for dismissal of a complaint—Azizuddin R. Faruqui v. Emp., supra.

Further inquiry cannot be directed into an offence (e.g., under sec. 193, I. P. C.) if the sanction of the Court in which that offence has been committed is wanting—Meherban v. Sitaram, 30 Cr.L.J. 874 (875), 118 I.C. 232, A.I.R. 1929 All. 374, 1929 Cr.C. 1 1929 A.L.J. 512, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 824. A Magistrate's order that he declined to proceed with the case for want of a proper complaint under sec. 195, Cr. P. C., is not in law an order of discharge at all under sec. 209 (2), Cr. P. C. Nor is it an order dismissing a complaint under section 203, Cr. P. C., for such an order can only be passed by a Magistrate having jurisdiction to take cognizance of the complaint. Such an order cannot be revised under this section—Subramania v. Swamikannu, 34 Cr.L.J. 800 (802), 144 I.C. 519, 37 M.L.W. 547, 1933 M.W.N. 217, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 413, 1933

Cr.C. 366, Ind. Rul 1933 Mad. 424. See also Koibola v. Suvarna, 1933 M.W.N. 1031, where it has further been held that if the Sessions Judge finds the order wrong, he can only call for the records under sec. 435 and refer the matter to the High Court. The Patna High Court has taken a different view of law on that point and has laid down that it is open to the Sessions Judge to order further enquiry into the complaint in such a case, without referring it to the High Court—Ram Singh v. Rizwi, 36 Cr.L.J. 650 (651), 155 I.C. 126, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 52, 15 P.L.T. 775, 1935 Cr.C. 83, 14 Pat. 299.

When a complaint of forgery is dismissed and an application is made to the Sessions Judge under secs. 436 and 437, Cr. P. C., the Sessions Judge should either proceed under sec. 436 or sec. 437 or dismiss the application. The circumstance that the accused has filed a civil suit in respect of the same matter is absolutely irrelevant to the question whether his discharge should or should not be set aside—Subramanyam v. Veeraraghavulu, 33 Cr.L.J. 352, 136 I.C. 780, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 216, 1932 Cr.C. 158, 1931 M.W.N. 1191, 35 M.L.W. 267, Ind. Rul 1932 Mad 316.

Effect of order for further inquiry:—An order for further inquiry directed to a subordinate Court means that the case should be taken up again, and that the question of dismissing the complaint, or discharging the accused, as the case may be, should be again considered, and an appropriate order made as a result of such fresh consideration—In re Narayanswamy, 32 Mad. 220. Where a complaint was dismissed under sec. 203 after an investigation held under sec. 202, the effect of an order for further inquiry is to restore the case to the stage under sec. 202, and the inquiry should be taken up from that point—Radha Prasad, 28 Cr.L.J. 857 (859), 104 I.C. 633, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 12. See also Note 1183.

1182. Powers of Courts directing further inquiry:—This section does not authorize a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to take evidence or direct it to be taken supplementing the evidence given in the Lower Court. He is authorised to direct further inquiry, but not to take evidence or direct evidence to be taken. Under sec. 428, an Appellate Court dealing with an appeal may direct additional evidence to be taken and itself record such evidence. The High Court under sec. 439 has all the powers of an Appellate Court and can direct evidence to be taken. But no such powers are given to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate under the present section—Moni Mohun v. Iswar, 6 C.L.J. 251.

The District Magistrate directing further inquiry cannot direct that the accused be put on his trial. All that he can do is to direct further inquiry, leaving it entirely to the inquiring Magistrate to determine whether or not the evidence justifies the accused being charged and put on his trial—Ganjan Khan, 2 Bom.L.R. 586; Sitaram v. Kausilia, 29 Cr.L.J. 572, 109 I.C. 508, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 326 (Pat.). The Sessions Judge should leave it to the Magistrate to select the particular form of enquiry instead of directing him categorically to issue a summons against the accused—Annakali Debi v. Gvanendra Chakravarty, 39 Cr.L.J. 292 (293), 173 I.C. 318, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 22, 10 R.C. 501. This point was left undecided in Pazarali v. Moonsab, 32 C.L.J. 44. But see Ramji, 32 Cr.L.J. 548, 130 I.C. 529, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 50, Ind. Rul 1931 Pat. 177, 1931 Cr.C. 146, 12 P.L.T. 729. There is nothing to prevent a District Magistrate when moved to act under this section from taking cognizance in his discretion of the complaint under sec. 190 (1), Cr. P. Code—Ramji, supra. But see Nagireddi, 1937 M.W.N. 1242, 46 M.L.W. 642.

The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate cannot himself commit the accused for trial at the Sessions, because that order is to be made in the course of the further inquiry—Narayanaswamy, 32 Mad. 220. When a District Magistrate directs a subordinate Magistrate to make a further inquiry, the whole case is made over to the latter, and the District Magistrate cannot retain seisin of the case in himself. He cannot try the accused or direct process to issue under sec. 204. It is the subordinate Magistrate who has complete jurisdiction to hold the inquiry, to issue process and to try and pass final orders in the case—Ram Barai v. Ram Pratap, 5 P.L.J. 47 (55), 21 Cr.L.J. 594,

The District Magistrate directing further inquiry cannot even suggest that the accused be committed to the Sessions; he must leave it to the judgment and discretion of the Sub-Magistrate who is to make the inquiry, and cannot fetter the Sub-Magistrate's judicial discretion by any suggestion or direction—Munisami, 15 Mad 39. The District Magistrate is wholly wrong in directing a subordinate Magistrate that he should pass such and such order in a case pending judicially before him—Thakar v. Kirpal, 1918 P.L.R. 53, 19 Cr.L.J. 436, 44 I.C. 964. See also 13 Lah. 599 below. In making an order for further inquiry it is improper for the superior Magistrate to write a judgment which is practically a mandate to the Subordinate Magistrate—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245.

Under sec. 436, Cr. P. C., the Additional District Magistrate can only order enquiry into a case which has been dismissed under sec. 202 (sec. 203), Cr. P. C., but he cannot compel the Magistrate to issue process and make an enquiry for the purpose of framing a charge. But where the matter is properly before the Additional District Magistrate under sec. 435, Cr. P. C., he has the power to go into the merits of the case to satisfy himself as to the correctness and legality or propriety of the order passed by the Magistrate. If he does so, and he is of opinion that the Magistrate has misconceived the evidence recorded by him, he would certainly be right in even ordering the Magistrate to issue process against the accused—Haroon v. Gajadhar Sukhdeo Marwadi, 41 Cr.L.J. 312, 186 I.C. 459, 1940 N.L.J. 43, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 128.

The Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate cannot, when directing further inquiry under this section, himself frame a charge or order the Sub-Magistrate to frame the charge and try the accused. He might, of course, make the inquiry himself and frame a charge in course of it—Narayanaswamy, 32 Mad. 220. Further 'inquiry' does not mean trial. The Sessions Judge cannot direct the Magistrate to frame such and such charge and to try the accused on that charge. All that he can do is to direct the Magistrate to hold a further inquiry and then to proceed in accordance with law. If upon inquiry the Magistrate finds that a charge should be framed, he can frame the charge; if the result of the inquiry renders it in the opinion of the Magistrate unnecessary to frame a charge, he can discharge the accused again—Ibrahim v. Guran Ditta, 13 Lah. 599, 1932 Cr.C. 491 (492), Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 241, 33 P.L.R. 267, 136 I.C. 705, 33 Cr.L.J. 341, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 362.

In an order for further inquiry passed under this section no directions or instructions can lawfully be given to the Magistrate as to the manner in which he should conduct the inquiry. The Magistrate must exercise the power that he possesses in that behalf according to law. It is the function of the Magistrate to determine whether or not process shall issue or a trial take place, and his discretion in the matter is not to be fettered by instructions or directions from any quarter. Of course, it may be that a mere perusal of the record discloses so strong a prima facie case against the accused, or the person against whom the complaint has been laid, that it would be a work of supererogation and waste of time to prolong the preliminary investigation; in which case it would be the duty of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate in the exercise of his judicial discretion to decide whether he ought not to report the result of the examination to the High Court for such orders as it might think fit to pass under sec. 439, rather than to order a further enquiry under this section—Maung Ba Thon, 32 Cr.L.J. 950 (959), 132 I.C. 822, 9 Rang 239, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 214, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 225, 1931 Cr.C. 865 (F.B.).

1183. Powers and duties of the Magistrate making the inquiry:— It is impossible to restrict the "further inquiry" of sec. 436 to an inquiry under sec. 202. The power to direct "further inquiry" enables the superior Court, acting under this section to direct either an additional investigation of the facts, or a reconsideration of the evidence, by the Magistrate whose order is set aside, or a new inquiry before another Magistrate—Hema Singh, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 644 (650), 126 I.C. 146, 1929 Cr.C. 372, 31 Cr.L.J. 961, 12 P.L.T. 36, 9 Pat. 155, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 578, following Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608 (F.B.); Ramji, 32 Cr.L.J. 548, 130 I.C. 529, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 50, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 177, 1931 Cr.C. 146, 12 P.L.T. 729. The order by a superior Court to an inferior Court to hold further enquiry into a complaint, which has been dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., has acquired what may be called a technical meaning. It simply means reconsideration. What step is to be taken thereafter will depend upon the circumstances of the case. Supposing a Magistrate dismisses a complaint immediately after the initial examination of the complainant and the superior Court orders further enquiry, the Magistrate may, in that case, if he likes, before summoning the accused, hold an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. Code. But in a case in which a complaint has been dismissed after a complete inquiry, it is obvious that the case is one in which the order of the superior Court for further inquiry can only be complied with by putting the accused on trial—Udit Narayan Patwari v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 778, 176 I.C. 715, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 369, 19 P.L.T. 336, 1938 P.W.N. 542, 4 B.R. 750, 11 R.P. 100. When an order of discharge is set aside and further enquiry ordered, the enquiry recommences where it was left off at the time when the improper order of discharge was passed. Further enquiry does not mean merely an examination of witnesses, but a further reconsideration of the evidence and the Magistrate is, therefore, justified upon perusing the evidence in framing the charge—Komma Hari Chandra Reddi, 39 Cr.L.J. 828, 176 I.C. 879, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 742, 1938 M.W.N. 587, 48 M.L.W. 136, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 222, 11 R.M. 189, following Balasenna Thambi, 14 Mad. 335.

In holding the further inquiry the Magistrate will be at liberty to conduct the inquiry in his own way, provided he conforms to the provisions of the Code. For example, he can examine such persons (whether or not they were examined in the course of the previous enquiry), and take such further or other steps for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not process should issue or a charge should be framed, as are permitted by law, and as he deems to be advisable; or he may determine the matter upon a reconsideration of the same materials as were available when the earlier order of dismissal or discharge was passed in the light of the observations of the revising officer and at the conclusion of the enquiry the Magistrate will decide according to law whether or not process shall issue, or an order of committal be made, or a trial be held, as the case may be. An order for further inquiry directed to a Subordinate Court means that the case should be taken up again, and that the question of dismissing the complaint or discharging the accused, as the case may be, should be again considered and an appropriate order made as a result of such fresh consideration—Maung Ba Thon, supra.

If the inquiry is directed to be held by a Magistrate other than the officer who held the first inquiry, he should take the evidence de novo, and cannot proceed on the evidence already taken by the previous Magistrate—Ram Dial, 13 Cr.L.J. 255, 9 A.L.J. 310; Hasnu, 6 All. 367. This view has been dissented from by the Madras High Court in Lakshmireddy v. Muni Reddy, 54 Mad. 512, 60 M.L.J. 524, 32 Cr.L.J. 635 (636); see this case cited in Note 1015 under sec. 350.

The Magistrate making the further inquiry can take further evidence which he had omitted in the first inquiry—Dhanja v. Clifford, 13 Bom. 375. Where, the Sessions Judge having directed that the matter be further enquired into and that the Civil Surgeon and certain other persons should be examined in the presence of the complainant who should be given an adequate opportunity of putting questions to the witnesses, the Magistrate ordered that, if the complainant so desired, his witnesses would be summoned on payment of the necessary costs, held that when allegations had been made that an offence under sec. 304, I. P. C., had been committed by certain persons and that certain Police Officers had conspired with those persons and others with a view to the suppression of true facts, they should be promptly and thoroughly investigated, and that no question of payment or non-payment of costs should be allowed to stand in the way of the examination of all persons whose evidence might throw light on the matter—Surendra Nath De v. Krishna Dhan De, 40 C.W.N. 1251.

The Magistrate is not bound to try the accused for the very offence for which he was originally discharged, but is competent to try him for any other offence which may be established by the evidence—Papadu, 7 Mad. 454.

When further inquiry is directed into a complaint dismissed under sec. 203, the Magistrate directed to hold the inquiry cannot at once proceed under sec. 204 and summon the accused for trial, but must make an inquiry under sec. 202; and then if upon inquiry he is satisfied that the case is one in which the accused should be put up on trial, he will summon the accused (sec. 204); if on the other hand he is satisfied upon such inquiry that the case is one in which the accused need not be summoned, he will dismiss the complaint (sec. 203)—Radha Prasad, 28 Cr.L.J. 857 (859), 104 I.C. 633, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 12, 9 A.I.Cr.C. 61; Sitaram v. Kausilia, 29 Cr.L.J. 572 (573), 109 I.C. 508, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 326 (Pat.). In two other Patna cases it has been held that if the Magistrate directed to hold the inquiry at once summons the accused and proceeds to trial, the procedure is merely irregular and can be cured by sec. 537 if no failure of justice has been occasioned—Janakdhari, 8 Pat. 537, 1929 Cr.C. 333 (355); Hema Singh, 9 Pat. 155, 1929 Cr.C. 372 (375, 376), A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 644 (dissenting from Radha Prasad, supra). If the Magistrate in the exercise of his own discretion chooses to issue a summons immediately instead of wasting time over a possibly useless enquiry, he is quite at liberty to do so—Annakali Dibi v. Gyanendra Chakravarty, 39 Cr.L.J. 292 (293), 173 I.C. 318, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 22, 10 R.C. 501. See also Ramji, supra.

A Magistrate holding a further inquiry into a complaint which has been once dismissed under sec. 203 can again dismiss the complaint under sec. 203—Nibaran v. Sital Chandra, 25 C.W.N. 312 (313). But if the Sessions Judge orders a further inquiry into two counter cases, and directs that if one of the cases be found false the other should be tried, the effect of the order is that the cases should be decided in the usual way after trial, and in such circumstances, the Magistrate is not competent to dismiss the case under sec. 203, he must hold a regular trial—Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316 (320).

The Magistrate directed to make the inquiry gets the seisin of the entire case, and has jurisdiction to inquire under sec. 202 as to whether a prima facie case has been made out against the accused, and if he is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out, he has jurisdiction to issue process to the accused under sec. 204, and to try and dispose of the case himself—Ram Barai v. Ram Pratap, 5 P.L.J. 47 (55), 21 Cr.L.J. 594. When a further enquiry is made, whether by the District Magistrate, or by a Magistrate subordinate to him, the Magistrate who holds that enquiry, can if he finds sufficient grounds for so doing, not only frame a charge but also proceed to hold a trial—Ratnam Mudaliar, 35 Cr.L.J. 691, 148 I.C. 573, 1934 M.W.N. 102, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 209, 66 M.L.J. 318, 39 M.L.W. 344, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 213, 1934 Cr.C. 405.

1184. Notice to accused:—See the proviso newly added. Although no notice to the accused was necessary under the old section, still it was held in numerous cases that a Court did not exercise a proper discretion if before proceeding under this section he did not give the accused an opportunity, by service of a notice, to show cause against an order directing further inquiry—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608; Nabi Bakhs, 1 Lah. 216; Mubund, 8 Bom.L.R. 694; Abhran, 19 Bom.L.R. 908, 19 Cr.L.J. 101; Brij Kishore v. Gopal, 11 C.W.N. 316 (319); Abdul Latif, 40 All. 416; Kharga, 35 All. 147; Ajudhia, 20 All. 339; Chotu, 9 All. 52 (59) (F.B.); Rith Nath, 24 O.C. 142, 22 Cr.L.J. 655; Sanwal v. Dipchand, 3 S.L.R. 7, 9 Cr.L.J. 446; Vaidyanath, 16 Cr.L.J. 696, 8 Bur.L.T. 133. This is now expressly laid down in the proviso. This proviso makes it obligatory on a Court not to pass an order under this section until the person discharged has had an opportunity of showing cause—Chhajju v. Behari, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1018, 35 P.L.R. 149, 1933 Cr.C. 1555; Ghulam, 34 Cr.L.J. 1157, 146 I.C. 35, A.I.R. 1933 Snd 299, 1933 Cr.C. 1035. A disregard of the proviso is an illegality and in any case, such irregularity as seriously prejudices an accused person who is ordered to be proceeded against—Bhagaran Das v. Chander Bhan, 35 Cr.L.J. 418, 147 I.C. 335, A.I.R. 1934 All. 51, 56 All. 285, 3 A.W.R. 137, A.I.R. 1934 All. 235, 1934 A.L.J. 69, 1934 Cr.C. 107. Where a trial held in pursuance of an order passed by a revising authority in exercise of the power conferred by this section, without first complying with the requirement of the proviso thereto, results in a conviction, the conviction should not be set aside if the failure to comply with this section has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. This section is not mandatory but only a directory provision of law—Nga Kyaung Baung, 35 Cr.L.J. 1408, 151 I.C. 722, 1934 Cr.C. 816, A.I.R. 1934 Rang 181.

The opportunity to show cause may be given even after the accused is arrested and brought before the Court—Girdhari, 12 C.W.N. 822; Wahed Ali, 32 Cal. 1090; Sahib Kaur v. Mahomed Kasim, 1891 P.R. 14; Fazal Din, 1895 P.R. 17.

This proviso applies only where the accused has been discharged, i.e., discharged under sec. 209, 253 and 259. No notice would be necessary where further inquiry is directed into a complaint which was dismissed under section 203—Gajraj, 47 All 722, 23 A.L.J. 451, 26 Cr.L.J. 1176; Liakat Hussain, 40 All 138; Appa Rao v. Janakiammal, 49 Mad 918 (F.B.); Dhondu, 29 Bom.L.R. 713, 102 I.C. 511, A.I.R. 1927 Bom 436, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 228, 28 Cr.L.J. 575 (576); Daya Ram, 2 Luck. 573, 103 I.C. 106, 1 Luck Cas 184, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 264, 28 Cr.L.J. 650; Nawsher v. Hazratulla, 49 C.L.J. 422, 119 I.C. 376, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 508, Ind Rul. 1929 Cal. 792, 30 Cr.L.J. 1030; Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 608; Grish Chunder, 29 Cal 457; Wahed Ali, 32 Cal. 1090; Fazal v. Moonshah, 32 Cr.L.J. 44; Tabarak, 30 All 52; Sheo Narain v. Ram Pratap, 4 P.L.J. 456 (459); Angan v. Ram Purbhan, 35 All. 78; Morrison v. Crowder, 27 Cr.L.J. 302, 92 I.C. 590, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 198; Rambadra, 29 Cr.L.J. 1059, 112 I.C. 563, A.I.R. 1928 Mad 1198; Abdullah Jan v. Toti Gul, 36 Cr.L.J. 1384, 158 I.C. 31, A.I.R. 1935 Pesh 141, 1935 Cr.C. 1000. But where the accused person was given an opportunity of being heard before the complaint was dismissed under sec. 203, a further inquiry ought not to be directed without giving notice to him. As he was present from the very commencement of the proceedings, it is proper that he should be given an opportunity of being heard before an order is made under this section—Jogesh Chandra v. Nikunja Behari, 27 C.W.N. 552, 25 Cr.L.J. 140, 76 I.C. 236, A.I.R. 1923 Cal 651.

When notice is issued under this section, the accused is not legally bound to avail himself of the opportunity given to him to show cause; and he is at liberty either to appear and show cause or to stay away—Kanwar Singh, 1893 P.R. 15.

1185. Recording reasons:—Before making an order under this section a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is bound to record his reasons and to state in what respect the trial Judge's conclusions are unsatisfactory—Sawan, 26 P.L.R. 291, 89 I.C. 705, 2 Lah Cas 59, A.I.R. 1928 Lah 50, 26 Cr.L.J. 1393; Lokhia, 1890 A.W.N. 147; Abinash, 13 C.W.N. 76; Nga Than, 5 Bur.L.T. 37, 13 Cr.L.J. 301. The wide jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge cannot be properly exercised without having and assigning solid and sufficient reasons for doing so—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608; Thrukonan Kupbachari, 14 Cr.L.J. 572, 1913 M.W.N. 638. The Magistrate should record his reasons for ordering further inquiry, because the High Court in the absence of such reasons cannot exercise supervision over the Magistrate's or Judge's proceedings, and also because it is fair to the person against whom the order is made that the reasons for directing such inquiry should be made explicit to him and that he should have notice of the grounds on which the further inquiry has been directed—Nga Min Dum, U.B.R. (1917) 2nd Qr. 16, 19 Cr.L.J. 14, 42 I.C. 926; Wahed Ali, 32 Cal. 1090. Where the order of the Sessions Judge for further inquiry does not state any proper grounds, it is liable to be set aside by the High Court—Nagendra v. Korb, 8 C.W.N. 456. But where the order of discharge passed by the trying Magistrate was prima facie improper (e.g., where he discharged the accused without taking any evidence for the prosecution or the defence), the District Magistrate's order for further inquiry without recording reasons was not illegal—Dhandu, 29 Bom.L.R. 713, 28 Cr.L.J. 575 (576), 102 I.C. 511, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 436, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 228. See also Sitaram v. Kausilia, 29 Cr.L.J. 572 (573), 109 I.C. 508, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 326 (Pat.) where the omission to record reasons was excused.

It is not ordinarily desirable that a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge in ordering a further inquiry should make a detailed examination of the evidence and give elaborate reasons, because that might prejudice the trial afterwards, but it is desirable that he should give enough in the shape of reasons to show that his order is proper—Wahed Ali, 32 Cal 1090; Sanwal v. Dipchand, 3 S.L.R. 7, 9 Cr.L.J. 446; Subbier v. Manickam Chettiar, 1937 M.W.N. 729. In case in which the Sessions Judge reverses the order of the Magistrate discharging an accused person the Sessions Judge ought to give reasons for directing further enquiry. As to what an order of this character should contain, the Cr. P. Code has not made express provision, but it is highly desirable that such order should make it clear that the Magistrate's order discharging an accused person is based on grounds which cannot be sustained—Bhagwan Das v. Chander Bhan, 35 Cr.L.J. 418, 147 I.C. 335, A.I.R. 1934 All 51, 56 All. 285, 3 A.W.R. 137, A.L.R. 1934 All. 235, 1934 A.L.J. 69, 1934 Cr.C. 107. In a Burma case, where in an order for further inquiry the Sessions Judge simply stated: "I have translated and considered the whole of the evidence on the record, and the conclusion I have arrived at is that there should be a further inquiry," it was held that it contained ample reasons for the order. It would have been improper for the Judge to comment on the evidence in detail, because such a proceeding would tend to prejudice the accused at the trial—Tun Win, 4 L.B.R. 233, 7 Cr.L.J. 493 (494).

1186. Interference by High Court:—An order of a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate setting aside an order of discharge is liable to be reviewed by the High Court as a Court of Revision. If in any case, the High Court were to find that the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge had set aside an order of discharge on insufficient grounds or that while there were good grounds for setting it aside, the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge had made an order inappropriate to the facts of the case, the High Court would be acting properly in revising the order—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal 608. Where the order of the Sessions Judge did not stand on any proper grounds for directing a further inquiry, it was set aside by the High Court in revision—Nagendra v. Korb, 8 C.W.N. 456. But where the Sessions Judge after going carefully through the evidence was of opinion that the finding of the trying Magistrate was either perverse or in all probability wrong or manifestly at variance with the evidence which he has recorded, and directed further inquiry after a consideration of all the circumstances, the High Court would not interfere—Zahur v. Niadar, 9 Lah L.J. 114, 28 Cr.L.J. 238; Karkley v. Jagannath, 11 O.L.J. 611, 1 O.W.N. 302, 26 Cr.L.J. 959.

Where it appears from the records that there are no sufficient grounds for issuing notice to an accused person, the High Court will not be justified in interfering in revision merely because the Magistrate, who had taken cognisance of the matter, failed to give reasons for not issuing the process; but if it is found from the records that the Magistrate had not good grounds for not issuing process, the High Court will interfere in revision. In a case where serious allegations of tyranny are made, the interests of justice require that the High Court and the complainant should be satisfied that the Sub-divisional Magistrate has considered the allegations against the accused and has come to a decision either that there is no case against him or that there is. If there is, the Magistrate must issue process to him—Venkatasubba Pillai, 39 Cr.L.J. 984, 177 I.C. 957, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 372, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 879, 1938 M.W.N. 973, 11 R.M. 396, 48 M.L.W. 801.

437. When, on examining the record of any case under section 435 or otherwise, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Session and that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may cause him to be arrested, and may thereupon, instead of directing a fresh inquiry, order him to be committed for trial upon the matter of which he has been, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, improperly discharged:

Provided as follows:—

- (a) that the accused has had an opportunity of showing cause to such Judge or Magistrate why the commitment should not be made;
- (b) that, if such Judge or Magistrate thinks that the evidence shows that some other offence has been committed by the accused, such Judge or Magistrate may direct the inferior Court to inquire into such offence.

This is the old section 436. The old section 437 has now been renumbered as sec. 436.

1187. Application of section:—The words 'or otherwise' do not mean 'in any other way whatsoever' but 'in any other way provided by the Code'—Nobin v. Russik, 10 Cal. 268. The reason for exercising the powers under this section must arise upon material to be found on the record, and not upon extraneous matter—Lokhia, 1890 A.W.N. 147; Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608.

1188. Who can order commitment:—The Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate have co-ordinate powers to order a commitment under this section—Surendra, 28 Cal. 397; Kalu Sandu, Ratanlal 837. A Sessions Judge may take action under this section though the District Magistrate has refused to call for the record and to direct a committal of the case—Gandi Apparaju, 43 Mad. 330, 21 Cr L.J. 91.

The word 'District Magistrate' in this section includes a District Magistrate specially empowered under sec. 30—Arjan Singh, 1904 P.L.R. 234. Also, a District Magistrate can, under this section revise an order of discharge passed by a subordinate Magistrate of the First Class invested with powers under sec. 30 of the Code, in a case which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr L.J. 245.

The Joint Sessions Judge cannot exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge under this chapter, and cannot order a committal to the session in a case discharged by a Magistrate—In re Musa, 9 Bom. 164. This case was decided before sub-section (2) to sec. 438, Cr. P. C., was enacted. Under that sub-section an Additional Sessions Judge shall have and may exercise all the powers of a Sessions Judge under "this chapter," and "this chapter" provides by sec. 437 that the Sessions Judge may direct the committal of a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session. Therefore an Additional Sessions Judge has power to order commitment under this section—Akberally Tayaballi v. Alimahomed Abdul Hussain, 40 Cr.L.J. 951 (1952), 184 I.C. 282, 12 R.B. 159, 41 Bom.L.R. 749, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 372.

Sections 436 and 437 do not apply to Presidency Magistrates; a Presidency Magistrate can himself revive the complaint after he has discharged the accused without any order of the superior authority—Opoorba v. Probod Kumary, 1 C.W.N. 49; Dwarka v. Benimadhab, 28 Cal. 652.

1189. "Exclusively triable by Court of Session":—To give jurisdiction to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, the accused must have been charged with an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Arjan Singh, 1904 P.L.R. 234; Kanchan, 1 All. 413; Tarachand, 7 C.L.R. 168; Bhullu, 1897 P.R. 3. Therefore a Sessions Judge cannot direct commitment or order fresh inquiry in a case where the accused is discharged of an offence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction—Ramchand, Ratanlal 42; Muhammad Bakhsh, 1882 A.W.N. 105; Bajjanath v. Gouri Kanta, 20 Cal. 633; Kanchan, 1 All. 413; Nelluri Chenchia, 42 Mad. 561; Thammanna, 15 M.L.J. 373.

If a case is not exclusively triable by the Court of Session the District Magistrate cannot order a commitment under this section, merely because in his opinion the offence could not be adequately punished by a Magistrate—Debi Prasad, 1908 A.W.N. 189, 8 Cr.L.J. 47. The words 'triable exclusively by a Court of Session' are to be construed strictly and it is not competent to the Sessions Judge to direct a commitment under this section if the offence is not exclusively triable by the Court of Session, e.g., an offence under sec. 193 or 471, I. P. C.—Nelluri Chenchia, 42 Mad. 561 (563). This is also the view of the other High Courts. See Ramchand, Ratanlal 42; Bajinath v. Gaurikanta, 20 Cal 633. But in a Burma case, it has been held that the term "triable exclusively by the Court of Session" means either a case where the District Magistrate considers that the facts constitute an offence which is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, or it might mean a case in which the District Magistrate considers that the sentence which the Magistrate could pass might not be sufficient and therefore it was a case which should be tried by a Court of Session—Tambi, 12 Bur.L.T. 62, 19 Cr.L.J. 801, 9 L.B.R. 208.

Where an accused is discharged of an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session, a Sessions Judge can commit him on a charge not exclusively triable by a Sessions Court if it is intimately connected with a charge exclusively triable by the Sessions Court and forms part of the same transaction. But he has no power to commit for such an offence if it is of an entirely different character. Thus, where an accused is discharged of an offence under sec. 436, I. P. Code, he may be ordered to be committed by the Sessions Judge for trial for an offence under sec. 427, I. P. C., but not for an offence under section 280, Indian Penal Code which is totally different from the category of offences under sections 427 and 436, Indian Penal Code—Bijoy Gopal v. Iswar, 53 Cal. 645, 97 I.C. 659, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1090, 27 Cr.L.J. 1139. Where the accused was charged with two offences, under sections 477A (triable exclusively by the Court of Session) and 408, I. P. C. (not so triable), of which the principal offence was the latter one and the other was merely secondary, and the subordinate Magistrate refused to commit the accused to the Sessions and discharged him, held that the District Magistrate was competent under this section to direct the commitment of the accused even though the primary offence was not triable exclusively by the Court of Session, because the two offences were intimately connected and formed part of the same transaction—Gendhal Chimanbhai, 16 Bom.L.R. 80, 15 Cr.L.J. 292. (The offence under sec. 477A, I. P. C., is now triable also by a Magistrate vested with 1st class powers.) So also, where an accused person appears to have committed culpable homicide, his conviction by a Magistrate of a minor offence does not prevent his trial for murder, etc. The Sessions Judge, if he thinks there is a prima facie case, may call on the accused to shew cause why a commitment should not be ordered, and may thereafter order his commitment under this section if satisfied that there is sufficient cause for it—Ladkia, Ratanlal 337.

1190. "Improperly discharged":—The language of the section requires that the case should be triable exclusively by the Court of Session, but it does not go on to state that an accused person has been improperly discharged on such a charge. On the contrary the section merely says that it requires that an accused person has been improperly discharged by the inferior Court. These words are general and cover a discharge on any kind of charge and not merely a discharge on a charge of an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions—Alopi Din, 36 Cr.L.J. 1103 (1106), 157 I.C. 205, A.I.R. 1935 All. 366, 1935 Cr.C. 384, 1935 A.L.J. 653. But where in the course of a trial under sec. 409, I. P. C., the accused made an application to the Court of Session and the Sessions Judge directed the Magistrate to commit him for trial, the order of the Sessions Judge was entirely without jurisdiction. All he could do was to make a reference to the High Court if he thought that an interference was necessary. He had no power himself to make such an order—Supdt. & Remem. of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Nabin Chandra Hur, 39 Cr.L.J. 569, 175 I.C. 521, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 416.

A Sessions Judge may direct a commitment even where the District Magistrate himself discharged the accused—Laskari, 7 All. 853.

The mere fact that a Magistrate has discharged the accused in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session without committing him to the Sessions, is not a ground of interference under this section—Sankarappa v. Kerala, 2 Weir 260. The Sessions Judge should be very slow to interfere in revision to set aside an order of discharge—Akberally Tayaballi v. Alimahomed Abdul Hussain, 40 Cr.L.J. 951 (1953), 184 I.C. 282, 12 R.B. 159, 41 Bom.L.R. 749, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 372, following Ramchandra, 37 Bom.L.R. 16, 155 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 137, 1935 Cr.C. 288, 36 Cr.L.J. 643, 59 Bom. 125, 7 R.B. 405 (F.B.). The District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, before ordering the committal of the accused to the Sessions Court, must come to a finding, with reference to the evidence that the accused has been improperly discharged—Srikishen, 1 P.L.J. 97, 17 Cr.L.J. 330; Inoyia v. Harbans Prasad, 34 Cr.L.J. 1201 (1203), 146 I.C. 160, A.I.R. 1933 All. 482, 1933 Cr.C. 827, 1933 A.L.J. 1115. The word 'improperly' as used in this section does not mean perverse. A discharge based on a lenient view of the evidence is not improper. But impropriety does imply that the order could not have been passed, if the Magistrate had taken a reasonable view of all the circumstances of the case—Harichandra Reddi v. Syed Kashim Sahib, 1937 M.W.N. 1240. The mere fact that the charge is in the opinion of the District Magistrate of such an important character that it should be considered by a Court of Session, is not a sufficient reason for interfering with the order of discharge—Srikishen, supra.

It is the duty of the Sessions Judge, in considering whether the accused person has been improperly discharged, to consider all the grounds upon which such order of discharge has been passed, including a consideration of the evidence which has been disbelieved or held to be insufficient to establish a prima facie case. Then only can he pass an order for the commitment of the accused or for further inquiry—Harbans v. Fakir, 7 C.W.N. 77. The Sessions Judge has to consider whether it was open to the Magistrate to come to the conclusion to which he did come on the materials before him. That a different view could be taken on the evidence would not justify the Sessions Judge in ordering commitment; he must come to the conclusion that the finding of the Magistrate is not only wrong but perverse—Rubhanjan, 6 P.L.T. 570, 86 I.C. 822, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 599, 26 Cr.L.J. 886 (888); Palaniappa Thevan v. Karuppa Gounden, 40 Cr.L.J. 392, 180 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 253, 1938 M.W.N. 1311, 11 R.M. 727. Where the Magistrate gave perfectly adequate reasons in support of his conclusion but no prima facie has been made out against the accused and, in fact, he went to the length of saying that most of the important prosecution witnesses were totally unworthy of credit and that the prosecution evidence was on the face of it absolutely incredible, it is impossible to say that the Magistrate acted improperly in assessing the evidence that was put before him and that the order of discharge made by him which followed as a matter of course from the opinion which he formed of the evidence in the prosecution case was improper—Palaniappa Thevan v. Karuppa Gounden, supra.

Further inquiry will not be made unless the Magistrate has not heard all the evidence, or unless the order of discharge is perverse, foolish or manifestly against the weight of the evidence. The circumstances under which an order of discharge under sec. 209, Cr. P. C., will be set aside are exactly similar to those in which an order would be set aside which had been passed under sec. 253, Criminal Procedure Code—Zarin, 35 Cr.L.J. 1282, 151 I.C. 143, 1934 Cr.C. 884, A.I.R. 1934 Pesh. 52; Fazal Razak, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 12, 38 Cr.L.J. 427, 167 I.C. 602, 9 R.Pesh. 88. The Magistrate is both entitled and bound to value and weigh the evidence and if he disbelieved the evidence and makes an order of discharge, the question whether it ought to be set aside in revision depends on whether it is a reasonable order, the criterion being, not whether the revisional Court agrees with it, but whether it is rational in the sense that it cannot be fairly described as perverse or manifestly contrary to the evidence. The suggestion that a Magistrate has a wider discretion to appreciate evidence under sec. 253 than he has under sec. 209 is clearly untenable—Parashram, 34 Cr.L.J. 554 (568), 143 I.C. 289, 35 Bom.L.R. 245, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 153, Ind. Rul. 1933 Bom. 266, 1933 Cr.C. 470, 57 Bom. 430. See also Venkatreddi v. Saramma, 1937 M.W.N. 863.

Under this section all that the Sessions Judge has to do is to come to the conclusion that the order for discharge was improper. He may reach that conclusion not only on the grounds that the order was perverse or manifestly unreasonable and inconsistent with an honest appreciation of the evidence in the case; but also on the ground that the Magistrate has, however, competently, taken upon himself the discharge of a duty which under the Code is entrusted to the Sessions Court, that is to say, the duty of appreciation of evidence of doubtful credibility. In a proper case he may also set aside an order of discharge on the ground that he disagrees with the appreciation of evidence by the Magistrate—Ramchandra, 36 Cr.L.J. 613 (614), 155 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 137, 37 Bom.L.R. 16, 59 Bom. 125, 7 R.B. 405, 1935 Cr.C. 288 (F.B.), overruling Parashram, supra, and differing from Narainan, 40 I.C. 291, A.I.R. 1917 Bom. 227, 18 Cr.L.J. 616, 19 Bom.L.R. 350; Akberally Tayaballi v. Alimohamed Abdul Hussain, A.I.R. 1939 Be- 372, 41 Bom.L.R. 719, 40 Cr.L.J. 931, 181 I.C. 282, 12 R.B. 159. See Alopi Din, 36 Cr.L.J. 1103 (1105), 157 I.C. 205, A.I.R. 1935 All. 366, 1935 Cr.C. 381, 1935 A.L.J. 653 which did not follow the contrary view laid down in Rutbhanjan, 86 I.C. 822, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 599, 26 Cr.L.J. 886, 6 P.L.T. 570. See also Ishaq v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 659, 168 I.C. 958, 1937 A.L.J. 291, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 261, 1937 A.Cr.C. 55, 9 R.A. 687, 1937 A.L.R. 431, A.I.R. 1937 All. 373 and Note 701.

The Sessions Judge can direct the committal of an accused person improperly discharged by the sub-Magistrate, though no express order of discharge has been recorded by that Magistrate—Gandi Apparaju, 43 Mad. 330.

The section applies where the accused person has been discharged and not where he has been acquitted—Baija Nath v. Gauri, 20 Cal. 633; Hamumontha, 23 Mad. 225. Where the Magistrate has in fact discharged the accused though he has used the expression 'acquitted and released,' the Sessions Judge is to order a committal under this section—Nectail Dulal, 8 W.R. 41. Where, on a complaint in respect of a sessions offence, the Magistrate finding that no sessions offence had been committed, tried the accused of a non-sessions offence and acquitted him, it was held that this section did not apply; even the acquittal of the accused in respect of the minor offence could not be construed to amount to a discharge in respect of the graver offence, and no order under this section could be passed by the Sessions Judge—Baija Nath v. Gauri, 20 Cal. 633. Where the accused was tried and acquitted by a competent Magistrate on a charge of simple forgery under sec. 465, I. P. Code, but the Sessions Judge by an order under sec. 437, Cr. P. Code directed the commitment of the accused on a charge of forgery of a valuable security under sec. 467, I. P. Code (a sessions offence) with which he held the accused should have been charged, held that sec. 437 contemplated a case of discharge, and the accused not having been properly or improperly discharged in respect of an offence under sec. 467, I. P. Code, the Sessions Judge had no power to direct his committal under sec. 437—Abdul Hakim v. Bajruk Ali, 22 C.W.N. 117 (120), 18 Cr.L.J. 834, 26 C.L.J. 210, 41 I.C. 658 (per Richardson, J.). But in Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma, 24 Mad. 136, it was held that the acquittal of the accused in respect of the minor offence was in substance a discharge of the accused in respect of the graver offence, and the Sessions Judge was, therefore, justified in having made an order for further inquiry in respect of the graver offence and for committal to the Sessions. Similarly, in a Sind case, where a Magistrate of the first class acquitted certain persons who were charged under secs. 421 and 506 of the I. P. Code, whereupon the complainant made applications to the Magistrate to frame a charge under sec. 395, I. P. Code, but the Magistrate declined to entertain them, and then the District Magistrate, being moved by the complainant, and acting under sec. 437, Cr. P. Code, framed a charge against the accused and committed them to take their trial before the Sessions Court, held that the Magistrate's order was in substance one discharging the accused in respect of an alleged offence under sec. 395, I. P. Code, and the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order in question—Khanu, 19 S.L.R. 353, 25 Cr.L.J. 1368, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 190 (following 24 Mad 136); Shambhooram, 37 Cr.L.J. 80, 159 I.C. 271, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 221, 1935 Cr.C. 1272. See also Sukhlal, 35 Cr.L.J. 865, 148 I.C. 999,

A.I.R. 1934 All. 141, 1934 Cr.C. 193, 1934 A.L.J. 478, where the view of the Madras High Court was followed. See also Zuji Manu, 5 Bom.L.R. 125; Sheo Narain v. Radha Mohan, 42 All. 128, 53 I.C. 618, 20 Cr.L.J. 778, A.I.R. 1919 All. 66, 17 A.L.J. 1093; Ramrao, 33 Cr.L.J. 558, 137 I.C. 904, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 85, 15 N.L.J. 26, 1932 Cr.C. 435, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 72. The word "discharged" in this section does not necessarily mean absolutely discharged and set at liberty. It can also be held to mean partially discharged, or in other words, not charged with an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions—Sultan Ali, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 164, 15 Lah. 138, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 513, 1934 Cr.C. 346, 36 Cr.L.J. 466, 153 I.C. 1029, 36 P.L.R. 508.

This section applies not only where the accused has been expressly discharged, but also where he has been impliedly discharged. Thus, where on a complaint for an offence under sec. 302, I. P. C., the Magistrate disbelieving the evidence did not frame any charge under sec. 302 or 304, I. P. C., but framed only charges under secs. 147, 323, 325, I. P. C., held that the action of the Magistrate amounted to an implied order of discharge in regard to secs. 302 and 304, I. P. C., and an order directing committal in regard to sec. 304 can be made by the Sessions Judge—Ganda Apparaju, 43 Mad. 330, 21 Cr.L.J. 91. Where the Police Report on which the case was instituted in the Court of the Magistrate quoted sec. 307 together with sec. 326, I. P. C., but the Magistrate framed a charge under sec. 326, I. P. C., and acquitted the accused in respect of that charge and there was nothing in the order of the Magistrate to show that he consciously considered whether sec. 307, I. P. C., would be applicable to the case against the accused, held that there was a case before the Magistrate under sec. 307, I. P. C., and although he had not passed any orders in regard to that part of the case, an order of discharge was implied and that the Sessions Judge, therefore, had jurisdiction under this section to direct that the accused should be committed for trial to the Court of Sessions under sec. 308, I. P. C.—Sukhlal, 35 Cr.L.J. 865, 148 I.C. 999, A.I.R. 1934 All. 141, 1934 Cr.C. 193, 1934 A.L.J. 478, 56 All. 529. But after all, if a trial has taken place, it is doubtful whether the Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to set it aside and, in matters of doubt, it is useless to subject the accused to the cost and strain of a re-trial—Kripal Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 992 (1995), 170 I.C. 780, 39 P.L.R. 444, 10 R.L. 148, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 217. The Oudh Court, however, holds that the word 'discharge' means absolute discharge, and not a partial discharge. Therefore, where the police challan mentioned offences under secs. 147 and 304, I. P. C., but the Magistrate after hearing the evidence for the prosecution framed a charge under secs. 147 and 325, the accused could not be said to have been discharged, and the Sessions Judge was not authorised to order commitment for an offence under sec. 304, I. P. C.—Bilodar, 3 O.W.N. 201, 27 Cr.L.J. 417, 13 O.L.J. 490. See Note 1179.

'By an inferior Court':—For the meaning of 'inferior', see Note 1171 under sec. 435.

A Subordinate Magistrate of the First Class, invested with powers under sec. 30 is inferior to the District Magistrate, and the latter can revise an improper order of discharge passed by the former in a case triable exclusively by the Court of Session—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245.

1191. Order for commitment:—Under this section the Sessions Judge can himself commit the accused. The words 'order him to be committed' do not mean more than 'pass an order for his committal' and the intervention of a Magistrate for making the commitment is not necessary—Krishnabhai, 10 Bom. 319. There is nothing in this section to shew that when a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge directs a discharged person to be committed for trial, the commitment must be made by the discharging Magistrate—Ibid. But, of course, it is not wrong to call upon the discharging Magistrate to make the commitment—Priya Gopal, 9 Bom. 100; Surendra, 28 Cal. 397.

This section enables the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to commit the accused person or direct his committal for trial only for the offence with which he was substantially charged in the complaint and not for another offence—Taruck Nath, 19 W.R. 30 (31); Sundaram, 2 Weir 549. Thus, where the police charge-sheet on which the subordinate Magistrate took cognizance of a case charged the accused with a minor offence, and the grave offence of rape was not mentioned in it, nor did the prosecution press for the framing of a charge in respect of the offence, and the Magistrate framed a charge only of the minor offence, it was held that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to direct the subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused to the Sessions for the higher offence—Marappa Goundan, 41 Mad. 982, 19 Cr.L.J. 945, 47 I.C. 665, A.I.R. 1919 Mad. 817, 1918 M.W.N. 486, 35 M.L.J. 667. If on the evidence it appears that some other offence has been committed by the accused, the proper course is to order an inquiry under proviso (b). The order under this section must state the offence in respect of which the commitment is to be made—Ankamma, 1932 M.W.N. 1162, 34 Cr.L.J. 278, 142 I.C. 138, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad. 199, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 247, 1933 Cr.C. 374, 65 M.L.J. 6, 38 M.L.W. 668.

Order passed after prior refusal:—Where some of the accused persons are discharged, and an application being made to the Sessions Judge for revision of the order of discharge, he summarily rejects the application upon a perusal only of the judgment of the Magistrate, the Sessions Judge is not precluded, upon examining the record when the case of the other accused comes to him for trial, from passing an order of commitment of the persons who have been discharged. The first order was a summary order passed without examining the record, and was not properly speaking a judgment at all. Consequently, sec. 369 is no bar to the subsequent order. The case would have been otherwise if the order had been passed after calling for the record and perusing the same—Debidas, 33 C.W.N. 974.

1192. Further inquiry, whether can be ordered:—A District Magistrate proceeding under this section is not restricted to ordering commitment of the accused who may have been discharged by a subordinate Magistrate; he can also direct a further inquiry, prior to making an order for commitment—Moniruddin, 18 Cal. 75. Where, after the discharge of an accused person, fresh evidence comes to light, the District Magistrate should not direct a subordinate Magistrate to commit the accused, for it will amount to a committal for trial on the evidence of witnesses whom the accused has not had an opportunity of cross-examining. The proper course for the District Magistrate is to direct a fresh inquiry—Lingappa, 2 Weir 550. A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a further enquiry under this section into an offence which is triable not only by a Court of Session but also by a Magistrate of the first class—Kallu, 35 Cr.L.J. 1151, 150 I.C. 852, 11 O.W.N. 818, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 327, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 323.

Where a Magistrate discharged two accused and framed a charge under sec. 354, I. P. C., against the remaining three and an application for revision of not only the order of discharge but also the order of framing a charge against the three accused under sec. 354, was filed in the Court of Sessions Judge who forwarded the proceeding to the District Magistrate asking him to direct further inquiries by any other Magistrate and holding that on the evidence a prima facie case under secs. 366|511 and not under sec. 354 had been made out, held that the order was tantamount to quashing the charge which the Sessions Judge had no power to do under sec. 436 or sec. 437, Cr. P. C., and that the correct procedure would have been to submit the case to the High Court with a recommendation to order further inquiries on the lines indicated—Sultan v. Ma Hla Khin, 34 Cr.L.J. 1083, 145 I.C. 720, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 214, 1933 Cr.C. 869.

When commitment should be ordered and when not: Where the District Magistrate is satisfied that on the evidence taken discharges the accused because in his opinion the evidence is insufficient or incredible, then if the District Magistrate comes to a different conclusion upon the evidence, his proper course is to make an order of commitment and not to direct further inquiry—Yado, 12 N.L.R. 94, 17 Cr.L.J. 245. Where in a case triable exclusively by the Sessions Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is satisfied that on the evidence taken there is a clear case for committal, and there is no reason for desiring a further consideration by the Magistrate, it would ordinarily be his duty to commit under this section without ordering a further inquiry—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608.

1193. Proviso (a):—Notice to accused:—It is an essential condition precedent to an order under this section that the accused should have an opportunity of showing cause against his commitment. An order made without issuing such notice is bad in law and not maintainable—Asif Khan v. Fallu, 1888 A.W.N. 236; Duarkanath, 1 C.L.R. 93; Thammanna, 15 M.L.J. 373. Where some of the accused were not made parties to the revision petition to the District Magistrate against the order of discharge, and no notice had been ordered to be served upon them, and they had no opportunity of showing cause against the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate, held that the order of commitment made by the District Magistrate was clearly wrong and must be set aside so far as these accused were concerned—Mania Manika, 48 Mad. 874, 49 M.L.J. 155, 26 Cr.L.J. 1570. Where, however, a District Magistrate ordered the subordinate Magistrate to make a committal to the Court of Session, without giving the accused any notice, but the committing Magistrate issued a notice before doing so, the defect was cured by sec. 537—Rabha, Ratanlal 899. Also, where no objection was taken to the want of notice and the omission has not occasioned a failure of justice, the High Court will not interfere—Khamir, 7 Cal. 662.

The opportunity to shew cause mentioned in this proviso does not mean any opportunity but that the accused must have a special opportunity. Where the Sessions Judge who was trying a case of false evidence suddenly asked a witness in the course of his examination to explain why he should not be again committed for a trial for murder in respect of an act for which he had been previously discharged, and on answers given by the witness to the above question, ordered his commitment for trial for murder, held that the order was illegal since the accused had not been properly called upon to shew cause—Govind, Ratanlal 588.

If a notice is given to the accused under this proviso, he is not under any obligation to appear and shew cause. He may or may not avail himself of the opportunity as he chooses—Kanwar, 1893 P.R. 15.

1194. Interference by High Court:—Under sec. 439, the High Court has power to revise an order of commitment passed under this section by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate—Rash Behari, 12 C.W.N. 117. In the exercise of the powers of revision, the High Court can, on the merits of the case, cancel an order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge under this section, as for instance, where the order setting aside a discharge and directing commitment is made, on insufficient or unreliable evidence—Prithi Chand v. Sampatia, 7 C.W.N. 327, or where there is no prima facie case for commitment—Shcobux, 9 C.W.N. 829.

The order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under this section directing commitment can be quashed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional powers under sec. 439 and not under sec. 215—Kalagana, 27 Mad. 54. Sec. 215 refers only to a commitment actually made and not to an order directing commitment contemplated by sec. 437. Therefore, the High Court, in considering the order of a Sessions Judge or District Magistrate passed under sec. 437, may consider the facts as well as the question of law involved and is not limited to points of law only as under sec. 215—Muthia Chetty, 30 Mad. 224; Rash Behari, 12 C.W.N. 117; Tinkouri, 1 P.L.T. 153, 21 Cr.L.J. 328, 55 I.C. 66; Munshi Mander v. Karu, 6 P.L.T. 146, 81 I.C. 913, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 279, 25 Cr.L.J. 1089.

But though the High Court possesses the powers to revise orders of commitment, it should exercise those powers most sparingly, and only where it is manifest that the Sessions Judge's order is improper, e.g., where there is no evidence to prove the offence charged—Muthia Chetty, 30 Mad. 224; Mania Manika, 48 Mad. 874, 49 M.L.J. 155. It is evident from this section that the fullest and widest discretion has been given to District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, and when an order of commitment has been duly made, the High Court should be most unwilling to interfere except upon strong grounds and under exceptional circumstances—Fallu v. Fallu, 25 All. 564; Mangat

Rai, 13 A.L.J. 111, 16 Cr.L.J. 139. There is no authority which would justify the High Court in once more appreciating the evidence and holding that no Court could possibly convict when one Court at least has given an indication that on the evidence a conviction is possible. The Sessions Court should be very slow to interfere in revision to set aside an order of discharge, a principle which a fortiori would apply to the High Court in what may be called a second revision—Alberally Tajaballi v. Alimahomed Abdul Hussan, 40 Cr.L.J. 951 (1953), 181 I.C. 282, 12 R.B. 159, 41 Bom.L.R. 749, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 372, following Ramchandra, 7 R.B. 405, 36 Cr.L.J. 613, 155 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 137, 37 Bom.L.R. 16, 59 Bom. 125, 1933 Cr.C. 288 (F.B.). Where a District Magistrate sets aside the order of discharge passed by a Committing Magistrate and orders a case to be committed to Sessions which is exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the High Court will not interfere in revision unless the District Magistrate's order is in the circumstances of the case shown to be unjustifiable—Aulad Husain, 32 Cr.L.J. 128, 128 I.C. 285, 7 O.W.N. 749, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 415, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 45, 1930 Cr.C. 955. Where a competent District Magistrate, acting upon a discretion which the law confers, has committed an accused for trial by a Court of Session, and his proceedings are not on the face of them illegal or arbitrary or capricious, the practice of the High Court is that as revisional Court it would neither enquire into the reasons, nor interfere. Where there is no question of law involved, it is only in exceptional cases that the High Court will exercise revisional powers after a valid order of commitment, to see if the commitment deserves to be quashed on the ground that the evidence does not make out a prima facie case. Where there is no evidence at all the commitment may be quashed, because, absence of evidence for commitment is held to be a point of law—Hussainbhoy, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 27, 148 I.C. 1066, 35 Cr.L.J. 881, A.L.R. 1934 Sind 28, 1934 Cr.C. 225. See also Ramchandra, 36 Cr.L.J. 613 (646), 155 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 137, 37 Bom.L.R. 16, 59 Bom. 125, 1935 Cr.C. 288 (F.B.). But see Palaniappa Thevan v. Karuppa Gounden, 40 Cr.L.J. 392, 180 I.C. 576, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 253, 1938 M.W.N. 1311, 11 R.M. 727.

438. (1) The Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, on examining under section 435 or otherwise the record of any proceeding, report for the orders of the High Court the result of such examination, and, when such report contains a recommendation that a sentence be reversed or altered, may order that the execution of such sentence be suspended, and, if the accused is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

(2) An Additional Sessions Judge shall have and may exercise all the powers of a Sessions Judge under this Chapter in respect of any case which may be transferred to him by or under any general or special order of the Sessions Judge.

Change:—The italicised words have been added by sec. 118 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act XVIII of 1923. "In order to provide for the absence of a Sessions Judge, we think it is necessary to empower him to make a general order authorising the Additional Sessions Judge to exercise all his powers. We have provided for it specially by this amendment"—Report of the Select Committee of 1916.

1195. Who can report:—The only Courts which can make a reference to the High Court are the Court of Session and District Magistrate. An Additional Sessions Judge has jurisdiction to exercise the powers of a Sessions Judge only in respect of cases transferred to him by the Sessions Judge—Ramchandra, 1903 A.W.N. 28. In the absence of such transfer, an Additional Sessions Judge has not the powers of a Sessions Judge under this section—Abdul Gaffur, 1 L.B.R. 119. Where a jail appeal by one of two convicted persons was transferred to the Additional Sessions Judge who acquitted the appellant and made a reference to the High Court under this section with a recommendation for the acquittal of the non-appealing accused, held that in view of cl (2) of this section he was not competent to make a reference in respect of an accused whose case was not transferred to him—Zama Shah, 35 Cr.L.J. 296, 11 O.W.N. 66, 147 I.C. 382, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 73, 1934 Cr.C. 256, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 86.

1196. When reference may be made:—A District Magistrate or Sessions Judge should refer all cases in which he considers the order of the Subordinate Court as illegal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 564 (565); e.g., when he considers that the judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is severe or inadequate—Khubi, 1881 A.W.N. 12. So also, where a District Magistrate is of opinion that a subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try a particular case, the District Magistrate has no power to quash the proceedings of the Sub-Magistrate but must report the case for proper orders to the High Court—Kandaswami v Soli Goundan, 23 Mad 540. So again, if a Sessions Judge is of opinion that an order of a District Magistrate directing a further inquiry under sec 436 is wrong, a reference to the High Court may be made under this section—Darbari v. Jagoo Lal, 22 Cal. 573. Where the District Magistrate decided, upon a consideration of the application and examination of the record, that the order of the Special Magistrate regarding the custody of a minor girl was unjust, he could only act under this section and had no power to set it aside—Moti v. Beni, A.I.R. 1936 All. 852, 1936 A.L.J. 1097, 1936 A.W.R. 920, 1936 Cr.C. 1111, 166 I.C. 847. A Sessions Judge cannot, upon examining the monthly criminal return of Magistrate, order further inquiry under sec. 436 into the case of a person who has been convicted. If he thinks any further inquiry necessary, he should refer the case to the High Court under this section—Valav, Ratanlal 407.

A Magistrate's order declining to stay proceedings is an order within the meaning of sec. 435 and the Additional Sessions Judge has power to refer it to the High Court under sec. 438—Louis Philip Dias v. Mahadev, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 485, 35 Bom.L.R. 1054, 1933 Cr.C. 1589, 58 Bom. 49.

See Roshan Lal, cited in Note 1169, for the power of the Sessions Judge to make a reference at the instance of a third party even when the convicted person do not desire it. See also Notes 1204 and 1220.

Power of reference after prior refusal:—The fact that a Sessions Judge has once refused to make a reference to the High Court after examination of the case in the ordinary way under sec. 435, does not take away his jurisdiction to make a reference on subsequent facts which come to his knowledge. The words "or otherwise" in this section are wide enough to meet a case where there is clear evidence of some gross miscarriage of justice having occurred, which ought to be brought to the knowledge of the Revisional Court, although in the absence of knowledge of such evidence an application for revision might have been previously rejected—Sitaram, 29 Bom.L.R. 480, 104, I.C. 912, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 360, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 27, 28 Cr.L.J. 896.

Power of refusal after reference:—After having passed the order of reference the Sessions Judge becomes functus officio and has no power to revise or review his order and by a separate order reject the application for revision. The proceedings subsequent to the order of reference are clearly ultra vires and illegal—Rameshwar v. Bharath, 35 Cr.L.J. 417, 147 I.C. 516, 11 O.W.N. 75, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 75, 1934 Cr.C. 255, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 85.

1197. When reference is improper:—This section allows a reference only when the Court of Session is of opinion that the judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is too severe or inadequate, but not on the ground of the insufficiency or incredibility of the evidence—Khubi, 1881 A.W.N. 12. Speaking generally, a report ought not to be made to the High Court under this section on matters of fact or unless the examination of the proceeding in the inferior Court discloses a question of law which the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate thinks would properly be.

determined by the High Court—Maung Ba Thon, 32 Cr.L.J. 950 (1958), 132 I.C. 822, 9 Rang. 239, Ind. Ruf. 1931 Rang. 214, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 225, 1931 Cr.C. 865 (F.B.). See also Phakir v. Madar, cited in Note 1210 and Chandreshwar Prasad Narain Singh v. Arunendra Mohan Ghosh, infra. The objections to making a reference or to interfering in revision on the question of credibility of witnesses are still stronger when the proceeding is a pending proceeding instituted in accordance with law and carried on regularly and in which no error of procedure is suggested to have been committed by the Magistrate before whom those proceedings are pending—Chandreshwar Prasad Narain Singh v. Arunendra Mohan Ghosh, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 626 (627), 17 P.L.T. 794, 38 Cr.L.J. 2, 165 I.C. 931, 9 R.P. 231, 3 B.R. 101, 1936 Cr.C. 1064. A reference can only be made to the High Court if after accepting loyally the finding of facts arrived at by the trial Magistrate some question of law arises which necessitates interference with the order passed by the trial Court—Peters, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 276, 11 O.W.N. 717, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 220, 1934 Cr.C. 773, 1934 O.L.R. 507, 36 Cr.L.J. 812, 155 I.C. 724. The Sessions Judge must not make any reference to the High Court or submit any application for revision of any order contrary to the findings of fact arrived at by the trial Court. No reference or revision can be accepted by the High Court which involves no question of law—Dulari v. Mt. Sundaria, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 278, 11 O.W.N. 718, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 216, 1934 Cr.C. 774, 1934 O.L.R. 507, 36 Cr.L.J. 838, 155 I.C. 726. See Bhola Prasad v. Ram Dulari, 35 Cr.L.J. 951, 149 I.C. 361, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 223, 11 O.W.N. 719, 1934 Cr.C. 776, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 280. See also Ram Bahal, A.I.R. 1936 All. 364, 1936 A.L.J. 283.

A case should not be reported unless it is very clear that the conviction is wrong and that there can be no reasonable doubt on the matter. A Sessions Judge should not refer a case to the High Court merely because he considers the conviction of the accused to be bad on the ground that the prosecution witnesses had something in common with the complainant and were on bad terms with the accused—Sudaman, 49 All. 551, 100 I.C. 1055, 25 A.L.J. 379, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 343, A.I.R. 1927 All. 475, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400). A necessity for altering a conviction from one section to another for a cognate offence, when the accused has not been prejudiced by any such error, is not a sufficient ground for a reference to the High Court under this section—Ishan Chandra, 9 Cal. 847.

When a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge has himself the power to make the order which he proposes in his letter of reference, a reference under this section is unnecessary—Bidhu v. Moti, 28 Cal. 102. The High Court will not exercise its revisional powers in a case where the Magistrate making the reference has jurisdiction to dispose of the case himself—Rahimdino, 22 S.L.R. 201, 105 I.C. 802, A.I.R. 1928 Sind 69, 28 Cr.L.J. 978 (979). Thus a case which regularly comes to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, on the appeal of a prisoner, cannot be referred to the High Court under this section but must be disposed of by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate himself—Mohan Lal, 13 A.L.J. 477, 16 Cr.L.J. 433 (434); Bega Singh, A.I.R. 1914 Lah. 266, 21 I.C. 573, 7 P.W.R. 1914 (Cr.), 1914 P.L.R. 62, 15 Cr.L.J. 485 (487). A report cannot be made in a case where the proceedings are themselves the subject of a revision case or appeal case pending before the District Magistrate, whose duty it is to pass a judicial order on that case himself—In re Palani Gownden, 15 Cr.L.J. 472, A.I.R. 1914 Mad. 100, 24 I.C. 352. The reporting Court should decide the appeal, and if it considers that it has been unable to do substantial justice, it may then report the case on the revision side with recommendations as to suggested action which as an appellate Court it was not able to take itself—Mir Ghawas, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 81, 37 Cr.L.J. 470, 161 I.C. 320, 1936 Cr.C. 210. See also Rahimdino, supra.

Where an Assistant Sessions Judge accepting the verdict of the jury convicted the accused but the Additional Sessions Judge finding himself unable to interfere under sec. 423 (2), Cr. P. C., as there was no misdirection, made a reference to the High Court instead of referring the case to the Local Government for orders, the position is that the appeal of the accused has been dismissed. Had not the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court it would have been open to the accused to move the High Court in revision and ask it to interfere on the ground that the Additional Sessions Judge was wrong in holding that there was no misdirection and if the High Court found that there was misdirection by the Assistant Sessions Judge which had been ignored by the Additional Sessions Judge and which has occasioned a failure of justice it would have interfered. The fact that the High Court has examined the record on an incompetent reference by the Additional Sessions Judge does not alter the position. It must interfere if a case for interference has been made out.—Rameshwar Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 919 (922), 170 I.C. 464, 16 Pat. 413, 1937 P.W.N. 596, 3 B.R. 734, 10 R.P. 128, 18 P.L.T. 607, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 440.

Where an accused has been discharged by a Magistrate, the District Magistrate, if he is of opinion that the discharge is wrong, may take action under sec. 436 (if he deems it necessary) and need not make a reference to the High Court—Shrinivas, Ratanlal 290 (291); Shco Balak Singh v. Sant Bux Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1128, 165 I.C. 28, 1936 O.W.N. 1079.

The word "proceeding" which is used in this section must be a proceeding as referred to in sec. 435, Cr. P. C., that is to say, a proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court—Bejoy Krishna Das v. Shyam Narain Singh, 41 Cr.L.J. 442 (443), 187 I.C. 310, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 30, I.L.R. (1939) 2 Cal 532. This section authorises the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to make reports to the High Court in respect of proceedings of inferior Criminal Courts, but not in respect of proceedings pending before his own Court; nor does it authorise him to transfer the decision of a difficult case pending before him to the High Court—In re Palani Gownden, 15 Cr.L.J. 472; see also 13 A.L.J. 477 and 1914 P.L.R. 62, cited above. But see Note 1198 under the heading "Reference against its own order" for a contrary view.

Clause (1) of this section appears to contemplate action by the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate upon examination of the proceedings of a subordinate Court. It does not apparently authorize the Sessions Judge or Magistrate to refer his own order with a recommendation that it be altered. Therefore, where the District Magistrate dismissed a jail appeal and came to the conclusion that the order of dismissal was erroneous while hearing the appeal preferred by a co-accused and made a reference to the High Court for setting aside his own order, the reference was incompetent—Ramasis, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 697, 1933 Cr.C. 1550, 146 I.C. 370, 14 P.L.T. 759, 35 Cr.L.J. 22.

A reference by the District Magistrate direct to the High Court for enhancement of sentence is irregular and not warranted by law. The proper course for him to adopt would be to instruct the law officers of the Crown in the High Court to file an application for revision asking for enhancement of the sentence—Gulab, 29 Cr.L.J. 235 (236), 107 I.C. 285, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 660. But see Yakub Brohi, cited in Note 1198.

Reference in cases of acquittal:—In the case of an acquittal by a Subordinate Magistrate, if the Government does not appeal, the proper course for the District Magistrate, if he is dissatisfied with the order of acquittal, would be to move the Local Government for exercising its powers under sec. 417 and not to make a reference to the High Court under this section. It is not proper and expedient for the High Court as a general rule to exercise its powers of revision in respect of orders of acquittal on a reference from the District Magistrate, when the Local Government has not appealed against the order—Sheikh Aminuddin, 24 All. 346; Madar, 25 All. 128; Achar Singh, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 451, 81 I.C. 547, 5 Lah. 16 (19), 25 Cr.L.J. 931; Hrishikesh v. Abadhut, 44 Cal. 703; Dabiruddin v. Sakat, 33 C.W.N. 258, 49 C.L.J. 129, 116 I.C. 164, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 169, 56 Cal. 924, 30 Cr.L.J. 579; Ranga Row, 15 Mad. 36; Mogal Beg, 42 Mad. 109; Gur Dayal, 12 A.L.J. 255, 15 Cr.L.J. 304; Sinnu Gownden, 38 Mad. 1028; Rasul v. Zarin, 32 Cr.L.J. 1128, 134 I.C. 208, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 533, 1931 Cr.C. 773, Ind. R./1931 Lah. 912, 32 P.L.R. 789; Ganpat, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 259, 35 Cr.L.J. 28, 146 I.C. 332, 29 N.L.R. 365, 1933 Cr.C. 930; Janu Fakir, 15 S.L.R. 171, 66 I.C. 999, A.I.R. 1922 Sind 22, 23 Cr.L.J. 343.

In Ganpat, supra, it is stated that where reference under sec. 437 is received asking for interference against an order of acquittal the High Court is very reluctant to accept such a reference. In cases of acquittal the Provincial Government has a right to appeal. If the Provincial Government does not choose to file an appeal and if a reference is made asking the High Court to interfere with an order of acquittal it will interfere only if there be radical and incurable irregularity or a complete disregard of the law and procedure or a manifest injustice which has got to be cured. When an accused is acquitted a very valuable and substantial privilege accrues in his favour and it is not proper for a Court to interfere with an acquittal simply because the complainant thinks that the accused has committed the offence and the offence will remain unpunished—Laxmi Prasad, 41 Cr.L.J. 919 (921, 922), 190 I.C. 467, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 357, 1940 N.L.J. 399.

In a recent Patna case it has been held that the High Court may justly refuse to interfere on a reference by a District Magistrate, where it is clear that the case is one in which the Local Government would be expected to move on account of its special importance to the administration. But the High Court cannot refuse to entertain a reference in those cases of acquittal which are of no public interest (so that the Government would not move) and in which the High Court would interfere under sec. 439 at the instance of a private party—Wazir Kunjra, 7 Pat. 579, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 139, 116 I.C. 768, 30 Cr.L.J. 673 (674). Moreover, a distinction should be drawn between a reference by a District Magistrate and a reference by a Sessions Judge. A District Magistrate has the means of communicating with the Local Government with a view to an appeal under sec. 417, but a Sessions Judge has no such means, and he must either act under sec. 438 or not at all. Further, a Sessions Judge's outlook on the matter is purely judicial. Consequently, a reference made by him ought not to be rejected by the High Court—Wazir Kunjra, supra.

The High Court has jurisdiction to entertain a reference by the Sessions Judge against the order of acquittal and, if necessary, to set it aside, though such power must be exercised in exceptional cases only, where there has been either a denial of the right of a fair trial or a flagrant and glaring failure of justice. The High Court can entertain such a reference even where the Local Government has not been moved to prefer an appeal to the High Court under sec. 417, Cr. P. C., or having been moved, has declined to prefer such an appeal—Nathu Mal v. Abdul Haq, 31 Cr.L.J. 584 (585, 586), A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 159, 1930 Cr.C. 167, 123 I.C. 841. See also Soni v. Kishnomal Manghandas, 40 Cr.L.J. 524, 180 I.C. 989, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 385, 11 R.S. 198, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 75.

The judicial powers of the District Magistrate to make a reference under this section against an order of acquittal cannot be restricted by sub-sec. (5), sec. 439, Cr. P. C., on the ground that the Local Government should have appealed and has not done so. The District Magistrate, not being the Local Government, is not the person entitled to appeal, whether or not he may be able in his executive capacity to move the Local Government to appeal—Bashir, 32 Cr.L.J. 143, 128 I.C. 395, 53 All. 42, 1930 Cr.C. 997, A.I.R. 1930 All. 741.

The District Magistrate should not refer cases of acquittal on pure questions of fact. But where the judgment of the trial Magistrate was full of surmises and special pleadings and reading it one was left in the dark as to whether his mind worked for a conviction or for an acquittal, the High Court accepted a reference against an order of acquittal on questions of fact made by a District Magistrate through the Sessions Judge who also supported it and ordered a retrial—Dhum Bahadur v. Hori Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1289, 151 I.C. 350, 3 A.W.R. 564, 1934 Cr.C. 902, A.I.R. 1934 All. 714.

Where the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge merely differs from the first Court's appreciation of facts, or where he suspects an error of law, then, unless the error of law is manifest, unless the case involves a matter of principle, and unless there has been a serious failure of justice, unless in short he is clearly of opinion that the public interest demands that there should be intervention by the High Court he is under no obligation to refer the case. Where the only interests affected are those of private parties he will more often do better by leaving the party aggrieved to pursue his remedy by an application to the High Court. The High Court has ample powers in revision and the widest possible discretion, and if the High Court eventually allows such an application it is not thereby implied that the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge ought to have made a reference—Abdul Manir v Kadir Khan, AIR. 1937 Pat. 110 (112), 1937 P.W.N. 220, 18 P.L.T. 227, 167 I.C. 894, 9 R.P. 447, 3 B.R. 377, 38 Cr.L.J. 470, following Phakir v. Madar, 32 Cr.L.J. 1237, 134 I.C. 915, 58 Cal. 1081, 35 C.W.N. 374, AIR 1931 Cal. 619, 1931 Cr.C. 803, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 915.

Reference in Police Proceedings:—This section does not empower a District Magistrate to refer to the High Court the proceedings of a Superintendent of Police, as the latter is not a Court subordinate to the Magistrate—Sankal Chand, Ratanlal 133.

Ordinance II of 1932:—Sec. 51 of this Ordinance has the effect of depriving the Sessions Judge of the right of calling for and examining the record under sec. 435 and of referring the case for orders of the High Court under sub-sec. (1) of this section—Manmatha, 34 Cr.L.J. 579 (580), 143 I.C. 238, AIR. 1933 Cal. 401, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 390, 1933 Cr.C. 579, 60 Cal. 851.

Improper form of reference:—Where a reference asked the High Court not to quash the entire order (under sec. 145) passed by a Magistrate, but to confirm a part of the order and to quash the rest, the High Court rejected the reference as improper in form—Collector of Howrah v. Santak, 44 C.L.J. 593, 28 Cr.L.J. 210 (212), 99 I.C. 1010, AIR. 1927 Cal. 261, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 383.

1198. Power to refer proceedings of superior Court:—The powers of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate under this section are limited by sec. 435, which speaks of proceedings of an inferior Criminal Court; and therefore the District Magistrate has no power to question the propriety of an order of the superior Court (Sessions Judge's Court) and to refer the order to the High Court for the purpose of having it quashed or modified, especially if the order of the Sessions Judge is one which sets aside or modifies the order of the District Magistrate himself—Allah Mahr, 49 All. 443, 28 Cr.L.J. 281 (283); Jamnabai, 28 All. 91; Wasawi, 5 Lah. 11 (14), 81 I.C. 544, AIR. 1924 Lah. 437, 25 Cr.L.J. 928, 81 I.C. 544, AIR 1924 Lah. 437; *Q.-E. v. The District Magistrate has no power to report against and recommend revision of an order passed on appeal by the Sessions Judge—Bajinath, 34 Cr.L.J. 947, 145 I.C. 393, AIR 1933 Pat. 305, 14 P.L.T. 364, 1933 Cr.C. 826; Wali, 34 Cr.L.J. 371, 142 I.C. 622, Ind. The District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have concurrent jurisdiction and the District Magistrate can make a reference direct to the High Court for enhancement of sentence under this section—Yakub Brohi, AIR. 1934 Sind. 154, 1934 Cr.C. 1146, 152 I.C. 339, 36 Cr.L.J. 27. A fortiori, the District Magistrate has no power to call upon the Sessions Judge to forward the reference to the High Court, and the Sessions Judge can rightly refuse to forward it—Allah Mahr, supra. The District Magistrate cannot make a reference to the High Court taking exception to certain remarks made by a Sessions Judge in his judgment, and asking the same to be expunged therefrom—Khudabux, 21 S.L.R. 48, 98 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 45, 27 Cr.L.J. 1253; but when the error is a simple and obvious one, the reference should be accepted—Lashkaro, 38 Cr.L.J. 961, 170 I.C. 676, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 203, 10 R.S. 71, 31 S.L.R. 409. It is never intended that a Subordinate Magistrate should have the power of questioning the propriety of an order passed by an Appellate Court, and of reporting it to the High Court, for revision, simply on the ground that he considers that the original sentence was a proper sentence and should not have been reduced—Ram Lal, 8 Cal. 875. If the District Magistrate thinks that there has been a miscarriage of justice in an appeal heard by the Sessions Judge, or if he is dissatisfied with a sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, he should not report the case to the High Court for orders under sec. 438, but should communicate with the Public Prosecutor and invite his attention to it—Shere Singh, 9 All. 362 (363); Pirthi, 12 All. 434; Baldeo Prasad, 46 All. 851 (855); Shah Newaz, 1 S.L.R. 40, 8 Cr.L.J. 151; *Hiraman v. Where a person was convicted by a Deputy Magistrate and the appeal from the conviction was dismissed by the Sessions Judge and then the District Magistrate made a reference to the High Court for enhancement of sentence under this section, held that the District Magistrate had power to call for the record from the Deputy Magistrate's Court under sec. 435 or to make a reference to the High Court under sec. 438 and that it was not desirable that the High Court should entertain the matter on a letter of reference addressed to the High Court by a District Magistrate when the facts of the case were brought to the notice of the Sessions Judge in the appeal—Sarafoti, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 791, 57 C.L.J. 211, 1933 Cr.C. 1358, 146 I.C. 354, 35 Cr.L.J. 27.

Reference against its own order:—Although it is unusual for a Judge to make a reference regarding the legality of his own order there is nothing in this section to preclude him from doing so. The words "or otherwise" are wide enough to cover such a reference—Radha Raman Mitra, 32 Cr.L.J. 364 (365), 120 I.C. 260, 1930 A.L.J. 1076, A.I.R. 1930 All. 817, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 132, 1930 Cr.C. 1201. See also Chand Mal Goenka, 35 Cr.L.J. 1436, 151 I.C. 830, 35 P.L.R. 8, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 155, 1934 Cr.C. 333, 15 Lah. 63, 7 R.L. 209. If a Court of Sessions finds that it has passed an illegal order and informs the High Court of the mistake and the High Court is of opinion that the order is illegal, it is competent to the High Court to set right the illegality although the form in which the information has come happens to be in the form of a reference—Rashbehari, 36 Cr.L.J. 100, 152 I.C. 291, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 551, 15 P.L.T. 475, 1934 Cr.C. 1195. The Sessions Judge if he thinks that injustice has been committed by an order made by his Assistant Judge can refer the matter to the High Court, just as he could refer the matter to the High Court if he came to the conclusion that he had himself made a mistake which ought to be corrected by the High Court in revision. Once the matter has been brought to the attention of the High Court, the High Court can act in revision under sec. 439, Cr. P. C., whatever the method adopted in bringing the matter to its attention—Bhatu Sadu Mali, 39 Cr.L.J. 495 (498), 174 I.C. 780, 40 Bom.L.R. 297, I.L.R. 1938 Bom. 331, 10 R.B. 495, A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 225 (F.B.). For contra see Palani Gownden and Ramasis in Note 1197.

1199. Power to refer question of law:—This section empowers the Sessions Judge and District Magistrate, on examining the record of any proceedings under sec. 435, to report to the High Court for order the result of such examination, which means that the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate is to report the incorrectness or illegality of the sentence or order and not that he should refer abstract points of law to the High Court—Chouri v. Putai, 5 O.C. 316. This section was not intended to enable the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to get the opinion of the High Court on a question of law arising in a case pending before him—Palani Gownden, 15 Cr.L.J. 472 (Mad); Rahim-dino, 22 S.L.R. 201, 28 Cr.L.J. 978; Prithvinath, 20 N.L.J. 151, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 56 (57), I.L.R. 1938 Nag 248, 175 I.C. 935, 39 Cr.L.J. 660. He cannot make a reference to the High Court on the ground that he entertains some doubt about the correctness of some rulings of the High Court—Bega Singh, 1914 P.L.R. 62, 15 Cr.L.J. 485 (487). There is no provision of law which enables a Judge to stop a trial already commenced and to refer to the High Court any questions of law arising on the merits in the case—Bapuji, Ratanlal 214. Where a Sessions Judge, after having asked the opinions of the assessors in a case tried before him, made a reference to the High Court on a question whether he had jurisdiction or not, the High Court held that the Sessions Judge ought to have disposed of the question himself and that this section 'was never intended to be used for the purpose of sending questions to the High Court for opinion—Bhup Singh, 2 All 771.

The object of secs. 435 and 438 is that incidents of incorrectness, illegality or impropriety should be brought to the notice of the High Court, and where there has been no no illegality, etc., there is no proper ground for making a reference—Prithvinath, supra.

Where the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate does not really dissent from the actual decision arrived at by the trial Court, a reference to the High Court merely with the object of obtaining a ruling on a question of law ought not to be made—Madho Singh, 47 All 409, 23 A.L.J. 189, 26 Cr.L.J. 865; Prithvinath v. Emp., supra.

Power to take evidence:—Neither sec. 435 nor this section enables the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to take further evidence with a view to report the case—Mulla Ibrahim, 3 Bom L.R. 677; Mahaginia v. Ram Charan, 12 A.L.J. 461, 15 Cr.L.J. 575.

1200. Contents of the reference:—(1) A Sessions Judge before he refers the case to the High Court is bound to call upon the inferior Court for an explanation of the order passed, and should submit such explanation to the High Court together with the record—Mailamdi v. Taripulla, 8 Cal. 644; Ramchandra Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1020, 149 I.C. 839, 15 P.L.T. 288, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 316, 1934 Cr.C. 737. When a Magistrate tenders an explanation it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to make a comment on that explanation—Churanji Lal v. Mahadeo Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 All. 683 (685), 1932 A.L.J. 819, 1932 Cr.C. 938.

(2) The reasons for the reference should accompany the record—Kunjai, 1891 A.W.N. 80.

(3) The order of reference should set forth the points on which orders are required—Bechan, OSC 64.

(4) The reference should contain a recommendation that the sentence be revised or altered—Mohan Lal, 27 All. 25; and the District Magistrate should also give a brief abstract of the case and the grounds upon which he recommends that the order of sentence he considers to be incorrect and should be set aside by the High Court—Keshava, 9 Cr.L.J. 502 (Mad.).

Reference under this section should always be made in the form prescribed for such reference by the General Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court, Criminal Appellate Side, Chap. I, r. 139—Kutiswar v. Jitendra, 26 Cr.L.J. 1055, 87 I.C. 975, 30 C.W.N. 646, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 316.

But the report should not contain any representation of the complainant protesting against the Subordinate Magistrate's decision—Nagoo, Ratanlal 340. So also, a representation made by the Inspector of Police to the District Magistrate in the form of a letter, in which the former expressed his view that a case should be retried (together with the grounds for retrial) should not be forwarded to the High Court along with the reference—Brahmadin, 26 A.L.J. 76, 28 Cr.L.J. 946 (947), 105 I.C. 658, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 335, A.I.R. 1927 All 727. If the prosecuting Inspector, being dissatisfied with the order of the trial Court, moves the District Magistrate for referring the case to the High Court, the notes of the Inspector should be examined by the District certain remarks made by a Sessions Judge in his judgment, and asking the same to be expunged therefrom—Khudabux, 21 S.L.R. 48, 98 I.C. 101, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 45, 27 Cr.L.J. 1253; but when the error is a simple and obvious one, the reference should be accepted—Lashkaro, 38 Cr.L.J. 961, 170 I.C. 676, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 203, 10 R.S. 71, 31 S.L.R. 409. When a Magistrate tenders an explanation it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to make a comment on that explanation—Chitranji Lal v. Mahadeo Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 All. 683 (685), 1932 A.L.J. 819, 1932 Cr.C. 938.

(2) The reasons for the reference should accompany the record—Kunjol, 1891 A.W.N. 80.

(3) The order of reference should set forth the points on which orders are required—Bechan, O.S.C. 64.

(4) The reference should contain a recommendation that the sentence be revised or altered—Mohan Lal, 27 All. 25; and the District Magistrate should also give a brief abstract of the case and the grounds upon which he recommends that the order of sentence he considers to be incorrect and should be set aside by the High Court—Keshava, 9 Cr.L.J. 502 (Mad).

Reference under this section should always be made in the form prescribed for such reference by the General Rules and Circular Orders of the High Court, Criminal Appellate Side, Chap. I, r. 139—Kutiswar v. Jitendra, 26 Cr.L.J. 1055, 87 I.C. 975, 30 C.W.N. 646, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 316.

But the report should not contain any representation of the complainant protesting against the Subordinate Magistrate's decision—Nagoo, Ratanlal 340. So also, a representation made by the Inspector of Police to the District Magistrate in the form of a letter, in which the former expressed his view that a case should be retried (together with the grounds for retrial) should not be forwarded to the High Court along with the reference—Brahmadin, 26 A.L.J. 76, 28 Cr.L.J. 946 (947), 105 I.C. 658, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 335, A.I.R. 1927 All. 727. If the prosecuting Inspector, being dissatisfied with the order of the trial Court, moves the District Magistrate for referring the case to the High Court, the notes of the Inspector should be examined by the District Magistrate, and if there is any portion of them which he considers to be of value, he should embody them in his own order; but it is improper for him to accept en bloc the Inspector's criticisms and to attach them to his letter of reference. And it would be more seriously wanting in propriety if the Inspector's notes contain unbecoming language about the trying Magistrate, and the District Magistrate allows a document containing that language to be forwarded to the High Court—Ram Lal, 51 All. 663, 1929 A.L.J. 361, 30 Cr.L.J. 562 (566). The District Magistrate should not append to his letter of reference what appears to be the opinion of Police Prosecutor on the order which is the subject of reference to the High Court—Ali Muhammad, 38 Cr.L.J. 117, 165 I.C. 950, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 243.

1201. High Court's power in dealing with reference:—Where a District Magistrate referred a case with a recommendation that the order of the Sub-Magistrate should be set aside on the ground that the latter did not apply his mind to the actual evidence before him and took a grossly biased and distorted view of the case: held that the High Court would not rely upon the expression of opinion of the District Magistrate, without satisfying itself upon the evidence and upon the conduct of the proceedings generally that that opinion was right; that is, the High Court would investigate the whole of the facts before it would come to the conclusion whether it ought to interfere in revision—Hrishikesh, 44 Cal. 703, 21 C.W.N. 250. Where the trial Court has fully considered the evidence and discharged the accused, the High Court will not interfere, on a reference by the District Magistrate, unless it is shown that the order of the trial Court was either perverse or unreasonable—Jagdamba, 11 O.L.J. 334, 1 O.W.N. 245, 25 Cr.L.J. 1026.

The power of the High Court to interfere on the merits is undoubted, but this Court will not exercise its power so as virtually to give a right of appeal, and in reporting a case under this section the Sessions Judge must bear in mind this limitation which exists in practice as regards the exercise of the High Court's power of revision—Sudaman, 49 All. 551, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400), 100 I.C. 1055, 25 A.L.J. 379, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 343, A.I.R. 1927 All. 475.

439. (1) In the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may, in its discretion, exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by sections * * 423, 426, 427 and 428 or on a Court by section 338, and may enhance the sentence; and when the Judges composing the Court of Revision are equally divided in opinion, the case shall be disposed of in manner provided by section 429.

High Court's powers of revision.

(2) No order under this section shall be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by pleader in his own defence.

(3) Where the sentence dealt with under this section has been passed by a Magistrate acting otherwise than under section 34, the Court shall not inflict a greater punishment for the offence which, in the opinion of such Court the accused has committed, than might have been inflicted for such offence by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class.

(4) Nothing in this section applies to an entry made under section 273, or shall be deemed to authorize a High Court to convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction.

(5) Where under this Code an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed.

(6) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity has been given under sub-section (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 119 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. In sub-section (1) the figure "195" has been omitted; this is consequential to the amendment made in sec. 195. Sub-section (6) has been newly added. The reasons are stated in proper places.

1202. Scope of section:—The series of sections 435-439 must be read together. Of these, sec. 435 is the principal section dealing with the grounds upon which revisional jurisdiction may ordinarily be exercised, and sec. 439 must be read along with and subject to the provisions of sec. 435—Har Prasad, 40 Cal 477, 17 C.W.N. 674, 17 C.L.J. 245, 14 Cr.L.J. 197 (F.B.); Haridas v Santulla, 15 Cal. 608. Section 439 must be read along with and subject to sec. 435; if a case is outside the scope of sec. 435, sec. 439 cannot apply to it—Monam v. Mrijan, 47 Cal 438. Sections 435-438 prescribe the method by which the records of any criminal case come to the High Court, and the power of the High Court to deal with the record is in sec. 439. Sections 435-438 provide the machinery and sec. 439 gives the power to dispose of the record—Kamal Kuttu v. Udayavarma, 36 Mad 275. The words "the record of which has been called for by itself" refer to sec. 435, and the words "which has been reported for orders" refer to sec. 438.

This section confers no right on a person convicted either by a trial Court or a lower Appellate Court to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court. The exercise of that jurisdiction is, subject to the limitations imposed by the section, purely discretionary. The High Court can and often does exercise the jurisdiction of its own motion without an application having been made to it—H. G. Bolton, 60 Cal. 676, 34 Cr.L.J. 671 (672), 143 I.C. 892, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 240, 1933 Cr.C. 325, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 492. The exercise by the High Court of the revisional jurisdiction is a matter of discretion—Abdullah Karim, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 335 (337), I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 83, 41 C.L.J. 143, 185 I.C. 268.

Where applicants have a separate remedy, there appears to be no reason why the High Court should interfere in revision—Assudomal v. Isardas, 35 Cr.L.J. 1251, 151 I.C. 60, 1934 Cr.C. 628, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 78, A.L.R. 1934 Sind 73. See also Gopala Bhattar v. Parthasarathi Iyengar, 1937 M.W.N. 19.

'Any proceeding':—Under the old Code of 1872, the words used in this section were 'judicial proceeding' instead of the words "any proceeding," and the High Court could call for and revise the record of a judicial proceeding only; but under the Code of 1882 (as well as under the present Code) the High Court can call for and examine the record of 'any proceeding,' e.g., an order by a Magistrate under sec. 517 below—Gangamma, 2 Weir 538 (539).

High Court should not be moved in the first instance:—See Note 1168 under sec. 435, under heading "To whom application should be made."

1203. Grounds of interference:—The controlling power of revision of the High Court in criminal cases is an extraordinary power and it must be exercised with due regard to the circumstances of each particular case, anxious attention being given to the said circumstances which vary greatly. This discretion ought not to be crystallized, as it would become in course of time, by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like all other judicial discretions, ought, as far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free, so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case—Bankatram, 28 Bom. 533 (566); Kulada v. Danesh, 33 Cal. 33 (46). No hard and fast limitation should be placed on the exercise of the powers of superintendence of the High Court over the proceedings of inferior Courts. There is no species of injustice which the High Court would be powerless to correct, where its interference is called for—National Bank Ltd. v. Kothandarama, 14 M.L.T. 200, 14 Cr.L.J. 529, 1913 M.W.N. 728; Lakhraj v. Debi Pershad, 12 C.W.N. 678. It is plain that under this section, a High Court's revisional powers are only exercisable to rectify any illegality, irregularity, impropriety or mistake appearing on the face of the record of any proceeding in any inferior Court. Incidentally judicial authority has repeatedly laid it down that while it is not desirable to crystallise or restrict the revisional powers of a High Court, these powers are to be exercised with circumspection and care, and are discretionary—Jumo Machhi, 41 Cr.L.J. 568, 188 I.C. 306, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 65, 1940 Kar. 157. The circumstances which will justify the interference of the High Court have not been and cannot be laid down with precision. While the Judges have repeatedly held that only when exceptional grounds exist the High Court ought to interfere, the decided cases show that no hard and fast rule can be laid down but that when in the interests of justice the High Court's intervention becomes necessary, it ought not to be refused—Ramanathan v. Subrahmanya, 47 Mad. 722 (725). The powers of the High Court under this section, wide though they are, are purely discretionary and must be exercised not, as a matter of course, but only to further the ends of justice. It is not every irregularity or error committed by a Subordinate Court which the Revisional Court will take upon itself to set right. Indeed it frequently stays its hands, if it thinks that substantial justice has been done in the case. But where the Court is satisfied that a serious miscarriage of justice has taken place, it undoubtedly possesses unfettered power to pass such order as it in its discretion, thinks fit to do, even though the aggrieved person could have taken the matter to an Appellate Court and has failed to do so—Pars Ram, 32 Cr.L.J. 700 (705), 131 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 145, 32 P.L.R. 71, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 419, 1931 Cr.C. 257. Where the applicant was treated with leniency, the High Court should not interfere in its extraordinary jurisdiction in revision—Anant Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 417, 161 I.C. 307, A.I.R. 1936 All. 147, 1936 A.L.J. 209, 1936 Cr.C. 175. In regard to the grounds of law the High Court does not interfere with an error or omission or irregularity unless the same has caused a failure of justice—Hanuman Prasad v. Mathura Prasad, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 421, 35 Cr.L.J. 118, 146 I.C. 577, 1933 Cr.C. 1294, 10 O.W.N. 903. The applicant cannot require the High Court to adjudicate upon a question of law in revision—Kunj Behari Das, 37 Cr.L.J. 694 (696), 162 I.C. 736, A.I.R. 1936 All. 322, 1936 A.L.J. 370, 1936 Cr.C. 492. See also Kewal Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 1022, 164 I.C. 701, 9 R.A. 184, 1936 A.L.R. 798. Even if an illegality more than an irregularity had been committed, the High Court has discretion to refuse to interfere in revision if substantial justice has been done—Giani, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 1015, 38 P.L.R. 332, 38 Cr.L.J. 123, 166 I.C. 71, following Aladya, (1906) 5 P.R. 1906 (Cr.), 4 Cr.L.J. 75, 116 P.L.R. 1907. Interests of justice do not require any interference in revision on what can only be regarded as a technical ground—Jadunandan Jha v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 790 (792), 169 I.C. 489, 10 R.P. 24, 3 B.R. 582, 18 P.L.T. 628, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 317. The High Court will interfere in revision only when substantial questions arise—Ganesh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 347 (349), 180 I.C. 230, A.I.R. 1939 All. 166, 1938 A.L.J. 1217, 11 R.A. 434.

It is of considerable doubt as to whether it is within the province of the High Court, when acting under sec. 435, Cr. P. C., to canvass, and express opinions upon, all topics, however interesting may be the points of law or practice involved in them, which have arisen in the course of the proceedings before the inferior Criminal Court. On revision, its inquiry is limited to "the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed" and to "the irregularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court"—Maung Thounng Shwe, 39 Cr.L.J. 642 (646), 175 I.C. 639, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161, 11 R.R. 9. Section 439 empowers the High Court to revise an order which, in the language of sec. 435 is incorrect, illegal or improper. Where a Magistrate passing an order under sec. 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (1899) for demolition of a building, has not properly exercised his discretion under that section, or has passed an erroneous order, the High Court can set aside the order in revision—Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal. 287 (290, 291); Chun Lal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341 (345). Sections 435 and 439 give the High Court power to control the propriety as well as the legality of a finding, sentence or order of any inferior Criminal Court. If, therefore, a sentence has been passed or confirmed by a Court which could not legally try the case by reason of the prohibition contained in sec. 556, or should not properly have tried the case, the High Court has a discretion to interfere and set aside the proceedings—Faiz Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr.L.J. 385 (386, 387). When an illegal order is passed and action taken by a Magistrate which involves matters coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of authority of the Court, the revisional power of the High Court cannot be ousted by the mere ipsi dixit of the Magistrate that he was not acting as a Judicial officer but in his executive capacity; and the High Court can interfere in revision—Shiv Nath, 1908 P.R. 4, 7 Cr.L.J. 202 (204).

The High Court can interfere in revision on the ground of misreading of documentary evidence and fundamental errors in principle which vitiate the conduct and disposal of the case—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 28 Bom. 479.

The High Court will interfere with an order of a Magistrate passed without jurisdiction under a certain Act, even though that Act provides that the conviction under it shall not be open to appeal or revision—Khamiso, 2 S.L.R. 20, 10 Cr.L.J. 233. Thus, although sec. 15 of the Extradition Act ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the propriety of a warrant issued under Chap. III of that Act, yet where the order was made clearly without jurisdiction, it is open to revision by the High Court at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it—Gull Sahu, 41 Cal. 400, 18 C.W.N. 869, 14 Cr.L.J. 673; Husenally, 7 Bom.L.R. 463, 2 Cr.L.J. 439.

The High Court will interfere and reduce the sentence where the Magistrate has passed a heavy sentence for non-judicial reasons which have no bearing on the gravity of the offence committed by the accused (e.g., on the ground that the accused falsely blamed the Court for expressing its opinion and for helping the prosecution), although the passing of a heavy sentence is not by itself a ground of revision at all—Jawad Hussain, 2 Luck 503, 28 Cr.L.J. 673 (674), 103 I.C. 401, 1 Luck. Cas. 159, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 296, 8 A.I.Cr.C. 321. The High Court can exercise its power of revision even after the expiry of the sentence; and though it is not possible to interfere with the sentence because it has expired, the law does not prevent the High Court from interfering with the conviction—Sinha, 7 All. 135.

The High Court has ample power to interfere, should it see fit to do so, in any case in which the Magistrate has either refused to exercise a discretion vested in him by the law, or has exercised that discretion in an improper manner or on improper grounds—Nizam v. Jacob, 19 Cal 52; Juggut Chunder, 2 Cal. 110; e.g., where the Appellate Court did not give the appellant's pleader an opportunity of being fully heard on all the points that arose in the appeal—Basanappa, 29 Bom.L.R. 488, 101 I.C. 595, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 361, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 81, 28 Cr.L.J. 467 (468). The High Court will interfere with the order of the Sessions Judge declining jurisdiction to hear appeals when he had such jurisdiction—Alla Satyam, 38 Cr.L.J. 81, 165 I.C. 919, 9 R.M. 312, 1936 M.W.N. 1244, 44 M.L.W. 689, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 17, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 759.

The High Court will interfere in revision when there is a material error in the proceedings, which means not an error in decision upon the facts, but some error in law to the said circumstances which vary greatly. This discretion ought not to be crystallized, as it would become in course of time, by one Judge attempting to prescribe definite rules with a view to bind other Judges in the exercise of the discretion which the Legislature has committed to them. This discretion, like all other judicial discretions, ought, as far as practicable, to be left untrammelled and free, so as to be fairly exercised according to the exigencies of each case—Bankatram, 28 Bom. 533 (566); Kulada v. Danesh, 33 Cal. 33 (46). No hard and fast limitation should be placed on the exercise of the powers of superintendence of the High Court over the proceedings of inferior Courts. There is no species of injustice which the High Court would be powerless to correct, where its interference is called for—National Bank Ltd. v. Kothandarama, 14 M.L.T. 200, 14 Cr.L.J. 529, 1913 M.W.N. 728; Lakhraj v. Debi Pershad, 12 C.W.N. 678. It is plain that under this section, a High Court's revisional powers are only exercisable to rectify any illegality, irregularity, impropriety or mistake appearing on the face of the record of any proceeding in any inferior Court. Incidentally judicial authority has repeatedly laid it down that while it is not desirable to crystallise or restrict the revisional powers of a High Court, these powers are to be exercised with circumspection and care, and are discretionary—Jumo Machhi, 41 Cr.L.J. 568, 188 I.C. 306, A.I.R. 1910 Sind 65, 1910 Kar. 157. The circumstances which will justify the interference of the High Court have not been and cannot be laid down with precision. While the Judges have repeatedly held that only when exceptional grounds exist the High Court ought to interfere, the decided cases show that no hard and fast rule can be laid down but that when in the interests of justice the High Court's intervention becomes necessary, it ought not to be refused—*Ramanathan v. Rul. 1931 Lah. 419, 1931 Cr.C. 257. Where the applicant was treated with leniency, the High Court should not interfere in its extraordinary jurisdiction in revision—Anant Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 417, 161 I.C. 307, A.I.R. 1936 All. 147, 1936 A.L.J. 209, 1936 Cr.C. 175. In regard to the grounds of law the High Court does not interfere with an error or omission or irregularity unless the same has caused a failure of justice—*Hanuman Prasad v. Interests of justice do not require any interference in revision on what can only be regarded as a technical ground—Jadunandan Jha v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 347 (349), 180 I.C. 230, A.I.R. 1939 All. 166, 1938 A.L.J. 1217, 11 R.A. 431.

It is of considerable doubt as to whether it is within the province of the High Court, when acting under sec. 435, Cr. P. C., to canvass, and express opinions upon, all topics, however interesting may be the points of law or practice involved in them, which have arisen in the course of the proceedings before the inferior Criminal Court. On revision, its inquiry is limited to "the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed" and to "the irregularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court"—Maung Thoun Shwe, 39 Cr L.J. 642 (646), 175 I.C. 639, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161, 11 R.R. 9. Section 439 empowers the High Court to revise an order which, in the language of sec. 435 is incorrect, illegal or improper. Where a Magistrate passing an order under sec. 449 of the Calcutta Municipal Act (1899) for demolition of a building, has not properly exercised his discretion under that section, or has passed an erroneous order, the High Court can set aside the order in revision—Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal. 287 (290, 291); Chunt Lal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341 (345). Sections 435 and 439 give the High Court power to control the propriety as well as the legality of a finding, sentence or order of any inferior Criminal Court. If, therefore, a sentence has been passed or confirmed by a Court which could not legally try the case by reason of the prohibition contained in sec. 556, or should not properly have tried the case, the High Court has a discretion to interfere and set aside the proceedings—Fazl Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr L.J. 385 (386, 387). When an illegal order is passed and action taken by a Magistrate which involves matters coming within the purview of law and justice and within the scope of authority of the Court, the revisional power of the High Court cannot be ousted by the mere ipsi dixit of the Magistrate that he was not acting as a Judicial officer but in his executive capacity; and the High Court can interfere in revision—Shiv Nath, 1908 P.R. 4, 7 Cr L.J. 202 (204).

The High Court can interfere in revision on the ground of misreading of documentary evidence and fundamental errors in principle which vitiate the conduct and disposal of the case—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 28 Bom. 479.

The High Court will interfere with an order of a Magistrate passed without jurisdiction under a certain Act, even though that Act provides that the conviction under it shall not be open to appeal or revision—Khamiso, 2 S.L.R. 20, 10 Cr L.J. 233. Thus, although sec. 15 of the Extradition Act ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the propriety of a warrant issued under Chap. III of that Act, yet where the order was made clearly without jurisdiction, it is open to revision by the High Court at the instance of the party whose liberty is affected by it—Gulli Sahu, 41 Cal. 400, 18 C.W.N. 869, 14 Cr L.J. 673; Huseinally, 7 Bom L.R. 463, 2 Cr L.J. 439.

The High Court will interfere and reduce the sentence where the Magistrate has passed a heavy sentence for non-judicial reasons which have no bearing on the gravity of the offence committed by the accused (e.g., on the ground that the accused falsely blamed the Court for expressing its opinion and for helping the prosecution), although the passing of a heavy sentence is not by itself a ground of revision at all—Jauad Hussain, 2 Luck 503, 28 Cr L.J. 673 (674), 103 I.C. 401, 1 Luck. Cas. 159, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 296, 8 A.I.Cr.C. 321. The High Court can exercise its power of revision even after the expiry of the sentence; and though it is not possible to interfere with the sentence because it has expired, the law does not prevent the High Court from interfering with the conviction—Sinha, 7 All 135.

The High Court has ample power to interfere, should it see fit to do so, in any case in which the Magistrate has either refused to exercise a discretion vested in him by the law, or has exercised that discretion in an improper manner or on improper grounds—Nizam v. Jacob, 19 Cal 52; Juggut Chunder, 2 Cal. 110; e.g., where the Appellate Court did not give the appellant's pleader an opportunity of being fully heard on all the points that arose in the appeal—Basavanappa, 29 Bom L.R. 488, 101 I.C. 595, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 361, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 81, 28 Cr L.J. 467 (468). The High Court will interfere with the order of the Sessions Judge declining jurisdiction to hear appeals when he had such jurisdiction—Alla Satyam, 38 Cr L.J. 81, 165 I.C. 919, 9 R.M. 312, 1936 M.W.N. 1244, 44 M.L.W. 689, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 17, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 759.

The High Court will interfere in revision when there is a material error in the proceedings, which means not an error in decision upon the facts, but some error in law or procedure which affects the decision—Debi Churn, 20 W.R. 40. Thus, where there is a doubt as to the guilty intention of the accused, it is a material error not to give the accused the benefit of the doubt, and the High Court can interfere and acquit the accused—Ras Jas, 1916 P.L.R. 66, 17 Cr.L.J. 303; Mahabli, 1915 P.L.R. 188, 16 Cr.L.J. 699. Where the Court has taken a wrong view of the facts through an error of law, e.g., where it places the burden of proof on the accused, contrary to the principles laid down in sec. 101 of the Evidence Act, the High Court will interfere—Nagesh, Ratanlal 794. Where the evidence for the prosecution was weak and biassed and it was possible that the accused did the act complained of (theft) under a bona fide belief that he had the right to the property, it was an error of law of the Magistrate not to have acquitted him; and in revision the High Court set aside the conviction—Ram Jas, supra; see also Udai Narain v. Rama Nath, 18 Cr.L.J. 732 (733) (Cal.).

The High Court will interfere where the order of the Lower Court was passed without recording sufficient evidence. Where the evidence on record was insufficient to support a conviction, the High Court in revision set aside an order of the Sessions Judge summarily rejecting the appeal, and remanded the case for rehearing on the merits—Iswar Chandra, 10 C.W.N. 446. The High Court will also interfere where the Lower Court has failed to consider important evidence and has accepted certain other evidence without any critical examination—Nizamaddi, 23 C.W.N. 488, 20 Cr.L.J. 551. Where the lower Court relied upon evidence inadmissible for the purposes to which they put it, there is a case for revision—Fazal Ahmad, 37 Cr.L.J. 603, 161 I.C. 885, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 72, 1936 Cr.C. 218.

The High Court will interfere in revision to correct a grave error on the part of the Magistrate to refuse to summon any witnesses whom the complainant cited even before the stage indicated in sec. 252, Cr. P.Code—Seth Thakurdas v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 192 (197), 1936 Cr.C. 805, I.L.R. 1936 Nag. 205, 166 I.C. 709.

The High Court can interfere with an order in a criminal case on the ground that inferences unfavourable to the accused and not warranted by the evidence had been drawn to the prejudice of the accused—Nga Shwe, 18 Cr.L.J. 116 (Bur.).

An argument ad miseri cordiam is out of place in a Court of Revision which is concerned with law and procedure—Ram Harak, 32 Cr.L.J. 124, 128 I.C. 275, 7 O.W.N. 751, Ind. Rul. 1935 Oudh 35, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 80, 1931 Cr.C. 136.

1204. How powers of High Court can be invoked:—The High Court will interfere either by calling for the record under sec. 435, or when the case has been reported to it for orders under sec. 438, or when the case “otherwise comes to its knowledge.” The High Court may interfere in revision upon information in whatever way received—In re Aurokiam, 2 Mad. 38. The powers conferred by this section are at all times to be exercised and they may be put in force not merely on matters coming before the Judge in Court, but also on matters coming to his knowledge on reliable information—Anonymous, 2 Weir 538. The High Court can exercise its revisional powers, when a case comes to the knowledge of the Court on an application made by the Government through an official communication instead of through the Law Officers of the Crown—Mata Din, 1887 A.W.N. 144. The High Court has power to interfere in revision on a matter being brought to its notice in any manner whatever, nor necessarily by means of an application on the part of the person convicted. It can interfere on information contained in a newspaper or a placard on a wall or an anonymous postcard, if it considers that sufficient grounds have been established to justify its so doing—Narain Prasad, 45 AIL 128 (129).

Although the Court has power under sec. 439 of the Code to call for cases not only on judicial information but also to deal with a case which “otherwise comes to its knowledge,” yet in most circumstances it is a right practice that the Judge should be moved in open Court—Abdul, Ratanlal 577; Abdul Rahiman, 16 Bom. 580.

The High Court may exercise its power of revision upon the petition of a private person occupying the position of a complainant in the case in which revision is sought—

In re Auro Kiam, 2 Mad. 38; Sukho v. Durga, 2 All 448; Teju, 2 S.L.R. 25, 10 Cr.L.J. 237; Pheku, 4 P.L.J. 435, 20 Cr.L.J. 545. When an order of discharge of an accused person has the effect of operating to the detriment of a third person, such person has the right to apply in revision—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (473).

The High Court may also exercise its power on its own initiative—Radha Kishen, 1912 P.L.R. 67, 13 Cr.L.J. 476; Dongaji, 2 Bom. 564. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court can be exercised suo motu even though the accused does not desire it—Hiranand, 17 S.L.R. 245, 25 Cr.L.J. 134, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 129. Where the record of the case is before the High Court in connection with a revisional application made by one accused, the High Court can set aside the conviction of other accused who have made no such application—Abdul Kayum, 35 Cr.L.J. 1254, 151 I.C. 175, 28 S.L.R. 140, 1934 Cr.C. 625, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 72, A.L.R. 1934 Sind 79. There is no warrant for the proposition that the omission of a convict to appeal is by itself sufficient in law, or as a matter of well-established practice, to debar the High Court from examining the record suo motu or on a reference by a Sessions Judge, or at the instance of a third party, and from passing such orders as it thinks appropriate—Pars Ram, 32 Cr.L.J. 700, 131 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1931 Lah 145, 32 P.L.R. 71, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 419, 1931 Cr.C. 257. See also Sakinabai, 32 Cr.L.J. 283, 32 Bom.L.R. 1506, 1931 Cr.C. 78, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 70, 129 I.C. 346; Abdul Qadir, 129 I.C. 221, A.I.R. 1930 Lah 1044, 1930 Cr.C. 1220, 32 Cr.L.J. 249; Bhim Sen, 131 I.C. 360 (363), A.I.R. 1931 Lah 153, 32 Cr.L.J. 708, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah 456; High Court Bar Association, Lahore, 33 Cr.L.J. 339, 136 I.C. 717, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 253, 33 P.L.R. 384, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 364, 1932 Cr.C. 482; High Court Bar Association, Lahore, 33 Cr.L.J. 831, 132 I.C. 696, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 559, 1932 Cr.C. 713, 33 P.L.R. 1911, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 606. See also Roshan Lal, cited in Note 1169 and Shadabala, 34 Cr.L.J. 1115, 145 I.C. 977, A.I.R. 1933 All 678, 1933 A.L.J. 1059, 1933 Cr.C. 1190 (F.B.). The mere fact that an accused in the Magistrate's Court refused to take part in the proceedings before him or stated that he had nothing to say in defence should not prevent a revision from his conviction from being heard. There is an obligation on the High Court to superintend and supervise the Subordinate Criminal Courts and to see that orders of conviction passed by such Court are not illegal and contrary to law. If the illegality of a conviction is brought to its notice, there should not be a refusal on its part to interfere merely because the accused concerned is quite content with the order and does not wish to challenge it or because he had no objection to his being prosecuted and convicted—Shadabala, supra.

Application by third party:—Where the convicted person who might have appealed did not appeal or apply in revision because they (being non-co-operators) refused to recognize the authority of any Court established by British authority in India, the High Court should be loath to take action on an application for revision presented by a third party on his own responsibility and without authority from the convicts on whose behalf it was presented—Naram Prasad, 45 All 128 (129). Similarly, where the application for revision of an order of conviction was presented not by the person convicted (Subhas Chandra Bose) but by another posing as his friend and the former informed the Court that the application had been made without his knowledge or consent, and that he did not intend to take part in the proceeding (which was likely to do him harm), because he refused to recognize the jurisdiction of the British Courts, held that the High Court would not entertain the application for revision unless there has been a miscarriage of justice in the conviction of the prisoner. Even, where there has been a miscarriage of justice, still where the prisoner prefers to abide by the conviction and sentence, the Court of Revision must be careful to avoid any action which may place him in other and perhaps greater jeopardy, while seeking to remove the stigma of illegality from the administration of the law. On the other hand, the Court cannot allow any such alleged miscarriage to be used to gratify a desire for self-advertisement or pretended martyrdom at the expense of the Court's reputation for impartiality and justice—Ramendra Chandra Roy (on behalf of Subhas Chandra Bose), 58 Cal. 1303, 35 C.W.N. 716, 132 I.C. 174, 1931 Cr.C. 506, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 410, 32 Cr.L.J. 844 (845). Where all the convicted persons were educated and many of them held University degrees and were practising lawyers, the High Court declined to entertain an application for reduction of sentence at the instance of a third party, the convicted persons not having seen fit to appeal—Ambika, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 361, 34 Cr.L.J. 814, 144 I.C. 691, 1933 Cr.C. 497. But see Pars Ram, supra, and Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 497, 32 Cr.L.J. 104, 128 I.C. 221, 7 O.W.N. 895, 1930 Cr.C. 1161; Bhim Sen, supra; High Court Bar Association, Lahore, supra; Vidyawati, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 613, 34 Cr.L.J. 87, 141 I.C. 33, 34 P.L.R. 32, 1932 Cr.C. 919; Girdhariraj, 33 Cr.L.J. 280, 136 I.C. 249, 8 O.W.N. 1333, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 31, 1932 Cr.C. 63, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 105. An application filed by a third party, who is a total stranger to the proceedings and had no locus standi to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court is merely one for bringing the matter to the knowledge of the Court; and in such a proceeding his Counsel should not expect to be heard—Shailabala, supra.

Interference with acquittal:—In case of acquittal, the High Court can exercise its powers of revision on the application of a private prosecutor, when there is a material error in the proceeding in the case—Hardeo, 1 All. 139; Teju, 2 S.L.R. 25; Sukho v. Durga, 2 All. 448; Maung Htin v. Mg. Po, 4 Rang. 471, 99 I.C. 1019, A.I.R. 1927 Rang 74, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 373, 28 Cr.L.J. 219 (221). Any private person may invoke the revisional powers of the High Court under sec. 439 to set aside an order of acquittal, or the High Court may of its own motion set aside such an order—Anwar Ali v. Chairman, Deoghur Municipality, 6 Pat. 83, 99 I.C. 112, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 449, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 231, 8 P.L.T. 271, 28 Cr.L.J. 80 (82). Though, as a Court of Appeal, the High Court can consider an order of acquittal only on an appeal by the Local Government, yet as a Court of Revision it can deal with an original or appellate order of acquittal either when reported under sec. 438 or whenever it may otherwise come to its knowledge. It can do so even on the application of a private prosecutor—Basant Lal, 27 Cal. 320. See also Kangali v. Bama Charan, 38 Cal. 786; Sheik Bajoo v. Raika, 18 C.W.N. 1244, 15 Cr.L.J. 722; Gangadhar v. Reid, 25 C.W.N. 609, 23 Cr.L.J. 41; Jitam v. Damoo, 1 P.L.J. 264, 18 Cr.L.J. 151; Ram Chand v. Jai Dial, 1915 P.W.R. 18, 16 Cr.L.J. 657; Tirthidas, 6 S.L.R. 120, 13 Cr.L.J. 771; Nand Ram v. Khazan, 61 I.C. 161, A.I.R. 1921 All. 266, 22 Cr.L.J. 357, 19 A.L.J. 589; Dhum Bahadur v. Hori Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1289, 151 I.C. 350, 1934 Cr.C. 902, A.I.R. 1934 All. 714, 3 A.W.R. 564; Municipal Committee, Bilaspur v. Bansidhar, 36 Cr.L.J. 1336, 157 I.C. 781, 31 N.L.R. 261, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 40, 1936 Cr.C. 312; Sitaram v. Tilokchand, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 36, 1933 Cr.C. 78, 141 I.C. 273, 28 N.L.R. 298, 34 Cr.L.J. 145; and Allahrakho, 6 S.L.R. 101, 13 Cr.L.J. 780, where the High Court entertained an application for revision preferred by the private complainant against the order of acquittal. The High Court can entertain an application for revision against an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant. This power appears to be expressly given by sec. 439 as read with sec. 423 (1) (a), Cr. P. C., as limited by sec. 439 (4)—Raghunathmal Shermal Marwadi v. Patiram Sadaram, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 394, 172 I.C. 177, 11 L.R. 1938 Nag. 157, 10 R.N. 172, 39 Cr.L.J. 219. The High Court ought to interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private complainant especially in a case like defamation where the offence is of so personal a nature that the Local Government would seldom be willing to appeal from the acquittal—Sunderbai v. Kishore, 20 Cr.L.J. 708 (Nag.); Foujdar v. Kasi, 42 Cal. 612 (616), A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 388, 27 I.C. 186, 16 Cr.L.J. 122, 19 C.W.N. 184, 21 C.L.J. 53 (per Jenkins, C.J.); Asutosh v. Purna Chandra, 50 Cal. 159 (163), 36 C.L.J. 287, 24 Cr.L.J. 206, 71 I.C. 670, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 11; so also, in a case of insult—Rakkal v. Kaulash, 11 C.L.J. 113, 11 Cr.L.J. 213. The High Court will also interfere where the order of acquittal was passed under sec. 247 for non-appearance of the complainant—Ram Nidh v. Ram Saran, 26 O.C. 282, 81 I.C. 314, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 64, 25 Cr.L.J. 794. The High Court interfered on the motion of a private person, in a case where the lower Court proceeded on a wrong view of the law, and where the matter was of great importance to the petitioner in his position as the author of a book, which, if the judgment of acquittal was allowed to stand, would be pirated by another who would secure himself the gains that ought legitimately to go to the petitioner—Venkatrao v. Padmanabha, 53 M.L.J. 529, 28 Cr.L.J. 957 (958), 105 I.C. 669, 26 M.L.W. 489, 1927 M.W.N. 772, 39 M.L.T. 328, A.I.R. 1927 Mad 981, 51 Mad. 180.

In some cases, however, it has been held that the High Court has no power to revise an order of acquittal, except at the instance of the Local Government. Where no appeal has been preferred by the Local Government, an application for revision by a private person should be discouraged on public grounds. It has been the settled practice that the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with an order of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor, because it is always open to the aggrieved complainant to move the Local Government to appeal under sec. 417—Thandavan v. Periantha, 14 Mad 363; Hazrat Kibulai, 1933 M.W.N. 878; Pahlwan v. Sahib Singh, 19 A.L.J. 382, 22 Cr.L.J. 597, 62 I.C. 869; Jotta v. Parshottam, 25 Bom.L.R. 488, 24 Cr.L.J. 734; Binda Prasad v. Ripusanan, 5 N.L.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 211; Faredoon Cowasji, 41 Bom. 560 (561); Prag Dat, 20 All. 459; Qayyum v. Faiz Ali, 27 All. 359; Karuna, 22 Cal. 164; Faujdar v. Kasi, 42 Cal. 612 (616); Gulli Bhagat v. Narain, 2 Pat. 708; Rameshwar, 53 Bom. 564; Damodar v. Jujharsingh, 23 N.L.R. 99, 89 I.C. 388, A.I.R. 1926 Nag 115, 26 Cr.L.J. 1348; Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 28 Cr.L.J. 523, 102 I.C. 219, A.I.R. 1927 Nag 170, 23 N.L.R. 40; Janu v. Fakir, 15 S.L.R. 171, A.I.R. 1922 Sind 22, 23 Cr.L.J. 343; Bachcha v. Bachcha, 28 O.C. 384, 12 O.L.J. 63, 27 Cr.L.J. 854; Kalka Prasad v. Niranjana Singh, 8 O.W.N. 1336. The right of an accused person who has been acquitted, that he should not be tried a second time, is a valuable right and is not to be interfered with lightly. In exceptional circumstances the High Court will interfere in revision even with an acquittal but the High Court certainly will not consider doing so until the normal procedure has been followed and has failed. That normal procedure is for the party aggrieved to apply to the District Magistrate, who will then refer the matter, if he thinks proper, to Government, and Government can, if they think proper, sanction proceedings under sec. 417, Cr. P. C. When this course has not been followed and no attempt has been made to move the Government through the District Magistrate, the High Court will not interfere—Karachi Municipal Corporation v. Thaoomal Khusaldas, 38 Cr.L.J. 665, 169 I.C. 40, 9 R.S. 254, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 100. Ordinarily the High Court does not entertain applications in revision from an order of acquittal when the Crown has preferred no appeal but that it has jurisdiction in such cases cannot be doubted and will interfere where there is some glaring defect either in the procedure or in the view of the evidence taken by the Court below—Kamikka Prasad, 104 I.C. 228, 4 O.W.N. 729, 28 Cr.L.J. 788, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 345; Abdul Shakur v. Palla Ram, 32 Cr.L.J. 828, 132 I.C. 50, 8 O.W.N. 341, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 273, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 210, 1931 Cr.C. 633. Where the error of law into which the Judge has fallen is apparent and the result has been that he has not exercised the jurisdiction with which he was legally vested to try the appeal on merits, the parties were entitled in law to have such jurisdiction exercised—Abdul Shakur v. Palla Ram, supra. Applications against orders of acquittal are not entertained from private petitioners except if be on some very broad ground of the exceptional requirements of public justice—Faredoon Cowasji, supra; Faujdar v. Kasi Chowdhury, supra; Rameshwar, supra; Sankaralinga v. Narayana, 45 Mad. 913; Banke Lal v. Manika, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 35 Cr.L.J. 121, 10 O.W.N. 1037, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 146 I.C. 638; U Min v. Maung Taik, 8 Rang 663, 32 Cr.L.J. 928, 132 I.C. 545, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 94, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 177, 1931 Cr.C. 382; Nga Po Pyaw v. Nga Po Nwe, 42 I.C. 330, 18 Cr.L.J. 970, 3 U.B.R. (1917) 19; where there is no matter of public importance involved, nor are the interests of public justice closely concerned, and the petitioners have the opportunity of obtaining full redress in the Civil Courts, the High Court will not interfere with an order of acquittal on the motion of a private complainant—Faredoon Cowasji, 41 Bom. 560 (562); Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 23 N.L.R. 40, 102 I.C. 219, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 523 (528). A petition for revision of an order of acquittal, preferred by a private complainant, will be rejected, where it appears that the complainant is not anxious so much to secure due administration of justice as to serve his personal grudge —Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, supra. In cognizable cases the private prosecutor has no position at all, and if the Crown decides to let an offender go, no other aggrieved party can be heard to object that he has not taken his full toll of private vengeance—Siban Rai v. Bhagwant, 5 Pat. 25, 6 P.L.T. 833, 27 Cr.L.J. 235 (per Mullick, J.). (But Macpherson, J. holds in this case that even in cognizable cases, the private prosecutor, if he has initiated the proceeding, can apply for revision of an order of acquittal). The High Court should not entertain an application by a complainant to revise an order of acquittal, after the Local Government has declined to direct an appeal against it—Graham v. Elsey, 9 Bur.L.T. 47, 17 Cr.L.J. 91 (92).

It is not proper and expedient for the High Court, as a general rule, to exercise its power of revision against orders of acquittal on a reference from the District Magistrate under sec. 438, where the Local Government has not appealed from the order of acquittal—Sheikh Amiruddin, 24 All. 346; Hrishikesh, 44 Cal. 703; Madar Baksh, 25 All. 128; Ranga Row, 15 Mad. 36; Gur Dayal, 12 A.L.J. 255, 15 Cr.L.J. 304; Sinnu Gounden, 38 Mad. 1028; Mogal Beg, 42 Mad 109; Achar Singh, 5 Lah. 16 (19). Where no appeal has been preferred by the Local Government against an order of acquittal, the High Court does not ordinarily interfere in revision suo motu to set aside the acquittal—Nga Aung, 1 Rang. 604, 25 Cr.L.J. 270, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 98. The High Court interfered with an order of acquittal where the applicant in revision was not a private individual but a public body, e.g., a municipality. In such a case interference rested on grounds of public importance or public justice. See Ahmedabad Municipality v. Maganlal, 9 Bom.L.R. 156, 5 Cr.L.J. 171; Mukund v. Ladu, 3 Bom.L.R. 854; Municipal Board v. Vadyadhari, 24 O.C. 57, 22 Cr.L.J. 638, 63 I.C. 334.

As to the grounds on which the High Court will revise orders of acquittal, see Note 1219, infra.

An order of discharge is not the same thing as an order of acquittal, and the High Court can revise an order of discharge at the instance of a private prosecutor—Maung Htin v. Maung Po, 4 Rang. 471, 28 Cr.L.J. 219 (221), 99 I.C. 1019, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 74, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 373. See also Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal. 994.

Where the order purported to be an order discharging the accused but was in substance and in fact an order of acquittal, no application in revision would be entertained at the instance of the Local Government which might have preferred an appeal against it—San Win, 33 Cr.L.J. 763, 139 I.C. 182, 10 Rang. 315, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 147, 1932 Cr.C. 710, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 190.

1205. When High Court will not interfere:—In the exercise of its revisional powers, the High Court will not interfere in revision unless it is satisfied that it is necessary to do so to prevent an otherwise irreparable injustice—Umakant, 9 Bom.L.R. 706, 6 Cr.L.J. 70; Narain Prasad, 45 All 128; Kuppuswami, 39 Mad. 561. The High Court will not always interfere even though the order of the Court below is wrong in law or the trial in the Court below is illegal and not merely irregular, if no prejudice is shown to have resulted to the accused—Aladya, 1906 P.R. 5, 4 Cr.L.J. 75; Tha Byaw, 4 L.B.R. 315, 9 Cr.L.J. 15; Hari Singh, 1913 P.L.R. 313, 14 Cr.L.J. 599 (600); Sri Krishan v. Devi Dayal, 2 O.W.N. 823, 26 Cr.L.J. 1619, 90 I.C. 915, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 739; Sakharam, 4 Bom.L.R. 686. It is not in every case of illegal trial that the High Court is necessarily obliged to interfere, without due regard to circumstances of the particular case. The illegality of a trial is no doubt a prima facie good and strong ground for the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, but it is not imperative on the High Court to take action in every case, however small and scanty may be the necessity for adopting such course, especially where no prejudice is shown to have been caused by such illegality—Aladya, supra. It is not the practice of the High Court to entertain applications in revision where the decision of the lower Court involves some point of law. The Cr. P. Code does not give a right of appeal upon points of law analogous to that given in civil cases by sec. 100, C. P. Code. The discretion under secs. 435 and 439, Cr. P. Code ought only to be exercised in order to prevent substantial injustice, or where is involved a point of law of general importance which may govern other cases—Shriang Jayaba, 56 Bom. 554, 1932 Cr.C. 871 (872), 34 Bom.L.R. 1444, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 637, 34 Cr.L.J. 142, 141 I.C. 339. The High Court will not interfere unless the error in law has led to a failure of justice. It is not the duty of this Court to correct mere mistakes in law which have no more effect than mistakes in grammar or spelling. The power of interference is to be exercised only for the purpose of correcting injustice, not mere illegality—Narsinghadas, 29 Cr.L.J. 86 (87), 106 I.C. 678, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 282, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 113. See also Pitani, 33 Cr.L.J. 811 (812), 139 I.C. 636, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 311, 1932 Cr.C. 186, 9 O.W.N. 116, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 369. When the accused has not been prejudiced in any way and unless it were necessary to do so, it would be obviously undesirable to interfere in revision when the effect of the interference would merely be that the evidence which has been recorded will have to be recorded over again, with consequent waste of time and money—Alimahomed Joosab v. Kasturchand Balabhai Jhaveri, 40 Cr.L.J. 346 (347), 180 I.C. 241, A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 89, 41 Bom.L.R. 90, 11 R.B. 291. Where a case has been properly disposed on the merits by the Court below, the High Court will not interfere in revision merely on the ground of some error in procedure, e.g., on the ground that the pleader on behalf of the accused was not heard in the Lower Court—Olayet Khan, 1 Pat. 589, 24 Cr.L.J. 118, 4 P.L.T. 98.

In a revisional matter, the High Court does not take a technical view and interfere in every case where an order has been made irregularly or even improperly. Where the trial Court has given inadequate reasons for passing a particular order, but the order has been rightly made, the High Court will not interfere merely on the technical ground that the Magistrate has not stated his reasons more in detail—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, 59 Cal. 275, 36 C.W.N. 16 (25), 33 Cr.L.J. 3.

The mere fact that the High Court sitting as a Court of appeal might have come to a different conclusion on facts from what the Magistrate arrived at, is not a sufficient ground for entertaining an application for revision—Damodar v. Jujharasingh, 26 Cr.L.J. 1348, 89 I.C. 388, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 115; Narasim Das, 29 Cr.L.J. 86, 106 I.C. 678, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 282, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 113.

The High Court will not interfere when there is no error in law on the face of the record—Sakharam, 4 Bom.L.R. 686. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the High Court in revision will neither inquire into the reasons nor interfere—Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh, 2 Pat. 708 (710).

Where a Magistrate convicts an accused person of an offence falling within his jurisdiction, though the facts found would also constitute a more serious offence not within his jurisdiction, his proceedings are not void ab initio, and the High Court will not ordinarily interfere unless the sentence appears inadequate or unless the accused has been deprived of his right of appeal—Barhamdeo, 26 Cr.L.J. 1559, 90 I.C. 439, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 36, 7 P.L.T. 272; Gundya, 13 Bom. 502; Ayyan, 24 Mad. 675. If the accused has been adequately punished by the trying Magistrate, the High Court will not interfere, even though the proceedings before the Magistrate have been somewhat irregular (e.g., where the accused has been punished under one Act, whereas he ought to have been punished under another Act)—Bishen Singh v. Ismail, 6 Bur.L.J. 81, 28 Cr.L.J. 757 (758), 103 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 240, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 441.

Ordinarily the High Court will not entertain a revision against what purports to be no more than a complaint under sec. 195 (a), Cr. P. C.—Abdul Jalil Khan, A.I.R. 1936 All. 354 (356), 1936 A.L.J. 373, 1936 A.W.R. 210, 1936 Cr.C. 418, 162 I.C. 755, 1936 A.L.R. 468, 37 Cr.L.J. 713.

The revisional powers of the High Court will not be exercised until all the other remedies (e.g., appeal) provided by law have been exhausted—Rajcoomar, 3 Cal. 573; Nilambar, 2 All. 276; Abdur Rahim, 1905 A.W.N. 143, 2 Cr.L.J. 335. See Note 1220 under sub-section (5). So also, the High Court will not interfere in revision while an appeal in respect of the same matter is pending before the Appellate Court—In re Atakuri, 44 M.L.J. 366.

The High Court will not interfere in revision when the accused has pleaded guilty before the Lower Court, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence—Pattam Lal, 1907 A.W.N. 204; Tha Byaw, 4 L.B.R. 315, 9 Cr.L.J. 15. Cf. sec. 412.

The High Court will not interfere in revision when there has been a long delay in applying for revision and the delay is not explained or accounted for by the applicant—Jagan Nath, 27 All. 468; Ram Narayan, 8 All. 514; Ala Bakhsh, 6 All. 484; Puttan Lal, 1907 A.W.N. 204; Avadh Behari v. Dwarka, 1 P.L.J. 165. See Note 1222 and Kumud Nath v. Brojendra Nath, cited in Note 1215.

The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court will not be exercised in such a way that a right of appeal may practically be given in cases where such right is definitely excluded by the Code—Ashanullah v. Mansukh, 36 All. 403; Sudaman, 49 All. 551, 28 Cr.L.J. 399 (400), 100 I.C. 1055, 25 A.L.J. 379, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 343, A.I.R. 1927 All. 475.

The High Court will not allow a revision application when a remedy can be easily obtained from the Civil Court—Loke Nath v. Nidu, 6 C.W.N. 469. See also Gopala Bhatta v. Parthasarathi Iyenger, 1937 M.W.N. 19.

The High Court will not interfere on the motion of a party who is in contempt—Khairat v. Wahed Ali, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 241. See also Note 1224.

1206. Orders which are subject to revision:—(1) Orders of a Presidency Magistrate:—Under secs. 423 and 439 the High Court has jurisdiction to set aside an order of discharge or dismissal of complaint passed by a Presidency Magistrate and to direct that the person improperly discharged should be committed for trial or to direct further inquiry into the complaint—Varjivandas, 27 Bom. 84; Nanda Gopal, 20 C.W.N. 1128, 17 Cr.L.J. 428; Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal. 994; Dwarka v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal. 652; Colville v. Krishna Kishore, 26 Cal. 746. In Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126, Kedar v. Kheira, 6 C.L.J. 705 and Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal. 1282 it has been held that the High Court can interfere with an order of dismissal or discharge passed by a Presidency Magistrate, not under this Code, but under sec. 15 of the Charter Act. See Note 682 under sec. 203. An order made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay under the Maintenance Orders Enforcement Act (XVIII of 1921) can be revised by the High Court under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act or under clauses 27 and 28 of the Letters Patent, if not under secs. 435 and 439 of this Code—Katti v. Katti, 52 Bom. 262, 29 Cr.L.J. 513 (514), 109 I.C. 337, 30 Bom L.R. 350, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 117, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 179.

(2) Non-appealable orders:—The High Court's power of revision is not limited to orders from which an appeal would lie. On the other hand, the High Court ought to rectify cases of injustice or illegality when the person affected is unable to appeal. The High Court in revision can exercise its power of appeal with reference to any particular order, whether appealable or not—Ram Kala v. Ganda, 1885 P.R. 42; Kishen Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 8 I.C. 1161 (1165), 12 Cr.L.J. 50 (dissenting from Charoobala v. Barendra, 27 Cal. 126 and Azim Khan, 1885 P.R. 45).

(3) Order granting bail:—The proceeding in which it has to be determined whether the accused person should be admitted to bail is a judicial proceeding, and is therefore cognizable by the High Court as a Court of Revision—Manikam Mudali, 6 Mad. 63. But where a Sessions Judge, finding that there was no reasonable ground for believing that the accused was guilty, released him on bail under sec. 497, the High Court would not interfere with such order in revision, though it has power to do so—Thimma, 10 M.L.J. 411; Badri Prasad, 5 A.L.J. 419. See Notes under sec. 497.

(4) Preliminary or interlocutory order:—It is competent to the High Court to call for the record of any proceeding in an inferior Criminal Court, and if necessary or expedient, to revise an order passed by such Court, whether of a preliminary or final nature—T. N. Chadha, 14 A.L.J. 851, 18 Cr.L.J. 46; Jagan Singh, 1892 A.W.N. 102; Thakaria v. Puran, 23 Cr.L.J. 429 (Lah.). Thus, where a District Magistrate called upon a witness who gave evidence before him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for perjury, the High Court was competent to revise such order—T. N. Chadha, supra. So also, where a Magistrate, after dismissing a complaint without inquiry, passed an order calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for bringing a false complaint, the High Court revised the preliminary order, though no final order directing the prosecution of the complainant had yet been passed—Shco Balak, 22 Cr.L.J. 81 (All.). See Note 1215.

(6) Orders under sections 88, 94, 106, 118, 143, 144, 145-148, 250, 344, 386, 476, 488, 514, 515, 517, 520, 522; see Notes under those sections.

See also Note 1173 under sec. 435.

1207. Orders which are not open to revision:—(1) Order under Press Act:—An order under sec. 8, Press Act (Act I of 1910) for the deposit of security by the publisher of a newspaper is an executive order and not revisable by the High Court—Aga Syed Jalauddin, 17 C.W.N. 1245, 15 Cr.L.J. 145; so also an order under sec. 3 (1) of the Press Act—Annie Besant v. Govt. of Madras, 39 Mad. 1085, 18 Cr.L.J. 157; or an order of forfeiture passed under sec. 12 of that Act—Mahomed Ali, 41 Cal. 466, 18 C.W.N. 1, 14 Cr.L.J. 497 (F.B.).

(2) Order under the Extradition Act:—The High Court has no power under this section to interfere in respect of a warrant issued by a Political Agent in a Native State under sec. 7 of the Extradition Act (XV of 1903), either on the ground that there is no prima facie case against the petitioner or on the ground that the circumstances under which the officer was originally moved do not justify him in exercising his power under the said Act—Giyan Chand, 1909 P.R. 3, 3 Cr.L.J. 3. Where a warrant is issued by a Political Agent under sec. 7 of the Extradition Act, its execution by the District Magistrate in accordance with the Act is an executive act, and the High Court cannot interfere in revision with such execution. But the High Court can interfere otherwise than by way of revision, under sec. 491—Guli Sahu, 42 Cal. 793, 19 C.W.N. 221.

(3) Order of the Local Government sanctioning prosecution under sec. 197. See Note 649 under sec. 197.

(4) Orders of the High Court itself:—A single Judge of the High Court has no power to revise an order passed by another single Judge in appeal and to set aside the conviction, even on the ground of discovery of new materials. The only remedy is to refer the matter to the Local Government under Chapter XXIX of this Code—Kale, 45 All. 143 (145). The judgment of the Division Bench of the High Court as well as the sentence is final, and the Court is functus officio as soon as the judgment is signed by the Judges, and the High Court or any Bench of it has no power to revise the sentence or interfere with it in any way—Gibbons, 14 Cal. 42. So also, a Division Bench cannot revise an order of a single Judge of the High Court—Press, 1909 P.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 378 (379); Hale, 1909 P.R. 1, 9 Cr.L.J. 306; Hira, 1909 P.R. 8, 10 Cr.L.J. 314; Durga Charan, 7 All. 672; Kunhammad, 46 Mad. 382. See Notes under sec. 369. The only exception is in a case under sec. 434. See Notes under that section, and 1909 P.R. 1 cited therein.

For other orders which are not open to revision, see Note 1172 under sec. 435.

1208. Powers of the High Court in revision—Powers of an Appellate Court:—Sec. 439 enumerates the powers which the High Court may exercise in revision, and it declares that in any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or reported for orders or otherwise comes to its knowledge, or on application made by the complainant, the Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by certain preceding sections, among others, by sec. 423—Varjivandas, 27 Bom. 84; Murli, 2 All. 336; Picku, 4 P.L.J. 435, 20 Cr.L.J. 545. The nature of the powers that the High Court has in revision is the same as that which a Court of appeal has in the case of an appeal from any order against which an appeal is allowed by the Code—National Bank v. Kothandarama, 14 M.L.T. 200, 14 Cr.L.J. 529. But a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate cannot while sitting in revision exercise the powers conferred by the Code on an Appellate Court. Appellate powers are in revision conferred by sec. 439 only on the High Court—Baijnath v. Gauri Kanta, 20 Cal 633. But the High Court sitting as a Court of revision will not exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Sheik Sahib, 8 Bom. 197. A High Court undoubtedly has jurisdiction to entertain a revision on grounds of fact, but it is equally well established that this power should be very sparingly exercised. There is a well marked distinction between an application in revision and an appeal. It would be futile for the Legislature to grant the right of appeal in some cases and to withhold it in others, if the High Court under the guise of a revision were to allow conclusions of fact based on evidence to be canvassed and attacked on the footing of an appeal. Broadly speaking, the rule is that the High Court will only entertain a revision on fact where either there is no evidence to support the finding or where the finding arrived at is perverse or such as no reasonable man could have arrived at on the evidence produced—Abdul Wahid v. Abdullah, 45 All. 656 (661). Specially, in a case where no appeal is allowed by the law, the High Court will not in revision exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Mahomed Husan, Ratanlal 244; Umakant, 3 Bom L.R. 706. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court may be exercised in order to prevent gross and palpable failure of justice, but it should not be exercised in such a way that a right of appeal may practically be given in cases where such right is definitely excluded by the Code—Ahsanulla v. Mansukh Ram, 36 All. 403. The High Court must not allow what would virtually be an appeal from the order of the Lower Court, in a non-appealable case—Sheoshankarpuri, 10 N.L.R. 177, 16 Cr.L.J. 161. The High Court in criminal revisions, as a rule, depends mainly upon the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on questions of evidence. It is, therefore, the duty of such Courts to see that their judgments are self-contained and give a full analysis of the evidence and that their findings are clear so that the High Court accepting those findings, may be able to direct itself to the considerations of the questions of law and procedure only—Ahmad Ali, 32 Cr.L.J. 271, 129 I.C. 276, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1051, Ind. Rul 1931 Lah. 164, 32 P.L.R. 92, 1930 Cr.C. 1227.

There is considerable doubt as to whether it is within the province of the High Court, when acting under sec. 435, Cr. P. C., to canvass, and express opinions upon, all topics, however interesting may be the points of law or practice involved in them, which have arisen in the course of the proceedings before the inferior Criminal Court. On revision, its enquiry is limited to "the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed" and to "the irregularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court"—Maung Thounng Shwe, 39 Cr.L.J. 642 (646), 175 I.C. 639, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161, 11 R.Rang. 9.

Power to alter or reverse order or to quash proceeding:—The High Court as a Court of revision has the power conferred on a Court of appeal by sec. 423 to alter or reverse an order of the Lower Court—Khepu Nath v. Girish, 16 Cal 730. The High Court has power, under this section read with sec. 423 (e) to alter or set aside any order, and thus to quash the whole proceedings in the lower Court which terminated in the order—Official Liquidator v. Kali Charan, 3 Luck. 287, 106 I.C. 694, 1 Luck. Cas. 653, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 104, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 356, 29 Cr.L.J. 102 (103). The High Court can quash the charge and set aside the proceedings against the accused—Amar Nath, 113 I.C. 536, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 945, Ind Rul 1929 Lah. 184, 30 Cr.L.J. 162 (163); Bishen Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 12 Cr.L.J. 50; Tarak Singh, 29 P.L.R. 237, 103 I.C. 835, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 447, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 731, 28 Cr.L.J. 755 (756); Tahiru v. Jallu, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 106 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 825, 28 Cr.L.J. 1040; Gokul v. Devi Prasad, 23 A.L.J. 21, 26 Cr.L.J. 748 (749). The High Court can quash the proceedings initiated by the lower Court where no advantage would be gained by continuing the proceedings—Chitan Lal, 19 Cr.L.J. 730, 16 A.L.J. 734, 46 I.C. 410. But the fact that the case against the accused is an extremely weak one is no ground for quashing the charge in revision. If the case results in a conviction the appellate Court can rectify the matter—Nand Lal, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 349,

Power to alter conviction:—The High Court has also power to alter a conviction for one offence into a conviction for another offence, at the same time maintaining the sentence passed—Joti Prasad, 1887 A.W.N. 95; e.g., where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate for an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Chief Court interfered in revision and altered conviction into one for an offence triable by a Magistrate—Devi Buksh, 1889 P.R. 10. The High Court altered a conviction under sec. 186, I P. C., into one under sec. 225B, I. P. C., when all the material facts were stated in the complaint and duly deposed to by witnesses, and the accused was not prejudiced by the alteration of the finding—Jamna Das, 9 Lah. 214, 103 I.C. 833, 9 Lah.L.J. 408, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 443, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 708, 29 P.L.R. 196, 28 Cr.L.J. 753 (754). So also in Tarapada Shastri v. Emp., 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 467, 1938 A.Cr.C. 75, 1938 A.L.J. 769, the High Court altered a conviction under sec. 500, I. P. C., to one under sec. 500 read with 120-B, I P. Code. But a conviction for an offence for which a particular set of facts are required cannot be altered into a conviction for an offence of which quite a different set of facts are the constituents. And so, the High Court cannot substitute a conviction for cheating in place of a conviction for an offence under sec. 215, I. P. Code—Bakeshwari Ahir, 11 Pat 392, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 201, 139 I.C. 76, 33 Cr.L.J. 709, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 241, 13 P.L.T. 732, 1932 Cr.C. 638 (639). It is not fair in revision to alter a conviction under the Arms Act to one under the Explosives Act unless a conviction under the latter Act were obviously correct and unless it were certain that the accused had not been prejudiced by being charged under the Arms Act—Kifayatullah Khan, 32 Cr.L.J. 564, 130 I.C. 626, 1930 A.L.J. 1467, A.I.R. 1931 All. 17, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 290, 53 All. 226, 1931 Cr.C. 33. The High Court cannot, in revision, alter a conviction on a charge under sec. 498, I. P. C., only to a conviction under sec. 366A or 373, I. P. C., as these offences are major offences—Mahandi, 36 Cr.L.J. 423, 153 I.C. 721, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 122, A.L.R. 1934 Lah. 796, 1934 Cr.C. 239. See Notes under secs. 237 and 238.

Sentence:—The question of punishment is peculiarly a matter for the Court. In revision the Crown has no right to seek to influence the Court in this question unless invited by the Court to do so—Dahu Raut, 34 Cr.L.J. 1100 (1103), 145 I.C. 937, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 870, 1933 Cr.C. 1481, 38 C.W.N. 25. See the last paragraph of Note 1131.

Admission only on the question of sentence:—When the High Court admitted a revisional application only on the question of sentence, the order which was passed by it was an order which was perfectly legal and which it had full jurisdiction to pass—Sat Narain Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 All. 426, 1940 A.L.J. 462.

Power to quash conviction:—The High Court can set aside a conviction where it was passed on an erroneous view of the law—Basant Lal, 27 Cal. 320, 4 C.W.N. 311. But in setting aside a conviction which is bad in law, the High Court is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether upon the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might not be recorded—Mansur Hussain, 41 All. 587, 20 Cr.L.J. 209.

The High Court cannot direct the Subordinate Court to refrain from trying an accused person against whom such Court has issued process—Jharu Lal v. Mahanth Madan Das, 2 Pat. 257.

In a case where a second complaint has been entertained on the same facts after the dismissal of the first complaint, if the matter is brought up to the High Court on revision, it would be open to the High Court in a proper case either to revise the previous order, set aside the dismissal and direct further enquiry, or to quash the subsequent proceedings—Lallain, 35 Cr.L.J. 1059, 150 I.C. 376, 1934 A.L.J. 241, A.I.R. 1934 All. 514, 1934 Cr.C. 614, 3 A.W.R. 571, A.L.R. 1934 All. 491. See also Dula v. Khushal, 35 Cr.L.J. 449, 147 I.C. 447, 34 P.L.R. 833, 147 I.C. 447, 6 R.L. 419.

revision conferred by sec. 439 only on the High Court—Bajinath v. Gauri Kanta, 20 Cal. 633. But the High Court sitting as a Court of revision will not exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Sheik Sahib, 8 Bom. 197. A High Court undoubtedly has jurisdiction to entertain a revision on grounds of fact, but it is equally well established that this power should be very sparingly exercised. There is a well marked distinction between an application in revision and an appeal. It would be futile for the Legislature to grant the right of appeal in some cases and to withhold it in others, if the High Court under the guise of a revision were to allow conclusions of fact based on evidence to be canvassed and attacked on the footing of an appeal. Broadly speaking, the rule is that the High Court will only entertain a revision on fact where either there is no evidence to support the finding or where the finding arrived at is perverse or such as no reasonable man could have arrived at on the evidence produced—Abdul Wahid v. Abdullah, 45 All. 656 (661). Specially, in a case where no appeal is allowed by the law, the High Court will not in revision exercise the powers of an Appellate Court except on very exceptional grounds—Mahomed Husan, Ratanlal 244; Umakant, 3 Bom.L.R. 706. The revisional jurisdiction of the High Court may be exercised in order to prevent gross and palpable failure of justice, but it should not be exercised in such a way that a right of appeal may practically be given in cases where such right is definitely excluded by the Code—Ahsanulla v. Mansukh Ram, 36 All. 403. The High Court must not allow what would virtually be an appeal from the order of the Lower Court, in a non-appealable case—Sheoshankarpuri, 10 N.L.R. 177, 16 Cr.L.J. 161. The High Court in criminal revisions, as a rule, depends mainly upon the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on questions of evidence. It is, therefore, the duty of such Courts to see that their judgments are self-contained and give a full analysis of the evidence and that their findings are clear so that the High Court accepting those findings, may be able to direct itself to the considerations of the questions of law and procedure only—Ahmad Ali, 32 Cr.L.J. 271, 129 I.C. 276, A.I.R. 1930 Lah 1051, Ind. Rul 1931 Lah. 164, 32 P.L.R. 92, 1930 Cr.C. 1227.

There is considerable doubt as to whether it is within the province of the High Court, when acting under sec. 435, Cr. P. C., to canvass, and express opinions upon, all topics, however interesting may be the points of law or practice involved in them, which have arisen in the course of the proceedings before the inferior Criminal Court. On revision, its enquiry is limited to "the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed" and to "the irregularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court"—Maung Thounng Shwe, 39 Cr.L.J. 642 (646), 175 I.C. 639, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 161, 11 R.Rang. 9

Power to alter or reverse order or to quash proceeding:—The High Court as a Court of revision has the power conferred on a Court of appeal by sec. 423 to alter or reverse an order of the Lower Court—Khepu Nath v. Grish, 16 Cal. 730. The High Court has power, under this section read with sec. 423 (e) to alter or set aside any order, and thus to quash the whole proceedings in the lower Court which terminated in the order—Official Liquidator v. Kali Charan, 3 Luck. 287, 106 I.C. 694, 1 Luck. Cas. 653, A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 104, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 356, 29 Cr.L.J. 102 (103). The High Court can quash the charge and set aside the proceedings against the accused—Amar Nath, 113 I.C. 536, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 945, Ind. Rul 1929 Lah. 184, 30 Cr.L.J. 162 (163); Bishen Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 12 Cr.L.J. 50; Tarak Singh, 29 P.L.R. 237, 103 I.C. 835, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 447, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 731, 28 Cr.L.J. 755 (756); Tahiru v. Jallu, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 106 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 825, 28 Cr.L.J. 1040; Gokul v. Devi Prasad, 23 A.L.J. 21, 26 Cr.L.J. 748 (749). The High Court can quash the proceedings initiated by the lower Court where no advantage would be gained by continuing the proceedings—Chitan Lal, 19 Cr.L.J. 730, 16 A.L.J. 734, 46 I.C. 410. But the fact that the case against the accused is an extremely weak one is no ground for quashing the charge in revision. If the case results in a conviction the appellate Court can rectify the matter—Nand Lal, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 349, 34 CrLJ. 82, 140 I.C. 807, 1932 Cr.C. 446, 33 P.L.R. 231. See also Parmesshari Dayal v. Gumani Ram, 40 P.L.R. 311.

Power to alter conviction:—The High Court has also power to alter a conviction for one offence into a conviction for another offence, at the same time maintaining the sentence passed—Joti Prasad, 1887 A.W.N. 95; e.g., where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate for an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Chief Court interfered in revision and altered conviction into one for an offence triable by a Magistrate—Devi Buksh, 1889 P.R. 10. The High Court altered a conviction under sec. 186, I. P. C., into one under sec. 225B, I. P. C., when all the material facts were stated in the complaint and duly deposed to by witnesses, and the accused was not prejudiced by the alteration of the finding—Jamna Das, 9 Lah. 214, 103 I.C. 833, 9 Lah.L.J. 408, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 443, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 708, 29 P.L.R. 196, 28 CrLJ. 753 (754). So also in Tarapada Shastri v. Emp., 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 467, 1938 A.Cr.C. 75, 1938 A.L.J. 769, the High Court altered a conviction under sec. 500, I. P. C., to one under sec. 500 read with 120-B, I. P. Code. But a conviction for an offence for which a particular set of facts are required cannot be altered into a conviction for an offence of which quite a different set of facts are the constituents. And so, the High Court cannot substitute a conviction for cheating in place of a conviction for an offence under sec. 215, I. P. Code—Bakeshwar Ahir, 11 Pat. 392, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 201, 139 I.C. 76, 33 CrLJ. 709, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 241, 13 P.L.T. 732, 1932 Cr.C. 638 (639). It is not fair in revision to alter a conviction under the Arms Act to one under the Explosives Act unless a conviction under the latter Act were obviously correct and unless it were certain that the accused had not been prejudiced by being charged under the Arms Act—Kifayatullah Khan, 32 CrLJ. 564, 130 I.C. 626, 1930 A.L.J. 1467, A.I.R. 1931 All. 17, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 290, 53 All. 226, 1931 Cr.C. 33. The High Court cannot, in revision, alter a conviction on a charge under sec. 498, I. P. C., only to a conviction under sec. 366A or 373, I. P. C., as these offences are major offences—Mahandi, 36 CrLJ. 423, 153 I.C. 721, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 122, A.L.R. 1934 Lah. 796, 1934 Cr.C. 239. See Notes under secs. 237 and 238.

Sentence:—The question of punishment is peculiarly a matter for the Court. In revision the Crown has no right to seek to influence the Court in this question unless invited by the Court to do so—Dahu Raut, 34 CrLJ. 1100 (1103), 145 I.C. 937, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 870, 1933 Cr.C. 1481, 38 C.W.N. 25. See the last paragraph of Note 1131.

Admission only on the question of sentence:—When the High Court admitted a revisional application only on the question of sentence, the order which was passed by it was an order which was perfectly legal and which it had full jurisdiction to pass—Sat Narain Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 All. 426, 1940 A.L.J. 462.

Power to quash conviction:—The High Court can set aside a conviction where it was passed on an erroneous view of the law—Basant Lall, 27 Cal. 320, 4 C.W.N. 311. But in setting aside a conviction which is bad in law, the High Court is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether upon the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might not be recorded—Mansur Hussain, 41 All. 587, 20 CrLJ. 209.

The High Court cannot direct the Subordinate Court to refrain from trying an accused person against whom such Court has issued process—Jharu Lal v. Mahanth Madan Das, 2 Pat. 257.

In a case where a second complaint has been entertained on the same facts after the dismissal of the first complaint, if the matter is brought up to the High Court on revision, it would be open to the High Court in a proper case either to revise the previous order, set aside the dismissal and direct further enquiry, or to quash the subsequent proceedings—Lallain, 35 CrLJ. 1059, 150 I.C. 376, 1934 A.L.J. 241, A.I.R. 1934 All. 514, 1934 Cr.C. 614, 3 A.W.R. 571, A.L.R. 1934 All. 491. See also Dula v. Khushal, 35 CrLJ. 449, 147 I.C. 417, 34 P.L.R. 833, 147 I.C. 447, 6 R.L. 419.

Power to order retrial:—Like the Appellate Court, the High Court in revision has power to order a retrial. Cf. Note 1143 under sec. 423. Under the provisions of sec. 439, cl. (1) the High Court has the power to reverse the finding and sentence and order that the accused be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to the High Court or committed for trial—Mahadeo, A.I.R. 1938 Oudh 261, 1938 O.W.N. 1062, 1938 O.A. 805, 178 I.C. 248, 1938 A.Cr.C. 131, 1938 A.W.R. (C.C.) 92, 1938 O.L.R. 472, 40 Cr.L.J. 25, following Yusaf, 28 P.R. 1879 (Cr.). But the High Court cannot direct a retrial on the ground that subsequent to the conviction it becomes known that the accused was previously convicted—Sham Singh, 1884 P.R. 36. Where evidence of the previous conviction of the accused for a similar offence was not adduced at the trial, the High Court refused to interfere in revision and to order a retrial to enable the prosecution to supplement the record by producing fresh evidence bearing on the question of punishment—Maidhan, 1905 P.R. 19. But see Mahadeo, supra. The power of ordering a retrial merely for the purpose of enhancing the punishment is a power that ought to be very sparingly exercised—Mohan Lal, 13 A.L.J. 477, 16 Cr.L.J. 433 (434). It would not be proper to order a retrial and thus to allow the prosecution to shape its case afresh, after the whole matter has been thrashed out and the defects in the prosecution case brought to light in the course of prolonged appellate and revisional proceedings—Kedar Nath, 29 C.W.N. 408, 41 C.L.J. 172, 26 Cr.L.J. 849.

In the exercise of its revisional powers a re-trial is ordered by the High Court only in cases where non-compliance with the provisions of the Cr. P. Code has prejudiced the accused. The High Court is not bound to set aside a trial on a technical point on the revision side if no injustice has resulted—Gurdas Singh v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 186, 179 I.C. 249, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 832, 40 P.L.R. 589, 11 R.L. 547.

Power to order commitment or set aside commitment:—The High Court when acting as a Court of Revision, can order a committal for trial to the Court of Session after reversing the finding and sentence—Maula Bakhsh, 15 All. 205. Where the evidence discloses a more serious offence not within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, the High Court may quash the conviction and sentence for the minor offence and direct a commitment for trial before a tribunal having jurisdiction for the graver offence—Anonymous, 2 Weir 569, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 5; Nishi Kanta, 20 C.W.N. 732, 17 Cr.L.J. 202; Moze Ali, 23 C.W.N. 1031; Kesavulu, 2 Weir 569 (570). Where the accused has been improperly discharged, the High Court has power to set aside the order of discharge and to direct that the person improperly discharged be arrested and forthwith committed for trial—Vargjivandas, 27 Bom. 84; Ram Lal, 6 All. 40; Ponnusami, 52 Mad 156, 30 Cr.L.J. 184 (185), 113 I.C. 546, 1928 M.W.N. 312, 28 M.L.W. 651, 55 M.L.J. 674, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1267, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 146 (F.B.).

The High Court has power under this section to set aside an order of commitment passed by the Sessions Judge under sec. 423 (1) (b)—Ram Samui, 11 O.L.J. 748, 25 Cr.L.J. 1375, 82 I.C. 767, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 223, 1 O.W.N. 525; Lachman, 2 All. 398.

1209. Power to direct further inquiry:—If an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused is passed by a Mofussil Magistrate, the High Court can order further inquiry under sec. 436.

But if any order of dismissal or discharge is passed by a Presidency Magistrate, the High Court cannot make an order for further inquiry under sec. 436, as that section does not apply to Presidency Magistrates. See Note 1175A under sec. 436. Consequently the High Court's power to order further inquiry must be sought for elsewhere.

Section 439 read with sec. 435 confers on the High Court the powers to call for and revise the proceedings of all inferior Criminal Courts, which include the Courts of Presidency Magistrates. Consequently, the High Court can revise and set aside an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused passed by a Presidency Magistrate if such order has been erroneously passed. But the question is, whether the High Court can at the same time, make an order for further inquiry?

Section 439 confers on the High Court all the powers of an Appellate Court under sec. 423, but the latter section allows an order for further inquiry to be made only in cases of acquittal and not in cases of orders of dismissal or discharge passed by inferior Courts. And so it has been held that the High Court cannot direct further inquiry under this Code where an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused has been passed by a Presidency Magistrate. But the High Court can make such order under sec. 15 of the Charter Act—Charoobala v Barendra, 27 Cal 126 (129); Debi Bux v. Jutmal, 33 Cal. 1282 (1284); Colville v Kristo Kishore, 26 Cal. 746 (748). But in some other cases, it has been held that the High Court can under this Code (sec. 439) direct further inquiry into a case of discharge of accused or dismissal of complaint ordered by a Presidency Magistrate "It is strange, if the Legislature enabled us to interfere in the case of an acquittal, but nevertheless gave us no power of interference in the case of an order of discharge"—Malik Pratap v. Khan Mahomed, 36 Cal 994 (997); Dwarka v. Beni Madhab, 28 Cal 652 (667).

It may be said that the order for further inquiry is included in the "incidental or consequential order" mentioned in clause (d) of sec. 423. When the High Court reverses an order of dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused, it can direct further inquiry as a necessary incident or consequence of such reversal. See Note 674.

Power to direct further evidence to be taken:—Under this section the High Court has power to direct further evidence to be taken—Mulla Ibrahim, 3 Bom.L.R. 677; Prasanno, 19 W.R. 56. The High Court under sec. 439 has power as an Appellate Court to direct evidence to be taken. No such powers are given to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate under sec. 436—Moni Mohan v Iswar, 6 C.L.J. 251.

The High Court can also direct additional evidence to be taken if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary—Bal Kishan, 36 Cr.L.J. 1048 (1049), 156 I.C. 1001, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 208, 16 P.L.T. 154. The High Court in the exercise of its revisional powers under this section can admit fresh evidence if it is relevant and its production is found to be necessary in the interest of justice—Lala v Emp, 40 Cr.L.J. 145 (146), 178 I.C. 894, A.I.R. 1938 All 637, 1938 A.L.J. 1010, 118 I.R. 1938 All. 968, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 638, 1938 A.Cr.C. 103.

The High Court has also power under this section to call for additional evidence upon which the High Court can itself come to a conclusion, but this section does not give the High Court power to call for a finding of the Magistrate—Sudalamuthu v. Enan, 16 Cr.L.J. 767 (Mad.).

1210. Power to go into facts:—The High Court in revision is not confined to question of law alone, but can also deal with questions of fact—Sham Sunder, 20 A.L.J. 276, 23 Cr.L.J. 241, A.I.R. 1922 All 122. If the Judges in revision think it necessary to consider the whole evidence they have power to do so—Reid v Richardson, 14 Cal 361 (362); Soma Chatur, Ratanlal 908. As regards questions of fact, though the Court's jurisdiction to interfere in respect of the correctness of the finding of fact, even when the findings are concurrent, is unquestionable, it will not, as a rule, go into the evidence save in exceptional cases or where the judgment of the facts is manifestly wrong and grossly and palpably unjust; otherwise, though there is no right of appeal, an appeal might in effect be admitted in every case in the guise of an application for revision—Pitani, 33 Cr.L.J. 811, 139 I.C. 636, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 369, 9 O.W.N. 116, 1932 Cr.C. 186, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 311. The High Court will not interfere in revision with the finding of the lower Court on a question of fact—Chheda Lal, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 195, 34 Cr.L.J. 793, 144 I.C. 577, 1933 Cr.C. 382, 10 O.W.N. 233; Banke Lal v. Maiku, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 10 O.W.N. 1037, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 146 I.C. 638, 35 Cr.L.J. 121; Jai Narain, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 117, 10 O.W.N. 47, 1933 Cr.C. 238, 143 I.C. 835, 34 Cr.L.J. 649; J. Chan Toon v. Ma Ti, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 359 (360), 37 Cr.L.J. 6, 159 I.C. 81, 1935 Cr.C. 1083; Chaudhuri, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 568, 10 O.W.N. 1211, 1933 Cr.C. 1582, 147 I.C. 122; Abdul Rahman, 36 Cr.L.J. 982 (995), 156 I.C. 678, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 316, 1935 Cr.C. 467; Nisar Husain, 35 Cr.L.J. 809 (881), 148 I.C. 899, 11 O.W.N. 501, A.L.R. 1934 Oudh 148, 1934 Cr.C. 575, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 179. In the ordinary course the High Court would not interfere in revision unless it can be shown that the Magistrate has gravely misapprehended the trend of the evidence or has overlooked some important points which, if he had taken into consideration, would have caused him to come to a different conclusion—Nga Po Tun, 36 Cr.L.J. 1215, 157 I.C. 437, 8 R.R. 96. Ordinarily the Court will not go into the facts at all unless the conscience of the Court has been touched in regard to them—Ramasis, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 697, 1933 Cr.C. 1550, 146 I.C. 370, 14 P.L.T. 759, 35 Cr.L.J. 22. See also Tahirali, 37 Cr.L.J. 876, 164 I.C. 58, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 90, 30 S.L.R. 72. Although the powers of the High Court to interfere with finding of fact in revision are not in any way restricted by this section, in practice, they are only exercised in exceptional cases and under exceptional circumstances. They are, however, invariably exercised in cases where it is established that the findings of fact reached by the two Courts below are based either on no evidence or on inadmissible evidence or on legally inadequate evidence or are perverse—Diwan Singh, 36 Cr.L.J. 744 (758), 155 I.C. 450, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 90, 1935 Cr.C. 418. The High Court sitting in revision is not a Court of first instance dealing with questions of fact, and though it will in certain circumstances interfere on question of fact, ordinarily it will not do so. It will interfere only on the clearest and strongest grounds as when, for instance, there is no evidence to justify the finding of the lower Court or when it appears to the Court that those proceedings are so defective that the conscience of the Court is touched or there has clearly been a miscarriage of justice—Ali Muhammad, 38 Cr.L.J. 117 (118), 165 I.C. 950, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 243. The revisional jurisdiction can be exercised in order to prevent a gross and palpable failure of justice which means such an error of fact as is obvious upon the face of the record and is not in effect a mistake made by the Magistrate as to the question of which set of facts should be deemed more acceptable but a blunder relating to the question as to whether some fact has been proved or not. Where there was evidence before the Magistrate which, if he believed it, would enable him to find as he did, it is not for the High Court to treat the revisional application as an appeal. The machinery of the High Court in Criminal Revision cannot be invoked in a case such as this—U Pandita v. Maung Tint, 39 Cr.L.J. 492, 174 I.C. 860, 10 R.R. 438, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 103. So long as the proceedings of the Magistrate were in order and so long as the Magistrate has fairly estimated the evidence before him in his own mind, his decision should not be disturbed even if the Court should be of opinion that on the evidence another conclusion might have been reached—Ignations v. Alagamma, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 192 (193), 36 Cr.L.J. 1044, 156 I.C. 968, 1935 Cr.C. 748. Where the Magistrate seems to have taken every care to get all possible evidence upon the record regarding a question of fact, there seems to be no reason why the High Court should go into it—Ram Bharosey, 37 Cr.L.J. 522 (523), 162 I.C. 47, A.I.R. 1936 All. 269, 1936 A.L.J. 303, 1936 Cr.C. 246. The High Court will not go into the question of fact in revision where the Magistrate examined the matter apparently with great care and there is nothing to show that his decision was in any way perverse—Ram Bahal Ahir, A.I.R. 1936 All. 364, 1936 A.L.J. 283, 1936 A.W.R. 325, 1936 Cr.C. 428, 162 I.C. 653, 37 Cr.L.J. 675, 1936 A.L.R. 462.

Ordinarily a High Court exercising revisional jurisdiction would not agree to be taken through the whole of the record for the purpose of re-appreciating the evidence which has already been believed by two Courts below. Where the Magistrate who convicted the accused-appellant had not the benefit of weighing the prosecution evidence first-hand and on a very important point urged on behalf of the applicant as against the credibility of the prosecution story and the Appellate Court expressed no definite opinion, the High Court yielded to the prayer for a re-scrutiny of the whole evidence—Rabu, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 139 (141), 34 Cr.L.J. 802, 144 I.C. 427, 1933 Cr.C. 337. Where the Courts below have not applied their minds properly to the defence set up by the accused and consequently there has been a failure of justice, it is necessary for the High Court to interfere—Keshowdas, A.I.R. 1933 Sind. 359, 146 I.C. 952, 1933 Cr.C. 1335. In a summary trial where the Courts below had not properly before their minds the contentions of the parties as to the ownership and possession of the property in dispute, the High Court interfered in revision—Lalchand, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 396, 1933 Cr.C. 1436, 147 I.C. 66. The High Court will not interfere in revision with a finding of fact regarding the trustworthiness of a witness—Mohan Banjari, A.I.R. 1933 Nag 384, 1933 Cr.C. 1577, 30 N.L.R. 55. It is unnecessary to go into the facts of the case in greater detail where the High Court is not convinced that the view taken by the two Courts below is so contrary to law or reason as to require interference—Trikamji, 34 Cr.L.J. 1038 (1040), 145 I.C. 550, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 33, 1933 Cr.C. 75. The question whether the principal object of the criminal act was acquisition of property or interference with another person's enjoyment is primarily a question of fact for the Courts below and ordinarily would not be taken up in revision if the Courts below have concurred in finding that the acts proved, and the intention with which they were done constituted the offence of theft—Baldeo Narayan, A.I.R. 1936 Pat 38, 1936 Cr.C. 68, 160 I.C. 443, 37 Cr.L.J. 309, 16 P.L.T. 891. But where the weight of evidence is in favour of the applicant and the trial Magistrate as well as the Sessions Judge have not given due weight to the evidence adduced on behalf of the accused, the High Court will interfere with the conviction—Kalu Ram, 35 Cr.L.J. 1278, 151 I.C. 288, 11 O.W.N. 1035, 1934 Cr.C. 1285, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 424. Where the lower Court has based its inference on circumstances which really did not exist, it is obviously right for the High Court to interfere in the interests of an accused person who has been convicted—Nga Ba Myat, 35 Cr.L.J. 849 (850), 148 I.C. 1035, 1934 Cr.C. 265, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 42, A.L.R. 1934 Rang 133. Where the finding of fact is not based upon the evidence on the record and is proved to be wrong from the record itself, then it is open to the applicant even in revision to challenge that finding of fact—Munoo Lal, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 241 (242), 1935 O.W.N. 126, 1935 O.L.R. 141, 154 I.C. 258, 36 Cr.L.J. 477, 154 I.C. 258. Normally a Court of revision will not interfere with concurrent findings of fact, but where it is evident that the Courts below have not really approached the case with either a clear appreciation of the issues involved, or a clear understanding of the principles of criminal law, the High Court will interfere—Ramaswami Naick v Rangaswami Chettiar, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 968 (969), 1937 M.W.N. 733, 1937 M.Cr.C. 269, 172 I.C. 501, 47 M.L.W. 140, 39 Cr.L.J. 144.

The High Court can go into the facts when the Lower Court has totally mis-conceived the evidence and come to an obviously wrong conclusion—Maganlal, 14 Bom. 115. The High Court in revision does not decide the balance of credibility between two conflicting sets of witnesses or two conflicting issues of fact, but it may be compelled to dissent from a finding of fact which is either perverse or has been arrived at contrary to well-established principles of law—Umed Singh, 21 A.L.J. 765. It is sufficient that there was sufficient evidence on the record from which the trying Magistrate could reach the decision—Babulal v. Tundial, 33 Cr.L.J. 835 (836), 139 I.C. 401, A.I.R. 1932 Nag 97, 28 N.L.R. 106, 1932 Cr.C. 519, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 112. The ground of inadequacy of evidence is not one on which the High Court should interfere in revision. Appreciation of the evidence is a matter for the Courts which deal with the facts of the case—Hafizar Rahaman v. Amina Hoque, 44 C.W.N. 1114 (1123). The High Court will interfere where the finding of fact is contrary to the mass of un rebutted evidence, and there is a clear case of miscarriage of justice—Sarju Prasad, 27 O.C. 290, 11 O.L.J. 330, 25 Cr.L.J. 1066. The High Court can go into the facts of the case, where evidence which is not admissible has been wrongly admitted—Bhim Bahadur, 55 I.C. 854, 1 P.L.T. 121; Ramchand, 28 Cr.L.J. 91, 99 I.C. 123, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 33, A.I.R. 1927 All. 147; Fazal Ahmad, 37 Cr.L.J. 603, 161 I.C. 885, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 72, 1936 Cr.C. 218; or where the evidence has not been considered from the right point of view, e.g., where the evidence of accomplices was regarded as that of ordinary witnesses—Rajoni v. Asan, 2 C.W.N. 672; Jagdish Prasad, 37 Cr.L.J. 951 (953), A.I.R. 1936 Oudh 401, 164 I.C. 428, 1936 O.L.R. 454, 1936 O.W.N. 829. That there is no legally admissible evidence against the applicant is rather a question of law or question of fact—Nga Tun Hlang, 35 Cr.L.J. 808, 148 I.C. 876, A.I.R. 1934 1934 Cr.C. 377, A.L.R. 1934 Rang 118. The High Court does not usually interfere in revision as regards findings of facts. But the question whether a criminal has been sufficiently identified, and whether his conviction on the evidence of one witness only should stand is a point more of law than of fact—Meherali, 32 Cr.L.J. 543 (545), 130 I.C. 378, A.I.R. 1931 Sind 13, 1931 Cr.C. 61. Where the construction of a document upon which the guilt or innocence of the accused largely depends, is erroneous, the High Court has power to go into the facts fully—Karim Baksh, 1908 P.R. 12. The High Court can examine the evidence where the case is not an ordinary one, and it is necessary in the interests of justice to peruse the evidence to see whether the offence of the accused has been established beyond reasonable doubt—Thakur Das, 28 Cr.L.J. 834 (836), 104 I.C. 450, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 13. Where evidence against the accused is weak, suspicious and inconclusive, the High Court can, on its revision side, examine and discuss the evidence on record and upset the finding of fact of the lower Courts—Bhagwan Singh, 1907 P.W.R. 20. When a case seems ab initio improbable and there is enmity between the parties, the element of doubt is so very strong therein that the conviction must be set aside even on revision notwithstanding the concurrent findings of fact by the Courts below—Boori v. King-Emp, 16 I.C. 520, 28 P.W.R. 1912 (Cr.), 13 Cr.L.J. 712, 10 P.L.R. 1912 Sup.; Brij Kishore v. King-Emp, 40 Cr.L.J. 463, 1939 O.L.R. 140, 180 I.C. 467, 11 R.O. 247, 1939 O.W.N. 265, 1939 A.W.R. (C.C.) 57, 1939 A.Cr.C. 43, 1939 O.A. 291, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 156. Where with reference to the first report at the thanah and other circumstances the case against an accused person is very doubtful, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the accused and in such cases even the concurrent findings of fact of the lower Courts are liable to be set aside on revision—Kisar Singh v. Emp, 19 I.C. 1008, 5 P.W.R. 1913 (Cr.), 152 P.L.R. 193, 14 Cr.L.J. 320; Brij Kishore v. King-Emp, supra. Where the Lower Courts have failed to scrutinize carefully the proof of corroboration of accomplice evidence, the High Court in revision entered into the evidence and set aside the concurrent findings of fact of both the Lower Courts—Manna, 1911 P.W.R. 3, 12 Cr.L.J. 35. The High Court, as a Court of Revision, has power to re-examine the evidence if there are prima facie good grounds for doing so, especially where the accused has been given a non-appealable sentence and has no means of vindicating his character except in revision—Tikekar v. Piareylal, 45 I.C. 1002, 19 Cr.L.J. 666 (Nag.). In a case where there can be no appeal because non-appealable sentence is awarded, different considerations prevail as regards the duty of the Court exercising revisional jurisdiction—Periakaruppan Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar, 1937 M.W.N. 51. See also Abdul Wahid v. Abdullah, 45 All. 656 cited under Note 1208, ante.

Where the judgment of the Appellate Court is a meagre one and shows that the Appellate Court has not gone thoroughly into the questions dealt with at the trial by the first Court, the High Court will in revision investigate the original trial to see whether the nature of the procedure and the decision arrived at were such as to leave no doubt that the accused had a fair trial and that the decision was given according to law—Alay Ahmed, 20 Cr.L.J. 270, 50 I.C. 978 (All.).

But though the High Court has power to revise a finding of fact arrived at by the Lower Courts and the law imposes no limits to this jurisdiction (Chagan Dayaram, 14 Bom. 331; Nobin v. Rassick, 10 Cal. 1047) still it is not bound to do so, if it does not think fit, and will not exercise such a discretionary power unless there appears on the face of the judgment or order complained of or on the record some ground to induce the Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see whether there has been any failure of justice—Keshab v. Akhil, 22 Cal. 998, or any material departure from legal principles—Ram Lal, 51 All. 663, 30 Cr.L.J. 562 (564), 116 I.C. 25, A.I.R. 1929 All. 273, Ind Rul. 1929 All. 505, 1929 A.L.J. 361. The High Court is always averse to interfering on facts by way of revision as it would tend to remove the difference specially laid down by the statute between appeal and revision—Hafiz Khan, 1 O.W.N. 878. It is unusual in revision to disturb a finding of fact unless it is so manifestly erroneous that a miscarriage of justice would result from its being uncorrected—Buranshabib, 6 Bom L.R. 1096; Chagan Dayatam, 14 Bom. 331; Duli Chand, 18 Cr L.J. 437 (411) (Cal.); Shidoo, 29 Cr L.J. 936 (938), 111 I.C. 856, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 26, 22 S.L.R. 453; Bankatram, 28 Bom 533 (536); Muhammed Zahur, 9 O.L.J. 488; Miranand, 17 S.L.R. 245, 76 I.C. 230, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 129, 25 Cr L.J. 134; Bhuneswari Pershad, 32 Cr L.J. 860, 132 I.C. 234, Ind Rul 1931 Oudh 250, 14 O.L.J. 438, 8 O.W.N. 503, 1931 Cr.C. 444, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 172. Ordinarily, the High Court will not in revision go behind the concurrent findings of the Courts below on a question of fact—Maruthayee v. Appavu, 24 Cr L.J. 476, A.I.R. 1923 Mad 237, 31 M.L.T. 388; Tabri, 26 Cr L.J. 393, 84 I.C. 937, A.I.R. 1925 Lah 42, 6 Lah L.J. 326; Jan Mahomed, 36 Cr L.J. 1464, 158 I.C. 498, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 105, 1935 Cr.C. 523; Paluvadi Venkataramayya, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 111 (113), 50 M.L.W. 614, 1939 M.W.N. 1039, 1939 M.Cr.C. 285, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 878, I.L.R. 1939 Mad 1035. It is the settled practice of the High Court to accept the findings of the Lower Appellate Court as correct, unless such findings are based on no legal evidence or are manifestly erroneous—Lukman, 21 S.L.R. 107, 98 I.C. 49, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 39, 27 Cr L.J. 1233 (1234); Allahbux, 23 S.L.R. 216, 116 I.C. 99, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 90, Ind Rul. 1929 Sind 99, 30 Cr L.J. 548. When the Appellate Court has dealt with the evidence carefully and has not omitted to consider any relevant or important portion of the evidence, the High Court will not interfere in revision with the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court—Gajo Singh, 4 P.L.T. 265. The uniform practice of the High Court is not to exercise its power of upsetting a finding of fact, except for some extraordinary reason, and the circumstance that the High Court itself, after examining the evidence, might have come to a different conclusion is not such a reason—Maganlal, 14 Bom 115; Thakur Das, 28 Cr L.J. 834 (836), 104 I.C. 450, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 13. The High Court can interfere with regard to a finding of fact, only on very exceptional grounds, such as a mis-statement of evidence by the Lower Court, or the misconstruction of documents, or placing by that Court on the accused the onus of proof contrary to the law of evidence—Ganesh, 12 Bom L.R. 21, 11 Cr L.J. 180, or where there has been a conviction of a clearly innocent person—Nandeyappa, 8 Bom L.R. 851, 4 Cr L.J. 446. In revision the High Court ought not to re-open a finding favourable to the accused at which the Sessions Judge has arrived on the evidence—Gurudas, 32 Cr L.J. 122, 128 I.C. 351, A.I.R. 1930 Pat 509, Ind Rul 1931 Pat. 47, 1930 Cr.C. 937.

The first rule which has always been observed is that the High Court will not go into evidence unless it is necessary to do so by reason of special circumstances or by reason of the character of the error of law. There must appear, on the face of the judgment or of the order complained of or of the record, some ground—which need not always be a ground of law—to induce the High Court to think that the evidence ought to be examined in order to see whether there has been a miscarriage of justice, and it is not the right of a party to claim that the Court should investigate the facts merely on the allegation that there should be another trial because he has not succeeded before the lower Court. Referring Courts must always bear in mind the limits which the High Court has, in practice, put upon its own discretion and they should not make a reference where the only objection is to the finding of the Court below upon the merits. Even if it should appear from the judgment of the Magistrate that there is an error of law, references should not be made unless it appears that the error of law is of such a character as to call for interference by a higher authority. The practice, in a case under sec 145, Cr. P. C., is exactly like the practice in any ordinary case—Phakir v. Madar, 32 Cr L.J. 1237 (1239), 134 I.C. 915, 58 Cal 1081, 35 C.W.N. 374, A.I.R. 1931 Cal 619, 1931 Cr.C. 803, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 915. See Suami Dayal, 8 P.R. 1908 (Cr.), 15 P.W.R. 1908, 149 P.L.R. 1908, 7 Cr L.J. 353; Ramphul, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 236 (238), 1933 Cr.C. 356, 35 P.L.R. 157.

Though the High Court has a wide power of interference in revision applications to prevent injustice, this power is to be exercised in accordance with well established principles. It is not, for instance, for the High Court in revision to deal with questions of fact or of law as would a Court of first appeal. To justify the interference of the High Court in revision, it must be shown, first, that the Judge below has committed some error of law; and secondly, that the accused has been materially prejudiced by the error. The High Court may also exercise its revisional power, even as regards findings of fact, in cases where the lower Court has totally misconceived the evidence and come to an obviously wrong conclusion. But it is only very extreme cases which justify such an interference with the appreciation of fact by the lower Court which heard the evidence and the Appellate Court which reconsidered its value—Mohanlal Bhanlal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Sind 293 (294), 172 I.C. 874, 39 Cr.L.J. 123, following Maganlal, 14 Bom. 115.

The Criminal Procedure Code confers the widest powers of revision upon the High Court, and the Judges should not seek to lay down rules which confine that discretion in a manner which the Legislature has not seen fit to confine it. It is clearly open to an accused person in revision to contend that he has been convicted on the strength of tainted evidence and tainted evidence only, and that it is not the practice of the High Court to convict on such evidence; and that if such contention is established the High Court should interfere—Shankarshet, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 482, 35 Bom.L.R. 1040, 1933 Cr.C. 1586, 58 Bom. 40, 147 I.C. 25.

When the High Court sets aside a conviction as being bad in law, it is not necessarily bound to go further into the question whether on the facts established by the evidence a conviction of some lesser offence might or might not be recorded—Mansur Husain, 41 All. 587.

1211. Power to allow composition:—The High Court as a Court of Revision has power to give effect to the compounding of offences which the parties have agreed to after conviction—Nidhan, 1904 P.L.R. 252; Ram Pyari, 32 All. 153; Shiboo, 45 All. 17; Lalla, 17 O.C. 92; Bhaiyalal, 30 Cr.L.J. 960, 118 I.C. 681, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 278, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 281; Ram Sarup, 13 O.C. 161, 7 I.C. 539. This is now expressly provided by the new sub-section (5A) of section 345 added by the Amendment Act of 1923. (In Adhar v. Subodh, 18 C.W.N. 1212; Akhoy v. Rameshwar, 43 Cal. 1143; Andhi, 3 P.L.T. 458; S. Rangayya v. Ramayya, 39 Mad. 604; Nga, 11 A.L.J. 13; Lala, 15 A.L.J. 467 and Harnam, 1918 P.R. 35, it was held that the High Court had no power to allow composition in revision. These cases are no longer good law). The High Court may in revision grant permission to compound the offence and acquit the accused where such permission was wrongly withheld by the lower Court—Titan v. Chintan, 55 Cal. 1190, 30 Cr.L.J. 484 (485), 115 I.C. 528, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 96, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 384; Singheswar v. Ali Hasan, 1929 Cr.C. 272, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 512. See also Kumar, 1933 M.W.N. 245.

1212. Power to order restoration of property:—The High Court in its revisional jurisdiction has the power under sec. 423 (d) of making any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just and proper. An accused person may upon his acquittal by the High Court in revision be restored to possession of the property of which he has been deprived in favour of the complainant—Manki v. Bhagwanti, 27 All. 415. The High Court may in the exercise of its revisional powers pass an order under sec. 517 to refund the money received by false pretences—Nga Than, 15 Cr.L.J. 555 (Bur.).

1213. Power to consider case of non-appealing accused:—Where two or more persons have been convicted by the Sessions Judge and one of them has appealed, the High Court has power under sec. 439 to deal with the case of the accused persons not appealing against their conviction, while considering and trying the appeal preferred by the other accused; clause (5) of this section does not in any way affect the jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with the case of the non-appealing accused—Braja Rakhal, 5 C.W.N. 330; Mir Mouse, 31 C.L.J. 305; Ratan Singh, 1893 A.W.N. 51; Raghu, 5 P.L.J. 430, 58 I.C. 49, 21 Cr.L.J. 705, 1 P.L.T. 241; Bichinta, 1916 P.W.R. 7, 32 I.C. 833, 17 Cr.L.J. 97; Allah Ditta, 25 Cr.L.J. 435, 77 I.C. 723, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 585; Champa Pasin, 29 Cr.L.J. 325 (334) (Pat.); Sada, 4 I.C. 980, 11 Cr.L.J.

Rul. 1931 Lah. 419, 1931 Cr.C. 257; Bhagwan Din, 35 Cr.L.J. 915, 149 I.C. 195, 11 O.W.N. 444, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 151, 1934 Cr.C. 495. Where four persons were convicted and three of them were awarded non-appealable sentences, and on appeal by the other the conviction of all of them is found to be wrong, the High Court has power under this section to deal with and set aside the conviction even as regards those who have not appealed—Karam Ali, 1891 A.W.N. 149; Bhola, 39 All. 549; Mir Mouze, 31 C.L.J. 305. Similarly, where there are several convicted persons and one only of them has applied for revision, the High Court has power to deal with the convictions of all offenders who were tried together and convicted, though only one person has applied for revision—Mangi Ram, 11 Cr.L.J. 17, 1909 P.R. 9; Sangli Nandan, 12 Cr.L.J. 495, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 170; Tulsi, 29 Cr.L.J. 259 (260), 107 I.C. 529, A.I.R. 1928 Pat. 249, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 543.

1214. Power to expunge remarks from Lower Court's judgment:—

In a Bombay case, a Sessions Judge in convicting the accused passed certain remarks about the complainant, a police officer, as a result of which he was dismissed from service. He thereupon applied to the High Court to delete the remarks from the judgment of the Sessions Judge. It was held, dismissing the application, that it would be an extraordinary exercise of the powers of the High Court, to expunge from the Lower Court's judgment the remarks complained of—Shidramayya, 19 Bom.L.R. 912, 19 Cr.L.J. 97, 43 I.C. 321. In an Allahabad case it was held that the High Court could not do so even under sec. 423 (d) read with sec. 439 because the 'amendment' mentioned in sec. 423 (d) means an amendment of the main order; and the incidental or consequential order means an order incidental to and consequential upon the main order; that is, the High Court could make an amendment or pass an incidental or consequential order only when there was an appeal or revision petition against the main order; but where the main order passed by the Lower Court had not been appealed against, the High Court could not entertain an application merely for expunging certain remarks made by the Lower Court in its judgment—Dunn, 44 All. 401 (405), 66 I.C. 1005, A.I.R. 1922 All. 107, 23 Cr.L.J. 349, 20 A.L.J. 261. But where there has been an appeal or revision petition against the order of the Lower Court, the High Court in dealing with the whole evidence of the case and considering the judgment can expunge any improper remarks made in it by the Court below. This will be evident from 2 C.W.N. 261; Lachchu, 1 O.L.J. 141, 15 Cr.L.J. 420, and Thomas Pellako, 14 I.C. 643, 5 Bur.L.T. 20. In Makava v. Kim Lat, 11 I.C. 1000, 4 Bur.L.T. 173, the Chief Court held that it had power to expunge the objectionable passage from the Lower Court's judgment, though it refused to do so.

But sec. 561A (newly added by the Amendment Act of 1923) gives inherent power to the High Court to make any order to secure the ends of justice, and thus to expunge any objectionable remarks from the Lower Court's judgment, irrespective of the fact whether there has or has not been an appeal or revision petition against the main order. Thus, in Amar Nath, 5 Lah. 476 (481), 26 Cr.L.J. 463, 85 I.C. 143, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 187, where a Sessions Judge made certain unwarranted remarks about the testimony of a Police witness, and that witness applied to the High Court in revision to expunge those remarks from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, the High Court directed those remarks to be expunged, although there was no revision petition in the main case in which that witness gave his evidence. So also, where one of two accused tried together by a Magistrate was acquitted, and the Sessions Judge, in an appeal preferred by the other accused against his conviction, passed certain remarks about the acquitted person impugning the correctness of the acquittal, and that person applied to the High Court to expunge those remarks, the High Court ordered the remarks, to be expunged, although no revision petition was made in the main case—Abdul Aziz, 25 Cr.L.J. 1245, 82 I.C. 173, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 129. See also Benarsi Das, 6 Lah. 166, 26 P.L.R. 315, 26 Cr.L.J. 1326, where the High Court expunged certain remarks in a Magistrate's judgment about a person who was not a party or a witness in the proceedings. See also Bhagat Singh, 35 P.L.R. 373, 36 Cr.L.J. 383, 153 I.C. 262. It may often be the duty of a Sessions Judge to comment adversely upon the conduct of an investigation. But great care should be taken, when it is necessary to do anything of this kind, that no disparaging or libellous remarks should be made upon any person who has had no opportunity to defend himself and who has not even appeared in the witness box. Where this was done the High Court allowed the judgment to stand subject to its comment without cutting it to rags by making excisions of objectionable remarks—Tejmal Naraindas, 34 Cr.L.J. 367 (368), 142 I.C. 587, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 91, 27 S.L.R. 13, 1933 Cr.C. 219, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 105. See also Note 1433A where recent rulings have been inserted.

According to the Bombay High Court the judgment in Dunn, supra, was right and has not been altered by the introduction of sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., and the High Court has no jurisdiction to expunge passages from the judgment of an inferior Court which has not been brought before it in regular appeal or revision—Rogers v. Shrinivas Gopal Kawale, 41 Cr.L.J. 855 (857), 190 I.C. 205, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 266, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 415, 42 Bom.L.R. 478.

See also Note 1433A where recent rulings have been inserted.

1215. Power to interfere in a pending case:—The High Court will, especially at an interlocutory stage, not interfere unless the impropriety is a flagrant one and prompt action is necessary to prevent an injustice—Hansraj Harjiwan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 390 (393), 1940 N.L.J. 449. Under section 435, the High Court can call for and examine the records of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court not only to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order of such Court, but also as to the regularity of any proceedings of that Court; and for that purpose it has power to interfere at any stage of the proceedings in a pending trial. Thus, it can interfere when the proceedings before the inferior Court have not proceeded any further beyond the issue of summons—Ramanathan v. Subrahmanya, 47 Mad. 722 (725), 81 I.C. 785, 20 M.L.W. 234, 1924 M.W.N. 556, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 39, 47 M.L.J. 373, 25 Cr.L.J. 1009; Nageshappa, 20 Bom. 543 (545). But where the trial has not proceeded beyond the stage of examination of only two witnesses, so that there has not been any finding, sentence or order nor there is any allegation of the proceedings being irregular, the High Court will not interfere—Sheo Saran v. Jitendra, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 571, 104 I.C. 254, 28 Cr.L.J. 814. What the High Court may properly be asked to do is to put right any incorrect or irregular or improper sentence or order which a Subordinate Court may have delivered or to check any such irregularity as sec. 537 does not condone. What the High Court should not be asked to do is to decide in first instance those questions which the Magistrate ought to decide for himself—Atmaram, 35 Cr.L.J. 891 (892), 148 I.C. 985, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 20, 1934 Cr.C. 218, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 25. The High Court can interfere with a case while it is still pending in the subordinate Court, and can quash the proceedings if the materials before the Magistrate disclose no offence and no useful purpose would be served by continuing the proceedings—Hari Charan v. Girish Chandra, 38 Cal. 68 (74), 13 C.L.J. 43, 11 Cr.L.J. 525; Maung Ba Yone v. Ma Hla Kin, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 297, 35 Cr.L.J. 52, 146 I.C. 402, 1933 Cr.C. 1128; Krishna Rao, 6 N.L.J. 119, 73 I.C. 335, 24 Cr.L.J. 591, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 47. See also Kumud Nath v. Brojendra Nath, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 647, 35 Cr.L.J. 29, 146 I.C. 366, 1933 Cr.C. 1057, where the High Court entertained revisional application for quashing the proceedings when the accused were able to give a sufficient explanation of the delay that had taken place before the High Court was moved. The High Court will interfere to quash proceedings in cases where it is clear that interference is necessary and where no offence has obviously been committed—Krishnarao, 35 Cr.L.J. 230, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 409 (411), 35 Bom.L.R. 845, 1933 Cr.C. 1173, 57 Bom. 690, 146 I.C. 688. The High Court seldom interferes in the preliminary stage with the discretion of the Magistrate taking action under the preventive sections of the Cr. P. Code, but when the materials on which the orders are based are clearly insufficient to support those orders the High Court feels bound to interfere in the preliminary stage—Najar Chandra, 38 C.L.J. 198, 28 C.W.N. 23, 25 Cr.L.J. 189, 76 I.C. 429, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 114. The power is to be exercised with great care and is generally exercised not only when the error is patent on the face of the record, but also when grave injustice would result unless prompt redress were given—Murtiza Khan, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 138, 1934 Cr.C. 569. Only in exceptional circumstances will the High Court interfere in revision in pending cases. To justify such interference would require that on the face of the proceedings there should appear some clear injustice requiring immediate redress—Amirbux, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 183, 1934 Cr.C. 1378, 36 Cr.L.J. 331, 153 I.C. 230, following Mahomed v. Mahomed Idris, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 328, 88 I.C. 189, 26 Cr.L.J. 1101, 18 S.L.R. 274; Muridhar v. Narandas, A.I.R. 1914 Sind 85, 27 I.C. 205, 16 Cr.L.J. 141, 8 S.L.R. 143; and Jwandas, A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 31, 53 I.C. 492, 20 Cr.L.J. 746; Iqbal Begum v. Iqbal Hussain, 40 P.L.R. 776. So far as the Sind Court is concerned, it has consistently refused to interfere at an interlocutory stage of a criminal proceeding save where exceptional circumstances called for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, for example, when it was apparent on the face of the record that there was no ground at all for the institution of criminal proceedings or for the continuation of such proceedings already instituted—Jumo Machhi, 41 Cr.L.J. 568 (570), 188 I.C. 306, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 65, 1940 Kar. 157. The High Court can interfere at as early a stage as when the accused has been summoned to show cause why sanction (under sec. 195) should not be granted for his prosecution—Jagan Singh, 1892 A.W.N. 102; Chandha, 14 A.L.J. 851, 19 Cr.L.J. 46. The High Court can interfere with the proceedings of a Magistrate while they are in the interlocutory stage pending investigation, and may suspend such proceedings, even without having the record before it—Abdool Kadir, 20 W.R. 23. The High Court can, pending trial, interfere with the interlocutory order of a Magistrate refusing to summon certain witnesses for the defence—Ravel Singh, 1901 P.L.R. 130. The High Court can interfere pending trial when the Subordinate Magistrate improperly declines to take any evidence or to allow cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and arbitrarily follows a procedure of his own—Durga Dutt, 10 A.L.J. 144, 13 Cr.L.J. 443 (444). Where the Magistrate has decided that no evidence for the prosecution is necessary to prove the offence, the High Court can interfere at an interlocutory stage in order to determine whether it is necessary for the prosecution to adduce evidence of the offence—Lurindaram v. Karachi Municipality, 8 S.L.R. 238, 16 Cr.L.J. 255, 28 I.C. 111. If a charge is framed where no charge should have been framed, the proceeding of the Magistrate becomes irregular, and the High Court has power to interfere, under this section as well as under sec. 561A, during the pendency of the case to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court and to secure the ends of justice by setting aside the charge—Gokul Prasad v. Devi Prasad, 23 A.L.J. 21, 86 I.C. 284, A.I.R. 1925 All. 311, 26 Cr.L.J. 748 (749); C. S. Joseph, 41 C.W.N. 251 (252); Ramaswami Mudaliar, 47 M.L.W. 136, 1938 M.W.N. 217, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 310. But the High Court will not stop proceedings in a trial merely because the accused cited as one of his witnesses a person on whom process cannot be served and who cannot be examined on commission—Fazal Rahman Khan, 37 Cr.L.J. 618, 162 I.C. 270, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 101, 1936 Cr.C. 311. The High Court will not interfere at a preliminary stage on the ground of misjoinder of charges based upon a criticism of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses whose cross-examination has been reserved—C. S. Joseph, supra. The High Court has power to examine the proceedings of the Lower Court at the stage when a charge is framed, and, if necessary, to set aside the charge and quash the proceedings if no offence appears to have been committed—Tarak Singh, 29 P.L.R. 237, 103 I.C. 835, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 447, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 731, 28 Cr.L.J. 755 (756); Harendra v. Jolish, 40 C.L.J. 283, 52 Cal. 188, 85 I.C. 641, and that person applied to the High Court to expunge those remarks, the High Court ordered the remarks, to be expunged, although no revision petition was made in the main case—Abdul Aziz, 25 Cr.L.J. 1245, 82 I.C. 173, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 129. See also Benarsi Das, 6 Lah. 166, 26 P.L.R. 315, 26 Cr.L.J. 1326, where the High Court expunged certain remarks in a Magistrate's judgment about a person who was not a party or a witness in the proceedings. See also Bhagat Singh, 35 P.L.R. 373, 36 Cr.L.J. 383, 153 I.C. 262. It may often be the duty of a Sessions Judge to comment adversely upon the conduct of an investigation. But great care should be taken, when it is necessary to do anything of this kind, that no disparaging or libellous remarks should be made upon any person who has had no opportunity to defend himself and who has not even appeared in the witness box. Where this was done the High Court allowed the judgment to stand subject to its comment without cutting it to rags by making excisions of objectionable remarks—Tejmal Naraindas, 34 Cr.L.J. 367 (368), 142 I.C. 587, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 91, 27 S.L.R. 13, 1933 Cr.C. 219, Ind. Rul 1933 Sind 105. See also Note 1433A where recent rulings have been inserted.

According to the Bombay High Court the judgment in Dunn, supra, was right and has not been altered by the introduction of sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., and the High Court has no jurisdiction to expunge passages from the judgment of an inferior Court which has not been brought before it in regular appeal or revision—*Rogers v. 1215. Power to interfere in a pending case:—The High Court will, especially at an interlocutory stage, not interfere unless the impropriety is a flagrant one and prompt action is necessary to prevent an injustice—Hansraj Harjiwan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 390 (393), 1940 N.L.J. 449. Under section 435, the High Court can call for and examine the records of any proceeding of an inferior Criminal Court not only to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order of such Court, but also as to the regularity of any proceedings of that Court; and for that purpose it has power to interfere at any stage of the proceedings in a pending trial. Thus, it can interfere when the proceedings before the inferior Court have not proceeded any further beyond the issue of summons—*Ramanathan v. A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 100, 26 Cr.L.J. 545 (547); Amar Nath, 10 Lah.L.J. 485, 113 I.C. 536, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 945, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 184, 30 Cr.L.J. 162 (163); Bishen Das, 1910 P.R. 33, 8 I.C. 1161 (1165), 12 Cr.L.J. 50; Tahiru v. Jallu, 9 Lah.L.J. 440, 106 I.C. 224, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 825, 28 Cr.L.J. 1040. The High Court can interfere in revision with a pending proceeding where a criminal charge is unsustainable on the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. It is the duty of the High Court to interfere where the facts proved do not constitute an offence and the continuance of the trial would be an abuse of the process of the Court—Abdul Rahim Khan v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 753 (754), 189 I.C. 579, 1940 N.L.J. 183, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 360. Where the trial was a vexatious and protracted one, and material injury was thereby likely to be caused to the accused, the High Court interfered during the pendency of the trial and set aside the charge in order to prevent further harassment of the accused—In re Kuppuswami, 39 Mad. 561, 28 M.L.J. 505, 16 Cr.L.J. 477; Chandi v. Abdur Rahaman, 22 Cal. 131; Shripad, 52 Bom. 151, 108 I.C. 37, 30 Bom.L.R. 70, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 184, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 563, 29 Cr.L.J. 317 (318); Choa Lal v. Anant, 25 Cal. 233 (234). Where the notice and the preliminary order of a Magistrate under sec. 112 were defective and could not form the basis of a proceeding under sec. 110, the High Court interfered and set aside the proceedings so far taken by the Magistrate—Bahadur Singh, 1910 P.W.R. 18, 11 Cr.L.J. 388.

But though the High Court has power to interfere with pending proceedings at any stage, it will not do so except only under rare and exceptional circumstances—Choa Lal v. Anant Pershad, 25 Cal. 233; Inamulla, 2 A.L.J. 673, 2 Cr.L.J. 790; Salamatrai, 9 Cr.L.J. 270, 1 S.L.R. 30; In re Kuppuswami, 39 Mad. 561, 16 Cr.L.J. 477; Mahomed v. Muhammad Idris, 26 Cr.L.J. 1001, 88 I.C. 189, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 328, 18 S.L.R. 274; Madhab, 26 Cr.L.J. 1093, 88 I.C. 181, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 345; Ghanshamdas, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 412, 35 Cr.L.J. 519, 1933 Cr.C. 1545; Raghunath, 34 Cr.L.J. 956, 145 I.C. 400, 1933 A.L.J. 30, A.I.R. 1933 All. 211, 1933 Cr.C. 367; Nana Sadoba v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283, 1938 N.L.J. 90, 179 I.C. 317, 40 Cr.L.J. 197. It is only in exceptional instances that the High Court will interfere with the action of a subordinate Court in respect of any pending case, especially when such a case has reached the stage where a charge has been drawn and only the defence of the accused remains to be heard. No hard and fast rule can be laid down on the subject, because the interference of the High Court should be regulated by the particular circumstances of each case, but speaking generally, it is inadvisable to interfere in a pending case, unless there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent on the face of the proceeding and calling for prompt redress—Jagat Chandra, 26 Cal. 786 (790); Manilal v. Kamberali, 22 S.L.R. 79, 103 I.C. 100, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 231, 28 Cr.L.J. 644. The High Court will allow the proceedings in the subordinate Court to go on and take their course and will not interfere with a pending proceeding, even though it is irregularly conducted, unless there is exceptional ground for interference—Choa Lal v. Anant, 25 Cal. 233 (234); Sami Goundan, 20 L.W. 937, 85 I.C. 37, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 315, 26 Cr.L.J. 421 (422); Varumal, 34 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050), A.I.R. 1933 Sind 169, 1933 Cr.C. 533, 145 I.C. 617. A safe and practical test to determine if the High Court would interfere is to see whether a bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument would suffice to persuade the High Court that the case was a fit one for interference—Varumal, supra. Ordinarily, if the Magistrate has ordered an accused to be tried, the trial must proceed. But when the High Court is satisfied that an accused is being prosecuted without there being any material before the Magistrate for his prosecution, it will be abdication of its function if it did not interfere to stop patent injustice calling for a prompt redress—Raghunath, 33 Cr.L.J. 349 (355), 136 I.C. 842, 12 P.L.T. 937, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 72, 1932 Cr.C. 136, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 129. It has been the invariable practice of the High Court not to interfere with the proceedings in the Court of a Magistrate just after the issue of summons on the accused save in one contingency, and only one. That contingency is, that the complaint on the face of it does not disclose any offence—Jhamandas v. Khem Chand, 34 Cr.L.J. 884, 145 I.C. 136, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 196, 1933 Cr.C. 711, 27 S.L.R. 214; Gul Mohammad v. Emp., 39

P.L.R. 957. Where no offence has been committed, the proceedings must be set aside as an abuse of the process of the Criminal Court, even after the framing of the charge—Wasinda Ram v. Bahadarkhan, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 434, 35 P.L.R. 361, 152 I.C. 224, A.L.R. 1934 Lah. 630, 1934 Cr.C. 697. It is impossible as well as undesirable to lay down any hard and fast rule to determine whether any particular case is of such an exceptional nature as to call for the interference of the High Court during its pendency; but one safe practical test would be this, namely, that bare statement of the facts of the case without any elaborate argument should be sufficient to convince the High Court that it is a fit one for its interference at an intermediate stage. If it is contended by the accused that the offence charged against him is a civil wrong rather than a criminal trespass, obviously that question cannot be determined by the High Court on the bare facts of the case without a lengthy or elaborate argument, and the High Court cannot, therefore, intervene during the pendency of the case and set aside the charge—Choa Lal v. Anant, 25 Cal 233 (235); Kula Singh; 32 Cr.L.J. 782 (784), 131 I.C. 785, 12 P.L.T. 69, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 140, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 225, 1931 Cr.C. 336, 10 Pat. 596; Donlea v. Mrs. Donlea, 32 Cr.L.J. 145, 128 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 881, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 78, 1930 Cr.C. 977, 31 P.L.R. 809. The fact that the case against the accused is a weak one is no ground for quashing the charge in revision—Nand Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 82, 140 I.C. 807, 33 P.L.R. 231, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 349, 1932 Cr.C. 446. See also U. Nyo Sein, 36 Cr.L.J. 1293, 158 I.C. 33, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 292, 1935 Cr.C. 988; Parmesshahi Dayal v. Gumam Ram, 40 P.L.R. 311.

Power to quash proceedings at the outset is vested in the High Court and will in proper cases be exercised. But it is a power of which the High Court make a circumspect and sparing use. The rule is that on the face of the proceedings there must appear some infraction or evasion of law calling for prompt redress—Kalumal v. Kissu-mal, 36 Cr.L.J. 881, 156 I.C. 219, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 81, 1935 Cr.C. 367. There is little doubt that the High Court has power to interfere in any case and at any stage of it but this proposition must be made subject to certain limitations. Ordinarily, the High Court will not interfere at an interlocutory stage of criminal proceedings in a Subordinate Court but the High Court is under an imperative obligation to interfere in order to prevent the harassment of a subject of the Crown by an illegal prosecution. It would also interfere whenever there is any exceptional and extraordinary reason for doing so. One of the tests to apply in order to determine whether any particular case is of that exceptional nature or not is to see whether a bare statement of facts of the case should be sufficient to convince the High Court that it is a fit case for its interference at an intermediate stage. Another test to be applied is to see whether in the admitted circumstances of the case it would be a mock trial if the case is allowed to proceed—Abdul Wali, 35 Cr.L.J. 148 (149), 146 I.C. 661, 10 O.W.N. 807, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 387, 1933 Cr.C. 1088. The High Court will not interrupt the course of a trial by interfering with a decision of a Magistrate that he has jurisdiction in a case. If the High Court has to decide in the midst of the trial held in a Magistrate's Court as to whether he has jurisdiction or not, it would be interfering in a most improper manner on a point which may conclusively have to be decided on appeal—Kashi Ram v. Dikshut, 1 Luck. 48, 3 O.W.N. 104, 27 Cr.L.J. 191. But if on the face of complaint the offence alleged against an accused person appears not to have been committed within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the complaint is filed, then it would certainly be the duty of the High Court to interfere and save waste of public time and needless expense—Saleh Sumar, 34 Cr.L.J. 364, 142 I.C. 590, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 88, 1933 Cr.C. 216, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 104. The High Court will rarely interfere in the midst of a trial and order commitment, unless it is shown that the failure on the part of the Magistrate to commit is extremely improper—Blodar, 13 O.L.J. 490, 3 O.W.N. 201, 27 Cr.L.J. 417 (418). The High Court will interfere with a pending trial only when it is satisfied that an interference is necessary and that any delay in the rectification of the error will cause waste of time or a miscarriage of justice—Sobha Ram, 1904 P.R. 8. Where the delay in the disposal of a case is not due to the complainant, proceedings should not be quashed—

Mohan v. Khan Mohammad, 28 Cr.L.J. 164, 99 I.C. 596, 8 Lah L.J. 518, 27 P.L.R. 705, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 66.

The High Court will interfere in a pending case when the balance of convenience is in favour of deciding the points—Nana Sadoba, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 283, 1938 N.L.J. 90, 179 I.C. 317, 40 Cr.L.J. 197 (198).

Where a Magistrate, making inquiry preliminary to commitment to the Court of Session, admits certain document, the High Court will not interfere in the stage of preliminary inquiry for if the case is committed for trial, it will rest upon the trial Court independently to decide upon the admissibility of the evidence—Rama Rao v. Venkataramayya, 58 Mad. 430, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 257, 1934 M.W.N. 1173, 41 M.L.W. 280, 68 M.L.J. 282, distinguishing Ponruswami, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 372, 1933 Cr.C. 555, 143 I.C. 424, 34 Cr.L.J. 582, 56 Mad. 475.

1216. Power to enhance sentence:—This is a power which is not conferred by sec. 423, and the High Court can exercise this power not as an Appellate Court, but only in revision. Thus, in an appeal against a conviction by a prisoner, the High Court dismissed the appeal as an Appellate Court, but enhanced the sentence as a Court of Revision—Mehter Ali, 11 Cal. 530. The effect of secs. 423 and 439 read together is that the High Court when hearing an appeal against a conviction may alter the finding under sec. 423, and then as a Court of Revision may enhance the sentence under this section so as to make the sentence appropriate to the altered finding—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (123). Ordinarily it is for Government to move the High Court to enhance a sentence, but if the attention of Government is not drawn to a particular matter which requires their attention, that is, so far as the High Court can see, no reason why it should not do its duty and exercise powers conferred on it by law—Haji Khamoo, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 233 (235), 38 Cr.L.J. 114, 165 I.C. 933. A District Magistrate or Sessions Judge or the Government pleader may draw the attention of the High Court to a sentence with a view to its being enhanced. The High Court may also of its own motion send for the record and take action with a like object. But it is not a private complainant to apply to the High Court for this purpose. If he considers a sentence unduly lenient, he should draw the attention of the Government to the fact—In re Nagji Dula, 48 Bom. 358 (360), 26 Bom L.R. 182, 25 Cr.L.J. 966; Lakhi v. Raju, 19 S.L.R. 64; Nga San v. Nga Ye, 5 Bur.L.J. 1, 27 Cr.L.J. 818. But the High Court is always reluctant to enhance sentences suo motu—Mianji Khan v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Pesh. 49 (51). The Calcutta High Court is of opinion that a private complainant may make an application to the High Court for enhancement of sentence where a grossly inadequate sentence has been passed which deserves to be enhanced, and the High Court has power to issue a Rule on such application; but it is a safe practice to interfere on such applications made on behalf of private complainants. But if a rule has been issued, the High Court should go into the facts and ascertain whether the sentence should be enhanced—Pramatha v. Ganga Charan, 33 C.W.N. 395 (398), 30 Cr.L.J. 979, 118 I.C. 894, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 340, Ind. Rul 1929 Cal. 702, 56 Cal. 964. In this case, the High Court, after considering the facts, enhanced the sentence even though the Crown did not appear in support of the Rule. But in another case, where a Rule was issued on the application of a private complainant, but the Crown did not appear, the High Court refused to enhance the sentence (although it was considered to be inadequate) and discharged the Rule. "Had the application been made at the instance of the Crown, I should have been more inclined to enhance the sentence"—Ali Akbbar v. Kasem, 33 C.W.N. 605 (608), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 785, 50 C.L.J. 176, 121 I.C. 305, 1929 Cr.C. 439 (virtually dissenting from 33 C.W.N. 395).

Where an accused's revision petition against his conviction has been dismissed, the High Court can entertain a second revision petition from the complainant or a reference from a District Magistrate (sec. 438) for enhancement of the sentence. The disposal of the first revision petition is no bar to the disposal of the second revision petition or reference, though arising out of the same original trial, because the Judges disposing of the revision petition filed by a convicted person against the propriety of his conviction cannot be said to be adjudicating on the question of enhancing the sentence, so that the matter of the second proceeding cannot be said to be of the nature of res judicata so as to violate sec. 369. It cannot be accepted as a sound principle that once the High Court has passed an order in a criminal revision, it is functus officio and is precluded from entertaining any further revision petition or reference or from proceeding suo motu, in respect of another aspect of the case—In re Saiyed Anif, 26 Cr.L.J. 583 (585, 586), 85 I.C. 727, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 993; Jorabhai, 50 Bom. 783, 27 Cr.L.J. 1173 (1175), 97 I.C. 805, 28 Bom.L.R. 1051, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 555.

And conversely, when a Sessions Judge has reported a conviction to the High Court for the purpose of enhancing the sentence and the High Court rejected the reference, it is not precluded from entertaining a subsequent revision petition presented by the accused against his conviction—Kohina Ram, 45 All. 11, 23 Cr.L.J. 496.

Generally the cases in which the powers of the High Court to enhance the sentence have been exercised are those in which the records have been called for by the High Court or which have been reported to it, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge on a perusal of the returns from the subordinate Courts. But when the case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal being filed by the accused against his conviction, it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time for enhancement of the sentence. It is incongruous that the Court should in the same breath admit the appeal, and should call upon the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The proper procedure is to deal first with the appeal, and then to consider whether a notice to enhance the sentence should issue—Mangal Naran, 49 Bom. 450, 27 Bom.L.R. 355, 26 Cr.L.J. 968 (969). See also Modkia, 33 Cr.L.J. 728, 139 I.C. 63, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 73, Ind. Rul. 1932 Nag. 85, 1932 Cr.C. 346. But see Note 1221.

The High Court has power to enhance a sentence so as to alter its nature—Ram Kuria, 6 All. 622. Thus, where a Sessions Judge convicted the accused of culpable homicide not amounting to murder and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, the High Court in revision altered the conviction into one of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life—Golam Muhammad, 1871 P.R. 11. Where the Sessions Judge convicted the accused of murder but sentenced him to transportation for life, and the murder appeared to be singularly brutal, the High Court in revision enhanced the sentence of transportation to a sentence of death—Duarka, 4 O.W.N. 977, 105 I.C. 804, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 136, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 588, 28 Cr.L.J. 980 (982). See Local Government v. Sitrya, 34 Cr.L.J. 1168, 146 I.C. 118, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 307, 1933 Cr.C. 1265.

An application by a private complainant for enhancement of sentence will not be entertained by the High Court except in extreme cases, e.g., where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is wholly inadequate—Debi Singh v. Ram Charan, 30 Cr.L.J. 219, 113 I.C. 768, A.I.R. 1928 All. 419; Khuda Baksh v. Feroz Din, 30 Cr.L.J. 300, 114 I.C. 442, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 282, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 531; Nagji Dula, 25 Cr.L.J. 966, 48 Bom. 358, 26 Bom.L.R. 182, 81 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 320; Ala Mohammad v. Khanu, 39 P.L.R. 659. It is a safe working rule not to interfere on petitions for enhancement of sentences passed on accused persons made on behalf of private complainants. But where a rule has been issued by the High Court, it is its obvious duty to go into the facts and ascertain for itself whether in the circumstances of the case, the sentence should be enhanced—Pramatha Nath Basu v. Ganga Charan Chakravarty, 30 Cr.L.J. 979, 118 I.C. 894, 33 C.W.N. 393, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 340, Ind. Rul. 1929 Cal. 702, 56 Cal. 964. It is the part of the Crown, not of individuals, to ask Court to enhance sentences passed upon criminal offenders—Hanuman Prasad v. Mathura Prasad, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 421, 35 Cr.L.J. 118, 146 I.C. 577, 35 Cr.L.J. 118, 6 R.O. 145, 1933 Cr.C. 1294, 10 O.W.N. 903, following Jadunandan, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 321, 4 O.W.N. 699, 104 I.C. 242, 28 Cr.L.J. 802, 2 Luck. 805. The High Court has power to enhance the sentence of an accused on the application of a private person. But it is the part of the Crown and not of individuals to ask Courts to enhance sentences. Where the applicants' application for enhancement of the opposite parties' sentences was rejected by the District Magistrate, the head of the Magistracy in the district, it shows that an enhancement of the sentences was not considered necessary in the interests of justice—Som Nath, 40 Cr.L.J. 181, 179 I.C. 250, 14 Luck. 401, 11 R.O. 153, 1939 A.Cr.C. 28, 1939 O.L.R. 9, 1938 A.W.R. (C.C.) 144, 1938 O.W.N. 1366, 1939 O.A. 101, A.I.R. 1939 Oudh 54. But see Man Singh v. Reoti, 32 Cr.L.J. 312, 129 I.C. 444, 1930 A.L.J. 1324, A.I.R. 1931 All. 13, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 172, 53 All. 223, 1931 Cr.C. 13; and M. T. Das v. E. D. Aboo, 32 Cr.L.J. 353, 129 I.C. 510, 8 Rang. 578, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 52, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 78, 1931 Cr.C. 175, where a contrary view was taken. In most cases the High Court should refuse to entertain an application for enhancement of sentence from a private complainant where Government has not seen fit to move. But there is no absolute rule, and in a case where there is manifestly a ground for interference beyond all reasonable doubt, it matters not whether the case comes before the High Court of its own motion or at the instance of a private prosecutor or through any other channel whatever, and the High Court will interfere. The High Court does not regard the question of enhancement only from the point of view of public interest but from the circumstances of the particular case before it—Shankar Shrivani v. Rama Adu, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 276, 1940 N.L.J. 389, 189 I.C. 731, 41 Cr.L.J. 793.

The High Court is as a rule loath to entertain, in ordinary circumstances, an application in revision from private parties asking the High Court to convict the accused of the offences of which they have been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and to enhance the sentences passed upon them. But where there are in a case clear indications that the accused party has been defying law and disobeying the orders, both of the Civil and of the Criminal Courts, and has been repeatedly creating trouble in the locality for many years past, the High Court should entertain the application—Ambika Thakur v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 611 (620), 18 Pat. 544, 1939 P.W.N. 747, 41 Cr.L.J. 191, 21 P.L.T. 45, 185 I.C. 529.

The application for enhancement must be looked at askance by the High Court where it is made by a complainant direct and is opposed by the Counsel for the Crown. It would only be a very extraordinary case that the High Court would enhance under these conditions. It may well be true that the complainant has been put to considerable expense in prosecuting the case. The Criminal Courts, however, cannot guarantee to reimburse a complainant by infliction of a heavy penalty on the accused. This is rather the function of a Civil Court—Bhagolelal v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 734, 189 I.C. 382, 1940 N.L.J. 309, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 249.

An enhancement of sentence is a serious proceeding, and the High Court will not interfere as a Court of Revision in order to enhance the sentence if the sentence passed by the Lower Court involves substantial punishment, and should interfere only if the sentence is manifestly inadequate—Dhana Lal, 29 Cr.L.J. 764 (766), 110 I.C. 796, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 951, 11 A.I.Cr.R. 15; Sitaram, 12 O.L.J. 421, 2 O.W.N. 550, 26 Cr.L.J. 1364; Ghura, 6 O.W.N. 43, 30 Cr.L.J. 544, 10 S.L.R. 207; Parlo, A.I.R. 1917 Sind 46, 40 I.C. 708, 18 Cr.L.J. 708, 10 S.L.R. 207; Mubarak, A.I.R. 1934 Sind 157, 1934 Cr.C. 1149, 152 I.C. 872, 35 Cr.L.J. 218; Fauja, 32 Cr.L.J. 539, 130 I.C. 432, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 31, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 304, 32 P.L.R. 273, 1931 Cr.C. 95; Ram Sarup, 32 Cr.L.J. 943, 132 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 132, 32 P.L.R. 5, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 625, 1931 Cr.C. 280; Dukhala, 15 N.L.R. 46; Bhola Nath, 33 Cr.L.J. 365, 136 I.C. 729, 33 P.L.R. 49, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 199, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 265, 1932 Cr.C. 220; Kalla, 16 N.L.J. 194, 35 Cr.L.J. 760, 148 I.C. 884, A.I.R. 1934 Nag. 117. Though it is competent to the High Court to enhance the sentence in revision, it will only do so for exceptional reasons. Where a sentence passed is substantial even though inadequate, it will not be enhanced in revision—Manna Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 720 (722), 169 I.C. 171, 9 R.L. 720, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 215, following Dharam Singh v. Emp., 108 I.C. 162, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 507, 29 Cr.L.J. 343, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 557. Unless there is something that is manifestly wrong with the sentence, unless it is clearly out of proportion to the offence, if it is within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate and he has exercised his discretion, no interference in revision should take place—Sheikh Gulzar, 35 Cr.L.J. 1327, 151 I.C. 361, 15 P.L.T. 196, 13 Pat. 63, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 214, 1934 Cr.C. 440, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 68. It is not the practice of the High Court to enhance the sentence if it is otherwise substantial even if the superior Court might have originally awarded a higher sentence—Martin, 35 Cr.L.J. 1453 (1455), 151 I.C. 924, 1934 Cr.C. 172, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 89. The High Court is slow to interfere where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail, though that circumstance is no insuperable obstacle—Das, 36 Cr.L.J. 414, 153 I.C. 449, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 613, 35 P.L.R. 527, following Chunni Lal, 7 P.R. 1889 (Cr.). It is not the practice of the High Court to interfere where the sentence, though on the light side, is substantial—Tayab, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 975, 36 P.L.R. 184, 1934 Cr.C. 1357; Ghulam Haidar v. Emp., 39 P.L.R. 11. The High Court has full authority to enhance any sentence, if it considers that the sentence passed in the Lower Court is improper. Each case will depend on its own merits—Mewa, 36 Cr.L.J. 1001, 156 I.C. 786, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 337, 1935 Cr.C. 571. And for this purpose the High Court should see whether there is matter on the record of the case showing that the sentence passed, is clearly inadequate to the offence—Mahadco, 26 Cr.L.J. 821 (824), 85 I.C. 469, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 321; Hurnath, 20 W.R. 22. The High Court will be reluctant to enhance the sentence passed by the Sessions Court except on very serious grounds. It will not enhance the sentence when the Public Prosecutor in the Sessions Court has allowed the Court to pass the sentence it did without any serious attempt to modify it—Kassim, 17 S.L.R. 268, 83 I.C. 881, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 188, 26 Cr.L.J. 177. See also Haji Khamoo, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 233 (235), 1936 Cr.C. 1089, 165 I.C. 933. The mere fact that the High Court would have inflicted a heavier punishment if the case had come before it for trial, is not a proper ground for enhancement of sentence, especially if the sentence passed by the Magistrate is a substantial one—Khana, 29 Cr.L.J. 276, 107 I.C. 759, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 504 (Lah.); Budha, 48 P.L.R. 1919, 8 P.W.R. 1919 (Cr.), 1919 P.R. 7, 20 Cr.L.J. 212, 49 I.C. 772; Sitaram, supra; Kassim, supra; Bhola Nath, supra; Inderchand, A.I.R. 1934 Bom 471 (474), 36 Bom.L.R. 954, 1934 Cr.C. 1343, 36 Cr.L.J. 351, 153 I.C. 525, Das, supra; Manna Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 720 (722), 169 I.C. 171, 9 R.L. 720, A.I.R. 1937 Lah 215. The power to enhance sentences should be sparingly exercised by the High Court and sentences should be enhanced only in cases where the failure to enhance the sentence would lead to a serious miscarriage of justice. The mere fact that the High Court, had it been trying the case, might have imposed the capital sentence, is not a sufficient reason for enhancement—Uttam Singh Sochet Singh v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 502 (504), I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 347, 174 I.C. 949, 10 R.L. 644, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 260, 40 P.L.R. 982. If a public servant is proved to have taken bribes, exemplary punishment should be awarded. Where in such a case the sentence inflicted by the lower Court was inadequate, the High Court would enhance the sentence—Jhangir, 29 Bom.L.R. 996, 106 I.C. 100, A.I.R. 1927 Bom 501, A.I.Cr.R. 324, 28 Cr.L.J. 1012 (1018). But the High Court will not interfere in a case where a sentence has been passed by the Magistrate on a consideration of all the circumstances of the case and no question of principle is involved, even though the sentence appears to be lenient. Even in cases of communal disturbance, the Government should refrain from appealing to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court for enhancement of sentence, unless violence has been done to some general principle which requires immediate and authoritative interference—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447), 108 I.C. 557, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 305, A.I.R. 1928 All. 287.

Where the judgment is perverse on the question of sentence the High Court ought to interfere—Sardara, 33 Cr.L.J. 500, 137 I.C. 716, 33 P.L.R. 215, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 258, 1932 Cr.C. 323, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 346.

Where the fact of previous conviction was brought to the notice of the Magistrate at the commencement of the trial, but he paid no attention to it, the High Court would interfere to enhance the sentence, but if the previous conviction was not a recent one but took place nearly 3 years prior to the present offence, and there was nothing against the accused during the period that intervened, the High Court would not think it necessary to enhance the sentence—Prcm, 27 A.L.J. 397, 30 Cr.L.J. 529 (530), 115 I.C. 858, A.I.R. 1929 All. 270, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 468. Also, where the fact of previous conviction which was known to the prosecution was not at all brought to the notice of the Magistrate through the negligence of the prosecution, the High Court will not interfere to enhance the sentence. To permit the prosecution to plead their own negligence and to harass the accused with further proceedings directed towards the enhancement of the sentence, would be to put a premium on the negligence of the prosecution—Bashir, 30 Cr.L.J. 505 (506), 115 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1929 All. 267, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 390; Gul, 1902 P.R. 21, 1902 P.L.R. 144; Hyoth Mastan, 2 Weir 574. A fortiori, the High Court would interfere to enhance the sentence, where the previous conviction was not known to the prosecution at the time of trial, but was discovered after the conviction—Maidhan, 1905 P.R. 19, 2 Cr.L.J. 228; Nur Mahammad, 1905 P.R. 43, 3 Cr.L.J. 341.

The High Court does not generally interfere in revision to enhance the sentence when the convicted person has undergone the full term of his imprisonment or has paid the fine imposed upon him, even though the order of the Court below is clearly wrong in law—Hari Singh, 1913 P.W.R. 29, 14 Cr.L.J. 599 (600); Jagat Singh, 1 Lah. 453, 21 Cr.L.J. 557. The High Court is slow to interfere in cases where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail—Chuni Lal, 1889 P.R. 7. But the test in each case is, whether the sentence inflicted by the trying Court involves substantial punishment. The High Court will not interfere if adequate punishment has been inflicted; but if the sentence is manifestly inadequate, it is competent to the High Court to impose an additional punishment, even though the accused has served out the whole of the imprisonment inflicted by the lower Court—Chuni Lal, supra; Shankar Narayan, 28 Bom.L.R. 300, 93 I.C. 1053, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 256, 27 Cr.L.J. 557 (558); Jagat Singh, supra; Shahzad Ahmad, 30 Cr.L.J. 240 (241), 114 I.C. 72, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 961, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 232. Where the Magistrate's order was proper on the materials before him, the sentence should not be enhanced in revision on the ground of previous conviction being disclosed; it is not fair to the accused to reverse the conviction and direct him to be committed to the Sessions, after he has undergone the full term of imprisonment inflicted by the Magistrate, merely because his previous convictions were not known at the time of his trial by the Magistrate—Usman, 17 Cr.L.J. 3, 9 S.L.R. 95. The High Court will not interfere to enhance the sentence, after a long period has elapsed—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447), 108 I.C. 567, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 305, A.I.R. 1928 All. 287.

The power of enhancement conferred on the High Court under sec. 439 is limited only by clause (3) of this section. This clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrate under sec. 32, but lays down that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under sec. 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that might have been inflicted by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. Therefore the High Court has power to enhance the sentence of imprisonment to two years—Kamal, 9 S.L.R. 82, 16 Cr.L.J. 712. See also Mahomed Yousif, 34 Cr.L.J. 618, 143 I.C. 605, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 87, 1933 Cr.C. 215, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 131. The High Court has the power to inflict any punishment which might have been inflicted for the offence by a first class Magistrate, and is not limited to the powers of the trying Magistrate—Jagat Singh, 1 Lah. 453, 21 Cr.L.J. 557, 56 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1920 Lah. 213. The power of the High Court to enhance sentences does not depend upon the powers which the trial Court may have with regard to sentences. Under cl. (3) of this section where the case was originally tried by a Magistrate acting otherwise than under s. 34, Cr. P. C., the powers of the High Court are limited but they are not limited if the case was originally tried by a Magistrate acting under sec. 34. If there is no limitation upon the power of the High Court to enhance sentences passed by Magistrates acting under sec. 34, there can also be no limitation on its power in dealing with sentences passed by the Assistant Sessions Judges. In the absence of express words limiting the powers of the High Court in cases of sentences passed by Assistant Sessions Judges the High Court can enhance such sentence up to the maximum sentence prescribed by law for the offence—Ram Nath, 37 Cr L.J. 49 (53), 159 I.C. 290, A.I.R. 1935 All 989, 1935 Cr C 1219; Raja Ram, 36 Cr L.J. 454, 154 I.C. 93, 1935 O.W.N. 140, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 239, 1935 O.L.R. 109. The words 'enhance the sentence' presuppose that a sentence has been imposed by the Lower Court. Therefore, where no sentence has been passed by the trying Magistrate but the accused has been released on probation under sec. 562, the High Court cannot substitute a sentence of imprisonment or whipping in revision—Nux Khan, 48 I.C. 979, 20 Cr.L.J. 99 (Oudh); Ghasite, 37 All. 31, 12 A.L.J. 1244, 16 Cr L.J. 43.

Where a Magistrate convicted an accused under sec. 325 and sentenced him to a fine only although there should have been a substantive sentence of imprisonment, held that notwithstanding that the sentence was irregular the High Court should not interfere under its revisional powers which were intended for the redress of genuine grievances and not of mere formal defects—Ramchander v. Ram Belas, 34 Cr L.J. 407, 142 I.C. 624, 14 P.L.T. 71, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pat. 161, A I R 1933 Pat. 179, 1933 Cr C. 510.

Lastly, the power of enhancement of sentence can be exercised under this section where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is a legal one. A retrospective sentence of imprisonment for the period already passed by the accused in the lock-up is not a legal sentence—Asghar Ali, 1919 P.R. 27, 20 Cr L.J. 684, 52 I.C. 604.

Where an application is made to the High Court for enhancement of sentence of transportation on a conviction for murder, the proper test to be applied is whether the only sentence which could be passed on the evidence is a sentence of death. There are many cases where Sessions Judges are too lenient in the exercise of the discretion vested in them by law, but the High Court will not interfere except when it finds that the sentence of death is the only possible sentence that could be inflicted—Narayanawami Goundan v Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 1241. See also Note 71.

Under clause (c) of sub-sec. (1), sec. 423, Cr P C, it is competent to the High Court, reading that section with sec. 439, Cr. P. C., to alter or reverse an order other than the orders referred to in clauses (b) and (a) of sec. 423. Where, therefore, a person has been bound over under Chap VIII to be detained with simple imprisonment, it is competent for the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to substitute for simple imprisonment, rigorous imprisonment—Manu Chabdo, 38 Cr.L.J. 168, 166 I.C. 298, A I R 1936 Sind 188, 1936 Cr C. 973.

1217. Procedure if two Judges differ:—If two learned Judges of the High Court differ in a Criminal Revision case, sec. 439 read with sec. 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge, and precludes any further appeal under the Letters Patent or any reference to a Full Bench under the rules of the Court—Dudikula Lal Sahib, 40 Mad 976. But where an application is made to the High Court not under sec. 435, Cr. P. Code, but under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act, section 439 of the Code cannot apply, and consequently sec. 429 (which is referred to in sec. 439) is also not applicable; and therefore if in such a case there is a difference of opinion between the Judges, the provisions of sec. 36 of the Letters Patent will apply, and the decision of the senior Judge will prevail—Moiram v. Mrijan, 47 Cal. 433, 21 Cr.L.J. 25, 24 C.W.N. 97.

Reference to a Division Bench:—There is no provision in the Code or in the rules of the Patna High Court under which a reference can be made by a single Judge to a Division Bench for the expression of an opinion on a point of law only—Aghare, 32 Cr.L.J. 1197 (1200), 134 I.C. 619, 12 P.L.T. 601, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 379, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 475, 1931 Cr.C. 907, 11 Pat. 143.

1218. Sub-section (2)—Notice to accused:—The High Court's power merely as a Court of Appeal includes all its powers of revision when there is a question of giving relief to the appellant. When it is question of acting against the appellant in enhancing the sentence, that, on the face of this section, has to be done under its revithe accused during the period that intervened, the High Court would not then necessary to enhance the sentence—Prem, 27 A.L.J. 397, 30 Cr.L.J. 529 (530), 11 I.C. 868, A.I.R. 1929 All. 270, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 468. Also, where the fact of previous conviction which was known to the prosecution was not at all brought to the notice of the Magistrate through the negligence of the prosecution, the High Court will not interfere to enhance the sentence. To permit the prosecution to plead their own negligence and to harass the accused with further proceedings directed towards the enhancement of the sentence, would be to put a premium on the negligence of the prosecution—Bashir, 30 Cr.L.J. 505 (506), 115 I.C. 614, A.I.R. 1929 All. 267, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 390; Gul, 1902 P.R. 21, 1902 P.L.R. 144; Hyoth Mastan, 2 Weir 574. A fortiori, the High Court would interfere to enhance the sentence, where the previous conviction was not known to the prosecution at the time of trial, but was discovered after the conviction—Maidhan, 1905 P.R. 19, 2 Cr.L.J. 228; Nur Mahammad, 1905 P.R. 43, 3 Cr.L.J. 341.

The High Court does not generally interfere in revision to enhance the sentence when the convicted person has undergone the full term of his imprisonment or has paid the fine imposed upon him, even though the order of the Court below is clearly wrong in law—Hari Singh, 1913 P.W.R. 29, 14 Cr.L.J. 599 (600); Jagat Singh, 1 Lah. 453, 21 Cr.L.J. 557. The High Court is slow to interfere in cases where interference would involve the imprisonment of persons already discharged from jail—Chuni Lal, 1889 P.R. 7. But the test in each case is, whether the sentence inflicted by the trying Court involves substantial punishment. The High Court will not interfere if adequate punishment has been inflicted; but if the sentence is manifestly inadequate, it is competent to the High Court to impose an additional punishment, even though the accused has served out the whole of the imprisonment inflicted by the lower Court—Chuni Lal, supra; Shankar Narayan, 28 Bom.L.R. 300, 93 I.C. 1053, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 256, 27 Cr.L.J. 557 (558); Jagat Singh, supra; Shahzad Ahmad, 30 Cr.L.J. 240 (241), 114 I.C. 72, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 961, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 232. Where the Magistrate's order was proper on the materials before him, the sentence should not be enhanced in revision on the ground of previous conviction being disclosed; it is not fair to the accused to reverse the conviction and direct him to be committed to the Sessions, after he has undergone the full term of imprisonment inflicted by the Magistrate, merely because his previous convictions were not known at the time of his trial by the Magistrate—Usman, 17 Cr.L.J. 3, 9 S.L.R. 95. The High Court will not interfere to enhance the sentence, after a long period has elapsed—Nasrullah, 29 Cr.L.J. 446 (447), 108 I.C. 567, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 305, A.I.R. 1928 All. 287.

The power of enhancement conferred on the High Court under sec. 439 is limited only by clause (3) of this section. This clause does not regard the difference in the powers of the trying Magistrate under sec. 32, but lays down that in cases of sentences passed by Magistrates not empowered under sec. 34, the limit of enhancement shall be the sentence that might have been inflicted by a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class. Therefore the High Court has power to enhance the sentence of imprisonment to two years—Kamal, 9 S.L.R. 82, 16 Cr.L.J. 712. See also Mahomed Yousif, 34 Cr.L.J. 618, 143 I.C. 605, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 87, 1933 Cr.C. 215, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 131. The High Court has the power to inflict any punishment which might have been inflicted for the offence by a first class Magistrate, and is not limited to the powers of the trying Magistrate—Jagat Singh, 1 Lah. 453, 21 Cr.L.J. 557, 56 I.C. 861, A.I.R. 1920 Lah. 213. The power of the High Court to enhance sentences does not depend upon the powers which the trial Court may have with regard to sentences. Under cl. (3) of this section where the case was originally tried by a Magistrate acting otherwise than under s. 34, Cr. P. Lastly, the power of enhancement of sentence can be exercised under this section where the sentence passed by the Magistrate is a legal one. A retrospective sentence of imprisonment for the period already passed by the accused in the lock-up is not a legal sentence—Asghar Ali, 1919 P.R. 27, 20 Cr.L.J. 684, 52 I.C. 604.

Under clause (c) of sub-sec (1), sec 423, Cr P C, it is competent to the High Court, reading that section with sec. 439, Cr P. C., to alter or reverse an order other than the orders referred to in clauses (b) and (a) of sec. 423. Where, therefore, a person has been bound over under Chap. VIII to be detained with simple imprisonment, it is competent for the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to substitute for simple imprisonment, rigorous imprisonment—Manu Chabilo, 38 Cr.L.J. 168, 166 I.C. 298, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 188, 1936 Cr.C. 973

1217. Procedure if two Judges differ:—If two learned Judges of the High Court differ in a Criminal Revision case, sec 439 read with sec. 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge, and precludes any further appeal under the Letters Patent or any reference to a Full Bench under the rules of the Court—Dudikula Lal Sahib, 40 Mad 976. But where an application is made to the High Court not under sec. 435, Cr P. Code, but under sec 107 of the Government of India Act, section 439 of the Code cannot apply, and consequently sec. 429 (which is referred to in sec. 439) is also not applicable; and therefore if in such a case there is a difference of opinion between the Judges, the provisions of sec. 36 of the Letters Patent will apply, and the decision of the senior Judge will prevail—Moiram v. Mrijan, 47 Cal. 438, 21 Cr.L.J. 25, 24 C.W.N. 97.

Reference to a Division Bench:—There is no provision in the Code or in the rules of the Patna High Court under which a reference can be made by a single Judge to a Division Bench for the expression of an opinion on a point of law only—Aghare, 32 Cr.L.J. 1197 (1200), 134 I.C. 619, 12 P.L.T. 601, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 379, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 475, 1931 Cr.C. 907, 11 Pat. 143.

1218. Sub-section (2)—Notice to accused:—The High Court's power merely as a Court of Appeal includes all its powers of revision when there is a question of giving relief to the appellant. When it is question of acting against the appellant in enhancing the sentence, that, on the face of this section, has to be done under its revi-sional power as distinct from its power merely as a Court of Appeal. That being so the High Court is bound to comply with cls. (2) and (4) of this section before it can enhance the sentence—Kitabdi, 32 Cr.L.J. 890, 132 I.C. 247, 35 C.W.N. 184, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 450, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 567, 1931 Cr.C. 602. The language of this sub-section is mandatory and it is clearly enacted as an exception to section 440. An order of enhancement of sentence is an order to the prejudice of the accused, and if such an order is passed without giving the accused an opportunity of being heard, it is more than an irregularity and the order so passed is without jurisdiction—Soma Naidu, 47 Mad. 428 (432); Romesh Chandra, 22 C.W.N. 168; Natha, Ratanlal 179. When the High Court has before it on appeal a record of a criminal proceeding, the condition precedent is performed, and the High Court can then, though the record has only come to its knowledge in the Appellate proceeding, proceed to exercise its revision powers if it chooses to do so and, in exercise thereof, enhance the sentence after giving notice to the accused and hearing him—Chunbiddya, 39 C.W.N. 350, 36 Cr.L.J. 482, A.I.R. 1935 P.C. 35, 153 I.C. 936, 1935 O.W.N. 205, 68 M.L.J. 166, 41 M.L.W. 188, 37 Bom.L.R. 160, 1935 M.W.N. 17, 1935 Cr.C. 199, 57 All. 156 (P.C.). Where a case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal having been filed against a conviction, it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time to enhance the sentence. It seems to be absolutely incongruous that the High Court in the same breath should admit the appeal of the accused, and issue a notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The notice should issue after the appeal has been dismissed after being dealt with on the merits—Mangal Naran, 48 Bom. 450, 27 Bom.L.R. 355, 26 Cr.L.J. 968. But see Note 1221. Where notice has been issued to the accused to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, and at the hearing neither the accused nor his counsel is present, the High Court cannot pass an order enhancing the sentence—Parasram, 26 Cr.L.J. 543, 85 I.C. 383, 1 O.W.N. 891, A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 476.

Although the interests of justice require that ordinarily an accused person should have notice of any proceeding in which an order awarding compensation to him is to be set aside, he cannot be deemed an accused person on his defence within the meaning of sec. 439 (2), Cr. P. C., so that if after proper attempts have been made, he cannot be served, an illegal order for compensation passed under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., must not necessarily stand for ever. Moreover, sec. 439 (2), Cr. P. C., must be read with sub-sec. (1) of the same section and the frame of the whole section appears to have application to an accused person charged with some offence and not to an accused person to whom compensation has been ordered to be paid and who is in the position, so far as the order of compensation is concerned, of the complainant—Jumo Sileman v. Hashim Umar, 38 Cr.L.J. 783, 169 I.C. 431, 31 S.L.R. 51, 10 R.S. 3, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 125, referring to Krishna Kone v. Narayan Dass, 41 M.L.J. 172, 62 I.C. 823, A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 281, 22 Cr.L.J. 583, 13 M.L.W. 689, 1921 M.W.N. 387.

A High Court may issue a warrant of arrest without previous notice to the accused, because a warrant of arrest is not an order to the prejudice of the accused within the meaning of this sub-section—Nga E. Moung, 8 Bur.L.T. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 670, 30 I.C. 654.

If the High Court makes an order to the prejudice of the accused without issuing notice to him and giving him an opportunity of being heard, the order is a nullity, and the High Court has power to vacate that order and rehear the matter in the presence of both sides—Ramesh Pada v. Kadambini, 55 Cal. 417, 31 C.W.N. 960, 28 Cr.L.J. 831 (832); Romesh Chandra, 22 C.W.N. 168.

1219. Sub-section (4)—Interference with orders of acquittal:—As to the powers of the High Court to revise orders of acquittal at the instance of a private prosecutor, or on a reference under sec. 438, see Note 1204, ante.

When the Government has not appealed, the High Court will not interfere with an order of acquittal except in extreme cases and under exceptional circumstances, whether it is moved by the District Magistrate or by private party—Mogal Beg, 42 Mad. 109; Joita v. Parshotam, 25 Bom.L.R. 488, 24 Cr.L.J. 734; Khem Chand v. Lalu, 3 Bur L.J. 323, 26 Cr L.J. 511; Crown v. Dayal Singh, 17 Lah 604. As under sec 417, Cr. P. C., an appeal is permitted against an order of acquittal, the High Court does not ordinarily entertain an application for revision of such an order. But if there be illegality in the proceedings in the Court which passed the order of acquittal, or if the order was made without jurisdiction, the High Court would exercise its discretion in a proper manner by interfering in revision—Htanda Meah v. Anamale Chettyar, 37 Cr.L.J. 832, 163 I.C. 242, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 247, 1936 Cr.C. 523. But it would be a most dangerous thing to say that whenever a Magistrate happens to be so unfortunate as to make a mistake in law that the accused person should be put in peril again; for it may well be that although the Magistrate has decided a law point wrongly in favour of the accused, he may also have decided the facts wrongly in favour of the prosecution. Clearly an acquittal is not to be set aside merely because bad reasons are given for it. Before the High Court can be induced to take such a course, it must be satisfied that the acquittal is wrong altogether apart from the reasons given by the trial Magistrate. (Per Henderson, J.). Acquittals should not, except in exceptional circumstances, be interfered with suo motu by an Appellate Court without, of course, a full investigation of the facts. The High Court cannot go into these facts without having a new investigation in the trial Court which is usually set on foot by the Crown and the Crown alone. In these circumstances even where acquittal is considered wrong both in fact and in law, it must stand because there should be a certain integrity about acquittals which prevent them from being lightly interfered with. (Per Cunliffe, J.)—Roshan Lal Khettri v. S. Z. Ahmed, 37 Cr L.J. 1081, 164 I.C. 996, 40 C.W.N. 931. The High Court will not move in such a case unless there was some glaring defect either in the procedure or in the view of law taken by the Court below and there has been a flagrant miscarriage of justice—Kamikka Pershad, 2 Luck. 680, 104 I.C. 228, 4 O.W.N. 729, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 345, 28 Cr L.J. 788 (790); Rama Murti v. Jas Indra, 34 Cr L.J. 661, 143 I.C. 852, 10 O.W.N. 345, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 257, 1933 Cr.C. 562, Ind Rul. 1933 Oudh 215, Mathura v. Chakra, 35 Cr L.J. 1236, 150 I.C. 951, 11 O.W.N. 810, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 176; Basrulla v. Asadulla, 33 C.W.N. 576, 119 I.C. 130, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 639, 30 Cr L.J. 1013, Ind Rul. 1929 Cal. 738. The only case in which applications at the instance of private parties against orders of acquittal could be entertained are those in which there has been a failure of justice through want of jurisdiction or a failure to understand the law applicable to the case—U Min v Maung Taik, 32 Cr L.J. 928, 132 I.C. 545, 8 Rang. 663, A.I.R. 1931 Rang 94, Ind Rul. 1931 Rang 177, 1931 Cr.C. 382, following Nga Po Pyaw v. Nga Po Nwe, 42 I.C. 330, 3 UBR (1917) 19, 18 Cr L.J. 970.

It is open to the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal at the instance of any party other than Government, coming to the High Court in appeal under sec. 417, Cr. P. C., and a private complainant has locus standi in such proceedings. No distinction can be made between a petition for revision by a private complainant and a case reported by a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate and interference by the High Court is not limited to cases where there has been an error of law or apparent injustice resulting in misappreciation or misapprehension of a legal principle—Sham Lal v. Chaman Lal, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 406 (411), 41 P.L.R. 175, I.L.R. 1939 Lah 116, 40 Cr L.J. 942, 184 I.C. 358.

The High Court has power to interfere with an order of acquittal in revision; otherwise the Code would not contain the provisions in sec. 439 (4) that in revision a High Court should not convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. The question is one of discretion as to whether in any particular case the High Court should or should not order a retrial—Ram Khelauan v. Shoo Nandan, 33 Cr.L.J. 885, 140 I.C. 122, 1932 A.L.J. 166, A.I.R. 1932 All 191, 1932 Cr.C. 207, 54 All 413, Ind. Rul. 1932 All 613. Though the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision with an acquittal, it shall ordinarily exercise this jurisdiction sparingly and only in serious cases where it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice, to prevent a gross miscarriage of justice—Nand Ram v. Khazan, 19 A.L.J. 589, 61 I.C. 161, 22 Cr.L.J. 337; Faujdar v.

Kasi, 42 Cal. 612 (616), 27 I.C. 186, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 388, 19 C.W.N. 184, 21 C.L.J. 53, 16 Cr.L.J. 122; Hrishikesh Mandal v. Abadhaut Mandal, 44 Cal. 703, 38 I.C. 421, A.I.R. 1917 Cal. 159, 21 C.W.N. 250, 18 Cr.L.J. 309; Maula Bakhsh v. Riaz Ahmed, 37 Cr.L.J. 490, 161 I.C. 828, 1936 O.W.N. 384; Pramatha v. P. C. Lahiri, 47 Cal. 818, (827); Natesa, 28 M.L.J. 690; Vellayanambalam v. Solai, 39 Mad. 505; Rameshwar, 53 Bom. 564; Parakanakkan v. Amir, 20 L.W. 327, 26 Cr.L.J. 249; Sankarlinga v. Narayana, 45 Mad. 913, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 502, 68 I.C. 615, 23 Cr.L.J. 583, 43 M.L.J. 369 (F.B.); Pahelwan v. Sahib Singh, 19 A.L.J. 382, 22 Cr.L.J. 597, 6 All. 484; Fareedoon Cawasji, 41 Bom. 560 (562); Mehr v. Nur Md. 26 P.L.R. 644, 26 Cr.L.J. 1596; Panchan v. Upendra, 49 All. 254, 27 Cr.L.J. 1407; Nga Po Pyaw v. Nga Po Nwe, A.I.R. 1917 U.B. 7, 42 I.C. 330, 3 U.B.R. 19, 18 Cr.L.J. 970; Siban Rai v. Bhagwant, 5 Pat. 25, 27 Cr.L.J. 235, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 176, 92 I.C. 219, 6 P.L.T. 833; Kamikka Pershad, 2 Luck. 680, 28 Cr.L.J. 788 (790); Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 23 N.L.R. 40, 28 Cr.L.J. 523 (528); Binda Prasad v. Ripusudan, 5 N.L.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 211; Basudeo Lal v. Bindeshri, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 646, 1937 P.W.N. 706, 172 I.C. 175. Such an interference by the High Court is reserved for exceptional circumstances and for cases in which there appears to have been a failure of justice due to some error in a matter of principle, but no hard and fast rule has been laid down in any of the decisions or can be laid down—Abdul Manir v. Kadir Khan, 38 Cr.L.J. 470 (471), 167 I.C. 894, 9 R.P. 447, 3 B.R. 377, 1937 P.W.N. 220, 18 P.L.T. 227, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 110. The powers possessed by the High Court under this section are very wide. Though the Court cannot convert an order of acquittal into one of conviction, yet there is nothing to bar the setting aside of the order of acquittal, when the order is one wholly without jurisdiction. The High Court set aside an order of acquittal passed by Bench Magistrates vested with Second Class powers in a case under sec. 506, I. P. C., which they had no jurisdiction to try as the accused threatened the complainant with death, holding that any acquiescence or even consent could not invest a Court with jurisdiction to which it was not otherwise possessed—Ram Udit, 33 Cr.L.J. 511, 137 I.C. 625, 9 O.W.N. 319, 1932 Cr.C. 592, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 251, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 263. The High Court will interfere with an order of acquittal only where there has been an error in law, or where the trial has been illegal or so radically and incurably irregular as in fact to have occasioned a failure of justice—Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, supra. Thus, the High Court will interfere where a Magistrate acquitted the accused disregarding the uncontradicted evidence and facts admitted which proved the guilt of the accused, and acted illegally in trying a warrant case as a summons case—Sabathi v. Kuppusami, 15 M.L.J. 225. Where the trying Magistrate, in his judgment of acquittal, while laying great stress on all considerations that might affect the credibility of the witnesses for the prosecution, omitted to consider what might be advanced in their favour, and also failed to appreciate the corroborative value of an important witness for the prosecution, the High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed a retrial—Shaik Bagu v. Raika Singh, 18 C.W.N. 1244, 26 I.C. 170, A.I.R. 1915 Cal. 235, 15 Cr.L.J. 722. An order of acquittal will be set aside in revision where the acquittal is the result of an alleged composition which turns out to be invalid—Hannam v. Sam Das, 24 Cr.L.J. 120; Khilawan Singh v. Emp. 38 Cr.L.J. 334, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 286, 166 I.C. 926, 9 R.N. 154, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 72; e.g., where the Magistrate acquitted the accused by allowing the parties to compromise a non-compoundable case—Zahiruddin v. Nasiruddin, 24 Cr.L.J. 186 (Oudh). The High Court will not hesitate to interfere where the acquittal is based on a manifest error in law appearing on the face of the judgment—Ahmedabad Municipality v. Manganlal, 9 Bom.L.R. 156, 5 Cr.L.J. 171; Nanhi Bahu v. Dhunde, 6 A.L.J. 758; Hardeo, 1 All. 139; Ram Dayal v. Mata Din, 38 Cr.L.J. 329, 166 I.C. 987, 9 R.O. 352, 1937 O.L.R. 82, 1937 A Cr.C. 57, 1937 O.W.N. 281, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 283. Revision of an order of acquittal may be allowed when the order of acquittal is based on an erroneous view of the law—Mt. Harbans Kaur v. Lahari Ram, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 739 (741), 178 I.C. 791, 40 Cr.L.J. 131, 11 R.L. 499, following Chotha Ram v. Mt. Karman Bai, A.I.R. 1918 Lah. 204, 44 I.C. 169, 8 P.R. 1918; Fakir Chand v. Fakir, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 286, 69 I.C. 379 and Nathu Mal v.

Abdul Haq, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 159, 1930 Cr.C. 167, 123 I.C. 841, 31 Cr.L.J. 584. See also Thamman, A.I.R. 1918 Lah. 188, 44 I.C. 751, 19 Cr.L.J. 399, 8 P.R. 1918 (Cr.); Lalji, 18 P.R. 1883 (Cr.); Saunderson v. Wilson, 10 P.R. 1883 (Cr.); Achhar Singh, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 451, 81 I.C. 547, 25 Cr.L.J. 931, 5 Lah. 16; Dayal Singh, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 132, 167 I.C. 559, 38 Cr.L.J. 432, 38 P.L.R. 1015, 17 Lah. 604. Although the High Court is competent to entertain an application to set aside an acquittal, it is not the custom of the High Court to do so on a consideration of the evidence at the instance of private individuals except in extreme cases—Kisni, 38 Cr.L.J. 719 (720), 169 I.C. 96, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 163, 169 I.C. 96, 9 R.N. 301, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 103. As a matter of practice, the High Court will not go into evidence, as a rule, in revision; it will ordinarily confine its interference in cases of exceptional circumstances, or where there is error of law; nor will it interfere with the acquittal unless the trial has been illegal or so radically and incurably irregular as in fact to have occasioned a failure of justice. It is not contrary to practice for the High Court to set aside a finding of acquittal if that finding is based on an erroneous view of the law. If the findings of fact would justify a conviction if a correct view of the law has been taken, that should not prevent interference—Sitaram v. Tilockchand, 34 Cr.L.J. 145, 141 I.C. 273, 28 N.L.R. 298, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 55, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 36, 1933 Cr.C. 78, following—Sher Khan v. Anwar Khan, 102 I.C. 219, 23 N.L.R. 40, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 170, 28 Cr.L.J. 523. The High Court will interfere but rarely in revision with acquittals, whether put forward on behalf of Government or on behalf of private individuals, particularly so in cases where the correctness of the acquittal cannot be considered without a consideration of the evidence—Khilawan Singh v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 334 (335), I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 286, 166 I.C. 926, 9 R.N. 154, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 72, following Ganpat, 29 N.L.R. 365, 146 I.C. 332, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 259, 1933 Cr.C. 930, 6 R.N. 85, 35 Cr.L.J. 28. But when a case comes to the notice of the High Court where the acquittal has depended not on an appreciation of the evidence but has occurred in complete disregard of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the High Court should interfere despite the fact that no appeal has been preferred by Government—Khilawan Singh v. Emp., supra. Where the trying Magistrate failed to appreciate the question of fact which he had to determine in order to adjudicate on the plea of right of private defence and there was no proper trial of those questions, the High Court set aside the order of acquittal and directed a re-trial—Abdul Manir v. Kadir Khan, 38 Cr.L.J. 470 (471), 167 I.C. 894, 9 R.P. 447, 3 B.R. 377, 1937 P.W.N. 220, 18 P.L.T. 227, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 110. Where the order of the trying Magistrate proceeded on a supposition that a certain bye-law did not exist, though in fact it did, the High Court interfered with an order of acquittal and directed a re-trial—Bala Prasad v. Muzammil, 35 Cr.L.J. 998, 149 I.C. 612, 1934 A.L.J. 541, 1934 Cr.C. 200, A.I.R. 1934 All. 190, A.I.R. 1934 All. 531, 4 A.W.R. 569. In regard to grounds of law the Court does not interfere with an error or omission or irregularity unless the same has caused a failure of justice—Rama Murti v. Jai Indra, 34 Cr.L.J. 661, 143 I.C. 852, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 215, 10 O.W.N. 345, 1933 Cr.C. 562, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 257. In Oudh it is well-established practice that the Court is loath to interfere in cases of acquittal and the power of interference is exercised if it is proved without any doubt not only that the accused person is guilty but that he has been acquitted on unreasonable grounds—Mendhai Lal v. Beni Madho, 35 Cr.L.J. 416, 146 I.C. 523, 6 R.O. 270, 10 O.W.N. 999. The High Court will in revision set aside an order of acquittal and order a retrial, where in a serious case of rioting in connection with the possession of land, the Magistrate did not come to any finding on the question of possession—Surendra v. Janaki, 53 Cal. 471, 96 I.C. 527, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 945, 27 Cr.L.J. 975. The High Court will interfere where the order of acquittal was not passed on the merits, but was made on account of the death of the complainant, and the complainant's son was not allowed to continue the proceeding—Jitan v. Damoo Sahu, 1 P.L.J. 264, 20 C.W.N. 862, 18 Cr.L.J. 151. Where the case was posted for an unusual hour (namely, 7 A.M.) and the complaint was dismissed and the accused acquitted for non-appearance of the complainant at that time, the High Court interfered and ordered a retrial; otherwise an offender would escape punishment through sheer accident—Ottavu Subbiah v. Inukotiobiah, 27 Cr.L.J. 1931, 93 I.C. 607, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 139. An order of acquittal passed by the Lower Court will be set aside where the judgment of that Court is very summary and contains no discussion of the case or distinct findings on the questions involved—Nabin Chandra v. Rajendra, 18 Cr.L.J. 519 (Cal). The High Court will exercise its powers to set aside an acquittal, where there has been no trial, or where there has been a denial of the right of fair trial—Siban Rai v. Bhagwant, 5 Pat. 25, 6 P.L.T. 833, 27 Cr.L.J. 235. The High Court has, in exercise of its powers under this section, power to set aside an order of acquittal passed under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., and to order the case to proceed from the stage which it had reached when the improper order of acquittal was passed—Soni v. Kishnomal Manghandas, 40 Cr.L.J. 524, 180 I.C. 989, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 385, 11 R.S. 198, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 75. Where there were grave irregularities in procedure and the trial was conducted in an atmosphere of prejudice, the High Court interfered with an order of acquittal—Gangadhar v. Reid, 25 C.W.N. 609 (Khoreal shooting case), 23 Cr.L.J. 41. The High Court will interfere in certain exceptional circumstances where a matter of public importance is involved—Municipal Board v. Vadyadhari, 24 O.C. 57, 22 Cr.L.J. 638, 63 I.C. 334; see also Ahmedabad Municipality v. Mangalal, supra. An application for revision against an order of acquittal may appropriately be allowed, when legal points alone are involved—Thamman, 1918 P.R. 8. But the mere fact that the High Court if it were sitting as a Court of Appeal would have come to a different conclusion of fact, is no ground for exercising revisional jurisdiction upon a petition against an order of acquittal—Vellavanambalam v. Solai, 39 Mad 505; Mellor v. Muthia, 20 Cr.L.J. 101, 35 M.L.J. 518; Binda Prasad v. Ripusudan 5 N.L.R. 4, 1 I.C. 238, 9 Cr.L.J. 211; Damodar v. Juiharsingh, 26 Cr.L.J. 1348, 89 I.C. 388, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 115. The High Court should not interfere with an order of acquittal when the question is merely as to the appreciation of doubtful evidence, and there is no patent error or defect in the order of acquittal passed by the Lower Court resulting in grave injustice—Vellavanambalam v. Solai, 39 Mad 505; Mellor v. Muthia, 35 M.L.J. 518, 48 I.C. 981. When the acquittal of an accused is based on a finding of fact, the High Court will not interfere in revision—Harphul, 26 P.L.R. 38, 26 Cr.L.J. 689; Banke Lal v. Maiku, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 10 O.W.N. 1037, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 146 I.C. 638, 35 Cr.L.J. 121. In King-Emb v. Mr B. A. Peters, 11 O.W.N. 717, 155 I.C. 724, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 276, 1934 Cr.C. 773, 36 Cr.L.J. 842, 7 R.O. 616, Dulare v. Mst. Sundaria, 11 O.W.N. 718, 155 I.C. 726, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 278, 1934 Cr.C. 774, 36 Cr.L.J. 838, 7 R.O. 616 and Bhola Prasad v. Mst. Ram Dularv, 11 O.W.N. 719, 149 I.C. 364, 6 R.O. 554, 35 Cr.L.J. 951, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 280, 1934 Cr.C. 776 the view was expressed that an application in revision or a reference made on such an application must be founded on an acceptance of the findings of fact of the trial Court that is such an application or reference can only be made on a point of law. This is not a sound view—Chandrika Prasad v. Mohammad Jafar, 41 Cr.L.J. 891 (892), 190 I.C. 266, 1940 O.W.N. 757. But the High Court will not as a rule, go into evidence, save in exceptional cases, as where the judgment of the facts is manifestly wrong and grossly and palpably unjust—Rama Murthi v. Jai Indra supra; Mathura v. Chakra, supra. See also Atma Ram, A.I.R. 1934 All. 846, 4 A.W.R. 246, 1934 Cr.C. 1033, 36 Cr.L.J. 490, 154 I.C. 315; and Din Mahomed v. Ilahi Baksh, 35 P.L.R. 730. Where the trial Court has acquitted the accused after giving due weight to all evidence on the record, the High Court will not interfere—Mehr Nur Md. v. Nur Md., 26 P.L.R. 644, 26 Cr.L.J. 1596. Where the Magistrate took one view of the oral evidence and the Sessions Judge took the opposite view, and there was no legal point or question of jurisdiction involved, held that there was no ground for interference with the order of acquittal—Khem Chand v. Lalu 3 Bur.L.J. 323, 26 Cr.L.J. 511. According to the Oudh Chief Court the unshot of the whole matter would seem to be this that the High Court will not on an application in revision against an acquittal treat the case before it as a case of appeal. It will not be prepared to interfere unless there are exceptional matters compelling it to do so, as for example, where the Magistrate does not appear to have exercised an impartial judicial mind in considering the evidence, where he has entirely left evidence out of consideration or has relied upon evidence which is not to be found on the record. It is going too far to say that the High Court must accept loyally the findings of facts of the trial Court or the lower Appellate Court, as the case may be, but at the same time it is obvious that the power to interfere is one to be exercised most sparingly and only when there appears to have been a miscarriage of justice or a perverse and unreasonable decision. The High Court cannot be asked to set aside the order of acquittal and direct a re-trial merely on the ground that it should take a different view of the evidence from that which has been taken by the Magistrate who tried the case and had the witnesses before him—Chandrika Prasad v. Mohammad Jafar, 41 Cr.L.J. 891 (893), 190 I.C. 266, 1940 O.W.N. 757.

A single mistake on the part of an appellate Magistrate of misreading the evidence of a witness would not justify the use of extraordinary power which the High Court has in revision of setting aside an order of acquittal—Ragho Singh v. Rambirich Singh, 39 Cr.L.J. 968, 177 I.C. 999, 11 R.P. 203, 5 B.R. 21, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 28. A mere error of procedure is not by itself a good ground for setting aside an acquittal; thus, a mere error of improper admission of evidence which was not essential to a result which might have been come to wholly independent of it, is not a ground of interference—Ganga Singh v. Rambhajan, A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 165, 25 Cr.L.J. 1266 (Pat.); so also, an omission by the Appellate Court to serve the notice of appeal on the complainant or on the officer appointed under sec. 422 is not a ground for setting aside the order of acquittal passed by the Appellate Court—Parakanakkan v. Amur, 20 L.W. 327, 26 Cr.L.J. 249, 84 I.C. 249, A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 837. The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate of competent jurisdiction who has taken a correct view of the law, e.g., an order of acquittal passed by a Magistrate on a prosecution for an alleged offence under sec. 225, I.P. Code, irregularly instituted on a report sent in by a Munsif which was treated as a complaint—Madho Singh, 47 All. 409, 23 A.L.J. 189, 26 Cr.L.J. 865.

The High Court shall always be reluctant to interfere with an order of acquittal, specially when the real dispute between the parties can be properly decided in a civil action—Corporation of Calcutta v. Bengal Dooars Railway Co., A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 531, 44 C.W.N. 648, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 585.

The above remarks equally apply to cases of revision against an order of discharge under sec. 253; and the High Court would be unwilling or very reluctant to interfere with an order of discharge based on a consideration of all the prosecution evidence, when no evidence has been shut out and there is no illegality or irregularity in the procedure adopted by the trying Court, even if the High Court should on the materials on the record consider that it was a fit case for the framing of a charge and putting the accused on his defence—Mellor v. Muthia Chetty, 35 M.L.J. 518, 20 Cr.L.J. 101, 48 I.C. 981.

Converting acquittal into conviction:—The High Court may interfere with an order of acquittal, when such interference is urgently demanded in the interests of justice (see supra); but it cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. So, it cannot set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge on appeal, and restore the order of conviction of the trial Court—Rameshwar, 53 Bom. 564, 30 Cr.L.J. 1062 (1064), A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 306, 1929 Cr.C. 135, 119 I.C. 643, 31 Bom.L.R. 529. Thus, where the trial Court convicted the accused under section 376, Indian Penal Code but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under section 366, I.P. Code (i.e., acquitted the accused under section 376 and convicted him under sec. 366) and the High Court found the conviction under sec. 366 to be wrong, the High Court set aside the conviction under sec. 366, I.P. C., discharged the accused, but could not restore the conviction of the trial Court under sec. 376, I.P. C.—C. C. Sircar, 3 Rang. 68, 26 Cr.L.J. 1119 (1120), 4 Bur.L.J. 29. After revising the order of acquittal, the proper order of the High Court must be one remanding the case to the lower Court and directing the retrial of the accused person—Rameshwar v. Gorind, 23

A.L.J. 433, 87 I.C. 426, A.I.R. 1925 All. 473, 26 Cr.L.J. 970; Balwant, 9 All. 134, 1886 A.W.N. 322 (F.B.); Har Piari v. Nathe Lal, 22 Cr.L.J. 97 (All.), 59 I.C. 401; Nand Ram v. Khazan, 19 A.L.J. 589, 22 Cr.L.J. 337; Ma Nyen v. Moung Chit, 7 Rang 538, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 321, 120 I.C. 912, 31 Cr.L.J. 186, 1929 Cr.C. 497. Sub-section (4) of this section clearly lays down that the High Court cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction by acting on its revisional side. There is, however, no prohibition in that section against the High Court ordering a retrial, even where there has been an acquittal and there has been no appeal preferred by Government against such an acquittal. The power to order a retrial is unrestricted and such an order does not amount to a conversion of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, which obviously means convicting an accused straight off, who has already been acquitted by a subordinate Court—Sarda Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 521 (524), 168 I.C. 17, 1937 A.Cr.C. 1, 1937 A.L.J. 143, 1937 A.W.R. 66, 9 R.A. 623, A.L.R. 1937 All. 309, A.I.R. 1937 All. 240. Though the High Court, in exercising revisional powers against orders of acquittal, can go into the question of fact, still it cannot then and there convict but can only order retrial—Virumal v. Sadhu, 1908 P.L.R. 157, 8 Cr.L.J. 462. But the High Court will not order a retrial, when such order would be tantamount to converting an acquittal into conviction. Where owing to non-recording of evidence or improper recording of inadmissible evidence, the High Court reverses an order of acquittal, it can direct a retrial; but in a case where there is no erroneous recording or shutting out of evidence, if the High Court were to set aside the acquittal and order a retrial on the same evidence, it would be the same thing as sending the case to a Magistrate with directions to convict; in other words, it would be for all practical purposes converting an acquittal into conviction—Ma Nyen v. Mg. Chit, 7 Rang 538, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 321, 120 I.C. 912, 31 Cr.L.J. 186, 1929 Cr.C. 497. It is clear that, though the High Court should not, in revision, direct a re-hearing of an appeal on the ground that the Appellate Court had taken a mistaken view of the facts, (for that would be tantamount to a direction to take the view that commended itself to the High Court, and in effect to direct that an acquittal be turned into a conviction), yet the High Court can, and should, in proper cases where the Appellate Court has misdirected itself on a point of law, point out the error and direct the re-hearing of the appeal—Ma Thaung v. Nandiya, 39 Cr.L.J. 623 (624), 175 I.C. 547, 1938 Rang.L.R. 121, 10 R.R. 511, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 193. But the High Court in revision set aside an appellate order of acquittal where the judgment did not contain a proper discussion of the evidence and of the questions involved—Nabin Chandra v. Rajendra Nath, 18 Cr.L.J. 519, 39 I.C. 487, A.I.R. 1918 Cal. 392. The High Court has power to interfere in revision with an appellate judgment of acquittal, and though the power should be sparingly exercised, it would be wrong to refuse to exercise it in cases where there has been a failure of justice by reason of the Appellate Court not having brought a judicial mind to bear upon the evidence—Satish Chandra Das v. Chintla Haran Saha, 39 Cr.L.J. 988 (991), 178 I.C. 56, 43 C.W.N. 25, 67 C.L.J. 571, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 613, 11 R.C. 316.

The High Court, as a Court of Appeal, is not debarred from converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, because sec. 439 (4) limits the powers of the High Court when acting as a Court of Revision, and not as a Court of Appeal. An Appellate Court has no such restriction under sec. 423, cl. (a). But as a Court of Revision, the High Court cannot convert an acquittal into conviction—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (122, 123); Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975 (979); Bawar Shah, 37 Cr.L.J. 1039 (1043), 164 I.C. 899, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 172.

The only way of securing conviction in a case of acquittal is by an appeal by the Local Government against the order of acquittal—Sheo Darshan, 44 All. 332 (333), 23 Cr.L.J. 202.

An order under sec. 471 is not an order of conviction. Therefore, where the accused was acquitted by the Lower Court on the ground that he was insane, the passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court in revision does not amount to an alteration of an order of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of this sub-section—Mahammad, 42 M.L.J. 72, 23 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 54, 65 I.C. 423.

The High Court is precluded from converting the finding of acquittal into one of conviction, in the absence of a Government appeal. But the High Court can convict the accused person of an offence under another section of the Penal Code upon which he has not been acquitted by the Lower Court. Thus, in a trial for an offence under sec. 302, I. P. C., the trial Court acquitted the accused under sec. 302, I. P. C., but convicted him under sec. 323, I. P. C. Held that the High Court can in revision convict the accused of an offence under sec. 325, I. P. Code, inasmuch as the trial Court had not considered the applicability of sec. 325, I. P. C., and there was no acquittal under sec. 325, I. P. Code—Dulh v. Mangli, 24 A.L.J. 414, 27 Cr.L.J. 564, 94 I.C. 132, A.I.R. 1926 All. 332.

Conviction of one offence and acquittal of another:—It was held that in some cases that the word 'acquittal' in this sub-section meant a complete acquittal on all the facts and allegations charged, and not an acquittal in respect of one charge and conviction in respect of another; therefore, where the accused was convicted by the Magistrate of one offence and acquitted of another, in the same trial, the High Court had power in revision to convert the acquittal into conviction—Bhola, 1904 P.R. 12, 1 Cr.L.J. 942. Thus, where the accused was charged under sec. 302, I. P. C., but was convicted under sec. 304, I. P. C., it was held that the High Court was competent to alter the conviction under sec. 304, I. P. C., into a conviction under sec. 302, I. P. C.—Fazal Khan, 8 Lah. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 508 (following Bhola, 1904 P.R. 12). It was explained in a Madras case that sub-sec (4) of sec. 439 refers to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal, and not to a case where the trial has ended in a conviction but the Court has wrongly applied the law or has wrongly found some fact not proved and has in consequence held that the conviction should be under some section of the I. P. Code other than the section properly applicable—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (123); followed in Shahu, 20 S.L.R. 352, 27 Cr.L.J. 1121 (1122). In a Patna case, where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 205, I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under sec. 419, I. P. C., the High Court being of opinion that the former offence had been committed and not the latter, altered the conviction into one under sec. 205, I. P. Code. The High Court remarked that the substitution of the conviction under sec. 419 for one under sec. 205 by the Sessions Judge did not amount to an acquittal of the accused with regard to the offence under the latter section and that sec. 439 (4), Cr. P. Code, was no bar to the High Court re-altering the conviction under sec. 419 into one under sec. 205, I. P. C.—Ganpat Lal, 6 Pat. 217, 28 Cr.L.J. 529 (531). Where the accused was charged under secs. 148 and 326, I. P. C., but the Magistrate convicted him under sec. 148 and acquitted him under sec. 326, the High Court converted the acquittal into conviction under section 326, Indian Penal Code—Wazir Kunjra, 7 Pat. 579, 30 Cr.L.J. 673 (675), 116 I.C. 786, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 139, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 336. But the Bombay High Court dissented from this view. Thus, where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 326, I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under sec. 323, held that the order of the Sessions Judge was to be taken as an acquittal of the offence under sec. 326, I. P. C., and the High Court could not restore the conviction under sec. 326, because it would amount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction—Shivaputrava, 48 Bom. 510 (511), 26 Bom.L.R. 438, 26 Cr.L.J. 830 (dissenting from Bhola, 1 Cr.L.J. 942, 1904 P.R. 12). The Allahabad High Court also held that an order of acquittal could not be converted into an order of conviction, even though the acquittal was a partial acquittal. Thus, where the accused was charged with both murder and culpable homicide, and the Sessions Judge acquitted him on the charge of murder but convicted him of culpable homicide, the High Court in revision refused to convict the accused of murder—Sheo Darshan, 44 All. 332 (333), 20 A.L.J. 190, 23 Cr.L.J. 202. In a Madras case, where the accused was charged with murder (sec. 302, I. P. C.) but the Sessions Judge convicted him under the second part of sec. 304, I. P. C., held that the High Court had no power to convict the accused of murder. The order of the Sessions Judge

Sub-section (4) of this section clearly lays down that the High Court cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction by acting on its revisional side. There is, however, no prohibition in that section against the High Court ordering a retrial, even where there has been an acquittal and there has been no appeal preferred by Government against such an acquittal. The power to order a retrial is unrestricted and such an order does not amount to a conversion of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, which obviously means convicting an accused straight off, who has already been acquitted by a subordinate Court—Sarda Prasad v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 521 (524), 168 I.C. 17, 1937 A Cr.C. 1, 1937 A.L.J. 143, 1937 A.W.R. 66, 9 R.A. 623, A.L.R. 1937 All. 309, A.I.R. 1937 All. 240. Though the High Court, in exercising revisional powers against orders of acquittal, can go into the question of fact, still it cannot then and there convict but can only order retrial—Virumal v. Sadhu, 1908 P.L.R. 157, 8 Cr.L.J. 462. But the High Court will not order a retrial, when such order would be tantamount to converting an acquittal into conviction. Where owing to non-recording of evidence or improper recording of inadmissible evidence, the High Court reverses an order of acquittal, it can direct a retrial; but in a case where there is no erroneous recording or shutting out of evidence, if the High Court were to set aside the acquittal and order a retrial on the same evidence, it would be the same thing as sending the case to a Magistrate with directions to convict; in other words, it would be for all practical purposes converting an acquittal into conviction—Ma Nyen v. Mg. Chit, 7 Rang. 538, A.I.R. 1929 Rang. 321, 120 I.C. 912, 31 Cr.L.J. 186, 1929 Cr.C. 497. It is clear that, though the High Court should not, in revision, direct a re-hearing of an appeal on the ground that the Appellate Court had taken a mistaken view of the facts, (for that would be tantamount to a direction to take the view that commended itself to the High Court, and in effect to direct that an acquittal be turned into a conviction), yet the High Court can, and should, in proper cases where the Appellate Court has misdirected itself on a point of law, point out the error and direct the re-hearing of the appeal—Ma Thaung v. Nandiya, 39 Cr.L.J. 623 (624), 175 I.C. 547, 1938 Rang.L.R. 121, 10 R.R. 511, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 193. But the High Court in revision set aside an appellate order of acquittal where the judgment did not contain a proper discussion of the evidence and of the questions involved—Nabin Chandra v. Rajendra Nath, 18 Cr.L.J. 519, 39 I.C. 487, A.I.R. 1918 Cal 392. The High Court has power to interfere in revision with an appellate judgment of acquittal, and though the power should be sparingly exercised, it would be wrong to refuse to exercise it in cases where there has been a failure of justice by reason of the Appellate Court not having brought a judicial mind to bear upon the evidence—Satish Chandra Das v. Chinta Haran Saha, 39 Cr.L.J. 988 (991), 178 I.C. 56, 43 C.W.N. 25, 67 C.L.J. 571, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 613, 11 R.C. 316.

The High Court, as a Court of Appeal, is not debarred from converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction, because sec. 439 (4) limits the powers of the High Court when acting as a Court of Revision, and not as a Court of Appeal. An Appellate Court has no such restriction under sec. 423, cl. (a). But as a Court of Revision, the High Court cannot convert an acquittal into conviction—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (122, 123); Jabanulla, 23 Cal. 975 (979); Bawar Shah, 37 Cr.L.J. 1039 (1043), 164 I.C. 899, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 172.

The only way of securing conviction in a case of acquittal is by an appeal by the Local Government against the order of acquittal—Sheo Darshan, 44 All. 332 (333), 23 Cr.L.J. 202.

An order under sec. 471 is not an order of conviction. Therefore, where the accused was acquitted by the Lower Court on the ground that he was insane, the passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court in revision does not amount to an alteration of an order of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of this sub-section—Mahammad, 42 M.L.J. 72, 23 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 54, 65 I.C. 423.

The High Court is precluded from converting the finding of acquittal into one of conviction, in the absence of a Government appeal. But the High Court can convict the accused person of an offence under another section of the Penal Code upon which he has not been acquitted by the Lower Court. Thus, in a trial for an offence under sec. 302, I. P. C., the trial Court acquitted the accused under sec. 302, I. P. C., but convicted him under sec. 323, I. P. C. Held that the High Court can in revision convict the accused of an offence under sec. 325, I. P. Code, inasmuch as the trial Court had not considered the applicability of sec. 325, I. P. C., and there was no acquittal under sec. 325, I. P. Code—Dulh v. Mangli, 24 A.L.J. 414, 27 Cr.L.J. 564, 94 I.C. 132, A.I.R. 1926 All. 332.

Conviction of one offence and acquittal of another:—It was held that in some cases that the word 'acquittal' in this sub-section meant a complete acquittal on all the facts and allegations charged, and not an acquittal in respect of one charge and conviction in respect of another; therefore, where the accused was convicted by the Magistrate of one offence and acquitted of another, in the same trial, the High Court had power in revision to convert the acquittal into conviction—Bhola, 1904 P.R. 12, 1 Cr.L.J. 942. Thus, where the accused was charged under sec. 302, I. P. C., but was convicted under sec. 304, I. P. C., it was held that the High Court was competent to alter the conviction under sec. 304, I. P. C., into a conviction under sec. 302, I. P. C.—Fazal Khan, 8 Lah. 136, 28 Cr.L.J. 508 (following Bhola, 1904 P.R. 12). It was explained in a Madras case that sub-sec. (4) of sec. 439 refers to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal, and not to a case where the trial has ended in a conviction but the Court has wrongly applied the law or has wrongly found some fact not proved and has in consequence held that the conviction should be under some section of the I. P. Code other than the section properly applicable—Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119 (123); followed in Shahu, 20 S.L.R. 352, 27 Cr.L.J. 1121 (1122). In a Patna case, where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 205, I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under sec. 419, I. P. C., the High Court being of opinion that the former offence had been committed and not the latter, altered the conviction into one under sec. 205, I. P. Code. The High Court remarked that the substitution of the conviction under sec. 419 for one under sec. 205 by the Sessions Judge did not amount to an acquittal of the accused with regard to the offence under the latter section and that sec. 439 (4), Cr. P. Code, was no bar to the High Court re-altering the conviction under sec. 419 into one under sec. 205, I. P. C.—Ganpat Lal, 6 Pat. 217, 28 Cr.L.J. 529 (531). Where the accused was charged under secs. 148 and 326, I. P. C., but the Magistrate convicted him under sec. 148 and acquitted him under sec. 326, the High Court converted the acquittal into conviction under section 326, Indian Penal Code—Wazir Kunjra, 7 Pat. 579, 30 Cr.L.J. 673 (675), 116 I.C. 786, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 139, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 336. But the Bombay High Court dissented from this view. Thus, where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under sec. 326, I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge on appeal altered the conviction into one under sec. 323, held that the order of the Sessions Judge was to be taken as an acquittal of the offence under sec. 325, I. P. C., and the High Court could not restore the conviction under sec. 326, because it would amount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction—Shivaputraya, 48 Bom. 510 (511), 26 Bom.L.R. 438, 26 Cr.L.J. 830 (dissenting from Bhola, 1 Cr.L.J. 942, 1904 P.R. 12). The Allahabad High Court also held that an order of acquittal could not be converted into an order of conviction, even though the acquittal was a partial acquittal. Thus, where the accused was charged with both murder and culpable homicide, and the Sessions Judge acquitted him on the charge of murder but convicted him of culpable homicide, the High Court in revision refused to convict the accused of murder—Sheo Darshan, 44 All. 332 (333), 20 A.L.J. 190, 23 Cr.L.J. 202. In a Madras case, where the accused was charged with murder (sec. 302, I. P. C.) but the Sessions Judge convicted him under the second part of sec. 304, I. P. C., held that the High Court had no power to convict the accused of murder. The order of the Sessions Judge amounted to an order of acquittal in respect of the charge of murder, and the High Court had no power to do what would be tantamount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction. The finding of acquittal referred to in s. 439 (4) does not necessarily mean complete acquittal. The wording of the section says nothing about the acquittal being partial or complete. It includes cases where there has been an acquittal in respect of a particular offence, and a conviction in respect of another—Subba Chukli, 50 Mad. 259, 52 M.L.J. 707, 28 Cr.L.J. 397 (dissenting from Bali Reddi, 37 Mad. 119). These conflicting views have been recently considered in a case coming before the Judicial Committee, and they have laid down that if the accused is charged with murder (sec. 302, I. P. C.) but is convicted by the Sessions Judge of culpable homicide not amounting to murder (sec. 304, I. P. C.), it amounts to an acquittal in respect of the charge of murder under sec. 302 (although the Sessions Judge has not recorded an express finding of acquittal on this charge of murder), and the High Court cannot in revision convict the accused under sec. 302, for that would be tantamount to converting a finding of acquittal into one of conviction; and that the 'acquittal' mentioned in sec. 439 (4) does not contemplate only a complete acquittal in respect of all charges and offences but includes a case where the accused has been acquitted of the charge of murder but convicted of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder—Kishan Singh, 50 All. 722 (P.C.), 33 C.W.N. 1 (3, 5, 6), A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 254, 111 I.C. 332, 51 I.C. 390, 26 A.L.J. 1099, 30 Bom L.R. 1572, 29 P.L.R. 575, 55 M.L.J. 786, 29 Cr.L.J. 828 (P.C.) (approving 44 All. 332, and 48 Bom. 510, and overruling the view of 37 Mad. 119); Jado Rahim v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Sind 202, 178 I.C. 520, 40 Cr.L.J. 93. The bar in sub-section (4) of this section applies to a partial as well as to a total acquittal—Jado Rahim v. Emp., supra; Khudu v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 375 (377), 180 I.C. 418, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 57, 32 S.L.R. 18, 11 R.S. 173. The contrary view taken in 8 Lah. 136, 1904 P.R. 12, 20 S.L.R. 352, 48 Mad. 774, 6 Pat. 217 and 7 Pat. 579 is overruled. See also Hasan Khan, 8 O.W.N. 1299, 33 Cr.L.J. 162, 135 I.C. 382, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 25, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 30, 1932 Cr.C. 57; Ebrahim, 33 Cr.L.J. 360, 136 I.C. 836, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 321, 1931 Cr.C. 1007, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 91, where it has been held that the High Court in revision cannot alter a conviction under sec. 323, I. P. C., into one under sec. 325, I. P. C. The High Court has power under the combined provisions of sec. 423 and sec. 439, Cr. P. C., to alter the conviction under sec. 326, I. P. C., to one under sec. 302, I. P. C. In Kishan Singh's case, their Lordships of the Privy Council expressly stated that they did not decide the point as to the combined powers of the High Court under the two sections decided in Bali Reddi's case—Mehdi, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 661 (664), 35 Cr.L.J. 250, 25 P.L.R. 238, 1933 Cr.C. 883, 146 I.C. 949. See Note 1148.

The Rangoon High Courts holds that where a man charged with murder has been convicted by the Sessions Judge for a minor offence, the question whether the High Court can convict the man of murder (of which he has been acquitted by the Sessions Judge) depends on whether the High Court is dealing with the case both as an Appellate and a Revisional Court, or whether it is merely acting in its revisional capacity. If the High Court is acting both as an Appellate and a Revisional Court, it can convict the appellant of murder and sentence him to death (On Shwe, 1 Rang. 436, 25 Cr.L.J. 247). But if it is acting solely as a Court of Revision, it cannot convert the acquittal of murder into conviction—Kan Thein, 4 Rang. 140, 5 Bur.L.J. 80, 27 Cr.L.J. 1393.

Where the accused was convicted by a Magistrate under secs. 420 and 507, I. P. Code, but on appeal the Sessions Judge held that secs. 420 and 507 were not the proper sections applicable on the fact and altered the conviction into one under secs. 385 and 508, I. P. C., the High Court can convict the accused under sec. 420 and 511, I. P. Code (attempt to cheat). Such an order would not amount to an alteration of acquittal into conviction, because the Sessions Judge has not considered whether the accused was guilty of an attempt to cheat and has not recorded any finding of acquittal on such a charge, and the prohibition in this clause did not apply to this case. The case is one in which it was difficult to say what the offence committed by the accused was on the facts proved. In such a case it was doubtful whether the alteration of one section into another by the Sessions Judge could be said to be a case of 'acquittal' under the former section, within the meaning of this clause—In re Doraisamy, 48 Mad. 774, 48 M.L.J. 190, 26 Cr.L.J. 755, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 480.

1220. Sub-section (5)—No revision where right of appeal exists:—

Under this sub-section, the High Court is precluded from exercising the powers of revision at the instance of the accused who had a right of appeal but did not exercise it—Nandeyappa, 8 Bom.L.R. 851, 4 Cr.L.J. 446; Dinonath v. Rajcoomar, 3 Cal. 537; Bhagwan Singh, 1907 P.R. 20, 6 Cr.L.J. 263; Nalambar, 2 All 276; Gurdit Singh, 1904 P.L.R. 1; Saravayya, 44 M.L.J. 366; Laxman Hangu, 35 Bom. 253; Juma, 8 S.L.R. 229; Harbhagwandas, 14 S.L.R. 173, 22 Cr.L.J. 313, 60 I.C. 1001; Jamnadas Nathji Shah, 38 Cr.L.J. 606, 168 I.C. 718, 1 I.R. 1937 Bom. 263, 39 Bom.L.R. 82, 9 R.B. 393, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 153. And, therefore, it is impossible for an appeal filed beyond limitation to be treated as an application for revision as far as Criminal Procedure goes—Genimal v. Shewa Ram, 20 S.L.R. 90, 95 I.C. 316, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 215, 27 Cr.L.J. 780 (781). Where the accused who had a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge did not appeal but came in revision before the High Court, this Court would be precluded from hearing the applicant, and in such a case the High Court cannot even interfere suo motu, for that would be an evasion of the statute, which the Court cannot permit—Nuran, 18 S.L.R. 262, 25 Cr.L.J. 1362; Juma, 8 S.L.R. 229 19 Cr.L.J. 252. See also Jamnadas Nathji Shah, supra. Thus, in an application by an accused person for revision of an order of a Magistrate refusing to allow a private vakil to appear on his behalf, it was held that the case was not one for interference in revision because the accused could have appealed from his conviction and made it a ground of appeal that he was improperly deprived of legal assistance at the trial—Saravayya, 44 M.L.J. 366, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 484. Where a complaint is made by a Court under sec. 476, the accused has a right of appeal to a superior Court and it is not competent to the High Court to quash the proceedings in revision—Abdul Karim, 10 P.L.T. 161, 117 I.C. 309, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 421, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 640, 30 Cr.L.J. 765 (766). But there is no inflexible rule that where the accused has a right of appeal and does not exercise it, the High Court cannot exercise its revisional powers under this section; but such powers should be sparingly used and in every exceptional circumstances—Ala Baksh, 6 All. 484. Ordinarily, when an accused has a right of appeal but has not exercised the same, the High Court will not permit him to apply in revision instead. But where the effect of not allowing the revision is to make him suffer long periods of imprisonment when under the law a sentence of only a few months could be imposed on him, the High Court will interfere under the general powers of revision—In re Povanar, 20 L.W. 914, 86 I.C. 283, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 239, 26 Cr.L.J. 747. Where in a particular case an appeal lies only to the High Court, e.g., in case of conviction under sec. 124A, I.P. Code, an appeal against which lies only to the High Court under sec. 408 (c) of this Code, the accused may make an application for revision to the High Court, instead of preferring an appeal. Cf. Balkrishna Sharma, 54 All 331, 1932 Cr.C. 150, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 351, 137 I.C. 686, 33 Cr.L.J. 528, 1932 A.L.J. 39, A.I.R. 1932 All. 125.

The prohibition in this sub-section is limited only to those cases in which the High Court is asked to interfere at the instance of the party who could have appealed, but has not done so. It leaves untouched the power of the High Court to exercise its revisional powers under sub-sec. (1) of this section in all other cases, namely, those in which the records have been called for by itself, or which have been reported to it for orders under sec. 438 or which otherwise has come to its knowledge—Parsi Ram, 32 Cr.L.J. 700 (703), 131 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 145, 32 P.L.R. 71, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 419, 1931 Cr.C. 257; or which came to its knowledge on the application of a third party who had no right of appeal—Mohanlal, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 497, 7 O.W.N. 895, 128 I.C. 221, 32 Cr.L.J. 104, 1930 Cr.C. 1161. No doubt, the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain applications in revision, where no right of appeal has been exercised, where the application is made by a third party but entertaining such an application seems somewhat in breach of the provision of this sub-section—Gantsh, 32 Cr.L.J. 471, 130 I.C.

25, 55 Bom. 353, 1931 Cr.C. 188, 33 Bom.L.R. 56, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 140, Ind. Rul. 1931 Bom. 233. Where a party aggrieved has a right of appeal which he has deliberately elected to leave unused the High Court shall, as a rule, be slow to interfere in revision either on its own motion or at the instance of any unauthorized third person—Tejmal, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 211, 1932 Cr.C. 902, 34 Cr.L.J. 67, 26 S.L.R. 345, 140 I.C. 697. See also Nga Nyum, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 393; Jumo, A.I.R. 1914 Sind 139, 28 I.C. 108, 16 Cr.L.J. 252, 8 S.L.R. 229; Harbhagwandas, A.I.R. 1920 Sind 75, 60 I.C. 1001, 14 S.L.R. 173; Janu Fakir, A.I.R. 1922 Sind 22, 66 I.C. 999, 23 Cr.L.J. 343, 15 S.L.R. 171; Nuran, A.I.R. 1925 Sind 206, 82 I.C. 754, 25 Cr.L.J. 1362, 18 S.L.R. 262; Hiranand, A.I.R. 1924 Sind 129, 76 I.C. 230, 25 Cr.L.J. 134, 17 S.L.R. 245. An application for revision would not be entertainable, if the accused has failed to avail himself of his right of appeal; but the Court can receive information or knowledge from a third party and act upon it of its own accord—Shaibala, 34 Cr.L.J. 1115 (1118), 145 I.C. 977, A.I.R. 1933 All. 678, 1933 A.L.J. 1059, 1933 Cr.C. 1190 (F.B.). The question whether the High Court can take action in such cases under sec. 561A, Cr. P. C., was left undecided in Jamnadas Nathji Shah, 38 Cr.L.J. 606, 168 I.C. 718, I.L.R. 1937 Bom. 263, 39 Bom.L.R. 82, 9 R.B. 393, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 153 where it was thought very doubtful whether a reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., by the Sessions Judge, on his own motion, could be entertained by the High Court.

No appeal after revision:—Where a case has been heard in revision and orders have been passed after the High Court fully went into the facts of the case, the Court cannot afterwards hear an appeal in the same case—Kanhia Lal, 1890 A.W.N. 225.

Revision after appeal:—Although the High Court is competent to interfere in revision as well as to interfere on appeal, still it could not have been the intention of the Legislature that a person, who had appealed and had the opportunity of advancing any objection he desired to take to the proceedings of the Lower Court, should again have the opportunity of raising any points of law he may have omitted to raise in the appeal, by an application for revision—Venkatachalam, 2 Weir 573. But the High Court after it has acted as a Court of Appeal, may act as a Court of Revision on special grounds, e.g., to correct an error which cannot be set right in appeal. For instance, if a man should be found guilty of murder and sentenced to 7 years' transportation, then if the prisoner should appeal on the facts the High Court might uphold the finding of guilty of murder on appeal, and afterwards as a Court of revision might set aside the sentence of 7 years' transportation and pass a legal sentence for murder—Gora Chand, 5 W.R. 45.

Where the appeal has been withdrawn it is the duty of the High Court, when a matter has been brought to its notice which it considers should be corrected, to deal with it under its revisional powers—Saham Lal, 32 Cr.L.J. 732, 131 I.C. 375, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 97, 31 P.L.R. 990, 12 Lah.L.J. 312, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 471, 1931 Cr.C. 161. See Pitchai v. Md. Athan cited in Notes 380 and 382.

1221. Sub-section (6):—By virtue of this new clause, an accused person, who has been called upon to show cause why a sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced, will have the right of showing not only that the sentence should not be enhanced but that the whole conviction is wrong. This amendment enables the High Court not only to refuse an enhancement of sentence but also to set aside a conviction if the High Court finds that both the sentence and the conviction are equally unjustifiable.

Prior to this amendment, in cases that came up before the High Court for enhancement of sentence, it was the practice to accept the conviction as conclusive, and to consider the question of enhancement of sentence on that basis; see Chinto, 32 Bom. 162, 7 Cr.L.J. 119, 10 Bom.L.R. 93. But this is no longer correct; the amendment is intended to give the accused person, who has been brought to the bar of the High Court to answer why a sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced, the right of showing by argument a fortiori not only that the sentence should not be enhanced but that the conviction itself is wrong and should be set aside—Mahadeo, 26 Cr.L.J. 821, 86 I.C. 469, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 321; Jorabhai, 50 Bom. 783, 27 Cr.L.J. 1173 (1174), 97 I.C. 805, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 555, 28 Bom.L.R. 1051, dissenting from Mangal Naran, 49 Bom. 450, 87 I.C. 424, A.I.R.

1925 Bom. 268, 26 Cr.L.J. 968, 27 Bom.L.R. 355. The effect of the enactment of this sub-section is that the High Court when adjudicating upon an application for enhancement of sentence, is converted into a Court of Appeal against conviction and the accused is entitled to show that his conviction was unjustified—Tej Ram, 27 P.L.T. 112, 92 I.C. 892, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 34, 27 Cr.L.J. 380 (381). An accused person when showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, is entitled to show that the whole trial was illegal (e.g., as contravening the provisions of sec. 234), though the question of illegality was not raised at the trial—Manant, 49 Bom. 892, 27 Bom.L.R. 1343, 27 Cr.L.J. 305.

This sub-section was only added when the Code was revised in 1923. It is important to note that the initial words are "notwithstanding anything contained in this section," and not "notwithstanding anything contained in this Code." It would seem clear, therefore, that this sub-section can only refer to sub-sec. (5) of this section, and means that, although a party who has not appealed cannot be allowed to make an application in revision, yet, if proceedings are taken against him in revision and notice to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced is issued to him, he shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction—The King v. Nga Ba Saing, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 392 (393), 41 Cr.L.J. 108, 185 I.C. 142.

When the High Court sets aside an order under sec. 562 (1), Cr. P. C., and passes a sentence on the accused in lieu thereof, the accused cannot claim to be heard on the merits because the High Court does not thereby enhance a sentence or act under sec. 439 (6), Cr. P. C., as the enhancement of a sentence presumes there is a sentence to be enhanced—Miro Ghulam Hussain, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 339, 41 Cr.L.J. 187, 185 I.C. 428, I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 88.

When a case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal having been filed it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time on the accused, under this section, asking him to show cause why the sentence passed upon him should not be enhanced—Mangal Naran, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 268, 87 I.C. 424, 26 Cr.L.J. 968, 49 Bom. 450, 27 Bom.L.R. 355; Ramchandra, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 153 (156), 35 Cr.L.J. 747, 148 I.C. 553, 35 Bom.L.R. 174, 1933 Cr.C. 465. This view of law has been dissented from in Babu Pandurang, cited below.

But where a High Court has given a finding on appeal as to the guilt of the accused person, and subsequently a notice is served upon that person to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, he is not at liberty under sec. 439 (6) to re-open the question of the correctness of his conviction because of the inherent incapacity of a Bench of the High Court to reconsider a decision given by another Bench (secs. 369 and 430)—Jorabhai, 50 Bom. 783, 97 I.C. 805, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 555, 28 Bom.L.R. 1051, 27 Cr.L.J. 1173 (1175); Koya Partab, 129 I.C. 158, 32 Bom.L.R. 1286, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 593, 32 Cr.L.J. 242, Ind. Rul. 1931 Bom. 143, 54 Bom. 822, 1930 Cr.C. 1140; Haji Khamoo, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 233, 38 Cr.L.J. 114, 165 I.C. 993, following Khodabux Haji, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 105, 1934 Cr.C. 156, 35 Cr.L.J. 554, 147 I.C. 1124, 61 Cal. 6 and Inderchand, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 471, 1934 Cr.C. 1343, 153 I.C. 525, 36 Bom.L.R. 954. This sub-section does not destroy and was not intended to destroy the finality of judgment of Appellate Courts given by sec. 430, Criminal Procedure Code—Haji Khamoo, supra. It is open to a Division Bench of the High Court to exercise the powers of enhancement vested in it, even after the dismissal of the accused's jail appeal by a single Judge who cannot exercise the jurisdiction of an enhancement under the rules of the Allahabad High Court, Chap. I (17) (d)—Abdul Qayum, 34 Cr.L.J. 1205, 146 I.C. 157, A.I.R. 1933 All. 483, 1933 A.L.J. 957, 1933 Cr.C. 830, 55 All. 715. Similarly, where an accused has filed a petition against his conviction and that petition has been dismissed by the High Court (whether in limine or on the merits) and then proceedings are taken against him before the High Court for enhancement of the sentence, the accused would be precluded from re-agitating the question of the legality of the conviction; because the High Court cannot decide again what it has decided once—In re Saiyed Ansf, 85 I.C. 727, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 993, 26 Cr.L.J. 583 (586); Sher Singh, 8 Lah. 521, 28 Cr.L.J. 266, 100 I.C. 234, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 217, 28 P.L.R. 559; Dharma

The dismissal of a revision petition or an appeal by the High Court does not prevent it from enhancing the sentence passed upon the petitioner or appellant after giving him notice—In re Sayyed Anif, 85 I.C. 727, 26 Cr.L.J. 583, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 993; Ramlakhan, supra.

Where the Court gives notice to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, it ought not to dispose of the appeal before the notice is heard. If the appeal is a jail appeal, it ought to be admitted. If the appeal has been argued, before the Court comes to the conclusion that there is a case for enhancing the sentence, the Court should refrain from passing any order on the appeal until the notice to enhance can be dealt with—Babu Pandurang, 35 Cr.L.J. 1435, 151 I.C. 865, 36 Bom.L.R. 382, A.I.R. 1934 Bom. 198, 1934 Cr.C. 649, 58 Bom. 392, dissenting from Mangal Naran, 87 I.C. 424, 27 Bom.L.R. 355, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 268, 26 Cr.L.J. 986, 49 Bom. 450. (2) of this section. If the Advocate or Pleader representing the convicted persons were to state that he wished to consult with his clients or to take further instructions, it would only be right and proper that he should have an opportunity of so doing and an adjournment might have to be granted for the purpose. Power of accused to challenge findings of fact:—Where an accused has been convicted by a Magistrate, and that conviction has been confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, and then a notice is issued to the accused to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, the accused is entitled under this sub-section to show that his conviction is wrong, and in doing so he is entitled to challenge the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court. It is not correct to say that he can show cause against his conviction only on points of law. In showing cause the accused is entitled to argue that the estimate of evidence made by the Courts below is erroneous and that the conviction is against the weight of evidence upon the record; and the High Court can go into the evidence to find whether the conviction can be sustained—Badan Singh, 30 Cr.L.J. 933 (935, 936), 118 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1928 All. 150, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 881. The Lahore High Court is also of opinion that where an accused person, whose conviction has been confirmed on appeal, applies in revision, and a notice is also issued to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced it is competent to him to show from the whole record that he ought to have been acquitted, and he cannot be restricted with any considerations that the application is in revision only and not an appeal. The High Court can, therefore, go through the facts and consider the whole evidence—Kula, 30 P.L.R. 437, 116 I.C. 883, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 595, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 584, 30 Cr.L.J. 699 (700). But the Sind Court is of opinion that while this sub-section gives the accused the right to show cause against his conviction, he cannot claim the right to attack the findings of fact, if he has appealed to the lower Appellate Court and that appeal has been dismissed. If he had not appealed but had remained content on account of the light sentence inflicted on him by the trial Court, and then a notice is issued why his sentence should not be enhanced, he should not be denied the opportunity of challenging the findings of fact, while showing cause against his conviction under this sub-section. But he cannot claim the same privilege if he appealed and lost, and the High Court will not disturb the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court—Lukman, 21 S.L.R. 107, 98 I.C. 49, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 39, 27 Cr.L.J. 1233 (1234). If he has exercised his right of appeal and the appeal has been dismissed, he cannot, in showing cause under this sub-section, challenge the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court, but he can, as in an ordinary revision application, only show cause to the extent that the conviction was based on no legal evidence or was manifestly erroneous—Shidoo, 29 Cr.L.J. 936 (937), 111 I.C. 856, A.I.R. 1929 Sind 26, 22 S.L.R. 53. And this principle applies whether the appeal was dismissed on the merits or was dismissed summarily, because the summary dismissal amounts to an order confirming the findings of fact and law of the trial Court—Shidoo, supra. In Balumal Hotchand, 39 Cr.L.J. 890, 177 I.C. 346, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 171, 11 R.S. 58, where the Sessions Judge did not dismiss the appeal in the manner required by law, the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court heard the accused within reason upon the facts.

This sub-section gives the accused person no more right than that when he was asked to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, he might also show cause against his conviction. This section is intended to operate for the benefit of the accused person who otherwise would have lost his right to show cause against his conviction. This section does not operate so as to reduce the effect of sec. 423, cl. (2), Cr. P. C. So, in a trial by jury the convicted persons who are showing cause against an enhancement of their sentences cannot be allowed to have the whole question of their conviction re-opened even to the extent of asking the High Court to consider for itself the whole of evidence given at the trial—Khoda Bux, 35 Cr.L.J. 554 (562), 147 I.C. 1124, 6 R.C. 401, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 105, 37 C.W.N. 1122, 1934 Cr.C. 156, 61 Cal. 6; Alef Shaikh, 37 Cr.L.J. 859 (860), 9 R.C. 84, 62 Cal. 952, 163 I.C. 768; Moscladdi v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 877, 184 I.C. 206, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 497, 12 R.C. 212; Ramji Vala, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 279 (280), 41 Cr.L.J. 916, 190 I.C. 412, 42 Bom.L.R. 475, 1 I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 500; Rathanasabapathy Goundan v. Public Prosecutor, 37 Cr.L.J. 909 (912), 164 I.C. 243, 1936 M.W.N. 459, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 516, 59 Mad. 904, 44 M.L.W. 155, 71 M.L.J. 231, 1936 Cr.C. 635.

The provision in sec. 439, sub-sec. (6), that the accused shall be entitled to show cause against the conviction, means that he can show cause in accordance with law. He cannot claim, for example, in revision proceedings to call fresh evidence. He can only challenge his conviction in accordance with law, and where the conviction is based on the verdict of a jury, he has no greater right of appeal than he possesses under sec. 423, and cannot challenge the facts—Ramji Vala, supra.

The effect of those decisions is that the High Court cannot examine the facts for itself to decide whether the appellants are guilty or not. Being placed in that position the High Court will not inflict a sentence of death. The result of the failure of the Judge to do his duty is that the appellants are precluded from asking the High Court to examine the evidence in the case to see whether it is satisfied of their guilt. It would be an intolerable position if in such circumstances they are to be sentenced to death—Moscladdi v. Emp., supra. It is now well settled in the Calcutta High Court that on an appeal from the verdict of a jury, an accused person is not entitled to appeal on the facts merely because he is called upon to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. The High Court would not certainly examine the facts in order to see whether a sentence should be enhanced or not; otherwise it would mean that there would be two final Courts of fact on exactly the same evidence, one to decide whether the accused is to be convicted and another to decide whether he is to be sentenced to an enhanced punishment—Fazal Ali v. Emp., 43 C.W.N. 1032. See also 43 C.W.N. cxlvi.

The combined effect of sec. 439 (6) and sec. 423 (2) is to entitle the accused to question the conviction by showing that the Judge misdirected the jury or that the jury misunderstood the law laid down by the Judge in his charge. To hold that sec. 439 (6) confers an unlimited right of impugning the conviction would be to introduce the anomaly that a person convicted on the verdict of a jury can question the conviction only within the narrow limits laid down in sec. 423 (2), but if he has to show cause against a motion for enhancement of sentence, his right to question his conviction is very materially enlarged. This was not the intention of the Legislature nor there is anything in sec. 439 (6) read with other provisions of the Cr. P. Code which justify this view—Bishuanath, A.I.R. 1936 All. 850 (851), 38 Cr.L.J. 137, 166 I.C. 176, 1936

A.L.J. 1287. The High Court in considering whether the conviction was justified cannot go behind the verdict of the jury on facts; but, of course, in considering the notice to enhance, the High Court can look at the whole of the evidence in order to satisfy itself as to the exact nature of the offence in order to determine what sentence should be imposed—Ramji Vala, supra.

In a case where the sentence given by a Presidency Magistrate is one from which no appeal lies, the High Court has power under this section to enhance the sentence. But the High Court ought to be slow to exercise that power, because under this subsection the accused is entitled, before having the sentence enhanced, to challenge his conviction, and where he has been given a sentence which is not appealable by a Presidency Magistrate, and there is no evidence recorded, he has really no material on which he can challenge his conviction, and he is in a worse position than if he had been given an appealable sentence—Ahmad Ebrahim, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 37, 36 Bom.L.R. 1126, 36 Cr.L.J. 527, 154 I.C. 377, 1935 Cr.C. 71.

Conviction on plea of guilty:—If a person has been convicted on his plea of guilty he cannot in showing cause against his conviction, question the legality of his conviction or go behind his plea of guilty. He can only question the extent or legality of the sentence (e.g., whether the Court was entitled in law to pass such sentence) or he can possibly show that there was some defect in the proceedings or that the fact to which he confessed by his plea of guilty did not amount to an offence or the offence of which he has been convicted—Jnanendra, 33 C.W.N. 599 (604, 605), 49 C.L.J. 432, 30 Cr.L.J. 1038. But see Nga Yua, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 49, 36 Cr.L.J. 336, 12 Rang. 616, 153 I.C. 390, where it has been held that the accused can appeal against both his conviction and the sentence notwithstanding his plea of guilty, when notice is served upon him for enhancement of sentence.

1222. Miscellaneous:—Limitation:—See Notes 1205 and 1215. According to the practice of the Calcutta High Court an application for revision in criminal cases must be presented within 60 days from the date of the order complained of, exclusive of the time necessary for obtaining copies. This is not, however, an inflexible rule, and in exceptional circumstances the rule may be departed from—Khetra Mohan v. Darpa Narain, 43 Cal. 1029, 35 I.C. 979, 20 C.W.N. 1170, A.I.R. 1917 Cal. 849; Nathu Ramji v. Jagannath, 41 Cr.L.J. 745, 189 I.C. 479, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 259, 1940 N.L.J. 319. Although there is no law of limitation applicable to revision application, still it is the settled practice of the Allahabad High Court not to admit them unless they are made within a reasonable time after the order complained of. An application for revision preferred 5 months after the order complained of was passed was therefore rejected—Ram Narain, 27 Cr.L.J. 1021, 96 I.C. 877, A.I.R. 1926 All. 577. It is the practice of the Patna High Court not to entertain, save under the most exceptional circumstances, an application for revision of a criminal case after the expiry of sixty days from the date of the decision or order impugned. The period of 60 days is intended to cover the proceedings of normal length before the Sessions Judge, and ordinarily will not be extended because the petitioner negligently or deliberately delayed to move the Sessions Judge (for making a reference under sec. 438) till the period had nearly expired. When an application is made to the Sessions Judge beyond or even within the period of 60 days from the date of the first Court's decision, a further period of 60 days does not become available to the petitioner from the date when the Sessions Judge refuses to make a reference under sec. 438—Kelu Patra v. Iswar Parida, 8 Pat. 468, 30 Cr.L.J. 1053 (1054), 119 I.C. 401, 11 P.L.T. 18, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 404, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 577; Bholanath v. Bishun Prasad, 36 Cr.L.J. 97, 152 I.C. 311, 15 P.L.T. 569, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 301; Baldeo Singh v. Dheno Goolin, 37 Cr.L.J. 234, 160 I.C. 152, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 109; Nathu Ramji v. Jagannath, supra; Zafar Ahsan v. Jugeshwar Bux Roy, 41 Cr.L.J. 171 (172), 185 I.C. 346, A.I.R. 1910 Pat. 135, 1939 P.W.N. 855; Bechan Kuer v. Maharaja of Chotanagpur, 40 Cr.L.J. 196, 179 I.C. 15, 11 R.P. 338, 5 B.R. 206, 1939 P.W.N. 862, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 320. The fact that pleaders in the mofassil are not aware of the practice of the High Court and that the petitioners include a pardanashin lady, who is in fact the principal petitioner, cannot be regarded as among the most exceptional circumstances—Bechan Kuer v. Maharaja of Chotanagpur, supra. This is not a rule of law and, of course, does not take away the power of the High Court to interfere in any case as undoubtedly the High Court has power to do even of its own motion and in the absence of any application at all on a perusal of the record—Dhunmun v. Baleshwar, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 601, 146 I.C. 551, 35 Cr.L.J. 91, 1933 Cr.C. 1363.

The proper procedure in such a case is for a complainant to file an application for revision before the High Court within time, and without waiting for a decision of his application to the District Magistrate to take steps for an appeal—Nathu Ramji v. Jagannath, supra. (In this case the complainant moved the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal after 60 days plus the period required for obtaining the copies.)

So far as the Lahore High Court is concerned, there is no rule of practice that criminal revisions, which are filed after the expiry of the period say of sixty or ninety days, must be rejected simply on the ground of delay and laches—Des Raj, 35 Cr.L.J. 1447 (1448), 151 I.C. 943, 1934 Cr.C. 502, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 264, A.L.J. 1934 Lah. 803. No hard and fast rule can be laid down to the effect that application for revision cannot be entertained if filed after the period allowed for an appeal. There can be no doubt that the admission or non-admission of an application for revision under this section is a matter entirely within the discretion of the revisional Court. If an application for revision is made after unreasonable delay, that alone can be sufficient ground for the Court to reject the application. It would not be unreasonable to regard the period for limitation in the case of appeals as a standard of reasonable time within which applications for revision should ordinarily be filed. When the application for revision has been made after the expiry of the period allowed for an appeal the Court would ask the applicant to give reasons for the delay and if those reasons are not sufficient the Court can dismiss the application—Gokaran, 33 Cr.L.J. 506, 137 I.C. 684, 9 O.W.N. 334, 7 Luck. 699, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 242, 1932 Cr.C. 405, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 257, explaining Shah Naim, 31 Cr.L.J. 1012, 126 I.C. 395, 7 O.W.N. 668, Ind. Rul. 1930 Oudh 363, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 401, 1930 Cr.C. 941; Nathu Ramji v. Jagannath, supra.

There is nothing in this section to restrict a rule for enhancement to any particular time after the conviction—Ramlakhan, 33 Cr.L.J. 155 (157), 135 I.C. 522, 10 Pat. 872, 13 P.L.T. 17, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 42, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 126, 1932 Cr.C. 158.

New plea in revision:—Although it is a general rule that all grounds for revision must first of all be urged before the first Court of revision (Sessions Judge's Court), still a party is not debarred from urging a new plea, when there are intricate and important points involved in the case which could not be appreciated by the vakils in the mofussil—Manruddin v. Abdul, 40 Cal. 41 (43). But an accused cannot be heard to urge a new plea entirely inconsistent with the one which was raised by him during the trial—Raghubar Dayal, 18 Cr.L.J. 435 (437) (All.). See also Bhure Mal, 45 All. 526 in Note 1168. A new point cannot be raised in revision which involves a decision on a question of fact—Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad, 34 Cr.L.J. 414 (416), 142 I.C. 537, 55 All. 301, 1933 A.L.J. 188, A.I.R. 1933 All. 264, 1933 Cr.C. 434, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 125. The High Court cannot allow the applicant to introduce before it in revision questions of fact which, as they were not disputed, by implication, were admitted in the lower Court—Nebhandas Hollaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 337, I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 91, 185 I.C. 832, 41 Cr.L.J. 246. See also Mathura v. Chakra, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 176, 35 Cr.L.J. 1236, 150 I.C. 951, 11 O.W.N. 810. But where a ground regarding a point of law was not taken in the revisional application, the High Court is entitled to take notice of it suo motu—Jagannath, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 23, (25), 1935 Cr.C. 111.

It is doubtful whether, when an accused person does take an objection at the earliest possible moment, he can be debarred from raising it subsequently in a Court of Appeal or revision merely because he did not come up straightway to the High Court. But there is ample authority for the proposition that an objection with regard to the legality of a trial can be taken in a Court of revision or appeal, even though it was never taken in the Court of first instance at all—C. S. Joseph, 41 C.W.N. 251 (254).

A.L.J. 1287. The High Court in considering whether the conviction was justified cannot go behind the verdict of the jury on facts; but, of course, in considering the notice to enhance, the High Court can look at the whole of the evidence in order to satisfy itself as to the exact nature of the offence in order to determine what sentence should be imposed—Ramji Vala, supra.

In a case where the sentence given by a Presidency Magistrate is one from which no appeal lies, the High Court has power under this section to enhance the sentence. But the High Court ought to be slow to exercise that power, because under this subsection the accused is entitled, before having the sentence enhanced, to challenge his conviction, and where he has been given a sentence which is not appealable by a Presidency Magistrate, and there is no evidence recorded, he has really no material on which he can challenge his conviction, and he is in a worse position than if he had been given an appealable sentence—Akmal Ebrahim, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 37, 36 Bom L.R. 1126, 36 Cr.L.J. 527, 154 I.C. 377, 1935 Cr.C. 71.

Conviction on plea of guilty:—If a person has been convicted on his plea of guilty he cannot in showing cause against his conviction, question the legality of his conviction or go behind his plea of guilty. He can only question the extent or legality of the sentence (e.g., whether the Court was entitled in law to pass such sentence) or he can possibly show that there was some defect in the proceedings or that the fact to which he confessed by his plea of guilty did not amount to an offence or the offence of which he has been convicted—Jnanendra, 33 C.W.N. 599 (604, 605), 49 C.L.J. 432, 30 Cr.L.J. 1038. But see Nga Ywa, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 49, 36 Cr.L.J. 336, 12 Rang. 616, 153 I.C. 390, where it has been held that the accused can appeal against both his conviction and the sentence notwithstanding his plea of guilty, when notice is served upon him for enhancement of sentence.

According to the practice of the Calcutta High Court an application for revision in criminal cases must be presented within 60 days from the date of the order complained of, exclusive of the time necessary for obtaining copies. This is not, however, an inflexible rule, and in exceptional circumstances the rule may be departed from—*Khetra Mohan v. Although there is no law of limitation applicable to revision application, still it is the settled practice of the Allahabad High Court not to admit them unless they are made within a reasonable time after the order complained of. The proper procedure in such a case is for a complainant to file an application for revision before the High Court within time, and without waiting for a decision of his application to the District Magistrate to take steps for an appeal—Nathu Ramji v. Jagannath, supra. (In this case the complainant moved the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal after 60 days plus the period required for obtaining the copies.)

So far as the Lahore High Court is concerned, there is no rule of practice that criminal revisions, which are filed after the expiry of the period say of sixty or ninety days, must be rejected simply on the ground of delay and laches—Des Raj, 35 Cr.L.J. 1447 (1448), 151 I.C. 943, 1934 Cr.C. 502, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 264, A.L.J. 1934 Lah. 803. No hard and fast rule can be laid down to the effect that application for revision cannot be entertained if filed after the period allowed for an appeal. There can be no doubt that the admission or non-admission of an application for revision under this section is a matter entirely within the discretion of the revisional Court. If an application for revision is made after unreasonable delay, that alone can be sufficient ground for the Court to reject the application. It would not be unreasonable to regard the period for limitation in the case of appeals as a standard of reasonable time within which applications for revision should ordinarily be filed. When the application for revision has been made after the expiry of the period allowed for an appeal the Court would ask the applicant to give reasons for the delay and if those reasons are not sufficient the Court can dismiss the application—Gokaran, 33 Cr.L.J. 506, 137 I.C. 684, 9 O.W.N. 334, 7 Luck. 699, A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 242, 1932 Cr.C. 405, Ind. Rul. 1932 Oudh 257, explaining Shah Naim, 31 Cr.L.J. 1012, 126 I.C. 395, 7 O.W.N. 668, Ind. Rul. 1930 Oudh 363, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 401, 1930 Cr.C. 941; Nathu Ramji v. Jagannath, supra.

There is nothing in this section to restrict a rule for enhancement to any particular time after the conviction—Ramlakhan, 33 Cr.L.J. 155 (157), 135 I.C. 522, 10 Pat. 872, 13 P.L.T. 17, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 42, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 126, 1932 Cr.C. 158.

New plea in revision:—Although it is a general rule that all grounds for revision must first of all be urged before the first Court of revision (Sessions Judge's Court), still a party is not debarred from urging a new plea, when there are intricate and important points involved in the case which could not be appreciated by the vakils in the mofussil—Maniruddin v. Abdul, 40 Cal. 41 (43). But an accused cannot be heard to urge a new plea entirely inconsistent with the one which was raised by him during the trial—Raghubar Dayal, 18 Cr.L.J. 435 (437) (All). See also Bhure Mal, 45 All. 526 in Note 1168. A new point cannot be raised in revision which involves a decision on a question of fact—Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad, 34 Cr.L.J. 414 (416), 142 I.C. 537, 55 All. 301, 1933 A.L.J. 188, A.I.R. 1933 All. 264, 1933 Cr.C. 434, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 125. The High Court cannot allow the applicant to introduce before it in revision questions of fact which, as they were not disputed, by implication, were admitted in the lower Court—Nebhandas Hollaram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Sind 337, I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 91, 185 I.C. 832, 41 Cr.L.J. 246. See also Mathura v. Chakra, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 176, 35 Cr.L.J. 1236, 150 I.C. 951, 11 O.W.N. 810. But where a ground regarding a point of law was not taken in the revisional application, the High Court is entitled to take notice of it suo motu—Jagannath, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 23, (25), 1935 Cr.C. 111.

It is doubtful whether, when an accused person does take an objection at the earliest possible moment, he can be debarred from raising it subsequently in a Court of Appeal or revision merely because he did not come up straightway to the High Court. But there is ample authority for the proposition that an objection with regard to the legality of a trial can be taken in a Court of revision or appeal, even though it was never taken in the Court of first instance at all—C. S. Joseph, 41 C.W.N. 251 (254).

Loss of record:—The loss of a record after conviction is no ground for the acquittal of the accused in revision. In serious cases where the accused has been convicted and sentenced to a substantial punishment it may be that a retrial may be ordered. But if the case is a petty one, in which a small fine was inflicted, the High Court will not interfere either to set aside the conviction or to direct a retrial—Sheo Jawan v. Ram Sekhi, 18 Cr.L.J. 737 (Pat.).

Death of the applicant:—Any case can be brought to the notice of the High Court by any person and it will thereafter take action suo motu if the record indicates that there is sufficient reason to do so. It does not matter whether the applicant, who invoked the revisional powers of the High Court, is dead or not—Fariduddin Khan, A.I.R. 1936 All. 313, 1936 A.L.J. 253, 37 Cr.L.J. 562, 162 I.C. 338.

There are no provisions similar to those of sec. 431, Cr. P. C., as regards revisions, but the same principle would seem to apply, so that a revisional application against a sentence of fine would not abate by the reason of the death of the applicant. Under the provisions of sec. 70, I. P. C., the death of an offender does not discharge any property which would, after his death, be legally liable for his debts from liability to discharge any fine due from him—Sita Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 509, 168 I.C. 177, 9 R.O. 447, 1937 O.L.R. 232, 1937 A.Cr.C. 88, 1937 O.W.N. 587, A.I.R. 1937 Oudh 320. Where pending the revision against the sentence of fine the accused dies, the revision continues—Ram Chand v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 274, 42 P.L.R. 215, 41 Cr.L.J. 729, 189 I.C. 74, following Daulat Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1919 Lah. 347, 49 I.C. 774, 8 P.R. 1919 (Cr.), 95 P.L.R. 1918, 20 Cr.L.J. 214.

Duty of Magistrate showing cause:—Though it is open to a Magistrate called upon to show cause to submit his remarks in answer to the ground urged by the petitioner who obtained the rule, it is not open to him to submit observations with a view to supplement or add to his judgment—Madhu Sudan v. Sasti, 7 C.W.N. 859.

A Magistrate called upon to show cause should not, in submitting his explanation, express himself in a language wanting in decorum and politeness, nor should make sneering references or adverse comments upon any Judge of a superior Court—Kartick Chandra, 51 C.L.J. 5, 31 Cr.L.J. 1205 (1207), 127 I.C. 267, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 278.

Costs:—If a criminal revision is dismissed, the High Court cannot grant costs to the other party. The Code has made provisions for granting of costs in certain specific instances (vide sections 148, 443, 488, 526 and 545), but has made no provision for granting costs of revision; and so the High Court cannot, even by invoking its inherent powers, grant costs in cases of revision. It can grant costs only in those cases where the Code makes express provision, but not in other cases; the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius applies—Sankaralinga v. Narayana, 45 Mad 913 (919) (F.B.); Veerappa Naidu v. Avudayammal, 86 I.C. 147, 48 Mad. 262, 48 M.L.J. 106, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 438, 26 Cr.L.J. 707, 21 M.L.W. 688 (F.B.); Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khandu, 12 I.C. 297, 39 Cal. 157, 14 C.L.J. 437, 16 C.W.N. 10, 12 Cr.L.J. 529. See 423 (d), Cr. P.C., read with sec. 439 does not authorise the High Courts, in revision, to award costs of the proceedings before it—Kapoor Chand v. Suraj Prasad, 31 Cr.L.J. 414 (419), 142 I.C. 537, 1933 A.L.J. 188, Ind. Rul. 1933 All 125, A.I.R. 1933 All. 264, 1933 Cr.C. 434, 55 All. 301 (F.B.). See, however, Mg Po Lon v. Mg Ba, 81 I.C. 548, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 111, 3 Bur.L.J. 256, 26 Cr.L.J. 324 where such costs were actually allowed to the respondent. Even where the revision petition is brought by a private complainant against an order of acquittal, and the petition fails, the High Court cannot award costs to the other party (accused), although it is quite reasonable that he should be granted costs—Sankaralinga v. Narayana, supra.

440. No party has any right to be heard either personally or by pleader before any Court when exercising its powers of revision:

Optional with Court to hear parties.

Provided that the Court may, if it thinks fit, when exercising such powers, hear any party either personally or by pleader, and that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect section 439, sub-section (2).

1223. Scope of section:—The rule in this section is the general rule provided by the Legislature, and it must be taken as a legislative recission of the general principle that persons are entitled to be heard before any order affecting them to their prejudice can be made—Nobin v. Russick, 10 Cal. 268. Under this section, it is open to the High Court to determine the question raised by a Rule without hearing the counsel or pleader for or against the Rule—Bibhuti v. Dasimoni, 10 C.L.J. 80. The High Court can deal with the question whether the District Magistrate has properly exercised his power under sec. 437, without giving notice to the accused or allowing him an opportunity of being heard—Nobin v. Russick, 10 Cal. 268.

The provisions of this section apply only to revision, and do not apply to the summary rejection of an appeal under sec. 421—Raj Kumar v. Tincowri, 12 C.W.N. 248. This section does not apply to sec. 439 (2); that is, if an order is passed to the prejudice of the accused, he must be heard either personally or by pleader.

1224. No right to be heard:—The revisional power of the High Court is exercised at its own discretion and no petitioner has a right to be heard—In re Ranga Rao, 23 M.L.J. 371; Sripat v. Gahbar, 25 A.L.J. 1010, 29 Cr.L.J. 88 (89). And the fact that the pleader of a party was not heard when the High Court was exercising revisional powers is not a ground for a second application for revision or for review—Sripat Narain v. Gahbar, supra. The accused is not entitled to be heard when an order under sec. 436 is made directing a further inquiry into a summary rejection of complaint—Haridas v. Saritulla, 15 Cal. 608 (see also, the other cases cited in Note 1184 under sec. 436). The High Court refused to hear the counsel who appeared to support a petition for the revision of an acquittal—Thandavan v. Periantha, 14 Mad. 363.

Where an accused person applied in revision to the High Court, and pending the revision he was let off on bail and thereafter he absconded, held that the High Court would not hear his pleader in the revision application—Har Narain, 24 Cr.L.J. 240, A.I.R. 1923 All. 327, 71 I.C. 704. When the accused, who has been ordered by the lower Court to surrender to his bail bonds, does not enter appearance in obedience to the order of the Court below, the High Court will not be justified in exercising its discretionary powers in favour of the applicant. Further until the order of the Court below is complied with, the counsel representing the applicant will not have a right of audience—Sheo Mandu v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 All. 5, 1938 A.L.J. 1022, 11 L.R. 1938 All. 991, 178 I.C. 1000, 40 Cr.L.J. 153, 1938 A.W.R. 690, 1938 A.L.R. 930. See also Note 1205, last paragraph.

In a reference under sec. 438 a counsel is not entitled to appear against the report—Reg v. Devama, 1 Bom. 64. A private prosecutor cannot be allowed to appear on a reference to the High Court under sec. 438. If he is heard at all, he can be heard only with the permission of the Court—Sudderuddin v. Ram Joy, 14 W.R. 51.

But by virtue of the discretionary power given by the proviso, the High Court always hears the counsel in matters of importance—Haradhan, 19 Cal. 380; Ram Nihore, 8 A.L.J. 237, 12 Cr.L.J. 231. Whether the matter is a matter of importance must be left to the discretion of the Judge hearing the matter of revision—Sripat v. Gahbar, supra. Where a complaint has been dismissed under sec. 203, and the complainant applies in revision, the High Court may, in its discretion, hear the complainant on the subject of his complaint, but to this limited extent, viz, in order to see in effect what his case is about. If, for instance, that case on investigation should tend to show that there has been any denial of natural justice or that some gross and palpable error has been committed in the Court below, then the High Court would direct a rule to issue in order to hear what is to be said on the other side—Shamdasani, 31 Bom.L.R. 1144, 1929 Cr.C. 555 (556), A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 443 (444).

The High Court can pass orders under this section limiting the right of the applicant's counsel to be heard only on the question of sentence—Sat Narain Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 All. 426, 1940 A.L.J. 462, 41 Cr.L.J. 876, 190 I.C. 225.

441. When the record of any proceeding of any Presidency Magistrate is called for by the High Court under section 435, the Magistrate may submit with the record a statement setting forth the grounds of his decision or order and any facts which he thinks material to the issue; and the Court shall consider such statement before over-ruling or setting aside the said decision or order.

1225. A statement filed under this section takes away any irregularity in the proceedings of a Magistrate caused by the omission to record reasons before referring a case under sec. 202 or dismissing a complaint under sec. 203—Rengammal v. Krishnamachari, 5 M.L.T. 79.

A statement submitted by a Presidency Magistrate under this section must be regarded as a completion of the record and possesses a conclusive character as against affidavits—Bhawoo v. Mulji, 12 Bom. 377.

This section is not enacted to enable Presidency Magistrates to give fresh reasons for their decision contradictory to those already given, but to enable them to supply reasons where in the exercise of their privilege under sec. 370 they have given no reasons at all—Swarnammal v. Muniswami, 1929 M.W.N. 893, 1930 Cr.C. 120, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 225, 3 M.Cr.C. 55, 122 I.C. 800, 31 Cr.L.J. 460, 14 A.L.Cr.R. 341. This section does not abrogate the terms of section 263 or 370. It merely allows the Presidency Magistrate to supplement the reasons which have been already stated under sections 263 and 370. It does not apply where no reasons whatever have been recorded by the Presidency Magistrate. A Bench of Presidency Magistrates imposing a sentence of imprisonment for an offence must record their reasons for the conviction. The omission to do so in a case where no record of the evidence was taken is a grave irregularity. But having regard to the reasons for conviction disclosed in the record submitted by the Presidency Magistrate under this section, the High Court in this case did not set aside the order of the Bench on the ground of the irregularity—In re Dervish Hossain, 46 Mad. 253.

442. When a case is revised under this Chapter by the High Court, it shall, in manner hereinbefore provided by section 425, certify its decision or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order revised was recorded or passed, and the Court or Magistrate to which the decision or order is so certified shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the decision so certified; and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

1226. Scope of section:—This section deals with every case which is revised under this Chapter by a High Court; in other words, it applies to all revisions, whether under sec. 435 or sec. 439; and it provides that it shall certify its decision or order to the Lower Court, but it contains no such provision that it will certify its decision to itself. This shows that the High Court cannot revise any judgment passed by itself—Press, 1909 P.R. 4, 9 Cr.L.J. 378.

PART VIII.

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO CASES IN WHICH EUROPEAN AND INDIAN BRITISH SUBJECTS ARE CONCERNED.

This Chapter has been added by sec. 27 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act XII of 1923.

"The procedure for the trial of cases in which racial considerations are involved is included in a new chapter which takes the place of the old Chapter XXXIII of the Code.

"As regards the new Chapter XXXIII it will be observed that it applies to offences punishable with imprisonment which are alleged to have been committed outside a presidency-town. The first step to be taken to secure that such a case shall be tried under the provisions of the Chapter is a claim to be made by the accused person before the Magistrate. Unless such claim is made at one of the stages indicated for the trial of a summons-case or of a warrant-case, or for the inquiry preliminary to commitment, the provisions of the Chapter will not apply. The Magistrate then makes such inquiry as he thinks necessary. As a guide to the Magistrate in coming to a finding as to whether the case should be tried under the provisions of the Chapter or not, it is provided that if the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects, he shall find that the case should be tried under the provisions of the Chapter. For other cases with which both European British subjects and Indian British subjects are connected the Magistrate must be satisfied that it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case shall be so tried. This, it is observed, is the same criterion as that now contained in clause (e) of sub-section (1) of section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to the powers of a High Court to transfer Criminal cases. If the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person has a right of appeal to the Sessions Judge whose decision is final, and if the claim is rejected by the Magistrate, the Magistrate is required to stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal, or, if an appeal is presented, until it has been decided. The period allowed for the presentation of an appeal is fixed by Article 156A of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, at seven days. The persons who will be included within the term "complainant" for the purpose of these provisions are then defined by the proposed section 444. Incidentally public servants and officers and servants of companies, associations or bodies to which the Local Government by general or special order may declare the provisions of the section to apply, will not be included within the definition merely because they have made a complaint or given information in their official or "quasi" official capacity. The procedure in summons-cases punishable with imprisonment is then laid down. For warrant-cases which would normally be tried under the provisions of Chapter XXI of the Code, if it is found that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, a Magistrate is required, if he does not discharge the accused, to commit the case for trial to the Court of Session, whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court. Normally in the Court of Session the case will then be tried by a jury of mixed nationality, the majority of the jurors being either Indians or Europeans and Americans according as the accused person is an Indian or an European subject of His Majesty."—Statement of Objects and Reasons, para 11.

The direction contained in this Chapter is to be followed only when a plea of status is raised. Where the offences mentioned in the complaint are all triable by a Second Class Magistrate and the fact that the accused is a European British subject is not admitted by the complainant and is not known to the Magistrate at the time the warrant is issued, it is open to the accused to submit to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate—G. A. St. Gorge v. Uma Dutt, A.I.R. 1939 All. 602, 1939 A.L.J. 574, 40 Cr.L.J. 917, 184 I.C. 313, 1939 A.W.R. 570, I.L.R. 1939 All. 851.

443. (1) Where, in the course of the trial outside a presidency-town of any offence punishable with imprisonment, the accused person, at any time before he is committed for trial under section 213 or is asked to show cause under section 242 or enters on his defence under section 256, as the case may be, claims that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case, after making such inquiry as he thinks necessary, and after allowing the accused person reasonable time within which to adduce evidence in support of his claim, shall, if he is satisfied—

(a) that the complainant and the accused persons or any of them are respectively European and Indian British subjects or Indian and European British subjects, or

(b) that, in view of the connection with the case of both an European British subject and an Indian British subject, it is expedient for the ends of justice that the case should be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, record a finding that the case is a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, or, if he is not so satisfied, record a finding that it is not such a case.

(2) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, the person by whom it was made may appeal to the Sessions Judge, and the decision of the Sessions Judge thereon shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Court in appeal or revision.

(3) Where the Magistrate rejects the claim, he shall stay the proceedings until the expiration of the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal or, if an appeal is presented, until it has been decided.

1226A. The old law has been materially altered, and the mere fact that the accused is an European British subject does not ipso facto entitle him to a right of any special procedure and does not specially restrict a Magistrate or a Court of Session in his or its power of punishment; nor is it necessary that the Magistrate should be a Justice of the Peace in order to have power to try the case—Barnsfield, 30 Cr.L.J. 918 (920), 118 I.C. 438, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 187, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 774.

There seem to be two fundamental conditions precedent for the trial of a case outside a presidency town under the provisions of this Chapter, namely that the accused person shall claim that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and that the Magistrate shall make an enquiry and record a finding that the case is a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of the Chapter—Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal 545 (554), I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 43 C.W.N. 120, 41 Cr.L.J. 72 (81), 12 R.C. 251.

The mere fact of the accused person being an European British subject does not entitle him to the benefit of Chapter XXXIII. He must claim before the committing Magistrate to be tried under the special procedure, and the Magistrate must find that the necessary ingredients are present. If any such claim is made prior to commitment, but there is no finding by the Magistrate, the question cannot be raised in the Sessions Court. If a claim is made and the Magistrate finds favourably to the accused, the order is final and the Sessions Court cannot go behind it. If the finding of the Magistrate is adverse, the party should appeal, and the decision of the Sessions Judge would be final. The intention of the Legislature is clear that the point should not be raised in the High Court—Hay, 28 O.C. 230, 2 O.W.N. 469, 26 Cr.L.J. 1217, 88 I.C. 833.

It is possible for a European British subject to waive his right to be dealt with as such—Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 545 (555), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72, following Grant, 12 Bom. 561. See also E. L. Wise v. Emp., in Note 1227.

No special procedure is prescribed where both the complainant and the accused are European British subjects—Barnsfield, supra. This Chapter is only designed to apply to cases of racial distinction where there is a real clash between a European as defined in the Code on the one side and an Indian on the other or vice versa—Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal 545 (553), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72, 12 R.C. 251.

The provisions of this section are not applicable to proceedings under sec 107, Cr. P. Code—Christy v. Christy, 35 Cr.L.J. 505, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1019, 1933 Cr.C. 1556, 147 I.C. 997.

Sub-section (1) of this section requires a finding to be recorded by the Magistrate—E. L. Wise v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 789 (790), 176 I.C. 705, 11 R.S. 35, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 150. The omission of the Magistrate to record his separate finding on the application under this section does not invalidate his proceeding if his committal order implies that he had come to a finding. It is sufficient that he decides under this section that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, and, consequently, commits the case for trial to the Court of Session under sec 446 (1), Cr. P. Code—M. I. Mamsa v. The King, 39 Cr.L.J. 470, 174 I.C. 824, 10 R.R. 433, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 105.

A claim to be tried under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII is wholly different from a claim to be tried as an European British subject, etc., under sec. 528A. So far as the former claim is concerned, the question of the status of the claimant does not always arise, as is evident from the provisions of clause (b) of sec. 443. In a claim to be dealt with as an European or Indian British subject (under sec. 528A), the claimant has to prove his own status, but in a claim to be tried under the provisions of Ch. XXXIII the claimant may or may not have to do so—Martindale, 52 Cal. 347, 29 C.W.N. 447, 26 Cr.L.J. 401.

This chapter does not apply to Presidency Towns. There is no provision in the Code for enabling a person to put forward a claim to be tried under Chapter XXXIII either before a Magistrate holding an inquiry or trial in a Presidency Town, or before the High Court during the trial of a case. It is unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature even intended that when there was no knowing whether there would be a conviction or an acquittal (and both are open to appeal under sec. 449) an inquiry might be asked for and the Court required to decide on the question as to whether if tried outside a presidency-town the case would have been triable under the provisions of Chapter XXXIII. The only object of such an inquiry is that the result of it may be availed of for the purposes of an appeal by the accused in the case of a conviction and by the Crown in the case of an acquittal. The proper time to raise the question is when leave to appeal is applied for under sec. 449 (c)—Martindale, supra.

The words "offence punishable with imprisonment" mean all serious offences for which a sentence of imprisonment might be passed, as distinguished from petty offences punishable with fine only. The words include the offence of murder, for although it is punishable with death or transportation for life, still it often happens that a person charged with murder is ultimately convicted of a lesser offence punishable with imprisonment—Armstrong, 33 P.L.R. 578, 1932 Cr.C. 628 (629), 33 Cr.L.J. 529, 1932 Cr.C. 628, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 490, 137 I.C. 763, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 352, 13 Lah. 755.

Reasonable time within which to adduce evidence:—The right to make a claim that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter is an absolute right of the accused and cannot be defeated except on the merits, and in order to come to a finding on the merits, the Magistrate is required to follow the procedure laid down in the section. He may make such inquiry as he thinks necessary: This is left to his discretion, but what is not discretionary is that he shall allow the accused person reasonable time within which to adduce evidence in support of his claim. This requirement of the section is indeed mandatory, and it is not open to the Magistrate on any grounds whatsoever to refuse this opportunity—Nitya Nanda Sarma v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 996 (1997).

Proof of status:—A statement in an affidavit by the accused's wife that she heard from their grand-parents while they were all living together that the accused's grandfather was born in England of English parent, though not controverted by the Crown by a counter-affidavit, is merely hearsay evidence and is not sufficient to establish the status of the accused as an European British subject—Thomas, 53 Cal. 746, 98 I.C. 248, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1203, 27 Cr.L.J. 1304 (1306). In an application for leave to appeal under sec. 449 (c), the affidavit of the accused as to his nationality was held to be admissible—Gallagher, 54 Cal. 52, 101 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 307, 28 Cr.L.J. 481 (482).

Revision:—The Legislature has provided an appeal from an order rejecting a claim under this section, but it has provided no appeal from an order accepting such a claim. In the absence of an appeal revision is always open unless there is something special barring revision. There is nothing special barring revision in such a case—Christy v. Christy, 35 Cr.L.J. 505, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1019, 1933 Cr.C. 1556, 147 I.C. 997.

The words "rejects the claim" in sub-section (2) must mean "rejects the claim on coming to a finding on the merits of the claim in compliance with the provisions of sub-section (1) of sec. 443." Where the Magistrate disposed of the matter without giving any time to the accused to adduce evidence, as he thought that the application was a mere pretext for obtaining a further adjournment of the case, the Magistrate was, in so doing, plainly transgressing the provisions of the statute, and, in so far as he did so, his order was improper, if not without jurisdiction. Such an order cannot be hit by sub-sec. (2) of this section. Sub-section (2) is not intended in any way to bar the High Court's power of revision in a case like this where the express provisions of the statute are not complied with—Nitya Nanda Sarma v. Emp., 41 C.W.N. 996 (1997).

444. For the purposes of section 443, "complainant" means any person making a complaint or, in relation to any case of which cognizance is taken under clause (b) of section 190, sub-section (1), any person who has given information relating to the commission of the offence within the meaning of section 154:

Definition of "complainant."

Provided that a Public Prosecutor, a public servant, a member, officer or servant of any local authority, a railway servant as defined in section 3 of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, or an officer or servant of any company, association or other body to which the Provincial Government may, by general or special order published in the Official Gazette, declare the provisions of this section to apply, shall not, by reason only of the fact that he has made a complaint of, or given information of, an offence in his capacity as such Public Prosecutor, public servant, railway servant, member, officer or servant, be deemed to be a complainant within the meaning of this section, nor shall a police officer be so deemed by reason only of the fact that a report under section 173 relating to a case has been made by or through him.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" and "Official Gazette" have been substituted for "Local Government" and "local official Gazette" respectively in this section by sec 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1226B. The proviso lays down that the word "complainant" does not include a person who, although he is an European British subject, is merely an instrument which sets the Court in motion. Thus, where a public servant (who is an European British subject) makes a complaint, under the orders of the Government, as public servant, this Chapter does not apply—Zahir Haider, 7 P.L.T. 367, 27 Cr.L.J. 1041 (1059), A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 566, 97 I.C. 17. The proviso is intended to exclude from the definition of "complainant" such persons as public prosecutors or public servants who make complaints or lodge informations before the police in their official capacity, irrespective of whether or not they have personal knowledge of the facts or a personal interest in the case; i.e., the definition excludes not only those public servants who file complaints as mere automatons of the Government but also those public servants who file complaints as mere automatons and at the same time have personal knowledge of the facts of, and a personal interest in, the case—Mrs. Burchell, 20 S.L.R. 178, 27 Cr.L.J. 770 (771), 95 I.C. 306, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 230.

Even the Police Inspector cannot rightly be deemed to be a complainant for the purposes of the provisions of this Chapter and so if a Police Inspector who in an official document was described as "the complainant" is not 'a complainant' for the purposes of this Chapter, a fortiori the durwan or any other adult or child who gives information which is recorded in the general diary kept in Calcutta that a certain person was lying on the floor with blood marks on his person ought not to be considered as a 'complainant' for the purposes of this Chapter—Plucknett v Emp, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 545 (556), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72, 12 R.C. 251.

This chapter does not apply where the complaint is preferred against a British Indian subject by an European British subject (railway servant) on behalf of a Railway Administration—Joseph v. Lammond, 3 Bur.L.J. 147, 26 Cr.L.J. 190, 83 I.C. 894, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 373. A sleeper-passing officer of a railway is employed in connection with the service of the railway and is therefore a "railway servant" as defined in sec. 3 (7) of the Railways Act. He is, therefore, not a "complainant" coming within the definition of sec. 444, Cr. P. Code—Ibid.

445. (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides under section 443 that a case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a summons case, the Magis- trate trying the same shall direct that the case be referred to a Bench of two Magistrates and shall send a copy of such order to the District Magistrate who shall forthwith provide for the constitution of a Bench of two Magistrates of the first class, of whom one shall be an European and the other an Indian, for the trial of the case.

Procedure in summons cases.

(2) Where the Magistrates, constituting the Bench by which a case is tried under this section differ in opinion, the case together with their opinions thereon, shall be laid before the Sessions Judge, who may examine any party or recall and examine any witness who has already given evidence in the case, and may call for and take any further evidence, and shall thereafter pass such judgment, sentence or order in the case as he thinks fit and as is according to law.

(3) Any person convicted by a Bench under this section shall have the same right of appeal as if he had been convicted by a Magistrate of the first class, and any person convicted by a Sessions Judge under sub-section (2) shall have the same right of appeal to the High Court as if he had been convicted by the Sessions Judge at a trial held by the Sessions Judge under this Code.

(4) In any case in which it is impracticable to constitute a Bench in accordance with the provisions of sub-section (1) in any district, the District Magistrate shall transfer the case for trial by a like Bench to such other district as the High Court may, by general or special order, direct.

(5) Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, the Provincial Government may, by notification in the Official Gazette, direct that all summons-cases tried under the provisions of this chapter in any district specified in the notification shall be tried as if they were warrant-cases in accordance with the provisions hereinafter in this Chapter laid down for the trial of warrant-cases.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" and "Official Gazette" have been substituted for "Local Government" and "local official Gazette" respectively by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptations of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Sub-section (5):—"The Local Government and High Courts were consulted on these proposals of the Committee; from the opinions received it is clear that in many areas in India these proposals, i.e., sub-sections (1), (2) and (4), will be impracticable, and it is considered that in any case the adoption of the procedure proposed for similar warrant cases (sec. 446), namely, commitment to and trial in a Court of Session by jury, would not be more expensive than the proposals of the Committee. Accordingly, it is proposed (in analogy with the powers given to Local Government by sec. 269) to permit Local Governments to direct that in particular districts such cases shall be triable according to the provisions laid down for the trial of similar warrant cases"—Statement of Objects and Reasons, para 6.

446. (1) Where a Magistrate or a Sessions Judge decides under section 443 that a case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter and the case is a warrant-case, the Magistrate inquiring into or trying the case shall, if he does not discharge the accused under section 209 or section 253, as the case may be, commit the case for trial to the Court of Session, whether the case is or is not exclusively triable by that Court.

(2) Where an accused is committed to the Court of Session under sub-section (1), the Court shall proceed to try the case as if the accused had required to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 275, and the provisions of that section and the other provisions of Chapter XXIII, so far as they are applicable, shall apply accordingly:

Provided that where the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors and the accused, or all of them jointly, require to be tried in accordance with the provisions of section 284A, the trial shall be held with the aid of assessors all of whom shall, in the case of European British subjects, be persons who are Europeans or Americans or, in the case of Indian British subjects, be Indians.

1227. Where the complainant is an Indian, and one of the accused person is an European British subject, and the Magistrate decides that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, and the case is a warrant case, the Magistrate must commit the case to the Sessions. He cannot, after making the above decision, assume jurisdiction in respect of the Indian accused persons by discharging the European accused—Banarsi Das, 51 All. 483, 27 A.L.J. 188, 30 Cr.L.J. 218, 113 I.C. 764, A.I.R. 1929 All. 84, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 188.

Before a Magistrate makes a commitment under clause (1) of this section he must hold a preliminary inquiry under Chap. XVIII and consider whether there are grounds for discharging the accused under sec. 209 or sec. 253, Cr. P. C.; and he cannot do this without taking evidence for the prosecution—K. T. Keshan, 35 Cr.L.J. 174, 146 I.C. 879, 12 Pat. 707, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 677, 14 P.L.T. 726, 1933 Cr.C. 1491; G. A. St. George v. Uma Dutt, 40 Cr.L.J. 917, 184 I.C. 313, 12 R.A. 217, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 570, 1939 A.Cr.C. 117, I.L.R. 1939 All. 851, A.I.R. 1939 All. 602 (604), 1939 A.L.J. 574. It is open to him to discharge the accused under sec. 209 or sec. 253, Cr. P. Code—G. A. St. George v. Uma Dutt, supra.

This section lays down that if the Magistrate does not discharge the accused under sec. 209, he must commit the case to the sessions; that is, he must frame a charge under sec. 210, and make an order of commitment under sec. 213 (1). But once he has framed a charge, he cannot cancel it and discharge the accused under sec. 213 (2)—Rashid Ahmad v. Rich, 1931 A.L.J. 526, 32 Cr.L.J. 866 (867), 132 I.C. 332, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 492, 1931 Cr.C. 622, A.I.R. 1931 All. 366, 53 All. 690; E. L. Wise v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 789, 176 I.C. 705, 11 R.S. 35, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 150. In other words, sec. 446 does not mean that all the procedure of Chap. XVIII will apply to the case.

When proceedings have been taken at the accused's request under this Chapter, the Magistrate has no option but to commit him to the Court of Session to take his trial, even if he waives his right subsequently and wants to be tried by the Magistrate under the ordinary procedure. The High Court can, however, take action under sec. 561-A, Cr. P. C., and direct that the proceedings be taken out of Chap. XXXIII and be placed under Chap. XXI, Cr. P. Code. There is no reason why the High Court should compel the accused to continue to avail himself of a privilege which, there is good reason to believe, his impoverished state will render infructuous, if not harmful. This Chapter provides for a special procedure of which certain individuals at their own request are permitted to avail themselves. Therefore the accused can waive a right which he need never have claimed provided his request can be granted without prejudice to the trial of his co-accused or business of the Courts—E. L. Wise v. Emp., supra. See also Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 545 (555), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72.

Magistrate:—The 'Magistrate' in sec. 446 (1), Cr. P. C., means a Magistrate having jurisdiction to inquire into the case. Section 446 must be read with sec. 29-A of the Code. Under sec. 29-A, Cr. P. C., a Second Class Magistrate has no jurisdiction to inquire into or try offences under secs. 403, 417 and 427, I. P. C., which are punishable otherwise than with fine not exceeding Rs. 50. So he has no authority to commit the accused to the Court of Session. The only course open to him is to return the complaint to the complainant to be presented to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to entertain it—G. A. St George v. Uma Dutt, supra.

Trial to be by jury:—When an European British Subject is committed to the Court of Session under the provisions of sec. 446 (2) the trial must be in accordance with sec. 275, that is to say, the accused must be tried by a jury, the majority of whom shall, if before the first juror is called and accepted the accused so requires, consist of persons who are Europeans or Americans. But when the trial before the Court of Session would in the ordinary course be with the aid of assessors, the accused has the right under the proviso to sec. 446, to be tried with the aid of assessors, all of whom shall be of the category within which the accused comes. By "ordinary course" is here meant the course which would be followed in the absence of a claim by the accused to be dealt with under the provisions of Chap. XXXIII or in the absence of a Notification by the Local Government under the provisions of sec. 269—Bray v. Crown, 5 Lah. 515 (517, 518).

If the Magistrate decides that the case is one to be tried under this Chapter, and the case being a warrant case, he commits it to the Court of Session, the decision of the Magistrate is final, and the Sessions Judge has no discretion in the matter, having regard to the provisions of sub-sec. (2). The Sessions Judge would be acting illegally if he refuses to hold the trial by jury and holds it with the aid of assessors—Armstrong, 33 P.L.R. 578, 1932 Cr.C. 628 (630), 33 Cr.L.J. 529, 137 I.C. 673, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 352, 1932 Cr.C. 628, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 490, 13 Lah. 755.

447. If at any stage of an inquiry or trial under this Code

Court to inform accused persons of their rights in certain cases.

it appears to the Magistrate that the case is or might be held to be a case which ought to be tried under the provisions of this Chapter, he shall forthwith inform the accused person of his rights under this Chapter.

The omission by the Magistrate to inform the accused of his right to be tried under this Chapter is curable by the provisions of sec. 534—Zagariya, 3 Rang. 220, 4 Bur.L.J. 41, 89 I.C. 459, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 239, 26 Cr.L.J. 1371. See also Scott, 36 Cr.L.J. 593 (596), 154 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 67, 13 Rang. 104, 1935 Cr.C. 167 (F.B.).

448. [This section has been omitted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937].

Special provisions relating to appeal.

449. (1) Where—

- (a) a case is tried by jury in a High Court or Court of Session under the provisions of this Chapter, or
- (b) a case which would otherwise have been tried under the provisions of this Chapter is under this Code committed to or transferred to the High Court and is tried by jury in the High Court, or
- (c) a case is tried by jury in the High Court in a Presidency-town and the High Court grants leave to appeal on the ground that the case would, if it had been tried outside a presidency-town, have been triable under the provisions of this chapter, then, notwithstanding any thing contained in section 418, or section 423, sub-section (2), or in the Letters Patent of any High Court, an appeal may lie to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Letters Patent of any High Court, the Provincial Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original order of acquittal passed by the High Court in any such trial as is referred to in sub-section (1).

(3) An appeal under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall, where the High Court consists of more than one Judge, be heard by two Judges of the High Court.

See Para 7 (b) and (c) of the Statement of Objects and Reasons.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1227A. Appeal:—Matter of fact, matter of law :—The accused, on appearing before the committing Magistrate, asserted his right to be tried as an European British subject, and the Magistrate being satisfied that he was one, passed an order that he was to be dealt with under sec 443. In the trial before the Sessions Judge, the prosecution did not take any steps to have the Magistrate's order set aside, but had him charged and tried in the ordinary way. On appeal from the conviction, held that under this section, the appeal lay on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law, and the accused could question the legality of the conviction, even though there might not be any foundation for his claim to be tried under this chapter—Singleton, 29 C.W.N. 260, 41 C.L.J. 87, 26 Cr.L.J. 662. This section lays down that in cases tried by jury, an appeal lies to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law; therefore, in a case tried under this chapter, the finding of a jury on a question of fact is not final; and, therefore, to justify an interference by the High Court under sec. 307, the finding of the jury need not be manifestly wrong or perverse—Crown v. Bimal Parshad, 6 Lah. 98, 26 P.L.R. 263, 26 Cr.L.J. 1241. The terminology of this section is so clear and definite that there is hardly any room for entertaining any uncertainty about the plenary powers of the High Court. It cannot, with due conformity to the law so clearly worded, refuse to entertain an appeal on a matter of fact notwithstanding that the jury's verdict is unanimous and concurred in by the Judge. Nevertheless the powers, unrestricted as they are, must be exercised in accordance with the well recognised principles governing appeals in general and due weight must be given to the opinions of the Sessions Judge and the jury—James Doudall, 37 Cr.L.J. 607 (609), 162 I.C. 430, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 103, 31 N.L.R. 215 (Sup.).

The right of appeal under sec. 449 (1) depends not upon whether in certain circumstances the accused might have been tried under the provisions of Chap. XXXIII, but whether he was in fact so tried. Before it can be held that there has been a trial by a jury in the High Court under the provisions of Chap. XXXIII within the meaning of sec. 449 (1) (a), it is incumbent upon the accused to satisfy the Court that he had duly preferred a claim before the Magistrate that the case ought to be tried under the provisions of Chap. XXXIII, before he was committed for trial and that upon such claim having been made, the Magistrate after making such inquiry as he deemed necessary and being satisfied that the status of the complainant and the accused respectively were such as to entitle the accused to a trial under Chap. XXXIII, had recorded a finding that the case was one which ought to be tried under the provisions of that Chapter or that the Magistrate on the claim having only been made to him in that behalf had rejected the claim but that on appeal to the Sessions Judge, the claim of the accused to be tried under Chap. XXXIII had been granted. The Legislature plainly intended and enacted that before a trial could be held under the provisions of Chap. XXXIII, the question whether the complainant and the accused possessed different nationalities should be investigated and determined by the Magistrate as a preliminary issue in the case before the accused was committed to trial, and that unless the claim was duly made and had been determined by the Magistrate or by the Sessions Judge as might be, the right of the accused to be tried in accordance with the provisions of Chap. XXXIII did not accrue—Scott, 36 Cr.L.J. 595, 154 I.C. 837, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 67, 13 Rang. 104, 1935 Cr.C. 167 (F.B.).

The foundation of a right to obtain an appeal against the verdict and sentence given at a trial in the Sessions in the High Court contrary to the normal rights of a convicted person as laid down in the Letters Patent depends primarily and fundamentally upon the status of the applicant—Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 545 (553), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72, 12 R.C. 251.

Leave to appeal:—It is desirable that an application for leave to appeal under clause (c) should be made to the Judge who tried the case. The right of appeal depends upon extraneous circumstances which have nothing to do with the guilt of the accused, and the trying Judge is better qualified than any one else to decide whether these circumstances exist or not—Martindale, 52 Cal. 347, 29 C.W.N. 447, 26 Cr.L.J. 401, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 14, 84 I.C. 1041, 40 C.L.J. 256. But in another Calcutta case it has been held that, since no appeal would lie against the decision of the Single Judge refusing leave to appeal, it is better in the interests of justice that the application for leave to appeal should be heard by a Division Bench—Turner, 52 Cal. 636, 29 C.W.N. 458, 41 C.L.J. 325, 26 Cr.L.J. 835, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 673, 86 I.C. 659.

Application for leave to appeal should be made with notice to Crown, but once the leave is granted without such notice, it cannot be revoked on the ground of want of such notice—Martindale, supra.

This section gives the right of appeal against the decision of a High Court in three classes of cases. The first class are the cases tried by jury in a High Court under the provisions of this chapter and can only apply to a High Court outside a Presidency Town. The second class of cases are those which would otherwise be tried under the provisions of this chapter but are committed or transferred to the High Court and tried by jury in the High Court. In these two classes of cases, an absolute right of appeal is given. But in classes of cases referred to in clause (c) the right of appeal is dependent on the condition of the granting of leave to appeal. The necessity of this condition appears to be due to the fact that in cases which come under clause (b) the question whether Chap. XXXIII is applicable or not has been decided before the case is committed or transferred to the High Court. But in cases which come under clause (c) this question has not arisen, and it is to be decided by the High Court before leave to appeal is granted, and if that is decided in accused's favour, he is entitled as of right to an appeal—Turner, supra.

The High Court can only grant leave to appeal as laid down in sub-sec. (1) (c) on the unique ground that the case would, if it had been tried outside a presidency town, have been triable under the provisions of this Chapter, that is to say Ch. XXXIII—Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 545 (554), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72, 12 R.C. 251.

Limitation:—An appeal to the High Court (Division Bench) from an order passed by a Judge presiding at the criminal sessions of the High Court, under clause (c) of this section is governed by Article 155 of the Limitation Act, and if that appeal is barred, an application for leave to appeal is also barred; and consequently, an application for the determination of the status of the accused as to his being an European British subject under sec. 449 (c) read with sec. 443 is necessarily out of time—Thomas, A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 1203, 98 I.C. 248, 53 Cal. 746, 27 Cr.L.J. 1304 (1306); Gallagher, 54 Cal. 52, 23 Cr.L.J. 481, 101 I.C. 657, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 307; Plucknett v. Emp., A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 545 (556), 43 C.W.N. 120, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 162, 184 I.C. 757, 41 Cr.L.J. 72.

The right of appeal against an order of acquittal is created by sec. 417, Cr. P. C., and sec. 449, in its application to appeals against acquittals merely has the effect of enlarging the scope of such appeals in certain classes of cases. The effect of Article 157, Sch. I, Limitation Act is to fix the period of limitation in respect of such appeals at six months in all classes of cases whatever may have been the form of trial and whatever may be the scope of the appeal—Supdt. & Rem., Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Bagirath Mahto, 35 Cr.L.J. 1367, 151 I.C. 662, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 610, 38 C.W.N. 854, 1934 Cr.C. 908, 59 Cr.L.J. 482.

Practice:—Under the Rules of the Calcutta High Court, a vakil cannot appear for a party in an appeal from a trial held on the criminal sessions of the High Court. Therefore, the proper and the only permissible course in cases under this section, where a new right of appeal is given by the Code to the subject, is for this right to be exercised so long as the rules remain unchanged, in the way laid down by the rules, namely, on the footing that it is part of the business of the Court from which, as the rules stand, Vakils are excluded—Satya Narain, 55 Cal. 858, 32 C.W.N. 319 (328), 29 Cr.L.J. 1022, 112 I.C. 350, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 675.

Sections 453, 454, 455 and 459 are now re-enacted as secs. 528A, 528B, 528C and 528D, respectively. Sections 456—458 are incorporated in secs. 491 and 491A; sec. 460 is included in sec. 284A, sub-sec. (2); sec. 462 is now merged in sec. 326. The remaining sections (450, 451, 452, 461) are omitted.

1227B. Under the old Code, an European British subject had a right to claim to be tried by jury; that right was a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure, and therefore, where the commitment was made prior to the coming into force of the Amendment Act of 1923, but the trial in the Sessions Court was held after its coming into force, held that the accused's right to be tried by jury was not lost, and he was not to be tried by the Judge with the aid of assessors—Fitzmaurice, 6 Lah. 262, 26 P.L.R. 415, 27 Cr.L.J. 421.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

LUNATICS.

464. (1) When a Magistrate holding an inquiry or a trial

Procedure in case of accused being lunatic.

has reason to believe that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently, incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate shall inquire into the fact of such unsoundness, and shall cause such person to be examined by the Civil Surgeon of the district or such other medical officer as the Provincial Government directs, and thereupon examine such Surgeon or other officer as a witness, and shall reduce the examination to writing.

(1A) Pending such examination and inquiry, the Magistrate may deal with the accused in accordance with the provisions of section 466.

(2) If such Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, he shall record a finding to that effect and shall postpone further proceedings in the case.

Change:—Sub-section (1A) and italicised words in sub-section (2) have been added by sec. 120 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "The first amendment is consequential on the amendment in sec. 466. The second requires the Magistrate to record a finding if he is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and incapable of making a defence"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1228. Application of section:—The provisions of this Chapter are incidental provisions for dealing with exceptional classes of persons. This Chapter is not to be so construed as to override the rules of general procedure, except in so far as the special provision contained in it is clearly incompatible with the general provisions—1894 P.R. 11. When a charge of an offence to which Chap. XVIII applies is made before a Magistrate, he ought in the first place to make an inquiry into the truth of the charge; it is only when he is satisfied after such inquiry that there is a prima facie case against the accused that he can make the inquiry prescribed by this section into the question of the unsoundness of mind of the accused—Ibid.

The procedure laid down in this Chapter does not strictly apply to proceedings under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., because the counter-petitioner is not an accused. However, the provisions of this section at least are those which a Court of equity and good conscience would naturally follow; that is, if it finds that the counter-petitioner is insane and incapable of understanding questions put to him and giving rational answers, it must postpone further proceedings until it is satisfied that the counter-petitioner is capable of so understanding the proceedings—Appachi Goundan v. Kuttiammal, 48 Mad. 388.

The question involved in this section is whether the accused is of unsound mind at the time of trial, and, therefore, incapable of making his defence; and this question should not be confused with the question raised under sec. 84, I. P. C., as to whether the accused was or was not of unsound mind at the time when he committed the offence with which he is charged—Chadami Lal, 1900 A.W.N. 47; Nabi Ahmad Khan, 9 O.W.N. 355, 1932 Cr.C. 373 (374), 33 Cr.L.J. 542, 137 I.C. 800. The question whether the accused was of unsound mind at the time of the alleged offence is an entirely separate one to be inquired into in an entirely separate manner (see secs. 469-471)—Santokh, 7 Lah. 315, 27 Cr.L.J. 552, 93 I.C. 1048, 2 Lah. Cas. 939, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 498, 27 P.L.R. 454. See Bahadur, 9 Lah. 371, cited under sec. 469.

The first point that a Court has to decide when an accused person is brought before it who is suspected or alleged to be a lunatic, and before the Court can even proceed with the trial, is whether the accused person appears to the Court to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence—Nabi Ahmad Khan, supra. When an issue is raised as to the soundness of the mind of the accused person, the Court is bound to inquire, before it begins to record evidence, whether the accused is or is not incapacitated by unsoundness of mind from making his defence. If it omits to do so, the subsequent inquiry about the soundness or unsoundness of mind does not cure the defect—Jhabbu, 42 All. 137.

If the Medical Officer reports that there is some mental defect which amounts to feeble-mindedness, but that his condition does not warrant to certify him as insane, as he understands the nature of the act, the Magistrate is justified in proceeding with the inquiry or trial. See Nabi Ahmad Khan, supra.

Examination by Civil Surgeon:—A Magistrate cannot consign a lunatic to an asylum or jail on his own unprofessional opinion. He must have before him the deliberate statements of the Medical Officer reduced into writing—Milan, 1 Bur. 87.

A mere certificate of a Medical Officer of the District that the prisoner is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence is not sufficient evidence of the prisoner's insanity. The Medical Officer should be called as a witness and carefully examined—Ram Rutton, 9 W.R. 23, 2 Weir 580. The mandatory provisions of this section require the Magistrate not only to have the accused examined by the Civil Surgeon of the district or such other Medical Officer as the Local Government directs, but to examine such officer as a witness. Where the Magistrate did not examine the Civil Surgeon but examined the House Surgeon who was not an officer empowered in that behalf by the Local Government, his order could not be sustained—Narain, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 267 (270), 1933 Cr.C. 941, 146 I.C. 850, 35 Cr.L.J. 200. In Nabi Ahmad Khan (supra), however, neither the committing Magistrate nor the Sessions Judge examined the Medical Officer as a witness in Court, but merely acted upon his report.

When the evidence of the Medical Officer cannot be considered as decisive on the point of the prisoner's state of mind, evidence must be let in regarding his ordinary habits and behaviour, and his demeanour both before and after the commission of the alleged offence—Vaumbilee, 5 Cal. 826. This section cannot be regarded as directing that the enquiry shall be limited to an examination by a Civil Surgeon, or other Medical Officer, of the person concerned. An opportunity should be given to the accused for rebutting the evidence given by the Civil Surgeon—Onkar Dat, 34 Cr.L.J. 914, 144 I.C. 1031, 10 O.W.N. 719, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 362, 1933 Cr.C. 1042; Sherdil Sher Baz, 39 Cr.L.J. 737, 176 I.C. 447, A.I.R. 1938 Pesh. 24, 11 R.Pesh. 14. The question as to whether the prosecution could also produce evidence was not considered in Onkar Dat's case, but it would be contrary to all principles of administration of justice to allow one party to produce evidence and not allow the other party to do so. The evidence of the Civil Surgeon is not evidence produced by the prosecution. The examination of the Civil Surgeon is a duty which is placed by statute upon the Magistrate himself. It is obvious that the burden of proving that the accused is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence lies upon the accused and it is for him to lead evidence on the point in the first place and such evidence as is led on his behalf can be rebutted by the prosecution—Sherdil Sher Baz, supra.

Postponement of further proceedings:—Where the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of unsound mind and therefore incapable of making his defence, he cannot try the accused—2 Weir 581. Nor can he legally acquit him. But he is bound to postpone further proceedings in the case, and either release him on security or detain him in custody and report the case to the Government (sec. 466)—2 Weir 581; Roman Audheekharee, 10 W.R. 37, 1882 A.W.N. 106, 1900 A.W.N. 47; 1 W.P. 11. If on examination, the accused person appears to be insane and unable to understand questions and to return intelligible replies, the Magistrate should act under secs. 464 and 466 of the Code and not under sec. 341—Ratanlal 382.

465. (1) If any person committed for trial before a Court of Session or a High Court appears to the Court at his trial to be of unsound mind and consequently incapable of making his defence, the jury, or the Court with the aid of assessors, shall, in the first instance, try the fact of such unsoundness and incapacity, and if the jury or Court, as the case may be, is satisfied of the fact, the Judge shall record a finding to that effect, and shall postpone further proceedings in the case and the jury, if any, shall be discharged.

Procedure in case of person committed before Court of Session or High Court being lunatic.

(2) The trial of the fact of the unsoundness of mind and incapacity of the accused shall be deemed to be part of his trial before the Court.

Change:—The italicised words at the end of sub-section (1) have been added by sec. 121 of Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This amendment provides for the discharge of the jury in the event of the Court of Session or the High Court being satisfied that the accused is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

1229. Fact of insanity must be tried:—There are two different stages of procedure contemplated by this section. The first stage in the procedure laid down is that it must appear to the Court that the accused placed on his trial was of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence. The next stage that was to follow when it appeared to the Judge that the accused was of unsound mind and, consequently, incapable of making his defence, was that the fact of such unsoundness of mind and incapacity should be enquired into on the materials placed before the Court. Where it did not appear to the Judge that the accused was of unsound mind or that he was incapable of making his defence, it was not therefore necessary, much less was it incumbent upon the Judge, to adopt the procedure provided by the second part of this section, namely to hold an enquiry as to the unsoundness of mind of the accused placed on his trial, for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was incapable of making his defence—Durga Charan Sing, 41 C.W.N. 1312 (1313).

The provisions of this section are mandatory, and their non-compliance vitiates the trial. Where a Sessions Judge's mind is in doubt as to the mental state of the accused at the time of trial, it is incumbent upon him to hold an inquiry on the question whether the accused is capable of making his defence when he comes before him on commitment, and to take the opinion of the assessors on that question and to come to a decision before proceeding further with the trial—Santokh, 7 Lah. 315, 27 Cr.L.J. 552, 93 I.C. 1048, 2 Lah. Cas. 939, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 498, 27 P.L.R. 454—Ramnath, 31 Cr.L.J. 899, 125 I.C. 767, A.I.R. 1930 All. 450.

The question of unsoundness of mind must be tried by the Judge and jury, and not by the Judge himself personally—Bheekoo, 19 W.R. 15. Where, after a trial has been once adjourned on account of the prisoner's insanity, the Zillah Surgeon reports that the prisoner is capable of making his defence, the Judge should find with the aid of assessors whether the prisoner is capable of making his defence, and cannot act merely on the letter of the Zillah Surgeon—Kunnugan, 2 Weir 582.

Again, the question of the unsoundness of mind must be tried in the first instance. The issue as to the unsoundness of mind of the accused is a preliminary issue, and must be submitted to the jury first before proceeding with the trial—Doorjodhan, 19 W.R. 26; Jhabbu, 42 All. 137. The preliminary issue as to the unsoundness of mind and incapability of the accused to take his trial is to be tried by the jury, the moment the question of insanity is raised—Radhanath, 27 Cr.L.J. 896, 96 I.C. 160, 44 C.L.J. 285. See also Ram Nath, 31 Cr.L.J. 899, 125 I.C. 767, A.I.R. 1930 All. 450. Evidence must be led on the point as to whether the accused is of unsound mind or can stand his trial and understand the proceedings. It is not enough to merely put to the jury the question of the insanity of the accused—Radhanath, supra. If this procedure is not followed, the trial must be set aside, and the Sessions Judge must hold the trial before a fresh jury—Radhanath, supra. Where the question of unsoundness of mind or incapability of the accused of making his defence is not raised before the Court at all but there is only verbal application made by the pleader for the defence for an adjournment of the case in order that the accused may be kept under mental observation, that is not what is contemplated by this section and there is no case for an enquiry as contemplated by this section—Durga Charan Sing, 41 C.W.N. 1312 (1313, 1314).

Where in the course of his examination under sec. 364, the accused said that he was not in his senses when he tried to rob, it was held that the Court of Session should have acted under this section and tried the fact whether on the date the accused was called upon to plead he was or was not of unsound mind and capable or incapable of making his defence—Jagdeo, 15 A.L.J. 239. When the accused committed to the Sessions appears to be of unsound mind, the Sessions Judge is bound to try the fact of insanity first, and should not try it along with the trial for the offence—Niaz Ali, 1905 A.W.N. 2.

If in a case committed to the Sessions, objection is taken on behalf of the accused that he is of unsound mind, and the Civil Surgeon when examined as a witness on behalf of the accused states that the accused is a person of unsound mind and therefore not in a fit state to understand the proceedings and to stand his trial, the onus lies on the prosecution to prove that the accused is of sound mind. In such a case, it is improper for the Sessions Judge to charge the jury that it is for the defence to satisfy the Court that he is of unsound mind. But such a charge to the jury, though improper, does not amount to a misdirection so as to make the verdict of the jury on this point unacceptable specially if the verdict is unanimous—Shib Das, 51 Cal. 584 (586, 587).

In a trial at the Sessions, if a plea is taken on the prisoner's behalf under this section, that he is of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, it is for the Crown to establish the soundness and capacity of the accused. The inquiry as to the soundness or unsoundness of the mind of the accused is a preliminary inquiry which is conducted for the satisfaction of the Court, and in that view the prosecution ought to commence and give their evidence—Gopi Mohan Saha, 51 Cal. 827 (828), 26 Cr.L.J. 276, 84 I.C. 340, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 479 (Day Murder Case).

Where a Court entertains doubts as to the sanity of the accused, the Court should not merely put questions to the accused but should try the fact of such unsoundness of mind by examining the Civil Surgeon or some other medical officer, and taking such evidence as might have been procurable from the village at which the accused resides, with the view of ascertaining whether the accused had at any time prior to the commission of the crime exhibited symptoms of sanity—Hira Panja, 1 B.H.C.R. 33.

Where the Sessions Judge did not comply with the provisions of this section, but convicted the accused, held that the trial was vitiated, and the High Court set aside the conviction and ordered the Sessions Judge to hold an inquiry under this section before retrial on the charge—Pala Singh v. K.E., 1905 P.R. 54, 3 Cr.L.J. 80; Santokh, 7 Lah. 315, 93 I.C. 1048, 2 Lah. Cas. 939, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 498, 27 P.L.R. 454, 27 Cr.L.J. 552. Where on a reference for confirmation of a sentence of death, the High Court entertained doubts as to the accused's sanity, the case would be referred to the Sessions Judge for further inquiry—Azao Bebee, 2 W.R. 33.

1230. Postponement of trial:—Where the prisoner is found to be insane, the Sessions Judge should postpone the trial and proceed under sections 466 and 467, instead of proceeding with the trial and acquitting the accused—Ram Rattan, 9 W.R. 23; Noor Khan, 1 W.R. 11, 3 W.R. 70; Moorali, 3 W.R. 57.

A Sessions Judge has no power to stay proceedings and direct an inquiry to be made into the state of the accused's mind, where it appears to him problematic whether the accused is capable of making his defence. The proper procedure to be followed is that prescribed by secs. 465 and 466—Pisari Turaka, 2 Weir 138 (139).

1231. Sub-section (2):—The preliminary inquiry held under this section is not a trial in the sense of ascertaining whether the accused is guilty or not of the offence charged—Ghinua, 3 P.L.J. 291, 19 Cr.L.J. 135, 43 I.C. 423.

466. (1) Whenever an accused person is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, whether the case is one in which bail may be taken or not, may release him on sufficient security being given that he shall be properly taken care of and shall be prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and for his appearance when required before the Magistrate or Court or such officer as the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf.

(2) If the case is one in which, in the opinion of the Magistrate or Court, bail should not be taken, or if sufficient security is not given, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, shall order the accused to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as he or it may think fit; and shall report the action taken to the Provincial Government.

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Provincial Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.

Change:—This section has been amended as shown by the italicised words, by sec. 122 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. "This section is so amended as to allow bail to be granted at the discretion of the Court, in any case in which the accused is a lunatic, and the amendment also permits the accused to be kept in custody. The object in view is to delegate the power of the Local Government, and to do away with the existing distinction in procedure between bailable and non-bailable cases"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted in this section for "Local Government" by sec. 4, of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1232. Where a Magistrate or Sessions Judge, instead of proceeding under this section, tries the accused and acquits him on the ground of insanity, the order of acquittal is illegal—1882 A.W.N. 106; Romon Audheekharee, 10 W.R. 37, 9 W.R. 23; Shah Mahomed, 3 W.R. 70

Under the old section, the accused could be confined in a lunatic asylum or jail or some other place of safe custody only under the order of the Government, and the Magistrate's power over the accused ceased from such confinement, and he could not release him on security later on. He could deal with the accused only if the accused was sent back to him under sec. 473 on a certificate that the accused was capable of making his defence—Joy Hari, 2 Cal. 356. But under the present section as amended, the Court itself will have power to detain the insane accused in a jail or other place of safe custody (but not a lunatic asylum) and in such a case it will not cease to have control over the accused, but will be able to release him afterwards on sufficient security being given.

There is nothing in this section to empower the Magistrate to add any other condition. Where the Magistrate ordered that the accused be released provided "a responsible gentleman comes forward to take care of her outside Karachi," held that the order of conditional release could not possibly be sustained—Narain, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 267 (270), 1933 Cr.C. 941, 146 I.C. 850, 35 Cr.L.J. 200.

467. (1) Whenever an inquiry or a trial is postponed under section 464 or section 465, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, may at any time resume the inquiry or trial, and require the accused to appear or be brought before such Magistrate or Court.

(2) When the accused has been released under section 466, and the sureties for his appearance produce him to the officer whom the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf, the certificate of such officer that the accused is capable of making his defence shall be receivable in evidence.

When a trial is postponed under sec. 465 on the ground of insanity of the accused, it should not be resumed at the point at which it was previously stopped, but should be commenced de novo, when the Court finds him capable of making his defence—Kunnukan, 2 Weir 582

468. (1) If, when the accused appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed.

(2) If the Magistrate or Court considers the accused to be still incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court shall again act according to the provisions of sec. 464 or sec. 465, as the case may be, and if the accused is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, shall deal with such accused in accordance with the provisions of section 466.

Change:—The italicised words at the end of the section have been added by sec. 123 of the Cr. P. C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This amendment is consequential to the amendment of sec. 466.

Sub-section (1) does no more than say that when the accused who has not been put on trial because he was of unsound mind appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, if the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed—Ahmad Ali, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 501, 16 P.L.T. 828, 159 I.C. 963, 1935 Cr.C. 1286.

The inquiry or trial should commence de novo. See 2 Weir 589 cited under sec. 467.

Where the accused was not insane at the time of the preliminary inquiry, and he was duly committed, but he afterwards developed an attack of insanity, but when he was produced before the Sessions Judge, the Medical Officer reported that his state of mind was considerably better and that he was fit to stand his trial, whereupon the

There were four sub-sections in this section in the Code of 1898. Sub-sections (2) and (3) were repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912) and sub-section (4) was numbered as sub-section (2). Previously the words at the end of sub-section (1) were "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government," so that the Court could not itself send the accused to a lunatic asylum or jail but had to report the case to the Local Government, and the latter gave orders for sending the accused to an asylum or jail. See 43 Bom. 134. But those words have been omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1914, and its effect is that Magistrates and Courts are no longer required to report cases for the orders of the Local Government but are themselves competent to direct the detention of the accused in an asylum or jail or some other place prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics—Nga E, 8 Bur.L.T. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 670, 30 I.C. 654; Meiku, 22 O.C. 259, 21 Cr.L.J. 46, 54 I.C. 254. But it does not deprive the power of the Government to detain the accused in some other place of custody, under the provisions of the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912). The Government have powers, in spite of this section, to decide the future fate of the lunatic—Irani Hasan, 25 Bom.L.R. 286, 26 Cr.L.J. 348, 84 I.C. 652.

As clauses (2) and (3) of sec. 471, Cr. P. C., and the words "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government" at the end of clause (1) of the same section have been repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act of 1912 and the Repealing and Amending Act, 1914 (Act X of 1914) respectively, a Magistrate or Court is now competent under sec. 471 (1) of the Cr. P. C. (as it now stands), read with sec. 24 of the Indian Lunacy Act and Rules 53—55 of the rules framed under sec. 91 of the said Act, referred to above, to pass orders for the transfer of a criminal lunatic to a lunatic asylum without reference to Government. (Vide page 25 of Rules Relating to Lunatics, corrected up to August, 1925 and published by the Government of Bengal in 1926.)

1235. Application of section:—This section should be applied not only where the accused are insane persons, but also where the accused persons, though not insane, labour under defects which render their trial impossible. Thus, where a deaf and dumb person, who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty of murder, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to proceed under sec. 471—Dost Muhammad, 1911 P.R. 13, 12 Cr.L.J. 613, 12 I.C. 989, following Gehna, 1889 P.R. 37. This section does not compel the Court to send the accused to the lunatic asylum; all that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep him from mischief—Mohammad, 42 M.L.J. 72, 23 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 54, 65 I.C. 423, 30 M.L.T. 74, 1922 M.W.N. 10. This section contemplates the committing of a crime by a person who owing to the state of his mind cannot be deemed to have known the quality of his act. So the case of a deaf and dumb person does not come within this section when he is charged under sec. 411, I. P. C., inasmuch as it cannot be said in his case that he knew the property to have been stolen—A Deaf and Dumb, 37 Cr.L.J. 107, 159 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 451, 16 P.L.T. 568, 1935 Cr.C. 1168.

Where the Court below while acquitting an accused on the ground of insanity omitted to pass orders under sec. 471, the High Court in revision can pass the necessary orders. The passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court, after an acquittal by the Court below, does not amount to an alteration of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of sec. 439 (4)—Mohammad, supra.

The words "detained in safe custody" do not mean detained in the custody of friends or relatives; that is, the Magistrate cannot direct that the person acquitted under this section should be kept in the safe custody of his friends or relatives. This is evident from the language of sec. 475. All that the Magistrate can do is to detain the accused in a place of safe custody and report the matter to the Local Government, and it is the Local Government who can deliver the accused to any friend or relative under sec. 475—Sisik Chandra, 56 Cal. 208, 48 C.L.J. 148, 29 Cr.L.J. 847 (848); Anonymous, 2 Weir was sent back to him under sec. 473 on a certificate that the accused was capable of making his defence—Joy Hari, 2 Cal. 356 But under the present section as amended, the Court itself will have power to detain the insane accused in a jail or other place of safe custody (but not a lunatic asylum) and in such a case it will not cease to have control over the accused, but will be able to release him afterwards on sufficient security being given.

There is nothing in this section to empower the Magistrate to add any other condition. Where the Magistrate ordered that the accused be released provided "a responsible gentleman comes forward to take care of her outside Karachu," held that the order of conditional release could not possibly be sustained—Narain, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 267 (270), 1933 Cr.C. 941, 146 I.C. 850, 35 Cr.L.J. 200.

467. (1) Whenever an inquiry or a trial is postponed under section 464 or section 465, the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, may at any time resume the inquiry or trial, and require the accused to appear or be brought before such Magistrate or Court.

(2) When the accused has been released under section 466, and the sureties for his appearance produce him to the officer whom the Magistrate or Court appoints in this behalf, the certificate of such officer that the accused is capable of making his defence shall be receivable in evidence.

When a trial is postponed under sec. 465 on the ground of insanity of the accused, it should not be resumed at the point at which it was previously stopped, but should be commenced de novo, when the Court finds him capable of making his defence—Kunnukan, 2 Weir 582.

468. (1) If, when the accused appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed.

(2) If the Magistrate or Court considers the accused to be still incapable of making his defence, the Magistrate or Court shall again act according to the provisions of sec. 464 or sec. 465, as the case may be, and if the accused is found to be of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, shall deal with such accused in accordance with the provisions of section 466.

Change:—The italicised words at the end of the section have been added by sec. 123 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This amendment is consequential to the amendment of sec. 466.

Sub-section (1) does no more than say that when the accused who has not been put on trial because he was of unsound mind appears or is again brought before the Magistrate or the Court, as the case may be, if the Magistrate or Court considers him capable of making his defence, the inquiry or trial shall proceed—Ahmad Ali, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 501, 16 P.L.T. 828, 159 I.C. 963, 1935 Cr.C. 1286.

The inquiry or trial should commence de novo. See 2 Weir 589 cited under sec. 467.

Where the accused was not insane at the time of the preliminary inquiry, and he was duly committed, but he afterwards developed an attack of insanity, but when he was produced before the Sessions Judge, the Medical Officer reported that his state of mind was considerably better and that he was fit to stand his trial, whereupon the Judge proceeded to try him, and throughout the trial the accused did not appear to be the least abnormal, held that the Sessions Judge acted rightly in proceeding with the trial—Nabi Ahmad Khan, 9 O.W.N. 355, 1932 Cr.C. 373 (375), A.I.R. 1932 Oudh 190, 137 I.C. 800, 33 Cr.L.J. 542, 18 A.I.Cr.R. 319.

Under sub-sec. (1), there does not appear to be any injunction upon the Magistrate or Court to take evidence as to capacity of the accused to make his defence. The view of the Magistrate or Court is made the criterion of whether action is required under sub-sec. (2). Where there was the certificate of the Inspector General of Jails before the Magistrate and the accused appeared in his Court, the Magistrate certainly had a basis for a decision as to whether sub-sec. (1) or sub-sec. (2) applied and there is no reason to hold that his decision was not arrived at under a due sense of responsibility—Ahmad Ali, supra.

469. When the accused appears to be of sound mind at the time of inquiry or trial, and the Magistrate is satisfied from the evidence given before him that there is reason to believe that the accused committed an act which, if he had been of sound mind, would have been an offence, and that he was, at the time when the act was committed, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the Magistrate shall proceed with the case, and, if the accused ought to be committed to the Court of Session or High Court, send him for trial before the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be.

1232A. "The Magistrate shall proceed with the case," etc.:—Where the Magistrate is of opinion that the accused is of sound mind at the time of trial was of unsound mind at the time of committing an offence, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused on that ground, but should proceed under secs. 470 & 471—2 Weir 582. A Magistrate can commit an accused to the Sessions, whom he finds to be sane at the time of the preliminary investigation, although at the time of committing the offence he was insane—Ram Rutton, 9 W.R. 23. This section must not be confused with secs. 464-465. If the committing Magistrate finds that the accused is sane at the time of the preliminary inquiry, but was insane at the time of committing the offence, he has no alternative but to proceed in accordance with this section; and it is not incumbent upon him to order a medical inquiry, or to try the issue of insanity. It is only when the case falls under secs. 464-465, that is, when the accused is insane at the time of the inquiry or trial, that the issue of insanity has to be tried before the trial for the offence is proceeded with—Bahadur, 9 Lah. 371, 29 Cr.L.J. 204 (206, 207), 106 I.C. 796.

Whenever a Magistrate acting under this section shall send for trial before the Court of Session an accused person regarding whose sanity at the time of committing the offence he entertains any doubt, he shall at the same time inform the jail authorities of the supposed state of the accused, in order that he may be placed under careful surveillance prior to his trial before the Court of Session—Bom. H. C. Cir., p. 18.

If the accused was sane at the time of committing the offence, and is sane at the time of the trial, and is convicted, but subsequently becomes insane in jail, the Local Government will take steps to inquire into his mental condition. This is a matter for the Local Government and not for the Court—Bahadur, supra.

Presumption:—The law presumes every person who has attained the age of discretion to be sane, unless the contrary is proved; and where a lunatic has lucid intervals, the law presumes the offence to have been committed during such interval, unless it is proved that the act was committed during mental derangement—Balu, Ratanlal 172.

470. Whenever any person is acquitted upon the ground that, at the time at which he is alleged to have committed an offence, he was, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act alleged as constituting the offence, or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the finding shall state specifically whether he committed the act or not.

1233. Acquittal on ground of lunacy:—The fact of unsoundness of mind must be clearly and distinctly proved before any jury is justified in pronouncing a verdict of acquittal under sec. 84, I. P. C. It is not because a man commits a horrible murder or because he commits it while labouring under strong passions and feelings that therefore the world is to assume that he must have been insane when he committed the deed. Every man is presumed to be sane and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes until the contrary is proved—Nobin Chunder, 20 W.R. 70 (71), Ratanlal 172. Where the prisoner killed his brother-in-law apparently without any enmity or quarrel, and the only motive given out by the prisoner was that he might be hanged by the authorities and go to heaven, it was held that the opinion of a medical witness as to the state of the accused's mind would be necessary—Venkatesh Bhatta, 2 Weir 583.

If the Magistrate finds that the accused is of sound mind at the time of trial, but was suffering from temporary insanity while he committed the offence, he should not discharge the accused, but acquit him and proceed under this section and sec. 471—Lanka Chinna, 2 Weir 582; Katty Kishan, 17 C.P.L.R. 113 (125), 1 Cr.L.J. 854.

471. (1) Whenever the finding states that the accused person committed the act alleged, the Magistrate or Court before whom or which the trial has been held, shall, if such act would, but for the incapacity found, have constituted an offence, order such person to be detained in safe custody in such place and manner as the Magistrate or Court thinks fit, and shall report the action taken to the Provincial Government.

Provided that no order for the detention of the accused in a lunatic asylum shall be made otherwise than in accordance with such rules as the Provincial Government may have made under the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.

(2) The Provincial Government may empower the officer-in-charge of the jail in which a person is confined under the provisions of section 466 or this section, to discharge all or any of the functions of the Inspector-General of Prisons under section 473 or section 474.

Power of Provincial Government to relieve Inspector-General of certain functions.

1234. Change:—The word 'finding' has been substituted for the word 'judgment' and the word 'detained' for the word 'kept'; the words "and shall report the action taken to the Local Government" and the proviso have been added by sec. 124 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted in this section for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

There were four sub-sections in this section in the Code of 1898. Sub-sections (2) and (3) were repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912) and sub-section (4) was numbered as sub-section (2). Previously the words at the end of sub-section (1) were "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government," so that the Court could not itself send the accused to a lunatic asylum or jail but had to report the case to the Local Government, and the latter gave orders for sending the accused to an asylum or jail. See 43 Bom. 134. But those words have been omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1914, and its effect is that Magistrates and Courts are no longer required to report cases for the orders of the Local Government but are themselves competent to direct the detention of the accused in an asylum or jail or some other place prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics—Nga E, 8 Bur.L.T. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 670, 30 I.C. 654; Maiku, 22 O.C. 269, 21 Cr.L.J. 46, 54 I.C. 254. But it does not deprive the power of the Government to detain the accused in some other place of custody, under the provisions of the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912). The Government have powers, in spite of this section, to decide the future fate of the lunatic—Imam Hasan, 25 Bom.L.R. 286, 26 Cr.L.J. 348, 84 I.C. 652.

As clauses (2) and (3) of sec. 471, Cr. P. C., and the words "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government" at the end of clause (1) of the same section have been repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act of 1912 and the Repealing and Amending Act, 1914 (Act X of 1914) respectively, a Magistrate or Court is now competent under sec. 471 (1) of the Cr. P. C. (as it now stands), read with sec. 24 of the Indian Lunacy Act and Rules 53–56 of the rules framed under sec. 91 of the said Act, referred to above, to pass orders for the transfer of a criminal lunatic to a lunatic asylum without reference to Government. (Vide page 25 of Rules Relating to Lunatics, corrected up to August, 1925 and published by the Government of Bengal in 1926.)

1235. Application of section:—This section should be applied not only where the accused are insane persons, but also where the accused persons, though not insane, labour under defects which render their trial impossible. Thus, where a deaf and dumb person, who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty of murder, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to proceed under sec. 471—Dost Muhammad, 1911 P.R. 13, 12 Cr.L.J. 613, 12 I.C. 989, following Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37. This section does not compel the Court to send the accused to the lunatic asylum; all that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep him from mischief—Mahammad, 42 M.L.J. 72, 23 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 54, 65 I.C. 423, 30 M.L.T. 74, 1922 M.W.N. 10. This section contemplates the committing of a crime by a person who owing to the state of his mind cannot be deemed to have known the quality of his act. So the case of a deaf and dumb person does not come within this section when he is charged under sec. 411, I. P. C., inasmuch as it cannot be said in his case that he knew the property to have been stolen—A Deaf and Dumb, 37 Cr.L.J. 107, 159 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 451, 16 P.L.T. 568, 1935 Cr.C. 1168.

Where the Court below while acquitting an accused on the ground of insanity omitted to pass orders under sec. 471, the High Court in revision can pass the necessary orders. The passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court, after an acquittal by the Court below, does not amount to an alteration of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of sec. 439 (4)—Mahammad, supra.

The words "detained in safe custody" do not mean detained in the custody of friends or relatives; that is, the Magistrate cannot direct that the person acquitted under this section should be kept in the safe custody of his friends or relatives. This is evident from the language of sec. 475. All that the Magistrate can do is to detain the accused in a place of safe custody and report the matter to the Local Government, and it is the Local Government who can deliver the accused to any friend or relative under sec. 475—Shish Chandra, 56 Cal. 208, 48 C.L.J. 148, 29 Cr.L.J. 817 (848); Anonymous, 2 Weir

Safe Custody:—e.g., a Mental Hospital; see Karma Uiang, 32 C.W.N. 342 (345). Where the accused is proved to be a criminal lunatic and in the opinion of the medical expert there is no likelihood of his even regaining his mental sanity, the High Court directed that the accused be detained in safe custody in a Mental Hospital—Onkar Dat, 36 Cr L J. 392 (401), 153 I.C. 780, 1935 O.W.N. 53.

472. [Repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.]

473. If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466, and in the case of a person detained in a jail, the Inspector-General of Prisons, or, in the case of a person detained in a lunatic asylum, the visitors of such asylum or any two of them shall certify that, in his or their opinion, such person is capable of making his defence, he shall be taken before the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, at such time as the Magistrate or Court appoints, and the Magistrate or Court shall deal with such person under the provisions of section 468; and the certificate of such Inspector-General or visitors as aforesaid shall be receivable as evidence.

The word 'detained' has been substituted for 'confined,' and the italicised words added, by section 125 of the Cr P C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923

This section, while it compels a Court to proceed in accordance with the provisions of sec 468, does not preclude the Court from proceeding under sec 468, at any time when an accused is brought before it. Where, therefore, a Sessions Judge, after taking evidence, found the accused insane and unable to make his defence and ordered his detention in a Mental Hospital and subsequently the Medical Superintendent of the Hospital wrote to him reporting that the accused was feigning insanity and that he was sane and therefore the Sessions Judge commenced a fresh trial with a different set of assessors without any preliminary inquiry into the sanity of the accused and without putting it on the record that the accused was in the Judge's opinion able to conduct his defence, held that the trial by the Sessions Judge was not contrary to law though the Sessions Judge would have acted wisely if before considering it he had placed it on the record that he considered the accused to be capable of making his defence and stated the grounds on which he came to that conclusion—Ibrahim, 35 Cr L J. 869, 148 I.C. 987, 1934 Cr C. 239, A I R 1934 Lah. 123.

A certificate of the visitors of a lunatic asylum as contemplated in this section is a public document, the genuineness of which is to be presumed under sec. 79 of the Indian Evidence Act—Kalidas Sarkar, 63 Cal. 425.

474. (1) If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466 or section 471, and such Inspector-General or visitors shall certify that, in his or their judgment, he may be released without danger of his doing injury to himself or to any other person, the Provincial Government may thereupon order him to be released or to be detained in custody, or to be transferred to a public lunatic asylum if he has not been already sent to such an asylum; and, in case it orders him to be

There were four sub-sections in this section in the Code of 1898. Sub-sections (2) and (3) were repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912) and sub-section (4) was numbered as sub-section (2). Previously the words at the end of sub-section (1) were "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government," so that the Court could not itself send the accused to a lunatic asylum or jail but had to report the case to the Local Government, and the latter gave orders for sending the accused to an asylum or jail. See 43 Bom. 134. But those words have been omitted by the Repealing and Amending Act, X of 1914, and its effect is that Magistrates and Courts are no longer required to report cases for the orders of the Local Government but are themselves competent to direct the detention of the accused in an asylum or jail or some other place prescribed for the reception of criminal lunatics—Nga E, 8 Bur.L.T. 286, 16 Cr.L.J. 670, 30 I.C. 654; Maiku, 22 O.C. 269, 21 Cr.L.J. 46, 54 I.C. 254. But it does not deprive the power of the Government to detain the accused in some other place of custody, under the provisions of the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912). The Government have powers, in spite of this section, to decide the future fate of the lunatic—Imam Hasan, 25 Bom.L.R. 286, 26 Cr.L.J. 348, 84 I.C. 652.

As clauses (2) and (3) of sec. 471, Cr. P. C., and the words "and shall report the case for the orders of the Local Government" at the end of clause (1) of the same section have been repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act of 1912 and the Repealing and Amending Act, 1914 (Act X of 1914) respectively, a Magistrate or Court is now competent under sec. 471 (1) of the Cr. P. C. (as it now stands), read with sec. 24 of the Indian Lunacy Act and Rules 53–56 of the rules framed under sec. 91 of the said Act, referred to above, to pass orders for the transfer of a criminal lunatic to a lunatic asylum without reference to Government. (Vide page 25 of Rules Relating to Lunatics, corrected up to August, 1925 and published by the Government of Bengal in 1926.)

1235. Application of section:—This section should be applied not only where the accused are insane persons, but also where the accused persons, though not insane, labour under defects which render their trial impossible. Thus, where a deaf and dumb person, who is unable to understand the proceedings of the trial, is found guilty of murder, the proper course to be taken is to treat him as a lunatic and to proceed under sec. 471—Dost Muhammad, 1911 P.R. 13, 12 Cr.L.J. 613, 12 I.C. 989, following Gahna, 1889 P.R. 37. This section does not compel the Court to send the accused to the lunatic asylum; all that is necessary is to see that such safeguards are taken as would keep him from mischief—Mahammad, 42 M.L.J. 72, 23 Cr.L.J. 71, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 54, 65 I.C. 423, 30 M.L.T. 74, 1922 M.W.N. 10. This section contemplates the committing of a crime by a person who owing to the state of his mind cannot be deemed to have known the quality of his act. So the case of a deaf and dumb person does not come within this section when he is charged under sec. 411, I. P. C., inasmuch as it cannot be said in his case that he knew the property to have been stolen—A Deaf and Dumb, 37 Cr.L.J. 107, 159 I.C. 577, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 451, 16 P.L.T. 568, 1935 Cr.C. 1168.

Where the Court below while acquitting an accused on the ground of insanity omitted to pass orders under sec. 471, the High Court in revision can pass the necessary orders. The passing of an order under sec. 471 by the High Court, after an acquittal by the Court below, does not amount to an alteration of a finding of acquittal into one of conviction within the meaning of sec. 439 (4)—Mahammad, supra.

The words "detained in safe custody" do not mean detained in the custody of friends or relatives; that is, the Magistrate cannot direct that the person acquitted under this section should be kept in the safe custody of his friends or relatives. This is evident from the language of sec. 475. All that the Magistrate can do is to detain the accused in a place of safe custody and report the matter to the Local Government, and it is the Local Government who can deliver the accused to any friend or relative under sec. 475—Shrish Chandra, 56 Cal. 203, 48 C.L.J. 148, 29 Cr.L.J. 847 (818); Anonymous, 2 Weir

472. [Repealed by the Indian Lunacy Act, 1912.]

473. If such person is detained under the provisions of section 466, and in the case of a person detained in a jail, the Inspector-General of Prisons, or, in the case of a person detained in a lunatic asylum, the visitors of such asylum or any two of them shall certify that, in his or their opinion, such person is capable of making his defence, he shall be taken before the Magistrate or Court, as the case may be, at such time as the Magistrate or Court appoints, and the Magistrate or Court shall deal with such person under the provisions of section 468; and the certificate of such Inspector-General or visitors as aforesaid shall be receivable as evidence.

The word 'detained' has been substituted for 'confined,' and the italicised words added, by section 125 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

This section, while it compels a Court to proceed in accordance with the provisions of sec. 468, does not preclude the Court from proceeding under sec. 468, at any time when an accused is brought before it. Where, therefore, a Sessions Judge, after taking evidence, found the accused insane and unable to make his defence and ordered his detention in a Mental Hospital and subsequently the Medical Superintendent of the Hospital wrote to him reporting that the accused was feigning insanity and that he was sane and therefore the Sessions Judge commenced a fresh trial with a different set of assessors without any preliminary inquiry into the sanity of the accused and without putting it on the record that the accused was in the Judge's opinion able to conduct his defence, held that the trial by the Sessions Judge was not contrary to law though the Sessions Judge would have acted wisely if before considering it he had placed it on the record that he considered the accused to be capable of making his defence and stated the grounds on which he came to that conclusion—Ibrahim, 35 Cr.L.J. 869, 148 I.C. 987, 1934 Cr.C. 239, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 123.

transferred to an asylum, may appoint a Commission, consisting of a judicial and two medical officers.

(2) Such Commission shall make formal inquiry into the state of mind of such person, taking such evidence as is necessary, and shall report to the Provincial Government, which may order his release or detention as it thinks fit.

The word 'detained' has been substituted for 'confined,' and the word 'released' for 'discharged,' by sec. 126 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

475. (1) Whenever any relative or friend of any person detained under the provisions of section 466 or section 471 desires that he shall be delivered to his care and custody, the Provincial Government may, upon the application of such relative or friend and on his giving security to the satisfaction of such Provincial Government that the person delivered shall—

- (c) in the case of a person detained under section 466, be produced when required before such Magistrate or Court, order such person to be delivered to such relative or friend.

(2) If the person so delivered is accused of any offence the trial of which has been postponed by reason of his being of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, and the inspecting officer referred to in sub-section (1), clause (b), certifies at any time to the Magistrate or Court that such person is capable of making his defence, such Magistrate or Court shall call upon the relative or friend to whom such accused was delivered to produce him before the Magistrate or Court; and, upon such production, the Magistrate or Court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 468, and the certificate of the inspecting officer shall be receivable as evidence.

Change:—The whole section has been re-drafted by sec. 127 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Clause (c) and sub-section (2) are entirely new. Clause (b) was formerly sub-section (2).

"The new sub-section (2) simplifies the procedure under which a person accused of an offence, whose trial has been postponed by reason of his unsoundness of mind, is again produced before the Court on the certificate of the Inspecting Officer as to his memory"
—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

See Swish Chandra, cited under sec. 471.

CHAPTER XXXV.

PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AFFECTING
THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

476. (1) When any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class, and may send the accused in custody, or take sufficient security for his appearance, before such Magistrate; and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence in such inquiry or trial.

Procedure in cases mentioned in section 195.

476. (1) When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in section 195, subsection (1), clause (b) or clause (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate or if the alleged offence is non-bailable may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate:

Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint.

*For the purposes of this subsection, a * * * Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to* transferred to an asylum, may appoint a Commission, consisting of a judicial and two medical officers.

(2) Such Commission shall make formal inquiry into the state of mind of such person, taking such evidence as is necessary, and shall report to the Provincial Government, which may order his release or detention as it thinks fit.

The word 'detained' has been substituted for 'confined,' and the word 'released' for 'discharged,' by sec. 126 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

475. (1) Whenever any relative or friend of any person detained under the provisions of section 466 Delivery of lunatic to care of relative or friend. or section 471 desires that he shall be delivered to his care and custody, the Provincial Government may, upon the application of such relative or friend and on his giving security to the satisfaction of such Provincial Government that the person delivered shall—

(a) be properly taken care of and prevented from doing injury to himself or to any other person, and

(b) be produced for the inspection of such officer, and at such times and places, as the Provincial Government may direct, and

(c) in the case of a person detained under section 466, be produced when required before such Magistrate or Court, order such person to be delivered to such relative or friend.

(2) If the person so delivered is accused of any offence the trial of which has been postponed by reason of his being of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, and the inspecting officer referred to in sub-section (1), clause (b), certifies at any time to the Magistrate or Court that such person is capable of making his defence, such Magistrate or Court shall call upon the relative or friend to whom such accused was delivered to produce him before the Magistrate or Court; and, upon such production, the Magistrate or Court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 468, and the certificate of the inspecting officer shall be receivable as evidence.

Change:—The whole section has been re-drafted by sec. 127 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Clause (c) and sub-section (2) are entirely new. Clause (b) was formerly sub-section (2).

"The new sub-section (2) simplifies the procedure under which a person accused of an offence, whose trial has been postponed by reason of his unsoundness of mind, is again produced before the Court on the certificate of the Inspecting Officer as to his memory"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (1914).

The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

CHAPTER XXXV.

PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AFFECTING
THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

476. (1) When any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class, and may send the accused in custody, or take sufficient security for his appearance, before such Magistrate; and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence in such inquiry or trial.

Procedure in cases mentioned in section 195.

476. (1) When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in section 195, subsection (1), clause (b) or clause (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate or if the alleged offence is non-bailable may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate:

Procedure in cases mentioned in section 195

*Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint. For the purposes of this subsection, a * * * Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to*

- (b) be produced for the inspection of such officer, and at such times and places, as the Provincial Government may direct, and
- (c) in the case of a person detained under section 466, be produced when required before such Magistrate or Court, order such person to be delivered to such relative or friend.

(2) If the person so delivered is accused of any offence the trial of which has been postponed by reason of his being of unsound mind and incapable of making his defence, and the inspecting officer referred to in sub-section (1), clause (b), certifies at any time to the Magistrate or Court that such person is capable of making his defence, such Magistrate or Court shall call upon the relative or friend to whom such accused was delivered to produce him before the Magistrate or Court; and, upon such production, the Magistrate or Court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 468, and the certificate of the inspecting officer shall be receivable as evidence.

CHAPTER XXXV.

PROCEEDINGS IN CASE OF CERTAIN OFFENCES AFFECTING
THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

476. (1) When any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary inquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the first class, and may send the accused in custody, or take sufficient security for his appearance, before such Magistrate; and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence in such inquiry or trial.

Procedure in cases mentioned in section 195.

476. (1) When any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in section 195, subsection (1), clause (b) or clause (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate or if the alleged offence is non-bailable may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate, and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate:

Provided that, where the Court making the complaint is a High Court, the complaint may be signed by such officer of the Court as the Court may appoint.

*For the purposes of this subsection, a * * * Presidency Magistrate shall be deemed to* be a Magistrate of the first class.

(2) Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law, and as if upon complaint made and recorded under section 200, and may, if he is authorised under section 192 to transfer cases, transfer the inquiry or trial to some other competent Magistrate.

(2) Such Magistrate shall thereupon proceed according to law and as if upon complaint made under section 200. * * *

(3) Where it is brought to the notice of such Magistrate, or any other Magistrate to whom the case may have been transferred, that an appeal is pending against the decision arrived at in the judicial proceeding out of which the matter has arisen, he may, if he thinks fit, at any stage adjourn the hearing of the case until such appeal is decided.

Change:—The whole section has been redrafted by sec. 128 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, but no important change has been introduced. Subsec. (3) is new. "The changes that we have made are not of great importance. We have provided that a Court can act on application made to it or suo motu and after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary. For the word "committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" we have substituted the phraseology used in clause (b) of sec. 195. We have substituted "may make a complaint" for "shall make a complaint" and, in view of the criticism of the words "nearest first-class Magistrate" we have provided that a complaint should be sent to a first class Magistrate having jurisdiction. In order to give effect to our decision that proceedings under sec. 476, etc., should be subject to revision, we have introduced words which will make it necessary for the Court to record an order"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922). The proviso to sub-section (1) has been added recently by the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act II of 1926. For reasons, see Note 1240. From the third para. of sub-section (1) the word 'Chief' has been omitted by the same Amendment Act; for reason of this omission see Note 1250.

1236. Object and scope of section:—It is easy to imagine the inconvenience which might be caused if a Munsif or a Subordinate Judge or a Judge were to appear before a Magistrate and make a complaint on oath under sec. 195 in order to lay the foundation for a prosecution, and this section has been enacted to obviate the difficulty. The Legislature thought it desirable that the procedure to be followed in cases of complaint by a Court should be different from that which has to be observed by an ordinary complainant—Ishri Prasad v. Sham Lal, 7 All. 871. Under section 195, it is open to the Court, before which the offence was committed to prefer a complaint for the prosecution of the offender; and sec. 476 prescribes the procedure as to how that complaint may be preferred—In re Lakshmidas, 32 Bom. 184; Rahimatullah, 31 Mad. 140; Aiyakannu, 32 Mad. 49. The language of this section indicates that when a Court is acting under sec. 195, a complaint in the strict sense of the Code is not required, and the procedure herein laid down constitutes the complaint mentioned in sec. 195—Ishri Prasad v. Sham Lal, 7 All. 871. The order of a Court under sec. 476 is in the nature of a complaint under sec. 195—Kisan Kohale, 9 C.P.L.R. 26. Proceedings taken by a Court under this section operate of themselves to set a prosecution in motion without the necessity of any other complaint, the Court itself being the complainant—Nageswara, 2 Weir 589.

For the purpose of an action for malicious prosecution proceedings under this section are criminal proceedings, although they were taken in a Civil Court—Nagarmull v. Jaharmull, 35 Cr.L.J. 925, 148 I.C. 1129, 60 Cal. 1022, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 909. See also Rabindra v. Jogendra, 33 C.W.N. 79, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 691 and Narendra v. Jyotish, 27 C.W.N. 387, 49 Cal. 1035, 69 I.C. 705.

The words in sub-sec (2) of this section "and as if upon complaint made and recorded under sec. 200", have been introduced into the Code in 1898 in order to give legislative effect to the Full Bench ruling in 7 All. 871 in which it was held that the order of the Court under this section was a complaint within the meaning of sec 195—Bhup Kunwar, 26 All 249. That one of the functions of sec 476 is to provide the machinery by which a Court is enabled without inconvenience to make a complaint is made very clear by these words introduced in the present section—Rahmatullah, 31 Mad. 140 (per Miller, J.). Under sub-sec (1) as now amended the Court will have to frame a complaint in writing

This section does not authorize a complaint with reference to offences described in sub-sec. (1), cl (a) committed in or in relation to a proceeding in a Court. The jurisdiction to make a complaint under this section is limited to cases as are provided for in sec. 195, sub-sec (1), cl (b) or (c)—Ram Nath, 27 Cr L.J. 1247, 98 I.C. 63, 3 O.W.N. 757, A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 51. But if a Magistrate, acting under this section, considers that a complaint should be made, it is open to him to include in that complaint not merely offences which are referred to in sec. 195, Cr P C, but also other offences such as one under sec. 161, I P. C. This section is an enabling section and does not bar a Magistrate from including in his complaint other sections of the Penal Code. Nor would it bar the Magistrate to whom the complaint was presented from issuing process under other sections of the Penal Code, if from the facts alleged offences under other sections appeared to have been committed—Dharumal v. Teunmal, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 133 (134), 41 Cr L.J. 821, 190 I.C. 119

A complaint, outside the provisions of sec 476, Cr. P. C., cannot be filed by any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court under its inherent jurisdiction—Kushal Pal, 32 Cr L.J. 1105 (1115), 134 I.C. 225, A.I.R. 1931 All 443, 1931 Cr C 715, 53 All 804, 1931 A.L.J. 697, Ind Rul 1931 All 801 (F.B.). See also Mahadeo Sahu cited in para. 1243. See also Gobinda v. Rex, 42 Mad 450; Sengoda v. Vajapuri, 1931 M.W.N. 1047, 61 M.L.J. 684, 34 M.L.W. 841 and Indarjit, 27 Cr L.J. 974, 96 I.C. 525, 3 O.W.N. 618, 13 O.L.J. 653, 1 Luck 527. For contra see Mehr Singh, 35 Cr L.J. 86, 146 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1933 Lah 884, 1933 Cr.C. 1178 See Note 629

1236A. Application under this section:—An application under this section is entirely different from a complaint; it is merely the means of drawing the Court's attention to the fact that an offence appears to have been committed in proceedings before that Court a fact, which it can in the majority of cases verify even without the help of the applicant. It is manifestly most improper for the Court to shirk its obvious duty of applying its mind to the question whether it should make a complaint or not, merely because the applicant does not appear in support of his application. There is no provision of law making it necessary to examine the applicant on his application as there is in the case of a complaint. In fact an application might well be anonymous, if it were sufficiently precise and definite there would be no justification for not acting upon it. It is clearly the duty of a Court to which such an application is made either to make a complaint or to reject the application on the merits. This is also borne out to some extent by the language of secs. 476A and 476B, Cr. P. C., which do not talk about dismissing an application but, in the one case, of rejecting it and, in the other case, of refusing to make a complaint upon an application. Therefore the order dismissing the application on account of the non-appearance of the applicant is an improper order which there is no provision in law for making and, therefore, an order without jurisdiction. There would, however, be nothing wrong in an order rejecting the application on the ground that it does not give sufficient indication of the facts, and that the applicant is not there to supplement it—Jawala Parshad v. Ram Parshad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 526.

Second Application:—Where a previous application by a party asking the Court to make a complaint was dismissed for non-prosecution, the Court is not thereby precluded from itself making a complaint, if it is expedient in the interests of justice—Harekrishna, 8 Pat. 736, 31 Cr.L.J. 143, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 242, 120 I.C. 629, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 53, 11 P.L.T. 75; Kalastri Madali, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 130, 1931 M.W.N. 1048, 34 M.L.W. 629, 1932 Cr.C. 109, 33 Cr.L.J. 272, 136 I.C. 313, 61 M.L.J. 684, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 281; Naubat, 36 Cr.L.J. 470, 153 I.C. 947, A.I.R. 1935 Pesh. 1; Jawala Parshad v. Ram Parshad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 526. There is no such provision of law and the principle of "nemo debet" is not applicable where there has been no inquiry on the merits—Jawala Parshad v. Ram Parshad, supra. A Magistrate, who has passed an order refusing to start proceedings under this section, can take further action on a subsequent application moving him to the same effect. Ordinarily, however, it would be undesirable to do so unless some fresh facts had emerged showing that the previous order was clearly wrong—Bhagwandas v. Mathura, 37 Cr.L.J. 977, 164 I.C. 713, 1936 Cr.C. 711, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 156.

1237. Section 476 is supplementary to sec. 195:—Section 195 lays down the bar and sec. 476 lays down the method of removing the bar. The two sections must be read together—Kushal Pal, supra. The word 'offences referred to in sec. 195' mean not merely the offences covered by the sections of the I. P. C., mentioned in sec. 195, but they mean the offences covered by those sections and committed under the qualifying circumstances mentioned in sec. 195. That is, sec. 476 must be read along with sec. 195, and the qualifications mentioned in sec. 195 are to be treated as incorporated in the provisions of sec. 476—Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (256); Govinda Iyer, 42 Mad. 540. Thus, an offence under sec. 467, I. P. C., does not come within the purview of sec. 195 unless it is committed by a 'party to the proceeding'; and, therefore, a Court is not competent to pass an order under sec. 476 directing the prosecution of a person who is not a party to the proceeding, for an offence under sec. 467, I. P. C.—Ramalingam, 40 Mad. 100 (102); Jiwan Mal, 18 Cr.L.J. 544, 1917 P.R. 10 (Nor is a complaint under this section necessary in order to proceed against such person—21 C.W.N. 950, 42 I.C. 133, 18 Cr.L.J. 901). So also, where certain documents were put in a Court in a pending suit, but not given in evidence, the Court is not competent to order the prosecution of the party, who had put in the documents, for forgery—Abdul Khadar v. Meera Saheb, 15 Mad. 224; Adhar v. Ablakh, 1895 A.W.N. 145; 1920 P.L.R. 3. So again, if an offence referred to in sec. 195 (b), e.g., false charge, is not committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court, but is committed before the police, it is not competent to a Court to direct a prosecution under sec. 476—Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (256).

But a different view has been taken in the following cases. Thus, in Aiyakanru, 32 Mad. 49, Sankaran Nair, J., has held that sec. 476 must be construed as entirely self-contained, and the power given to the Court under this Chapter to take action regarding the offences specified in sec. 195 is not restricted by the qualifying circumstances mentioned in sec. 195. And, therefore, it is competent to a Court to order prosecution for forgery of a person who was not a party to the proceeding in Court—Derji, 18 Bom. 581; Keshav, 14 Bom.L.R. 968, 13 Cr.L.J. 848; Balgaunda Ramgaunda, 55 Bom. 461, 32 Cr.L.J. 1017 (1018); Bachu Behari, 20 Cr.L.J. 630 (Pat.); Ejaz Ali, 24 O.C. 367, 23 Cr.L.J. 228, A.I.R. 1922 Oudh 220. It is competent to a Court to proceed under sec. 467 against a party who has filed a forged document, whether such document has been actually given in evidence or not—Jamal Khan, 1897 P.R. 12; Akhil Chandra, 22 Cal. 1004. The words "referred to in sec. 195" are merely words descriptive of the class of offences with which a particular Court can deal. They do not mean that sec. 195 governs sec. 476 to any extent other than this—Khushali, 40 All. 116; Ganga Ram, 40 All. 21; Narayanshaligram, 20 Cr.L.J. 426 (Nag). Section 476 is a self-contained section, and the reference made to sec. 195 is only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the sections of the Penal Code mentioned in sec. 195—Raj Kumar, 1 P.L.J. 298, 18 Cr.L.J. 135.

But the intention of the Legislature in making the present amendment is to make this section not independent of, but supplementary to, sec. 195. "One of the most weighty changes introduced by this measure is in respect of prosecutions for offences committed before or in relation to proceedings of the Court" ... A glance at any commentary on the Code will give some indication of the difficulties that have arisen in putting sections 195 and 476 into operation. After a long and careful thought, Government have decided on a line of action which, I may say, has met with general approval. The two sections as they stand (under the old Code) provide an alternative procedure for the Courts in dealing with them. Sanction is given to proceedings under sec. 195 or action is directed by the Courts under sec. 476. The sanction proceedings are now omitted, and the two sections will in future supplement each other... Sec. 195 will contain the prohibition of prosecution except upon complaint by the Court; sec. 476 will lay down the procedure to be followed. It has been suggested that it will be better to bring the two sections together. That is a matter to be considered when the consolidation of the Code will be undertaken"—Council of State Debates, September 13, 1922. See also Dwarka v. Makund, 24 A.L.J. 122, 26 Cr.L.J. 1506, 90 I.C. 290, A.I.R. 1926 All. 21 in Note 611.

"The recent amendment in secs. 195 and 476 had resulted in connecting the two sections more closely together. Section 476 gives the Court power with respect to any offence referred to in sec. 195. The offence referred to in sec. 195 (c) is not merely an offence under certain sections, but such an offence when committed by a party to the proceeding—per Brown, J., in Guruswamy v. Ebrahim, 2 Rang. 374 (381, 382), A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 28, 26 Cr.L.J. 295 "By the recent amendment of the Cr. P. Code, the words 'offence referred to in sec. 195 (c)' in sec. 476 must be read in conjunction with the wording to sec. 195 (c). The only offence which sec. 195 (c) bars from the cognizance of the Magistrate without a complaint by the Courts is when such offence is "alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding before the Court" and it is not right to divorce these words or take only a part of the section in endeavouring to discover what the offence referred to in sec. 195 is"—per Robinson, C.J., in Ibid (p. 380). Therefore, the Court has no jurisdiction to file a complaint in respect of a forged document against persons who were not parties to the previous suit—Shankar Sahai, 7 O.W.N. 638, 31 Cr.L.J. 938 (939); Kushal Pal, 53 All. 804, 32 Cr.L.J. 1105 (1116) (F.B.); Shwe Pue v. Ma Me Hmoke, 3 Rang. 48, 3 Bur L.J. 344, 26 Cr.L.J. 500. So also, where there is no evidence to suggest that a forged document was produced or given in evidence in a Court, a complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., by the Court is not justified—Bahiruddy, 28 C.W.N. 880, 25 Cr.L.J. 1095.

1237A. Section 476 and Section 480:—In cases covered by both sec. 476 and sec. 480, Cr. P. C., it is optional with the Court to proceed either under sec. 480 or under sec. 476 and the existence of sec. 482, Cr. P. C., does not appear to operate so as to take away this option—Ram Lal Anand, 41 Cr.L.J. 766 (768), 189 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 233, 42 P.L.R. 505.

1238. Civil, Criminal and Revenue Court:—As to what are Courts, and what are not, see Notes 622 under sec. 195.

An Income Tax Collector is a Revenue Court within the meaning of this section—Nataraja, 36, Mad. 72; Rup Singh, 1905 P.R. 44, 3 Cr.L.J. 128; Panamchand, 38 Bom. 642. Contra—Kalidas, 8 Bom L.R. 477, 4 Cr.L.J. 34. A Collector or Deputy Collector holding an inquiry for the purpose of determining who should be called upon to pay the stamp duty of an insufficiently stamped document is not a Court, as he is not holding a judicial enquiry—Kedarnath, 7 C.W.N. 795. A certificate officer acting under the powers conferred upon him by secs. 57, 58 and 66 of the Behar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914, is, while acting in that capacity, a 'Court' (Revenue Court), and where such officer inquires into the question of an alleged payment where a certificate has been issued, the proceeding before him is a judicial proceeding—Mathura Prasad, 4

P.L.J. 475, 20 Cr.L.J. 529. A Commissioner sitting as an election tribunal is a Civil Court—Ram Nath, 46 All. 611 (613); Mohammad Mehdi v. Ramji Lal, 42 Cr.L.J. 85, 191 I.C. 146, 1940 O.W.N. 1004; Mahabaleswarappa v. Gopalaswami, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 673, 36 Cr.L.J. 895, 156 I.C. 311, 41 M.L.W. 503, 1935 M.W.N. 152, 58 Mad. 954; but see Bilas Singh, 23 A.L.J. 845, 47 All. 934. A Special Judge sitting as a Court under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934) has jurisdiction as a Civil Court to proceed under this section—Mohammad Mehdi v. Ramji Lal, supra. A Judge receiving and dealing with a petition under sec. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act (for deposit of mortgage money) is a Court, and he can, therefore, start a prosecution under this section against the person depositing the money, if the mortgage-deed is found to be forged—Chamari, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J. 170. An Assistant Collector concerned in mutation proceeding is acting as a Revenue Court—Lachman, 6 O.W.N. 953, 31 Cr.L.J. 679.

A Revenue Officer preparing a record of rights but not authorised to take evidence on oath is not a Court—Hanumantha, 39 Mad. 414. An officer acting in an executive, and not in a judicial capacity cannot exercise the powers conferred under this section—Babu Ram, 15 A.L.J. 654, 18 Cr.L.J. 942. See Note 1244 below under heading "Proceeding in Court".

A District Registrar (before whom a forged document was produced for registration) is not a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court within the meaning of this section, but in his capacity as District Magistrate he can take cognizance of the offence (sec. 471, I. P. C.) under sec. 190 (1) (c) of this Code—Cheta Mahto, 2 Pat. 459, 26 Cr.L.J. 1482.

The Collector reported to the District Judge that an amin never went to a village and his report that he went there to conduct a sale and the endorsement and signatures of three persons of the village endorsing the report of the amin were false and ordered the Tahasildar to hold an enquiry. In the enquiry before the Tahasildar two of the attesting witnesses in the warrant deposed that the signatures in the warrant were not theirs and that the amin never came to the village. Later, on enquiry by the District Judge himself, it transpired that the two persons had deposed falsely in the enquiry before the Tahasildar to save the Village Munsif who was guilty of dereliction of duty by absenting himself from the village on the day the sale was to be conducted by the amin, and when the amin was there. The District Judge ordered proceedings under secs. 195 and 476, Cr. P. C., for offences against the two villagers under secs. 191 and 193, I. P. C., and preferred a complaint. Held that the enquiry held by the District Judge was a departmental enquiry and sec. 476, Cr. P. C., was not applicable and the complaint should be withdrawn—Kuruba Anjanappa, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 892, 1940 M.W.N. 805, 52 M.L.W. 345.

In performing the functions laid upon him by the rules made under the Burma Rusal Self-Government Act (IV of 1921) the District Judge does not act as a Court and his proceedings are not subject to appeal to the High Court or to revision by the High Court because he acts as a persona designata and, consequently, sec. 195 and sec. 476, Cr. P. C., do not apply. The District Judge, acting not as a Court but as a persona designata under a particular Act, is not entitled to proceed under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., and is not entitled to lay a complaint in pursuance of an order passed in the proceedings purporting to have been taken under that section—U Aung Myin U v. District and Sessions Judge, Henzada, 41 Cr.L.J. 687, 188 I.C. 793, A.I.R. 1910 Rang. 148, following Municipal Corporation of Rangoon v. M. A. Shakur, 3 Rang. 560, 91 I.C. 550, A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 25 (F.B.) and U Ba Pe v. U Ba Shwe, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 41, 142 I.C. 80, 11 Rang. 1, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 28.

Power after transfer:—Magistrate, who after trying a case has been transferred from the charge of the particular Court in which the case was tried to some other duty in the same district, is not competent to make an order under this section in respect of a case which he tried as the presiding officer of that Court—Chunni Lal v. Harbans, 1 A.L.J. 315; Baldo, 46 All. 851 (854). In such an event, the only officer who can order the prosecution in his successor-in-office in that Court—Baldo, 46 All.

851 (855). A Joint Magistrate after dismissing the complaint in a case became the District Magistrate, and then ordered the prosecution of the complainant for perjury under sec. 193, I. P. Code. It was held that the order of the Joint Magistrate as a District Magistrate was and should be set aside—Mallu Khan, 1 A.L.J. 388.

1239. What Court can take action:—See Note 623 The words "in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court" show that the Court which can take action under this section is only the Court before which, or in relation to whose proceeding, the offence has been committed. Under the old section also, the words "committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" indicated that it was the Court alone who tried the case who could take action for prosecution, and it was not competent for another Court who had not tried the case to exercise the powers under this section—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (555) (F.B.). But, where a person gave false evidence before the committing Magistrate and that evidence, on account of his inability to attend the Sessions Court owing to illness, was read out as evidence at the sessions trial, the Sessions Judge would be competent to direct the prosecution of that person for giving false evidence, as the offence was brought under the notice of the Sessions Judge in the trial before him—Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr L J 337.

It is not necessary that the complaint should be made by the same Judge before whom the offence was committed; it is sufficient if it is made by the same Court. Therefore, where the offence was committed before the Additional Sessions Judge of Pabna who was afterwards transferred, and the complaint was made by the Sessions Judge of Pabna, held that the complaint was valid because it was made by the same Court, i.e., the Court of Sessions of Pabna—Iqbalulla, 58 Cal. 1117, 35 CWN. 400, 32 Cr L J. 842 (843).

Where a reference was ordered under the schedule to the Civil Procedure Code to the arbitration and false evidence is given before the arbitrator, it is necessary that an application to the Court appointing the arbitrator should be made under sec 476—Ganti v. Harcourt, 58 Cal 215, 32 Cr L J 826 (827), 132 I.C. 97, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 525, 1931 Cr C 588, A I R 1931 Cal 436 See also Note 623.

Where a Mamlatdar was acting merely as an agent for executing the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge under sec 68 and Sch III, C. P. C., and was not exercising the functions of the Court under O. XXI, r 2, C P. C., which could not be delegated to him or to the Collector, when he considered the genuineness of a receipt for the purpose of determining whether he would adjourn the sale, the offence of forging the receipt was committed in or in relation to proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and not in or in relation to any proceedings before the Mamlatdar constituting a Court. Therefore, the Mamlatdar was not the proper authority to file a complaint under this section—Narsappa, 36 Cr L J. 1005, 156 I.C. 752, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 158, 37 Bom L.R. 93, 1935 Cr.C. 296.

Transfer of proceedings taken under this section:—Section 476 is self-contained and exhaustive, and the intention of the Legislature is that the power of making a complaint should not be exercised by any Court except the Court before which the offence has been committed or the Court to which appeals from that Court ordinarily lie. Therefore, while proceedings under this section are going on in a Civil Court before which the offence has been committed, it is not in the power of the District Judge under sec 24, C. P. Code, to transfer the proceedings from Civil Court to another Civil Court—Rameshwar v. Rajdhari, 49 All 460, 25 A.L.J. 433, A I R. 1927 All. 469 (470). The order of transfer is invalid, and the original Civil Court should conclude the proceedings—Ibid.

Section 476, Cr. P. C., refers not to the "Magistrate" but to the "Court", and then the section goes on to refer to "such Court" holding a preliminary inquiry, if any; so that it would appear that what the section contemplates is the Court itself and not the personality of the trying Magistrate. Therefore, it is not possible by reason of the words of sec. 476, Cr. P. C., to grant a transfer of proceedings under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., to the file of the Magistrate before whom the alleged offence was committed on the ground that, though transferred to a different place, he is the proper Magistrate to appreciate, whether a complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., should or should not be made—Jethanand Hemandas v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 750, 183 I.C. 195, 12 R.S. 47, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 181.

Transfer of case:—Where a case which has been partly heard by one Court is transferred to another Court, the former Court is not deprived of its jurisdiction to take proceedings against a witness in respect of a perjury before it; nor is that jurisdiction taken away by the circumstance that the second Court may have formed a different view as to the veracity of the witness—Sundar Lal, 44 All. 642, 20 A.L.J. 666, 23 Cr.L.J. 603. But where a criminal case is transferred or withdrawn from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, and the second Magistrate dismisses the complaint as false, under sec. 203, it is the second Magistrate who can take action under sec. 476 for prosecution of the complainant for the offence under sec. 211, I. P. Code; the Magistrate in whose Court the complaint was originally filed is not competent to proceed under sec. 476—Tarakeshwar, 53 Cal. 488, 30 C.W.N. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 648; Amanat Ali, 33 C.W.N. 1058 (1061), 1929 Cr.C. 360. The principle is, that the Court which tries a case on the merits rather than the Court before which the case is originally instituted, even though process may be issued by it, is the proper Court to make a complaint under sec. 476—Amanat Ali, supra; Cf. Jiban v. Benoy, 6 C.W.N. 35; Putiram v. Mahomed Kasem, 3 C.W.N. 33.

Where a suit was at first filed at S, but a new Court having been established at SH, the suit was transferred to the latter Court, because the cause of action arose within the limits of that Court, held that the Court at SH and not the Court at S had jurisdiction to take action under sec. 476 in respect of the offence of perjury committed in that suit. The only Court which can exercise the power conferred by sec. 476 is the Court which has jurisdiction over the suit in which the alleged offence has been committed, whether such suit was instituted in such Court or came to its file by transfer from any other Court or otherwise—Gerimal v. Shewa Ram, 20 S.L.R. 90, 27 Cr.L.J. 780.

See also Note 623.

Power of successor-in-office to act under this section:—The power to direct prosecution is conferred on the "Court" and not on the particular officer who fills the judicial office at a particular time; and, therefore, the successor-in-office is competent to make an order under this section in respect of an offence committed before his predecessor-in-office—Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 721, 129 I.C. 561, 52 C.L.J. 87, 34 C.W.N. 914 (918), 1930 Cr.C. 1129; Darpa Narayan v. Pepin, 15 C.W.N. 691; Naval Singh, 34 All. 393; Badri Singh, 19 A.L.J. 819, 22 Cr.L.J. 860; Lakshmidas, 32 Bom. 184 (189); Ranga, 29 Mad. 331; Daulat, 14 N.L.R. 16, 18 Cr.L.J. 1015; Venkatasubbayya, 1919 M.W.N. 112, 20 Cr.L.J. 172; Behram, 7 Lah. 108, 27 Cr.L.J. 776; Khan Muhammad, 4 Lah. 58, 24 Cr.L.J. 180; Shue Pwe v. Ma Me Hmoke, 3 Rang. 48, 3 Bur.L.J. 344. See also Jethandas Hemandas v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 750, 183 I.C. 195, 12 R.S. 47, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 181. But in some other cases it was held that a succeeding Magistrate had no jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section, where an offence was neither 'committed before him nor was brought under his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding' (see the words of the old section)—Begu Singh, 31 Cal. 551 (F.B.); Kartik Ram, 35 Cal. 114; Krishna Gobinda, 9 C.W.N. 859 (860); Dauli, 10 Cr.L.J. 158, 1909 P.R. 6; Ramakrishna, 2 Weir 597. These words have now been replaced by the more general words "committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court" and in this view of the law, the ruling in 31 Cal. 551, etc., is no longer correct. Moreover, the new sec. 559 expressly lays down that all the powers of a Judge or Magistrate may be exercised by his successor-in-office. See also Note 623.

Where proceedings under this section have been commenced by a presiding officer of a Court, it is competent for his successor-in-office to continue the proceedings—Purna Chandra v. Saikh Dhalu, 34 C.W.N. 914 (922), 1930 Cr.C. 1129; Bahadur v. Eradat-ullah, 37 Cal. 612 (618) (F.B.); Bholu, 7 A.L.J. 991, 11 Cr.L.J. 438 (439). If an officer orders a preliminary inquiry, but before he can hold that inquiry, is transferred, his successor would be competent to hold the inquiry, and, as a result of that inquiry, to direct a prosecution—Begu Singh, 34 Cal 551 (562). But where the preliminary inquiry has been commenced by the proper officer who issued the notice, and after his transfer, is continued by another officer who is not the successor of the former officer but to whom the District Judge merely makes over the case for disposal, the latter officer is not competent to complete the inquiry and pass an order under this section—Muhammad Munir Khan, 10 P.L.R. 1911, 12 Cr L.J. 68, 9 I.C. 389 (390).

Power of superior (Appellate) Court to take action:—See secs. 476A, 476B. An Appellate Court can make a complaint only when the case in which the offence has been committed is before that Court in appeal, or when the original Court has omitted to make a complaint (sec. 476A) or when the original Court has refused to make a complaint and the order of refusal is appealed from to the Appellate Court (sec. 476B). But when the proceedings for making a complaint are already going on before the original Court, the Appellate Court cannot step in and deal with the matter—Rajdhari v. Rameshwar, 49 All 460, 25 A L.J. 433, A I.R. 1927 All. 469 (470).

1240. Power of High Court:—The old section did not apply to proceedings in High Court or Courts in Presidency towns; consequently, it was not competent to the High Court, acting under this section, to direct the prosecution of a person for the offence for forgery or abetment of forgery brought to its notice in the course of hearing an appeal in a Probate case—In re a Vakul, 19 Cr L.J. 638 (Cal.); See also Aditram, 9 Bom.L.R. 1160, 6 Cr L.J. 326. This ruling is no longer correct in view of the second para (newly added) of sub-section (1).

A High Court sitting to exercise the revisional powers under this Code can lay a complaint under sec. 476—Syed Khan, 3 Rang 303, 27 Cr L.J. 4, A I.R. 1925 Rang. 321, 91 I.C. 36; Ivor Henry Bridgnell, 38 Cr L.J. 1002 (1004), 170 I.C. 891, 10 R.S. 81, A I.R. 1937 Sind 193. Section 476A, Cr P.C., does not exclude the power of a High Court to make a complaint in revision—Ivor Henry Bridgnell, supra. The High Court has also the power, if it does not wish to enquire itself, to order the trial Court to enquire either under the provisions of sec. 423 (d), Cr. P. C., as an 'incidental order' or under sec. 561A, Cr P. Code. The objection that sec. 195, Cr. P. C., no longer finds a place in sec. 439, Cr. P. C., has no force—Ivor Henry Bridgnell, supra.

The High Court has also jurisdiction in an application in civil revision to order proceedings under sec. 476, Cr P. C., in respect of the alleged offences under secs. 193 and 471, I P. C., which were no doubt committed in the trial Court but were also committed in the High Court when the person proceeded against relied upon the disputed documents in his application in civil revision—Shankar Lal v. Emp., 38 Cr L.J. 1080, 171 I.C. 525, 1 L.R. 1937 All 774, 1937 A L.J. 820, 1937 A W R. (H.C.) 690, 1937 A Cr C. 115, 1937 A L.R. 582, A I.R. 1937 All 681.

The proviso newly added in 1926 lays down that a complaint by a High Court need not be signed by the Judge himself but may be signed by an officer of the Court. "The Lahore High Court (see 6 Lah. 34 below) has represented that it is a needless waste of time of the Judges of a High Court that they should be required to sign all complaints under sec. 476. The proposed change enables any officer of such a Court whom the Court may appoint to sign the complaint"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925 Part V, p. 215). Before this proviso was added it was held by the Lahore High Court that the procedure of the new sec. 476 in its application to a High Court Judge that he should have to make and sign a complaint which was to be inquired into by one of his subordinates, and that he should be treated and recorded as a complaint throughout the proceedings was open to serious objections; nor was it fair to the accused that he should be arraigned in a case instituted on a complaint made by a Judge of the highest tribunal and was to be tried by a judicial officer who was subordinate to the complainant. There could be little doubt that by reason of a circumstance that the complaint was preferred by a High Court Judge, the accused committed on the ground that, though transferred to a different place, he is the proper Magistrate to appreciate, whether a complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., should or should not be made—Jethanand Hemandas v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 750, 183 I.C. 195, 12 R.S. 47, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 181.

Transfer of case:—Where a case which has been partly heard by one Court is transferred to another Court, the former Court is not deprived of its jurisdiction to take proceedings against a witness in respect of a perjury before it; nor is that jurisdiction taken away by the circumstance that the second Court may have formed a different view as to the veracity of the witness—Sundar Lal, 44 All. 642, 20 A.L.J. 666, 23 Cr.L.J. 603. But where a criminal case is transferred or withdrawn from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, and the second Magistrate dismisses the complaint as false, under sec. 203, it is the second Magistrate who can take action under sec. 476 for prosecution of the complainant for the offence under sec. 211, I. P. Code; the Magistrate in whose Court the complaint was originally filed is not competent to proceed under sec. 476—Tarakeshwar, 53 Cal. 488, 30 C.W.N. 504, 27 Cr.L.J. 648; Amanat Ali, 33 C.W.N. 1058 (1061), 1929 Cr.C. 360. The principle is, that the Court which tries a case on the merits rather than the Court before which the case is originally instituted, even though process may be issued by it, is the proper Court to make a complaint under sec. 476—Amanat Ali, supra; Cf. Jiban v. Benoy, 6 C.W.N. 35; Putram v. Mahomed Kasem, 3 C.W.N. 33.

Where a suit was at first filed at S, but a new Court having been established at SH, the suit was transferred to the latter Court, because the cause of action arose within the limits of that Court, held that the Court at SH and not the Court as S had jurisdiction to take action under sec. 476 in respect of the offence of perjury committed in that suit. The only Court which can exercise the power conferred by sec. 476 is the Court which has jurisdiction over the suit in which the alleged offence has been committed, whether such suit was instituted in such Court or come to its file by transfer from any other Court or otherwise—Gerimal v. Sheva Ram, 20 S.L.R. 90, 27 Cr.L.J. 780.

Power of successor-in-office to act under this section:—The power to direct prosecution is conferred on the "Court" and not on the particular officer who fills the judicial office at a particular time; and, therefore, the successor-in-office is competent to make an order under this section in respect of an offence committed before his predecessor-in-office—Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 721, 129 I.C. 561, 52 C.L.J. 87, 34 C.W.N. 914 (918), 1930 Cr.C. 1129; *Darpa Narayan v. But in some other cases it was held that a succeeding Magistrate had no jurisdiction to institute proceedings under this section, where an offence was neither 'committed before him nor was brought under his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding' (see the words of the old section)—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (F.B.); Kartik Ram, 35 Cal. 114; Krishna Gobinda, 9 C.W.N. 859 (860); Dauli, 10 Cr.L.J. 158, 1909 P.R. 6; Ramakrishna, 2 Weir 597. These words have now been replaced by the more general words "committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court" and in this view of the law, the ruling in 34 Cal. 551, etc., is no longer correct. Moreover, the new sec. 559 expressly lays down that all the powers of a Judge or Magistrate may be exercised by his successor-in-office. See also Note 623.

Where proceedings under this section have been commenced by a presiding officer of a Court, it is competent for his successor-in-office to continue the proceedings—Purna Chandra v. Saikh Dhalu, 34 C.W.N. 914 (922), 1930 Cr.C. 1129; Bahadur v. Eradat-ullah, 37 Cal. 642 (648) (F.B.); Bholu, 7 A.L.J. 991, 11 Cr.L.J. 438 (439). If an officer orders a preliminary inquiry, but before he can hold that inquiry, is transferred, his successor would be competent to hold the inquiry, and, as a result of that inquiry, to direct a prosecution—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (562). But where the preliminary inquiry has been commenced by the proper officer who issued the notice, and after his transfer, is continued by another officer who is not the successor of the former officer but to whom the District Judge merely makes over the case for disposal, the latter officer is not competent to complete the inquiry and pass an order under this section—Muhammad Munir Khan, 10 P.L.R. 1911, 12 Cr.L.J. 68, 9 I.C. 389 (390).

Power of superior (Appellate) Court to take action:—See secs. 476A, 476B. An Appellate Court can make a complaint only when the case in which the offence has been committed is before that Court in appeal, or when the original Court has omitted to make a complaint (sec. 476A) or when the original Court has refused to make a complaint and the order of refusal is appealed from to the Appellate Court (sec. 476B). But when the proceedings for making a complaint are already going on before the original Court, the Appellate Court cannot step in and deal with the matter—Rajdhari v. Rameshwar, 49 All. 460, 25 A.L.J. 433, A.I.R. 1927 All. 469 (470).

1240. Power of High Court:—The old section did not apply to proceedings in High Court or Courts in Presidency towns; consequently, it was not competent to the High Court, acting under this section, to direct the prosecution of a person for the offence for forgery or abetment of forgery brought to its notice in the course of hearing an appeal in a Probate case—In re a Vakil, 19 Cr.L.J. 638 (Cal.); See also Aditram, 9 Bom.L.R. 1160, 6 Cr.L.J. 326. This ruling is no longer correct in view of the second para (newly added) of sub-section (1).

A High Court sitting to exercise the revisional powers under this Code can lay a complaint under sec. 476—Syed Khan, 3 Rang 303, 27 Cr.L.J. 4, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 321, 91 I.C. 36; Ivor Henry Bridgnell, 38 Cr.L.J. 1002 (1004), 170 I.C. 891, 10 R.S. 81, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 193. Section 476A, Cr P C, does not exclude the power of a High Court to make a complaint in revision—Ivor Henry Bridgnell, supra. The High Court has also the power, if it does not wish to enquire itself, to order the trial Court to enquire either under the provisions of sec. 423 (d), Cr P C, as an 'incidental order' or under sec. 561A, Cr P Code. The objection that sec 195, Cr P C, no longer finds a place in sec. 439, Cr. P. C, has no force—Ivor Henry Bridgnell, supra.

The High Court has also jurisdiction in an application in civil revision to order proceedings under sec 476, Cr P. C., in respect of the alleged offences under secs. 193 and 471, I P C, which were no doubt committed in the trial Court but were also committed in the High Court when the person proceeded against relied upon the disputed documents in his application in civil revision—Shankar Lal v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 1080, 171 I.C. 525, I.L.R. 1937 All 774, 1937 A.L.J. 820, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 690, 1937 A Cr C. 115, 1937 A.L.R. 582, A.I.R. 1937 All 681.

The proviso newly added in 1926 lays down that a complaint by a High Court need not be signed by the Judge himself but may be signed by an officer of the Court. "The Lahore High Court (see 6 Lah. 34 below) has represented that it is a needless waste of time of the Judges of a High Court that they should be required to sign all complaints under sec. 476. The proposed change enables any officer of such a Court whom the Court may appoint to sign the complaint"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925 Part V, p. 215). Before this proviso was added it was held by the Lahore High Court that the procedure of the new sec. 476 in its application to a High Court Judge that he should have to make and sign a complaint which was to be inquired into by one of his subordinates, and that he should be treated and recorded as a complaint throughout the proceedings was open to serious objections; nor was it fair to the accused that he should be arraigned in a case instituted on a complaint made by a Judge of the highest tribunal and was to be tried by a judicial officer who was subordinate to the complainant. There could be little doubt that by reason of a circumstance that the complaint was preferred by a High Court Judge, the accused person was likely to entertain an apprehension, not altogether without justification, that his conviction was a foregone conclusion—Qadir Baksh, 6 Lah. 34, 26 P.L.R. 158, 27 Cr.L.J. 98. The proviso has been added in deference to these remarks.

The usual practice of the High Court in making a complaint is to give a direction that the judgment in the suit out of which the matter arises shall be treated as a complaint, in which case a copy of this judgment signed by the Judge will be sent by the Registrar to the Magistrate. But as sec. 476 requires a finding and a complaint, the better course is to make a separate order containing the requisite finding, setting out in detail specific matters extracted from the proceedings, and directing a complaint to be made in respect thereof, this being followed by a complaint which conforms to the term of the previous order—Ramjan v. Mooli, 56 Cal. 932, 33 C.W.N. 329 (332), 30 Cr.L.J. 974.

A Judge of the High Court can grant a direction to prosecute, under sec. 476, although the matter out of which the action arose was heard by another Judge of the Court; because any Judge of the High Court has power to exercise the powers of the High Court. But as a matter of convenience the prosecution must be directed by the same Judge, unless it becomes impracticable by reason of that Judge ceasing to hold office—Bai Kasturibai v. Vanmalidas, 49 Bom. 710, 27 Bom.L.R. 616, 26 Cr.L.J. 1189, 88 I.C. 709, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 436. When a suit is tried by a Judge of the High Court, the term 'Court' occurring in the section must be taken to mean the High Court. There is nothing to prevent any Judge of the High Court from dealing with the matter though as a matter of convenience this would seldom be done—T. Varadarajulu Naidu, 38 Cr.L.J. 871, 170 I.C. 255, 1937 M.W.N. 330, I.L.R. 1937 Mad. 612, 10 R.M. 163, 1937 M.W.N. 330, 45 M.L.W. 257, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 396.

1241. Duty of Court:—The Court may, under this section, make the complaint on application made to it or otherwise—T. Varadarajulu Naidu, supra. Whether the Court acts on its own motion or on the application of a party, the responsibility for directing the prosecution rests entirely on the Court; and the power given by this section should be exercised with great care and caution—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (558); Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (258). It is not in every instance in which a party fails to prove his case that the Judge who has decided against him is justified in exercising the powers conferred by this section. Judges should bear in mind that criminal prosecutions are frequently suggested by successful litigants merely to prevent an appeal in the civil suit, and they should be careful not to lend themselves to such suggestions too readily. The Judges should also recollect that when they proceed under this section, the responsibility for the prosecution rests upon them entirely—Baijoo Lall, 1 Cal. 450. As prosecutions ending in failures are to be deprecated as being calculated to do harm rather than good, they ought not to be undertaken without considerable circumspection and care. The offences contemplated by this section are offences against public justice; whence it follows that they ought to be pressed primarily in the interests of public justice, and never as a means of satisfying a private grudge—Ram Prasad, 37 Cal. 13 (20), 13 C.W.N. 1038, 10 Cr.L.J. 454. The Court will be astute to see that there shall be no abuse of the administration of criminal justice. No one therefore would be permitted to use the penal law merely to satisfy his own private ends or personal spite; that would be to misuse it—An Attorney, 41 Cal. 446 (458), 15 Cr.L.J. 49, 22 I.C. 321. Under the old section, it was held that proceedings should not be taken where the case was at best doubtful. There must be a reasonable foundation for the charge in respect of which prosecution is directed, before the criminal law could be set in motion—Jadu Nandan, 37 Cal. 250 (258), 14 C.W.N. 330. The view expressed in this ruling was quoted with approval in U Po Thein v. Buta Khan, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 173 (474), 1936 Cr.C. 953. It was also held that before a Court was justified in directing a prosecution under section 476, there must be some direct evidence fixing the offence upon the persons whom it is sought to charge, either in the preliminary inquiry or in the earlier proceedings out of which the inquiry arises. It was not sufficient that the evidence in the case might induce some sort of suspicion that these persons were guilty of an offence, but there must be distinct evidence of the commission of an offence by such persons—Khepunath v. Girish, 16 Cal. 730 (740); Ganda Mal, 21 Cr.L.J. 601 (Lah.), or that there must be a reasonable prospect of a conviction, in order to justify a Court in taking action—Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 184, 15 Cr.L.J. 33 (35); Abdul Qadir v. Muhammad Ibrahim Khan, 25 Cr.L.J. 119, 76 I.C. 183, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 569, Bhagirathi, 26 Cr.L.J. 1401 (1404), 89 I.C. 713, A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 141; Jagat, 31 Cr.L.J. 179, 120 I.C. 687, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 55, 1930 Cr.C. 23; Venkataswami, 28 Cr.L.J. 1007, 105 I.C. 831, 26 M.L.W. 476, 39 M.L.T. 414, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 996; Gopaldas Khetriya v. Jnanendra Nath Dawn, 40 Cr.L.J. 450 (453), 180 I.C. 586, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 677; Nand Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 867 (868), 39 P.L.R. 812, 172 I.C. 942; Natha Mal v. Emp., 41 P.L.R. 96. But the wording of the section has now been changed. The Madras High Court holds that under the present section it is not the duty of the Court to see that there is a reasonable probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction, though the Court acting under this section should not act capriciously or without proper grounds—Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (283). See also Gopaldas Khetriya v. Jnanendra Nath Dawn, supra. Under sections 195 and 476, all that a Court has to see is that a prima facie case has been made out upon the evidence before it for inquiring further into the question whether any of the offences punishable as set out in sec. 195 has or has not been made out. The Court has not to see that the case must necessarily lead to conviction. The Court can take action if a suspicion is raised as to the commission of an offence—Kidha Singh, 13 A.L.J. 1111, 16 Cr.L.J. 817 (dissenting from Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250). See also Naurang Rai, 32 Cr.L.J. 60, 127 I.C. 859, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 347, 1930 Cr.C. 395, Ind. Rul. 1930 Lah. 891; Surendra, 35 Cr.L.J. 785, 148 I.C. 866, 1933 A.L.J. 1623, A.I.R. 1934 All. 385, 1934 Cr.C. 464, which has been dissented from in Ali Naqi v. Sheikh Raqidu, A.I.R. 1934 All. 1065, 4 A.W.R. 342, 1934 A.L.J. 870, 152 I.C. 34, 57 All. 351. But the Oudh Chief Court is of opinion that proceedings should not be taken on the application of private persons unless the prosecution is reasonably certain to result in a conviction—Shankar Sahai, 7 O.W.N. 638, 31 Cr.L.J. 938; Suraj Lal v. Sheo Shankar, 35 Cr.L.J. 908 (912); Adkibai v. Parbatibai, 30 Cr.L.J. 407, 115 I.C. 174, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 110; Kishen, 35 Cr.L.J. 1277, 151 I.C. 290, 11 O.W.N. 1058, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 377. It is undesirable that proceedings under this section should be initiated at the instance of a private party—Begerath v. Ramnarain, 120 I.C. 15, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 194, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 686, 30 Cr.L.J. 1144. It will rarely be in the interests of justice that a Judge should prefer a charge which is not likely to succeed—Ghanshamdas, 35 Cr.L.J. 519 (521), 147 I.C. 1019, A.I.R. 1934 Sind. 412, 1934 Cr.C. 1545; Naualal, 37 Cr.L.J. 193 (195), 159 I.C. 817, 2 B.R. 112, 8 R.P. 313, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 162, 1936 Cr.C. 254. Moreover, the Court taking action under this section must be prima facie satisfied that the offence has been committed by some definite individual or individuals against whom proceedings in the Criminal Court are to be taken—Mahomed Bhakku, 23 Cal. 532. It must come to a finding as to which of the individuals sent for trial has committed the offence—Amar Nath v. Mam Raj, 2 Lah. 63, 22 Cr.L.J. 329. Where a District Judge being of opinion that the forgery of a document produced before him was committed either by the plaintiff or by the defendant, sent both of them to a first class Magistrate so that the guilty party might be proceeded against, it was held that the order was illegal and must be set aside in revision—Pirbhu Dayal, 1905 P.L.R. 163, 3 Cr.L.J. 73; Amar Nath, supra. See also Note 613.

In considering whether a prosecution is to be ordered or not, it is desirable to have regard to the interests of public justice rather than to the gratification of private spite. Regard may also be had to the question whether the prayer for prosecution is a manoeuvre to obtain an undue advantage by embarrassing the defence in a pending civil proceeding. Another point which might well be considered is whether there is evidence of any criminal act against each individual person against whom it is proposed to take proceedings; and with reference to the general question whether there is a prima facie case at all, it may be examined whether the person aggrieved was in fact following a lawful procedure—Bajrang Manwari v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 31 (33), 33 Cr.L.J. 292 (294), 166 I.C. 870, 9 R.P. 350, 3 B.R. 226.

'Whether on application or otherwise':—A complaint under sec. 476 may be made by a Court either on application or otherwise. It is immaterial whether the application is made by a person who was not a party in the original suit—Harekrishna, 8 Pat. 736, 31 Cr.L.J. 143, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 242, 11 P.L.T. 75, Ind. Rul. 1930 Pat. 53. It is open to the Court to entertain an application under this section at the instance of a stranger to the proceedings out of which the application arises—Bhagwandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co., 41 Cr.L.J. 526 (528), 187 I.C. 867, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 403, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, 42 Bom.L.R. 231.

Under this section there is no necessity for an application. The Court can be moved otherwise to take action under this section—Behari Lal v. Abdul Qadir, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 292 (298), 41 Cr.L.J. 843, 190 I.C. 178.

Death of the applicant:—Where the applicant died after putting in the petition under this section and his minor sons said that they did not desire to take any part by way of argument either in support of the petition or in opposition to it, held that the death of the applicant made no difference at all and that the Court once having been moved, it was then a question for the Court to decide and not the parties themselves—Venkatarama Reddi v. Srinivasa Reddi, 37 Cr.L.J. 557 (559), 162 I.C. 285, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 350.

'Is of opinion':—There must be an opinion, as distinguished from a mere surmise or assumption; that is, the Court should act on evidence and not perversely—Karri Venkanna, 31 M.L.J. 400, 17 Cr.L.J. 515; but it is not possible to fix the quantity or nature of the material on which the Court's opinion is to be formed, or to restrict the exercise of the general discretion which the Legislature has conferred on the Court—Ibid. The opinion must be opinion of the Court taking action under this section and not the opinion of any superior Court—Alamdard, 23 All. 249. The Court must form its own opinion and should not take opinion from others., Where the High Court directed the Sessions Judge to take action under this section, held that it was the duty of the Sessions Judge to apply his own mind to the matter on the merits and then decide whether a prosecution was necessary or not—Ghanram, 21 A.L.J. 930. Where a Munsiff in making an order under this section purported to act not of his own accord but at the direction of the District Judge, it was held that the order of the Munsiff was bad, in as much as it was only nominally his, and the opinion was really the opinion of the District Judge—Raizul Hasan, 6 A.L.J. 924, 10 Cr.L.J. 525 (526). There is nothing either in sec. 476 or 476A to warrant the suggestion that where a Subordinate Judge asked for directions from the District Judge he become functus officio and that any complaint subsequently filed by him under sec. 476 is prohibited by the Statute—Moolchand, 34 Cr.L.J. 305 (307), 142 I.C. 74, 26 S.L.R. 105, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 37, 1933 Cr.C. 166, Ind Rul 1933 Sind 82.

'Expedient in the interests of justice':—A prosecution should be undertaken only when it is expedient in the interests of justice that a complaint should be made. Thus, the mere fact that a person has made contradictory statements in his deposition is not a sufficient basis for his prosecution for perjury; the Court should consider and come to a finding that the prosecution is necessary in the interests of justice—Karamat Ali, 55 Cal. 1312, 30 Cr.L.J. 221 (222); Kamini Kumar, 33 C.W.N. 664 (668), 31 Cr.L.J. 373. Every case of perjury need not necessarily result in the prosecution of the person who is guilty of the offence. The Court has to see whether it is in the interests of justice to direct the prosecution of the person concerned. It is the policy of the law, as appears from the amendment of the relevant sections of the Cr. P. Code, whereby such prosecutions have not now been left to private prosecutors but their conduct has been entrusted to the Courts, that in dealing with such matters the Court should see that the prosecution is undertaken in the interests of justice and not to satisfy the private grudge of a litigant—Nand Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 867 (868, 869), 39 P.L.R. 812, 172 I.C. 942. See also Notes 616 and 617. When cases of intentionally giving false evidence or giving inconsistent evidence come to the notice of the Court, they should be adequately dealt with. In such cases, it is in the interests of justice that the offenders should be prosecuted and punished—Kamini Kumar, supra.

If the Court is satisfied that it is expedient in the interests of justice to make a complaint, it has jurisdiction to do so, inspite of the fact that in the Appellate Court the parties agreed to compromise the matter or to get it decided by a reference to arbitration or in accordance with the statement of a referee—Narain Das, 49 All. 792, 28 Cr.L.J. 549 (551), 25 A.L.J. 559.

Where one of the allegations made about the Senior Subordinate Judge practically amounts to an accusation of corruption against him and such an allegation appears prima facie to be false, it is in the highest degree expedient in the interests of justice that there should be an enquiry into it. The Court is justified in making a complaint under sec. 193, I. P. C., against the person making such allegation—Jai Ram v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 701 (702), 188 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 203, 42 P.L.R. 40.

See also Note 1246.

Inquiry:—The proceedings under Chap XVI precede a summons case as well as a warrant case and the term "inquiry" in this section is wide enough to include any proceedings under that chapter even if they only consist of the act of the Magistrate in reading the complaint to find out whether it is a fit case in which to proceed against the accused or not. This section is not, therefore, restricted to a warrant case but applies to a summons case also—Ram Lal Anand, 41 Cr.L.J. 766, 189 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 233, 42 P.L.R. 505.

Appears:—There is nothing whatever in the language of this section to suggest that a Court making a complaint can only act on statements that are made on oath before it. All that this section lays down is that it should "appear" to the Court that an offence has been committed and if a responsible officer in the position of a Senior Subordinate Judge makes a report that certain statements made on oath are false it would be sufficient to make it "appear" for the purposes of this section that an offence of perjury has been committed—Jai Ram v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 701, 188 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 203, 42 P.L.R. 40.

1242. Power to take action in a pending case or appeal:—It has been held in some cases that proceedings under this section should not be taken until after the close of the case in which the false evidence was given or forged document was used as genuine, etc. Thus, it is improper for a Magistrate to order the prosecution of a witness for perjury, while the proceedings in which the witness has given his deposition are pending before him—Rustomji, 4 Bom LR 778; Ramoo Singh, 21 Cr.L.J. 29 (Pat.); Kolu v. Tikaram, 26 Cr.L.J. 1350 (Nag); Raj Kumar v. Satish Chandra, 21 C.W.N. 753; Brojobashi v. Emp., 13 C.W.N. 398 (401). Such a hasty proceeding, as placing a witness on his trial as an accused immediately after he has given his evidence, and before the close of the case, is bad, because the necessary result of such a step would be to frighten the remaining witnesses and seriously affect the case of the party who called him as witness—Sikandar Lal, 10 Lah. 778, 30 Cr.L.J. 129 (131); Bhogslal, Ratanlal 477; Kashinath, 8 B.H.C.R. 126; Ramoo Singh, 21 Cr.L.J. 29; Nadershah, 9 S.L.R. 176, 17 Cr.L.J. 77. When a criminal offence is alleged to have been committed in the course of revenue or civil proceedings, the rule is that the facts upon which the criminal offence is founded should, as far as possible, be finally determined in the Civil or Revenue Court before a prosecution in respect of the criminal offence is commenced. The refusal of the Revenue or Civil Court to try out the proceedings in which the criminal offence is alleged to have been committed materially affects the criminal proceedings and amounts to a denial of the right of fair trial—Faujdar Rai v. Emp., 26 Cr.L.J. 1565 (1567), A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 25, 90 I.C. 445, 7 P.L.T. 199. But this is not an invariable rule. Although in most cases it would be improper to take action under this section before the close of the original case, still in exceptional cases (e.g., in cases of bare-faced perjury) the Court can at once send the witness to a Magistrate. At any rate the action of the Court in taking proceedings under sec. 476 during the pendency of the case would be improper or premature, but not illegal or without jurisdiction, and does not constitute any material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction—Karri Venkanna, 31 M.L.J. 440, 17 Cr.L.J. 515 (522) (F.B.). See also Devji Valad Bhavani, 18 Bom. 581. The object of this section would be entirely frustrated if the proceedings were invariably allowed to be delayed pending the disposal of the civil litigation which might be indefinitely protracted even up to a final decision on appeal to the Privy Council—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 26 Bom. 785 (791), followed in Lakhmichand, 21 S.L.R. 43, 27 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1250). If there is a delay in the disposal of the suit in which the offence has been committed, there is no reason why the Court should delay proceedings under this section until the suit is disposed of, which disposal may not occur until months or years later—In re Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228, 23 Cr.L.J. 712.

Since an appeal is a continuation of the trial, proceedings under this section should not be taken during the pendency of the appeal in the case in which the petitioner is alleged to have given false evidence or produced a fabricated document—Gendon Singh, 3 Cr.L.J. 303, 3 C.L.J. 302; Shri Nana, 16 Bom. 729; Mutty Lall, 6 Cal. 308; Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (338); Harnam Singh v. Atri, 7 Lah.L.J. 73, 26 Cr.L.J. 1168. A contrary view seems to have been taken in Hriday, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 500, 10 P.L.T. 889, 30 Cr.L.J. 1101, 119 I.C. 888, 1929 Cr.C. 252; Bhagirath v. Ram Narain, A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 194, 30 Cr.L.J. 1144, 120 I.C. 45, where proceedings under this section were not stayed pending hearing of the appeal in the civil suit. If the same question of fact is in issue in the appeal it is undesirable to allow proceedings to be taken under sec. 476 during the pendency of the appeal. But where a second appeal has been preferred to the High Court, in which no question of fact is in issue, but only a question of law, it is not improper to take action under this section during the pendency of the second appeal—Rajkumar, 1 P.L.J. 298, 18 Cr.L.J. 135 (136). The new sub-sec. (3) now provides that if a proceeding has already been taken, it may be adjourned till the decision of the appeal. See Sochet Singh, 32 Cr.L.J. 584, 130 I.C. 651, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 331, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 49, 1931 Cr.C. 113, 32 P.L.R. 303; and Singheswar Prasad v. Sakhichand, 38 Cr.L.J. 476, 167 I.C. 895, 9 R.P. 446, 3 B.R. 376, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 139, where it has been laid down that in the event of the prosecution being launched before the disposal of the appeal, the Magistrate will have to consider whether it should be adjourned till the disposal of the appeal and will also have to decide at what stage it should be adjourned, that is to say, whether it will be expedient to adjourn it before taking the evidence or after. But see Nagendra, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 578, 127 I.C. 64, 31 Cr.L.J. 1154, 1930 Cr.C. 892.

Where the criminal case is calculated to hamper the fair trial of the issue, on which the alleged offence is founded, in the Civil Court, no complaint should be made under this section. Nothing should be done to anticipate or prejudice the result of the civil litigation that is sure to ensue at no distant future—Rewashanker v. Emp, A.I.R. 1910 Nag. 72, 1939 N.L.J. 562, 185 I.C. 400.

1243. "In or in relation to a proceeding in that Court".—Under the old law, the offences which fell under this section were those which were "committed before the Court or were brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding." The wording of the present section is different, and follows the language of clause (b) of sec. 195. Where an offence committed in a case instituted before a 2nd class Magistrate was brought to the notice of the District Magistrate through a report from a Forest Ranger (who was the prosecutor in the case before the 2nd class Magistrate) it was held under the old section that the District Magistrate was not competent to act under this section as the offence was not brought to his notice in the course of a judicial proceeding—Subbaraya, 18 Mad. 487. Under the present law, the District Magistrate would be competent to take action under sec. 476A. This section applies when the offence is committed not only in a proceeding in a Court of law, but also in relation to a proceeding in such Court. The same remarks apply to sec. 195 (b)—Durga, 34 Cr.L.J. 686, 144 I.C. 194, 1933 Cr.C. 484, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 397, A.I.R. 1933 All. 318.

During the trial of a case by a jury, a certain person informed the Sessions Judge that he had seen the foreman of the jury talking to one of the accused. Thereupon, the Judge held an inquiry, and that person made the same statement before the Judge, who afterwards found the statement to be false and took action against that person under this section. Held that the action of the Judge was not without jurisdiction—Bhuban Chandra, 55 Cal. 279, 31 C.W.N. 828, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784).

Where a constable, who was entrusted with the execution of warrants against witnesses issued by a Magistrate trying a case, is prosecuted under sec. 211, I. P. C., for giving false information at the thanah to the effect that some persons had rescued one of those witnesses from his custody, cognizance cannot be taken of the case without a complaint of the Magistrate under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., inasmuch as the constable committed the offence in a transaction which arose out of the execution of those warrants and it was impossible to say that the offence was not committed in relation to the proceedings in which the warrants had been issued—Ganga Prasad Singh v. Emp., 45 C.W.N. 195.

Where an affidavit containing a false statement was filed by a person before a Munsarim of Court, it was held under the old section that the Judge could not direct the prosecution of that person, because the offence of perjury was not committed before the Judge himself—Mathura Prasad, 15 A.L.J. 517, 18 Cr.L.J. 883. But this is no longer correct, and the above case would be covered by the present section which contemplates an offence committed 'in relation to a proceeding in the Court.' See also Rameshwar Lal, 49 All. 898, 25 A.L.J. 555, 28 Cr.L.J. 668 (670), where it has been held that a document produced before the Munsarim of the Court may be said to be a document produced in Court, and the Judge can take action under sec. 476 in respect of an offence committed in relation to the document. The old section was wide enough to enable a Court to take action in respect of an offence committed in another forum (even in another province) and on some previous occasion, provided it was brought to the notice of the Court in the course of a judicial proceeding—Girwar, 9 Cr.L.J. 219, 1 I.C. 306, 6 A.L.J. 392; Khushali, 40 All. 116; Raj Kumar, 1 P.L.J. 298, 18 Cr.L.J. 135 (136); Kampta Prasad, 33 All. 396. See also 43 Cal. 542. The present section is confined to offences committed 'in relation to a proceeding in that Court'.

Where the offence is not committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court, this section does not apply. Thus, if a false charge is made before the Police, a Court cannot direct prosecution—Hasbut Khan, 33 Cal. 30 (32); Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (256), 14 C.W.N. 1330; but if the person making the false charge before the police, subsequently makes a false complaint before a Magistrate in respect to the same matter, he commits an offence before a Court, and the Court can take action under this section—Jadunandan, supra. In fact, in such a case the complaint of the Court under sec. 476 is essential. See Note 620 under sec. 195.

The words "in relation to a proceeding" mean that the offence has entered as a component into the proceeding. The offence need not have been committed before the Court, and it may have been committed before the proceedings began, but it is indispensable that the offence must in some manner have affected those proceedings or been designed to affect them or come to light in the course of them. An offence committed after the close of the proceedings is outside the scope of this section. So, where a document was filed in a suit on the 7th January, and the suit came to an end on the 9th, and an offence (false endorsement on the document) was committed after the 9th, held that the offence was not committed in relation to the suit, as it was committed after its termination and the fact that the document remained in the custody of the Court for a long time afterwards, made no difference. The mere fact of the document remaining in the Court records makes only an accidental connection between the offence and the suit. Documents sometimes remain in the custody of the Courts for a number of years, after the termination of a proceeding, and to relate them for this purpose to the proceeding in which they were filed would be to extend the meaning of the words "in relation to" beyond reasonable limits—Subbarayudu v. Gopayya, 55 Mad. 531, 62 M.L.J. 310, 33 Cr.L.J. 788 (789, 790), 139 I.C. 482, 1932 M.W.N. 241, 35 M.L.W. 319, 1932 Cr.C. 276, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 290.

Statements made during the course of an investigation under sec. 164, Cr. P. C., into an offence of murder, which is triable only by a Sessions Court, must be held to be in relation to the trial in that Court. The Sessions Judge can, therefore, make a complaint under sec. 193, I. P. C., with reference to those statements—Maromma, 34 Cr.L.J. 92, 140 I.C. 756, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 125, 1933 Cr.C. 157, 1933 M.W.N. 100, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad. 43. See also Ponnusami, 1933 M.W.N. 896 and Krishnamachari, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 767, 1933 M.W.N. 902, 65 M.L.J. 534, 38 M.L.W. 564, 1933 Cr.C. 1373, 147 I.C. 794.

The words "in or in relation to a proceeding in Court" occur in sec. 476, as well as in clause (b) of sec. 195, but not in clause (c) of that section. This does not mean that so far as the offences mentioned in sec. 195, clause (c) are concerned, sec. 476 applies only if the offences are committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court, and that if those offences are not committed in relation to any proceeding in Court, the procedure of sec. 476 need not be followed, though a complaint under sec. 195 would be necessary if the offences are committed by a party to the proceeding. This is not the intention of the Legislature. The words "in or in relation to" have been left out in clause (c) of sec. 195, because the sense produced by these words is sufficiently conveyed by the language used in clause (c). In other words, the offences mentioned in clause (c) are necessarily committed in relation to a proceeding in Court, in the same manner as the offences mentioned in clause (b); and sec. 476 applies to both—Kushal Pal, 53 All. 804 (F.B.), 1931 A.L.J. 697, 32 Cr.L.J. 1105 (1109, 1116).

"Offence referred to in sec. 195":—These words incorporate the conditions laid down in sec. 195 for taking cognizance of the offence by a Court—Gobinda v. Rax, 42 Mad. 540. As the offences contemplated by this section are offences described in section 195, a Magistrate cannot direct a prosecution for an offence under sec. 421, I. P. C., because this offence is not mentioned in sec. 195—Mahadeo Sadhu, 18 A.L.J. 50. See also Kushal Pal, supra and Note 1236.

For the offences referred to in sec. 195 (b) and (c), see fuller notes under that section.

The jurisdiction to make a complaint under this section is limited to the offences mentioned in clauses (b) and (c) of sec. 195. Section 476 does not authorise a complaint with reference to the offences mentioned in clause (a) of section 195, e.g. offences under secs. 183, 185, 186, 188 or 409, I. P. Code—Dore Sah, 2 Luck. 636, 28 Cr.L.J. 681; Indarjit, 1 Luck. 527, 3 O.W.N. 618, 27 Cr.L.J. 974 (975); Ram Nath, 2 Luck. 395, 3 O.W.N. 757, 27 Cr.L.J. 1247; Din Mahomed, 10 Lah. 231, 29 P.L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 877. If the Court takes proceedings in respect of such offences, the irregularity is not curable by sec. 537, as that section no longer applies to proceedings under sec. 476—Dore Sah, supra. But see Dharmumal v. Tenumal, in Note 1248. See also Note 614B.

In this section the words "referred to in sec. 195, sub-section (1), clause (b) or clause (c)" require that the offence in respect of which the complaint is ultimately laid must be one of those offences to which those clauses apply or have reference. Reading sec. 476 with sec. 195, Cr. P. C., it is to be observed that the offence of abetment is dealt with only in sub-section (4) of sec. 195. By that sub-section it was added as an amendment that the provisions of sec. 195, sub-section (1), clause (b) or clause (c), were to apply to an abetment. And in that sense quite clearly sec. 195, sub-section (1), clause (b) or clause (c) is made to have reference to an abetment. The Court has, therefore, jurisdiction to make a complaint of abetment of an offence mentioned in clause (b) or clause (c) of sub-section (1), sec. 195 Cr. P. C., in accordance with the provisions of this section—Tan Ba Cheng v. Registrar, O.S., High Court, 41 Cr.L.J. 515, 187 I.C. 754, A.I.R. 1910 Rang. 164, 1910 Rang. 12.

1244. Proceedings in Court:—A departmental inquiry is not a proceeding in Court—Maung Ba Hla, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332) (Bur.); 23 O.C. 136. Where a person preferred a complaint to a District Registrar containing an allegation against the Sub-Registrar, and the District Registrar after holding a departmental inquiry was satisfied as to the falsity of the complaint and directed the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under sec. 182, I. P. C., the order was held to be wholly without jurisdiction, as the inquiry held by the District Registrar was a departmental inquiry and not a judicial proceeding—Muljat Ali, 10 C.W.N. 222. Where a District Magistrate called for the record of a case tried before a Sub-Magistrate, in his executive capacity, for the purpose of enabling him to ascertain whether an application for an inquiry into the conduct of a police officer should be granted or not, and then directed the prosecution of the officer under sec. 193, I. P. C., it was held that the order should be set aside, in as much as there was no judicial proceeding before a Court for the purposes of this section—Sanglia Pillai, 25 Mad. 659. Where a District Magistrate directed the prosecution of a person under sec. 211, I. P. C., for having given a false report of theft to the Police, it was held that the order was not one passed under this section but one passed by the District Magistrate as the ex officio head of the Police to whom a false complaint was made—1890 A.W.N. 167. A village headman made an application to the District Magistrate stating that he wished to resign his post. On being questioned as to his reasons, he stated that the police in the course of the investigation into a dacoity case was forcing a large number of people to pay money to them. Thereupon the Magistrate examined the headman on oath and sent the papers to the District Superintendent of Police, who after an inquiry reported that the charge against the Police was false. Thereafter the District Magistrate passed an order directing the prosecution of the headman for perjury. It was held that the order was illegal, as the proceedings before the District Magistrate were not judicial proceedings—38 All. 32. After the dismissal of a complaint as false by a Deputy Magistrate, the papers were sent to the District Magistrate, on the motion of the Police for the case being struck off the 'register.' The District Magistrate in striking off the case ordered the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C. It was held that the proceeding before the District Magistrate was not judicial but purely an executive one, relating solely to the question as to the removal of the case from the register, and the order therefore did not come under this section—Thakur v. Bilar, 1884 A.W.N. 290. A proceeding before a Deputy Commissioner or Chairman of the District Board is not a proceeding in any Court within the meaning of this section—23 O.C. 136. Where the accused went to the Magistrate's house and made a false statement there, the offence could not be said to have been committed in any proceeding before a Court—3 Lah.L.J. 535. Where a person escaped from the lawful custody of a servant of a Civil Court, the offence (escape from the custody) was not committed in relation to any proceeding in Court; consequently this section does not apply, and the proper procedure is that the servant of the Court should file a complaint in the ordinary way—Madho Singh, 47 All. 409, 23 A.L.J. 189, 26 Cr.L.J. 864. But see Ganga Prasad Singh v. Emp., in Note 1243.

Proceedings which are irregular or illegal or without jurisdiction are not proceedings under this section, and therefore no order for prosecution can be passed in such proceedings. Thus, where the order of a Magistrate, before whom a complaint was preferred, in making over the complaint to a Subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and disposal of the case was bad in law, the order of the Subordinate Magistrate under sec. 476 for the prosecution of the complainant passed after such inquiry would be illegal—18 C.W.N. 95. See also 16 C.W.N. 885; 43 Cal. 173. But see contra—1 P.L.J. 553. A charge of unprofessional conduct made against a second grade pleader can be inquired into only by the presiding officer of the Court in which the pleader practises. The District Judge has no jurisdiction to inquire into the matter; where the District Judge assumes jurisdiction in such a case, makes an inquiry and acquits the pleader, and takes proceedings under this section against a person for giving false evidence, the order cannot be upheld, as it is one without jurisdiction—32 M.L.J. 402.

Where the complainant did not desire to take further proceedings and applied to withdraw the complaint, the Magistrate was not competent to order under this section the prosecution of the complainant under sec. 211, I. P. C., for making a false complaint, on taking evidence, as there was no proceeding before him, it being withdrawn by the complainant—Mauli v. Naurangi, 4 C.W.N. 351.

The user of a document in the course of the inquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., is user of it in or in relation to a proceeding of the Court of the Subdivisional Magistrate—Raghuandan Lal, 35 Cr.L.J. 1309, 151 I.C. 320, 15 P.L.T. 17, 1934 Cr.C. 340, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 156, A.L.R. 1934 Pat. 52.

Execution proceedings are proceedings in Court—Bahadur v. Eradatullah, 37 Cal. 642 (648) (F.B.); Bholanath, 10 C.W.N. 55; Daklineswar v. Haris Chandra, 10 Cr.L.J. 450, 25 M.L.J. 593, 17 O.C. 309, 10 N.L.R. 177, 19 Cr.L.J. 153 (Pat.). An appeal in a mutation case before the Commissioner is a proceeding contemplated by this section—6 P.L.J. 178. Proceedings before a Collector under sec. 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act fall under this section—Lakshan v. Naranarain, 48 Cal. 1086.

Proceeding need not be judicial:—Under the amended section it is not necessary that the proceeding in respect of which action is taken should be of a judicial character. Where a prosecution started under this section was dropped on the ground that the proceeding in the course of which the offence was committed was not of a judicial character (under the old section), but after the amended Code came into force, under which the proceeding in respect of which the alleged offence was committed need not be of a judicial character, the Public Prosecutor again moved the Court for taking the same action against the same person, held that the petitioner could be proceeded against. The dropping of the previous proceeding was no bar to the institution of the present proceeding—Chamari v. Public Prosecutor, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J. 170.

1245. Preliminary inquiry:—Where not necessary:—The words "such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary" show that a preliminary inquiry is not always indispensable—Darpa Narayan v. Bepin, 15 C.W.N. 691 (692); Jivabhai, 7 Bom.L.R. 84, 2 Cr.L.J. 54; K. C. V. Reddy, 8 Rang. 25, 31 Cr.L.J. 793 (795); Jamuna v. Laldhari, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 536, 152 I.C. 228, 15 P.L.T. 694, 1934 Cr.C. 1191; T. Varadarajulu Naidu, 38 Cr.L.J. 871, 1937 M.W.N. 330, 170 I.C. 255, I.L.R. 1937 Mad. 612, 10 R.M. 163, 1937 M.W.N. 330, 45 M.L.W. 257, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 396; Nand Kumar v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 534 (536), 1937 P.W.N. 119, 172 I.C. 237. Under this section itself the High Court can direct a preliminary enquiry—Gopaldas Khetriya v. Jnanendra Nath Dawn, 40 Cr.L.J. 450, 180 I.C. 586, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 677 (679). It is within the discretion of a Court proceeding under this section, to hold a preliminary inquiry or not to hold such inquiry—Kewal Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 1354 (1356), 158 I.C. 324, 16 P.L.T. 693, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 515. This section does not make it imperative on a Court to hold a preliminary inquiry before taking action under this section. To justify the Court in initiating a prosecution, it is necessary only to hold that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into an offence referred to in sec. 195—Qadir Buksh, 6 Lah. 34, 26 P.L.R. 158, 27 Cr.L.J. 98; Baperam v. Gouri, 20 Cal. 474; Matabadal, 15 All. 392, 34 All. 267. It is for the Court acting in the matter to determine in the exercise of its discretion, whether or not to make a preliminary inquiry—Choudhuri Mahomed Ishaful Huq, 20 Cal. 349; Baperam v. Gouri, 20 Cal. 474. And an order under this section will not be set aside on account of omission to make a preliminary inquiry, unless the accused has been prejudiced by reason of such omission—Darpa Narayan v. Bepin Behari, 15 C.W.N. 691 (693). It cannot be laid down as a proposition of law that in every case it is prudent to hold a preliminary inquiry. In a case where an offence has been committed outside the Court and not in the presence of the Judge, it would be judicious, if not incumbent upon the Court, to hold a preliminary inquiry in order to find out for itself whether such an offence has been really committed. Where an offence was committed in the presence of the Court or where from a perusal of the record it is of opinion that it is in the interests of justice that a complaint should be made in the Criminal Court it may make a complaint to that effect without making a preliminary inquiry—Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, 34 C.W.N. 914 (918), 1930 Cr.C. 1129, 129 I.C. 561, 52 C.L.J. 87, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 721, 58 Cal. 374, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 209 (dissenting from Sarat Chandra v. Hari Charan, 51 C.L.J. 45, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 282, 1930 Cr.C. 352). Where a Munsiff sent a case under this section to the nearest first class Magistrate without making any inquiry, and where there was nothing to show that any inquiry the Munsiff could have made would have put the Magistrate in a better position for dealing with the case, the omission to hold a preliminary inquiry was not bad—Juala Prasad, 5 All. 62 (64). If in the course of a proceeding, either civil or criminal, the Judge or Magistrate finds clear grounds for believing that either the parties or their witnesses have committed perjury, he is justified in directing criminal proceedings against such persons, without any further inquiry than that which he had already held in his Court—Mutty Lal, 6 Cal. 308. Where an application for a complaint is supported not by oral evidence but by documents, no further inquiry is necessary beyond that which the Court makes on the materials before it—Ganti v. Harcourt, 58 Cal. 215, 32 Cr.L.J. 826 (827). Where an order was made under this section directing the prosecution of a witness under sec. 193, I. P. C., on the very day or the day after, the witness's cross-examination had been finished, and upon a clear statement by the witness and after an opportunity having been given him to explain the inconsistency in his statements and in the cross-examination, it was held that it was not incumbent on the Court to institute a fresh inquiry or to give any notice to the accused—Ramdhari, 19 Cr.L.J. 169. The successor-in-office of the officer before whom the offence was committed, can pass an order under this section upon considering the evidence on the record and hearing the parties, without holding any preliminary investigation—Darpa Narayan v. Bepin, 15 C.W.N. 691 (693); Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, 34 C.W.N. 914 (918), 1930 Cr.C. 1129, 52 C.L.J. 87, 129 I.C. 561, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 721.

Where necessary:—See Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, supra. When it depends upon matters not on the record, a preliminary inquiry should be held—M. Mohamed Kaka v. Dist. Judge, Bassein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 62, 38 Cr.L.J. 615, 168 I.C. 632, 9 R.R. 359, 1937 Rang.L.R. 276. Where a prosecution is ordered for making a false affidavit, but it appears that the document was written in English, and it does not appear whether the contents of the affidavit were explained to the deponent, held that a preliminary inquiry should be made before a prosecution is ordered—Mathura Prasad, 15 A.L.J. 517, 18 Cr.L.J. 883. Where a Subordinate Judge acting upon the report of a bailiff ordered the prosecution of persons who obstructed him in executing a warrant of attachment, held that he should have made a preliminary inquiry before ordering prosecution—Sadashiv, Ratanlal 701. Where in a civil suit, settled without any evidence being gone into, by confession of judgment, the Court had grounds for supposing that an offence of false personation under sec. 205, I. P. C., had been committed before it, the Court before directing a prosecution would be competent to hold a preliminary inquiry to satisfy itself whether a prima facie case has been made out for directing the prosecution—Shashi Kumar, 19 Cal. 345. The Court directed the prosecution of a person under sec. 174, I. P. C., for the disobedience of the summons to attend the Court and give evidence, and that person appeared and denied the service of summons on him; held that before prosecution a preliminary inquiry should be held as to the service of summons, and the said person should be given an opportunity to cross-examine the person who had deposed to the service of summons on him—Lokpal Singh, 19 A.L.J. 56, 22 Cr.L.J. 143, 59 I.C. 55.

Where in proceedings under sec. 528, Cr. P. C., the Additional District Magistrate made a complaint against the complainant stating that he had filed an affidavit and that the explanation of the trying Magistrate showed that a certain statement in the affidavit was false, held that it was unwise on the part of the Additional District Magistrate to act upon the explanation when the difficulty could have been overcome by an enquiry under this section—Ambica, 32 Cr.L.J. 674, 131 I.C. 252, 53 C.L.J. 184,

A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 314, 35 C.W.N. 690, 58 Cal. 1211, 1931 Cr.C. 408, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 438.

A Court ought not to file a complaint in respect of offences under secs. 209, 467 and 471, I. P. C., when the matter has not been thoroughly shifted by it in course of a regular judicial inquiry—Gauri, 37 Cr.L.J. 518, 161 I.C. 602, 1936 O.W.N. 268.

1246. Procedure in preliminary inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry is a judicial proceeding, and oath can be administered to the suspected person—Viswanath, 8 Bom L.R. 589, 4 Cr.L.J. 183 (but see Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 316 given below in this Note); or to any person examined as a witness in the preliminary inquiry; and if such witness gives false evidence, he may be prosecuted for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. Code—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52 (55), 14 C.W.N. 132 (134).

The inquiry must be on evidence; one mode of making inquiry is certainly to take evidence—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52; Raghubar v. Kokil, 17 Cal. 872. The law does not require a minute or detailed or exhaustive inquiry, but only such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary to make out a prima facie case. The extent of the preliminary inquiry is left to the discretion of the Court—Chamari, 4 Pat. 484, 27 Cr.L.J. 371; Bhuban Chandra, 55 Cal. 279, 31 C.W.N. 828, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784); Juala Prasad, 5 All. 62. The nature, method and extent of the inquiry are entirely at the discretion of the Court. The inquiry need not take the form of a full-dressed trial, so as to satisfy the Court that an offence has actually been committed. Nothing more is necessary than to find that an offence appears to have been committed and a long discussion or a decision on the merits is as undesirable as it is unnecessary—Raja Rao, 50 Mad. 660 (661), 27 Cr.L.J. 1149 (1150), 51 M.L.J. 551. Where an inquiry is made, it is not necessary that it should be detailed or formal—Kewal Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 1354 (1356), 158 I.C. 324, 16 P.L.T. 693, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 515. The authority which is called upon to take action under this section need not, and should not, decide the question of the guilt or innocence of the party against whom proceedings are to be instituted—Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (258). The section does not say that before a Court makes a complaint, it must try the whole case and be absolutely satisfied that the accused cannot by any possibility escape a conviction—Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 33 (35). The Code does not contain any provision as to the manner in which the evidence in the inquiry should be recorded, but for further reference the Court should make a summary of the statement of the witness examined—Jogendra Nath, 42 Cal. 240, 18 C.W.N. 1242.

It is not necessary that the preliminary inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the accused, or that any notice should be given to him. See Note 1247, infra. The accused has no right to cross-examine any witness in the preliminary inquiry—Bakir Sahab, 18 Bom L.R. 284, 17 Cr.L.J. 249; Abdul Ghaffoor v. Razu, 34 All. 267; Raja Rao, supra; but see contra—Ganeshwar, 6 P.L.J. 146, 22 Cr.L.J. 458; Lokpal Singh, 19 A.L.J. 56, 22 Cr.L.J. 143, 59 I.C. 55; Perumalla Venkata Subbiah, 44 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228, 23 Cr.L.J. 712; M. Mahomed Kaka v. Dist. Judge, Bassein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 62, 168 I.C. 632, 9 R.R. 359, 38 Cr.L.J. 615, 1937 Rang.L.R. 276; and U Ba Hla v. Maung Tun Sein, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 297, 178 I.C. 305, 40 Cr.L.J. 56.

The person proceeded against under this section is in the position of an accused person, and cannot be examined on oath as a witness in the course of the preliminary inquiry. He can only be examined in accordance with the provisions of sec. 342—Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 32, 17 Cr.L.J. 316 (317); Sami Sastri, 2 Weir 598 (599). But see first paragraph of this Note. The person proceeded against in the preliminary inquiry can be called upon to produce a necessary document in his possession (sec. 94)—Damri Ram, 19 Cr.L.J. 217, 43 I.C. 793 (794).

Who can hold the inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry must be conducted by the officer who directs prosecution (i.e., makes the complaint) under this section, and cannot be delegated to any other officer—Sakhi Rai, 20 Cr.L.J. 245 (Pat.). It is for the complaining Court to make any inquiry that is necessary, and then to make a complaint. This section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for preliminary inquiry, asking the Magistrate to make the inquiry and to prosecute if he is satisfied that the offence has been committed. It is the complaining Court that must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the person sent to the Magistrate—Chamari, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J. 170; Shabbir Hasan, 26 A.L.J. 46, 28 Cr.L.J. 986 (1987).

It is not necessary that the whole of the preliminary inquiry ought to be conducted by the Officer directing the prosecution. After making some inquiry, he can apply to the District Magistrate as the Head of the Police, for the assistance of the C. I. D., and the fact that he takes the assistance of the District Magistrate does not make him functus officio and deprive him of his jurisdiction to pass an order under this section—Waman, 43 Bom. 300, 20 Bom.L.R. 993, 20 Cr.L.J. 433. The complaining Court may order the inquiry to be made by the Police, but in that case, when the police papers arrive, the Court has to determine whether it is necessary to take action—Shabbir Hasan, supra. The Calcutta High Court is of opinion that this section contemplates that the inquiry (i.e., the whole inquiry) is to be made by the Court itself, and it is not competent to a Civil Court to base its order upon a police-report—Provat Ranjan v. Uma Shankar, 58 Cal. 727, 35 C.W.N. 98 (101), 32 Cr.L.J. 883, 1931 Cr.C. 590, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 438, 132 I.C. 241, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 561. But see Fazlar Rahaman, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 515, 31 Cr.L.J. 1055, 126 I.C. 553, 1930 Cr.C. 859.

In deciding whether in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made the Court is not confined to the record of the proceedings, but is entitled to take into account and consider information otherwise acquired. The applicant is entitled to adduce evidence outside the record of the proceedings out of which the application arises to show that evidence given in those proceedings was false—Bhagwandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co., 41 Cr.L.J. 526 526 (528), 187 I.C. 867, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 403, 42 Bom.L.R. 231.

The preliminary inquiry should not be unduly protracted. Action under this section should be prompt and expeditious. Where the Court passed the order for prosecution of the offender, nearly a year after the offence was brought to its notice, the High Court expressed disapproval of the undue protraction of the proceeding—Bahadur v. Eradatullah, 37 Cal. 642 (649) (F.B.).

Recording and finding:—The words in the section are “may record a finding”; this shows that it is not compulsory for the Court to expressly record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made. Absence of such a finding will not invalidate the complaint—K. C. V. Reddy, 8 Rang. 25, 31 Cr.L.J. 793 (795); Bhuban Chandra, 55 Cal. 279, 31 C.W.N. 828, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 628, 104 I.C. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784); *Banke Lal v. A Court ought not to file a complaint in respect of offences under secs. 209, 467 and 471, I. P. C., when the matter has not been thoroughly shifted by it in course of a regular judicial inquiry—Gauri, 37 Cr.L.J. 518, 161 I.C. 602, 1936 O.W.N. 268.

1246. Procedure in preliminary inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry is a judicial proceeding, and oath can be administered to the suspected person—Viswanath, 8 Bom.L.R. 589, 4 Cr.L.J. 183 (but see Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 316 given below in this Note); or to any person examined as a witness in the preliminary inquiry; and if such witness gives false evidence, he may be prosecuted for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. Code—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52 (55), 14 C.W.N. 132 (134).

The inquiry must be on evidence; one mode of making inquiry is certainly to take evidence—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52; Raghubar v. Koku, 17 Cal. 872. The law does not require a minute or detailed or exhaustive inquiry, but only such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary to make out a prima facie case. The extent of the preliminary inquiry is left to the discretion of the Court—Chamari, 4 Pat. 484, 27 Cr.L.J. 371; Bhuban Chandra, 55 Cal. 279, 31 C.W.N. 828, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784); Juala Prasad, 5 All. 62. The nature, method and extent of the inquiry are entirely at the discretion of the Court. The inquiry need not take the form of a full-dressed trial, so as to satisfy the Court that an offence has actually been committed. Nothing more is necessary than to find that an offence appears to have been committed and a long discussion or a decision on the merits is as undesirable as it is unnecessary—Raja Rao, 50 Mad. 660 (661), 27 Cr.L.J. 1149 (1150), 51 M.L.J. 551. Where an inquiry is made, it is not necessary that it should be detailed or formal—Kewal Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 1354 (1356), 158 I.C. 324, 16 P.L.T. 693, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 515. The authority which is called upon to take action under this section need not, and should not, decide the question of the guilt or innocence of the party against whom proceedings are to be instituted—Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (258). The section does not say that before a Court makes a complaint, it must try the whole case and be absolutely satisfied that the accused cannot by any possibility escape a conviction—Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 33 (35). The Code does not contain any provision as to the manner in which the evidence in the inquiry should be recorded, but for further reference the Court should make a summary of the statement of the witness examined—Jogendra Nath, 42 Cal. 240, 18 C.W.N. 1242.

It is not necessary that the preliminary inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the accused, or that any notice should be given to him. See Note 1247, infra. The accused has no right to cross-examine any witness in the preliminary inquiry—Bakir Saheb, 18 Bom.L.R. 284, 17 Cr.L.J. 249; Abdul Ghaffoor v. Razu, 34 All. 267; Raja Rao, supra; but see contra—Ganeshwar, 6 P.L.J. 146, 22 Cr.L.J. 458; Lokpal Singh, 19 A.L.J. 56, 22 Cr.L.J. 143, 59 I.C. 55; Perumalla Venkata Subbiah, 44 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228, 23 Cr.L.J. 712; M. Mahomed Kaka v. Dist. Judge, Bassein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 62, 168 I.C. 632, 9 R.R. 359, 38 Cr.L.J. 615, 1937 Rang.L.R. 276; and U Ba Hla v. Maung Tun Sein, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 297, 178 I.C. 305, 40 Cr.L.J. 56.

The person proceeded against under this section is in the position of an accused person, and cannot be examined on oath as a witness in the course of the preliminary inquiry. He can only be examined in accordance with the provisions of sec. 342—Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 32, 17 Cr.L.J. 316 (317); Sami Sastri, 2 Weir 598 (599). But see first paragraph of this Note. The person proceeded against in the preliminary inquiry can be called upon to produce a necessary document in his possession (sec. 94)—Damri Ram, 19 Cr.L.J. 217, 43 I.C. 793 (794).

Who can hold the inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry must be conducted by the officer who directs prosecution (i.e., makes the complaint) under this section, and cannot be delegated to any other officer—Sakhi Rai, 20 Cr.L.J. 245 (Pat.). It is for the complaining Court to make any inquiry that is necessary, and then to make a complaint. This section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for preliminary inquiry, asking the Magistrate to make the inquiry and to prosecute if he is satisfied that the offence has been committed. It is the complaining Court that must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the person sent to the Magistrate—Chamari, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J. 170; Shabbir Hasan, 26 A.L.J. 46, 28 Cr.L.J. 986 (1987).

It is not necessary that the whole of the preliminary inquiry ought to be conducted by the Officer directing the prosecution. After making some inquiry, he can apply to the District Magistrate as the Head of the Police, for the assistance of the C. I. D., and the fact that he takes the assistance of the District Magistrate does not make him functus officio and deprive him of his jurisdiction to pass an order under this section—Waman, 43 Bom. 300, 20 Bom.L.R. 998, 20 Cr.L.J. 433. The complaining Court may order the inquiry to be made by the Police, but in that case, when the police papers arrive, the Court has to determine whether it is necessary to take action—Shabbir Hasan, supra. The Calcutta High Court is of opinion that this section contemplates that the inquiry (i.e., the whole inquiry) is to be made by the Court itself, and it is not competent to a Civil Court to base its order upon a police-report—Provat Ranjan v. Uma Shankar, 58 Cal. 727, 35 C.W.N. 98 (101), 32 Cr.L.J. 883, 1931 Cr.C. 590, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 438, 132 I.C. 241, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 561. But see Fazlar Rahaman, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 515, 31 Cr.L.J. 1055, 126 I.C. 553, 1930 Cr.C. 859.

In deciding whether in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made the Court is not confined to the record of the proceedings, but is entitled to take into account and consider information otherwise acquired. The applicant is entitled to adduce evidence outside the record of the proceedings out of which the application arises to show that evidence given in those proceedings was false—Bhagwandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co., 41 Cr.L.J. 526 526 (528), 187 I.C. 867, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 403, 42 Bom.L.R. 231.

The preliminary inquiry should not be unduly protracted. Action under this section should be prompt and expeditious. Where the Court passed the order for prosecution of the offender, nearly a year after the offence was brought to its notice, the High Court expressed disapproval of the undue protraction of the proceeding—Bahadur v. Eradatullah, 37 Cal. 642 (649) (F.B.).

Recording and finding:—The words in the section are “may . . . record a finding”; this shows that it is not compulsory for the Court to expressly record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made. Absence of such a finding will not invalidate the complaint—*K. C. V. P. Code—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52 (55), 14 C.W.N. 132 (134).

The inquiry must be on evidence; one mode of making inquiry is certainly to take evidence—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52; Raghubar v. Kokil, 17 Cal. 872. The law does not require a minute or detailed or exhaustive inquiry, but only such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary to make out a prima facie case. Maung Tun Sein*, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 297, 178 I.C. 305, 40 Cr.L.J. 56.

The person proceeded against under this section is in the position of an accused person, and cannot be examined on oath as a witness in the course of the preliminary inquiry. He can only be examined in accordance with the provisions of sec. 342—Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 32, 17 Cr.L.J. 316 (317); Sami Sastri, 2 Weir 598 (599). But see first paragraph of this Note. The person proceeded against in the preliminary inquiry can be called upon to produce a necessary document in his possession (sec. 94)—Damri Ram, 19 Cr.L.J. 217, 43 I.C. 793 (794).

Who can hold the inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry must be conducted by the officer who directs prosecution (i.e., makes the complaint) under this section, and cannot be delegated to any other officer—Sakhi Rai, 20 Cr.L.J. 245 (Pat). It is for the complainant Court to make any inquiry that is necessary, and then to make a complaint. This section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a Magistrate for preliminary inquiry, asking the Magistrate to make the inquiry and to prosecute if he is satisfied that the offence has been committed. It is the complaining Court that must be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the person sent to the Magistrate—Chamari, 4 Pat. 24, 6 P.L.T. 225, 26 Cr.L.J. 170; Shabbir Hasan, 26 A.L.J. 46, 28 Cr.L.J. 986 (1987).

It is not necessary that the whole of the preliminary inquiry ought to be conducted by the Officer directing the prosecution. After making some inquiry, he can apply to the District Magistrate as the Head of the Police, for the assistance of the C. I. D., and the fact that he takes the assistance of the District Magistrate does not make him functus officio and deprive him of his jurisdiction to pass an order under this section—Waman, 43 Bom. 300, 20 Bom.L.R. 998, 20 Cr.L.J. 433. The complaining Court may order the inquiry to be made by the Police, but in that case, when the police papers arrive, the Court has to determine whether it is necessary to take action—Shabbir Hasan, supra. The Calcutta High Court is of opinion that this section contemplates that the inquiry (i.e., the whole inquiry) is to be made by the Court itself, and it is not competent to a Civil Court to base its order upon a police-report—Provat Ranjan v. Uma Shankar, 58 Cal. 727, 35 C.W.N. 98 (101), 32 Cr.L.J. 883, 1931 Cr.C. 590, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 438, 132 I.C. 241, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 561. But see Fazlar Rahaman, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 515, 31 Cr.L.J. 1055, 126 I.C. 553, 1930 Cr.C. 859.

In deciding whether in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made the Court is not confined to the record of the proceedings, but is entitled to take into account and consider information otherwise acquired. The applicant is entitled to adduce evidence outside the record of the proceedings out of which the application arises to show that evidence given in those proceedings was false—Bhagwandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co., 41 Cr.L.J. 526 526 (528), 187 I.C. 867, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 403, 42 Bom.L.R. 231.

The preliminary inquiry should not be unduly protracted. Action under this section should be prompt and expeditious. Where the Court passed the order for prosecution of the offender, nearly a year after the offence was brought to its notice, the High Court expressed disapproval of the undue protraction of the proceeding—Bahadur v. Eradatullah, 37 Cal. 642 (649) (F.B.).

Recording and finding:—The words in the section are “may . . . record a finding”; this shows that it is not compulsory for the Court to expressly record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made. Absence of such a finding will not invalidate the complaint—K C V. Reddy, 8 Rang. 25, 31 Cr.L.J. 793 (795); Bhuban Chandra, 55 Cal. 279, 31 C.W.N. 828, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 628, 104 I.C. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784); Banke Lal v. Rampadarth, 35 Cr.L.J. 459, 147 I.C. 712, 14 P.L.T. 635, A.I.R. 1933 Pat. 713, 1933 Cr.C. 1536; Nawal Jha, A.I.R. 1936 Pat. 162, 159 I.C. 817, 37 Cr.L.J. 193; Naurang, 32 Cr.L.J. 60, 127 I.C. 859, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 347, Ind. A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 314, 35 C.W.N. 690, 58 Cal. 1211, 1931 Cr.C. 408, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 438.

A Court ought not to file a complaint in respect of offences under secs. 209, 467 and 471, I. P. C., when the matter has not been thoroughly shifted by it in course of a regular judicial inquiry—Gauri, 37 Cr.L.J. 518, 161 I.C. 602, 1936 O.W.N. 268.

1246. Procedure in preliminary inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry is a judicial proceeding, and oath can be administered to the suspected person—Viswanath, 8 Bom L.R. 589, 4 Cr.L.J. 183 (but see Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 316 given below in this Note); or to any person examined as a witness in the preliminary inquiry; and if such witness gives false evidence, he may be prosecuted for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. Code—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52 (55), 14 C.W.N. 132 (134).

The inquiry must be on evidence; one mode of making inquiry is certainly to take evidence—Abdullah, 37 Cal. 52; Raghubar v. Kokil, 17 Cal. 872. The law does not require a minute or detailed or exhaustive inquiry, but only such preliminary inquiry as may be necessary to make out a prima facie case. The extent of the preliminary inquiry is left to the discretion of the Court—Chamari, 4 Pat. 484, 27 Cr.L.J. 371; Bhuban Chandra, 55 Cal. 279, 31 C.W.N. 828, 28 Cr.L.J. 783 (784); Juala Prasad, 5 All. 62. The nature, method and extent of the inquiry are entirely at the discretion of the Court. The inquiry need not take the form of a full-dressed trial, so as to satisfy the Court that an offence has actually been committed. Nothing more is necessary than to find that an offence appears to have been committed and a long discussion or a decision on the merits is as undesirable as it is unnecessary—Raja Rao, 50 Mad. 660 (661), 27 Cr.L.J. 1149 (1150), 51 M.L.J. 551. Where an inquiry is made, it is not necessary that it should be detailed or formal—Kewal Ram, 36 Cr.L.J. 1354 (1356), 158 I.C. 324, 16 P.L.T. 693, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 515. The authority which is called upon to take action under this section need not, and should not, decide the question of the guilt or innocence of the party against whom proceedings are to be instituted—Jadunandan, 37 Cal. 250 (258). The section does not say that before a Court makes a complaint, it must try the whole case and be absolutely satisfied that the accused cannot by any possibility escape a conviction—Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 84, 15 Cr.L.J. 33 (35). The Code does not contain any provision as to the manner in which the evidence in the inquiry should be recorded, but for further reference the Court should make a summary of the statement of the witness examined—Jogendra Nath, 42 Cal. 240, 18 C.W.N. 1242.

It is not necessary that the preliminary inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the accused, or that any notice should be given to him. See Note 1247, infra. The accused has no right to cross-examine any witness in the preliminary inquiry—Bakir Saheb, 18 Bom L.R. 284, 17 Cr.L.J. 249; Abdul Ghaffoor v. Razu, 34 All. 267; Raja Rao, supra; but see contra—Ganeshwar, 6 P.L.J. 146, 22 Cr.L.J. 458; Lokpal Singh, 19 A.L.J. 56, 22 Cr.L.J. 143, 59 I.C. 55; Perumalla Venkata Subbiah, 44 M.L.J. 74, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228, 23 Cr.L.J. 712; M. Mahomed Kaka v. Dist. Judge, Bassein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 62, 168 I.C. 632, 9 R.R. 359, 38 Cr.L.J. 615, 1937 Rang L.R. 276; and U Ba Hla v. Maung Tun Sein, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 297, 178 I.C. 305, 40 Cr.L.J. 56.

The person proceeded against under this section is in the position of an accused person, and cannot be examined on oath as a witness in the course of the preliminary inquiry. He can only be examined in accordance with the provisions of sec. 342—Maung Po v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 32, 17 Cr.L.J. 316 (317); Sami Sastri, 2 Weir 598 (599). But see first paragraph of this Note. The person proceeded against in the preliminary inquiry can be called upon to produce a necessary document in his possession (sec. 94)—Damri Ram, 19 Cr.L.J. 217, 43 I.C. 793 (794).

Who can hold the inquiry:—The preliminary inquiry must be conducted by the officer who directs prosecution (i.e., makes the complaint) under this section, and cannot be delegated to any other officer—Sakhi Rai, 20 Cr.L.J. 245 (Pat.). It is for the complaining Court to make any inquiry that is necessary, and then to make a complaint. This section does not contemplate that the Court should send the case to a the person intended to be proceeded against, and the want of notice is at best a mere irregularity in procedure—Ram Piari Rai, 10 A.L.J. 247, 13 Cr.L.J. 707. For a proceeding under this section, neither notice to show cause why the party should not be sent before a Magistrate, nor a preliminary inquiry is indispensable—In re Jivanbhai, 7 Bom.L.R. 84, 2 Cr.L.J. 54; Jagat Singh, 31 Cr.L.J. 179 (180) (Lah.); Ganti v. Harnam Singh, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 641, I.L.R. 1938 Lah. 188, 40 P.L.R. 951, 178 I.C. 795, 40 Cr.L.J. 140, dissenting from Amar Nath, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 173, 99 I.C. 1027, 28 Cr.L.J. 227; Venkata Subbiah, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228, 69 I.C. 440, 23 Cr.L.J. 712, 44 M.L.J. 74; Lokpal Singh, A.I.R. 1921 All. 98, 59 I.C. 655, 22 Cr.L.J. 143, 19 A.L.J. 56 and Imam Ali, A.I.R. 1924 All. 435, 77 I.C. 888, 25 Cr.L.J. 488 where it has been laid down that while the statute (sec. 476, Cr. P. Code) does not require any preliminary enquiry, if any enquiry is made notice should be given to the accused person. But although as a matter of strict law, no notice would be necessary to the accused before taking proceedings under this section still it is but right that he should have notice—Bas Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas, 49 Bom. 710, 27 Bom.L.R. 616; James, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 606, 34 Cr.L.J. 833, 1933 Cr.C. 970, 144 I.C. 846. If a preliminary inquiry is started, it must be a real inquiry and not merely a formal one, and the accused must be given ample opportunity to show cause why he should not be prosecuted—Ajodhya Prasad, 1 P.L.T. 342, 21 Cr.L.J. 718; Ram Piari Rai, supra; Mathura Prasad, 4 P.L.J. 475, 20 Cr.L.J. 529; Anonymous, 2 Weir 587. Where the prosecution has been ordered by a Court on evidence given by witnesses whom the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine, and whose evidence had thus not been tested, the Court acts with material irregularity in directing a criminal prosecution in the matter without giving the petitioner any chance to know and meet the case against him—In re Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, 23 Cr.L.J. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228; Amar Nath, supra. When a Magistrate dismisses a complaint and takes action under this section against the complainant for preferring a false charge, he should give the complainant an opportunity of showing the truth or bona fide character of his complaint—Yendava, 7 Mad. 189; Kachi Madar, 21 M.L.J. 795, 12 Cr.L.J. 323; Karimdad, 6 Cal. 496; Gurish Chunder, 7 Cal. 87; Lalji Gope v. Giridhari, 5 C.W.N. 106. So also, where a Civil Court directed the prosecution of the defendant in a civil suit for fabricating false evidence, without calling upon the defendant to shew cause, it was held that the Court acted wrongly in ordering the prosecution without giving the person concerned an opportunity to shew cause against such order—Thakur Das, 17 O.C. 25, 15 Cr.L.J. 217.

1248. Complaint under this section:—Where the proceedings are embodied in a single document, that document itself serves the dual purpose of a finding and also of a complaint and should be held sufficiently to comply with the requirements of the section—Numbermal v. Mainappa, 54 Mad. 331, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 16, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200, 32 M.L.W. 513, 1930 M.W.N. 991, 128 I.C. 719. The Court is not required to make a formal complaint like a private complainant. See Notes 614, 614A, 614B, 614C, 614D, 1236, 1237, ante. In complaints of offences of giving false evidence and fabricating false evidence it is incumbent upon the Court to make clear and precise allegations regarding the passages in the deposition of the accused as a witness and the false evidence fabricated by him because the trying Magistrate cannot travel outside the limit of the complaint and also because the Court is not in the position of an ordinary complainant, whose allegations, if vague, would be reduced by the Magistrate to precision when the complaint is presented—Yerneni, 30 Cr.L.J. 370, 114 I.C. 438, 28 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 74, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 354. Where a Judge sets forth the particulars in respect of which he considers that desirable that Courts of fact should express themselves definitely and unequivocally on the question whether it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made; otherwise as in Keramati Ali, supra, the High Court may have to look into the facts for itself and form its own opinion as to whether a prosecution is desirable or not—Nand Kumar v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 534 (537), 1937 P.W.N. 119, 172 I.C. 237.

When the Judge's order shows that in his opinion the accused has given false evidence before him, that order by itself carries the implication that the Judge must have felt that the ends of justice require that an inquiry before a Magistrate should take place—Ijjatulla Paikar, 58 Cal. 1117, 35 C.W.N. 400 (403), 32 Cr.L.J. 842, 132 I.C. 160, 53 C.L.J. 177, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 190, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 544, 1931 Cr.C. 251; Bhuban Chandra, supra; Numberumal v. Naniappa, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200 (201); Charandas Kanayalal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 707, 182 I.C. 914, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 170, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 280. There is no reason why sec. 537, Cr. P. C., should not, in appropriate cases, apply to the failure to record an express finding under the provisions of sec. 476, Cr. P. Code—Charandas Kanayalal v. Emp., supra.

Where the offence is of considerable gravity, the High Court will assume that the Judge making the complaint must have considered whether it is expedient in the interests of justice to make the complaint, and the High Court will not set aside the order making a complaint, merely because the Judge had not recorded a finding to that effect—Nawabali v. Chandrakanta, 58 Cal. 965, 32 Cr.L.J. 1236 (1237), 134 I.C. 914, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 760, 1931 Cr.C. 1006, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 914 (distinguishing Keramati Ali, 55 Cal. 1312, 30 Cr.L.J. 221, 113 I.C. 842, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 862); Nawalal, 37 Cr.L.J. 193. The Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made, but the absence of such a finding does not mean that the point has not been considered and that it is necessary to interfere in revision. Where it is clear that the Appellate Court considered that an inquiry was necessary in the interests of justice and that a prima facie case had been made out, although it is unfortunate that it omitted to record a finding on either point, the High Court declined to interfere in revision—Dwarkaprasad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 227, 1940 N.L.J. 108, 187 I.C. 521, 41 Cr.L.J. 466. But where the Court does not record any finding and the order is so brief that it seems that the Court did not direct its mind to the question whether it was expedient in the interests of justice to make a complaint, the order (complaint) under this section must be set aside—Surendra Nath v. Kumeda Charan, 51 C.L.J. 208; Satish Chandra Maulik, 52 C.L.J. 52, 32 Cr.L.J. 237 (238).

Though it has been held that the absence of such a finding is not necessarily fatal, it is certainly desirable that Courts dealing with these matters should apply their minds directly to the question; and in doing so, they should consider whether an attempt to use the law in aid of a private grudge is being made and whether the Courts should allow themselves to become the instrument of a private grudge and also what facts can be proved and whether these facts are likely to be sufficient to support the conviction—Bachu Singh v. Tribeni Sah, 40 Cr.L.J. 157 (159), 179 I.C. 167, 5 B.R. 203, 11 R.P. 328, 1938 P.W.N. 904, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 178.

The mere fact that a finding has not been recorded does not prevent the accused from filing an appeal under sec. 476B; because the words of sec. 476B show that the appeal has not to be filed against the finding, but that the fact that a complaint has been made against him opens the way to an appeal as soon as the accused is aware that a complaint has been filed—K. C. V. Reddy, 8 Rang. 25, 31 Cr.L.J. 793.

See also Note 1241.

1247. Notice to accused:—The wording of sec. 476, Cr. P. C., does not make it incumbent on the Court to hold any preliminary inquiry or to give accused notice and if an inquiry is held, its nature, method and extent are entirely within the discretion of the Court—Nand Kumar v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 534 (536), 1937 P.W.N. 119, 172 I.C. 237. This section nowhere says that notice shall be given to the person intended to be proceeded against, and the want of notice is at best a mere irregularity in procedure—Ram Piarai Rai, 10 A.L.J. 247, 13 Cr.L.J. 707. For a proceeding under this section, neither notice to show cause why the party should not be sent before a Magistrate, nor a preliminary inquiry is indispensable—In re Jivanbhai, 7 Bom.L.R. 84, 2 Cr.L.J. 54; Jagat Singh, 31 Cr.L.J. 179 (180) (Lah.); *Ganits v. P. Code) does not require any preliminary enquiry, if any enquiry is made notice should be given to the accused person. But although as a matter of strict law, no notice would be necessary to the accused before taking proceedings under this section still it is but right that he should have notice—Bai Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas, 49 Bom. 710, 27 Bom.L.R. 616; James, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 606, 34 Cr.L.J. 833, 1933 Cr.C. 970, 144 I.C. 846. If a preliminary inquiry is started, it must be a real inquiry and not merely a formal one, and the accused must be given ample opportunity to show cause why he should not be prosecuted—Ajodhyya Prasad, 1 P.L.T. 342, 21 Cr.L.J. 718; Ram Piarai Rai, supra; Mathura Prasad, 4 P.L.J. 475, 20 Cr.L.J. 529; Anonymous, 2 Weir 587. Where the prosecution has been ordered by a Court on evidence given by witnesses whom the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine, and whose evidence had thus not been tested, the Court acts with material irregularity in directing a criminal prosecution in the matter without giving the petitioner any chance to know and meet the case against him—In re Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, 23 Cr.L.J. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Mad 228; Amar Nath, supra. When a Magistrate dismisses a complaint and takes action under this section against the complainant for preferring a false charge, he should give the complainant an opportunity of showing the truth or bona fide character of his complaint—Yendava, 7 Mad. 189; Kachi Madar, 21 M.L.J. 795, 12 Cr.L.J. 323; Karimdad, 6 Cal. 496; Gurish Chunder, 7 Cal. 87; Lalji Gope v. Girdhari, 5 C.W.N. 106. So also, where a Civil Court directed the prosecution of the defendant in a civil suit for fabricating false evidence, without calling upon the defendant to shew cause, it was held that the Court acted wrongly in ordering the prosecution without giving the person concerned an opportunity to shew cause against such order—Thakur Das, 17 O.C. 25, 15 Cr.L.J. 217.

1248. Complaint under this section:—Where the proceedings are embodied in a single document, that document itself serves the dual purpose of a finding and also of a complaint and should be held sufficiently to comply with the requirements of the section—Namberumal v. Mainiappa, 54 Mad. 331, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 16, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200, 32 M.L.W. 513, 1930 M.W.N. 991, 128 I.C. 719. The Court is not required to make a formal complaint like a private complainant. See Notes 614, 614A, 614B, 614C, 614D, 1236, 1237, ante. In complaints of offences of giving false evidence and fabricating false evidence it is incumbent upon the Court to make clear and precise allegations regarding the passages in the deposition of the accused as a witness and the false evidence fabricated by him because the trying Magistrate cannot travel outside the limit of the complaint and also because the Court is not in the position of an ordinary complainant, whose allegations, if vague, would be reduced by the Magistrate to precision when the complaint is presented—Yenneni, 30 Cr.L.J. 370, 114 I.C. 438, 28 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 74, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 354. Where a Judge sets forth the particulars in respect of which he considers that desirable that Courts of fact should express themselves definitely and unequivocally on the question whether it is expedient in the interest of justice that an inquiry should be made; otherwise as in Keramati Ali, supra, the High Court may have to look into the facts for itself and form its own opinion as to whether a prosecution is desirable or not—Nand Kumar v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 534 (537), 1937 P.W.N. 119, 172 I.C. 237.

When the Judge's order shows that in his opinion the accused has given false evidence before him, that order by itself carries the implication that the Judge must have felt that the ends of justice require that an inquiry before a Magistrate should take place—Ijratulla Paikar, 58 Cal. 1117, 35 C.W.N. 400 (403), 32 Cr.L.J. 842, 132 I.C. 160, 53 C.L.J. 177, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 190, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 544, 1931 Cr.C. 251; Bhuban Chandra, supra; Namberumal v. Naniappa, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200 (201); Charandas Kanayalal v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 707, 182 I.C. 914, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 170, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 280. There is no reason why sec. 537, Cr. P. C., should not, in appropriate cases, apply to the failure to record an express finding under the provisions of sec. 476, Cr. P. Code—Charandas Kanayalal v. Emp., supra.

Where the offence is of considerable gravity, the High Court will assume that the Judge making the complaint must have considered whether it is expedient in the interests of justice to make the complaint, and the High Court will not set aside the order making a complaint, merely because the Judge had not recorded a finding to that effect—Nawabali v. Chandrakanta, 58 Cal. 965, 32 Cr.L.J. 1236 (1237), 134 I.C. 914, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 760, 1931 Cr.C. 1006, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 914 (distinguishing Keramat Ali, 55 Cal. 1312, 30 Cr.L.J. 221, 113 I.C. 842, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 862); Nawalal, 37 Cr.L.J. 193. The Court should record a finding that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made, but the absence of such a finding does not mean that the point has not been considered and that it is necessary to interfere in revision. Where it is clear that the Appellate Court considered that an inquiry was necessary in the interests of justice and that a prima facie case had been made out, although it is unfortunate that it omitted to record a finding on either point, the High Court declined to interfere in revision—Dwarkanprasad v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Nag 227, 1940 N.L.J. 108, 187 I.C. 521, 41 Cr.L.J. 466. But where the Court does not record any finding and the order is so brief that it seems that the Court did not direct its mind to the question whether it was expedient in the interests of justice to make a complaint, the order (complaint) under this section must be set aside—Surendra Nath v. Kumeda Charan, 51 C.L.J. 208; Satish Chandra Maulik, 52 C.L.J. 52, 32 Cr.L.J. 237 (238).

Though it has been held that the absence of such a finding is not necessarily fatal, it is certainly desirable that Courts dealing with these matters should apply their minds directly to the question; and in doing so, they should consider whether an attempt to use the law in aid of a private grudge is being made and whether the Courts should allow themselves to become the instrument of a private grudge and also what facts can be proved and whether these facts are likely to be sufficient to support the conviction—Bachu Singh v. Tribeni Sah, 40 Cr.L.J. 157 (159), 179 I.C. 167, 5 B.R. 203, 11 R.P. 328, 1938 P.W.N. 904, A.I.R. 1939 Pat. 178.

The mere fact that a finding has not been recorded does not prevent the accused from filing an appeal under sec. 476B; because the words of sec. 476B show that the appeal has not to be filed against the finding, but that the fact that a complaint has been made against him opens the way to an appeal as soon as the accused is aware that a complaint has been filed—K. C. V. Reddy, 8 Rang. 25, 31 Cr.L.J. 793.

See also Note 1241.

1247. Notice to accused:—The wording of sec. 476, Cr. P. C., does not make it incumbent on the Court to hold any preliminary inquiry or to give accused notice and if an inquiry is held, its nature, method and extent are entirely within the discretion of the Court—Nand Kumar v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 534 (536), 1937 P.W.N. 119, 172 I.C. 237. This section nowhere says that notice shall be given to the person intended to be proceeded against, and the want of notice is at best a mere irregularity in procedure—Ram Piari Rai, 10 A.L.J. 247, 13 Cr.L.J. 707. For a proceeding under this section, neither notice to show cause why the party should not be sent before a Magistrate, nor a preliminary inquiry is indispensable—In re Jivanbhai, 7 Bom.L.R. 84, 2 Cr.L.J. 54; Jagat Singh, 31 Cr.L.J. 179 (180) (Lah.); *Ganti v. P. Code) does not require any preliminary enquiry, if any enquiry is made notice should be given to the accused person. But although as a matter of strict law, no notice would be necessary to the accused before taking proceedings under this section still it is but right that he should have notice—Bai Kasturbai v. Vanmalidas, 49 Bom. 710, 27 Bom.L.R. 616; James, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 606, 34 Cr.L.J. 833, 1933 Cr.C. 970, 144 I.C. 846. If a preliminary inquiry is started, it must be a real inquiry and not merely a formal one, and the accused must be given ample opportunity to show cause why he should not be prosecuted—Ajodhyya Prasad, 1 P.L.T. 342, 21 Cr.L.J. 718; Ram Piari Rai, supra; Mathura Prasad, 4 P.L.J. 475, 20 Cr.L.J. 529; Anonymous, 2 Weir 587. Where the prosecution has been ordered by a Court on evidence given by witnesses whom the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine, and whose evidence had thus not been tested, the Court acts with material irregularity in directing a criminal prosecution in the matter without giving the petitioner any chance to know and meet the case against him—In re Perumalla, 44 M.L.J. 74, 23 Cr.L.J. 712, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 228; Amar Nath, supra. When a Magistrate dismisses a complaint and takes action under this section against the complainant for preferring a false charge, he should give the complainant an opportunity of showing the truth or bona fide character of his complaint—Yendaa, 7 Mad. 189; Kachi Madar, 21 M.L.J. 795, 12 Cr.L.J. 323; Kartmadad, 6 Cal. 496; Girish Chunder, 7 Cal. 87; Lalji Gope v. Girdhar, 5 C.W.N. 106. So also, where a Civil Court directed the prosecution of the defendant in a civil suit for fabricating false evidence, without calling upon the defendant to shew cause, it was held that the Court acted wrongly in ordering the prosecution without giving the person concerned an opportunity to shew cause against such order—Thakur Das, 17 O.C. 25, 15 Cr.L.J. 217.

1248. Complaint under this section:—Where the proceedings are embodied in a single document, that document itself serves the dual purpose of a finding and also of a complaint and should be held sufficiently to comply with the requirements of the section—Namberumal v. Mainiappa, 54 Mad. 331, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 16, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200, 32 M.L.W. 513, 1930 M.W.N. 991, 128 I.C. 719. The Court is not required to make a formal complaint like a private complainant. See Notes 614, 614A, 614B, 614C, 614D, 1236, 1237, ante. In complaints of offences of giving false evidence and fabricating false evidence it is incumbent upon the Court to make clear and precise allegations regarding the passages in the deposition of the accused as a witness and the false evidence fabricated by him because the trying Magistrate cannot travel outside the limit of the complaint and also because the Court is not in the position of an ordinary complainant, whose allegations, if vague, would be reduced by the Magistrate to precision when the complaint is presented—Yenneni, 30 Cr.L.J. 370, 114 I.C. 438, 28 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 74, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 354. Where a Judge sets forth the particulars in respect of which he considers that false evidence was given and the nature of the proof that the evidence is in fact false, these particulars serve the purpose of a complaint, and the proceedings cannot be challenged merely because there is no separate complaint—Numberumal v. Nainappa, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200 (201).

A complaint under sec. 195 read with sec. 476, Cr. P. C., should disclose the Court before which and the occasion on which the offence is alleged to have been committed—Hiralal, 33 Cr.L.J. 860, 139 I.C. 543, 13 P.L.T. 370, 1932 Cr.C. 640, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 243, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 245. A complaint under this section must specify the person alleged to have committed the offence. Where a District Judge, being of opinion that the forgery of a document produced before him was committed either by the plaintiff or by the defendant, sent both of them to the nearest first class Magistrate so that the guilty party might be proceeded against, it was held that the order was illegal and must be set aside in revision—Pirbhu Dyal, 1905 P.L.R. 163, 3 Cr.L.J. 73. A finding has to be recorded in respect of each individual accused specifically—Shabbir Hasan, 26 A.L.J. 46, 28 Cr.L.J. 986 (1987).

The order must specify the offence committed—Khubomal, 8 S.L.R. 179, 16 Cr.L.J. 104. 'The complaint must set forth the offence, the precise facts on which it is based, and the evidence available for proving it—Ram Prosad, 49 All. 752, 25 A.L.J. 639, 28 Cr.L.J. 543. But see Ismail Panju, 26 Cr.L.J. 1115, 88 I.C. 283, A.I.R. 1925 Nag. 337, where it has been laid down that it is not really necessary that the Court making a complaint should state under what section the offence falls. A mere clerical mistake in stating the offence does not make the complaint illegal, e.g., where the Magistrate in his complaint wrote by mistake "sec. 477, I. P. C." instead of sec. 465, I. P. C.—Bal Manuk, 9 Lah. 678, 29 Cr.L.J. 652 (655). If the Magistrate, acting under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., considers that a complaint should be made, it would be open to him to include in that complaint not merely offences which are referred to in sec. 195, Cr. P. C., but also other offences such as one under sec. 161, I. P. C. Sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is an enabling section and does not debar a Magistrate from including in his complaint other sections of the I. P. C. Nor would it bedar the Magistrate to whom the complaint was presented from issuing process under other sections of the I. P. C., if from the facts alleged offences under other sections appeared to have been committed—Dharmumal v. Tenumal, 41 Cr.L.J. 821 (823), 190 I.C. 119, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 133. See Note 614B.

A District Magistrate passed an order directing prosecution for perjury or in the alternative for an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code. It was held that the order of that kind was not an order at all and therefore not valid—Hasan Shah v. Hardeo, 25 All. 234. If the offence is perjury, the Court directing the prosecution should specify the false statement in regard to which the prosecution is directed, and should not leave it to the Magistrate to fish about and find it; if the offence is in respect of a forged document, the Court should mention the forged portion of the document. Omission to specify these particulars amounts to a material irregularity calling for interference by the High Court in revision—Kashi Shukul, 38 All. 695; Kalyanji v. Ram Deen, 49 Mad. 395, 48 M.L.J. 290, 26 Cr.L.J. 801; 86 I.C. 449, A.I.R. 1925 Mad 609; Ramdhari, 19 Cr.L.J. 169 (Pat.); Kalisadhan v. Naini Lal, 52 Cal. 478, 26 Cr.L.J. 1307; Surendra, 35 Cr.L.J. 785, 148 I.C. 866, 1933 A.L.J. 1623, A.I.R. 1934 All. 385, 1934 Cr.C. 464; Sathi Reddy, 31 Cr.L.J. 1060, 126 I.C. 530, A.I.R. 1930 Rang 153; Yernenni, 30 Cr.L.J. 370, 114 I.C. 834, 28 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1929 Mad 74, Ind. Rul 1929 Mad 354. It is preferable that a Court making a complaint for perjury should quote the passages in the witness's evidence which form the basis of the complaint—Dwarka v. Makund, 24 A.L.J. 122, 26 Cr.L.J. 1506, 90 I.C. 290.

Where a complaint under this section had the heading "in the High Court of Judicature at Lahore" although the complaint was ordered to be made to the Magistrate, held that this was an error which amounted to a mere irregularity curable under sec. 537 (a), Cr. P. C.—Brahm Datt, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 981, 1934 Cr.C. 1375, 36 Cr.L.J. 402, 153 I.C. 547. Where the accused was discharged by two Magistrates of the Bench and a complaint under sec 211, I. P. C., was made by three Magistrates, held that the defect was a technical one and there was no ground for interference in revision—Banke Lal v. Maiku, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 35 Cr.L.J. 121, 146 I.C. 638, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 10 O.W.N. 1037. Where a Subordinate Judge described his complaint as one under secs. 195 and 476, Cr. P. C., regarding offences under secs. 183 and 186, I. P. C., the mere fact that he has made a reference to sec. 476, Cr. P. C., will not make his complaint any the less one under sec. 195, Cr. P. C.—Jodhi, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 277, 149 I.C. 377, 11 O.W.N. 720, 1934 O.L.R. 510.

An order under this section should disclose the materials upon which it is based. Such an order is a judicial order; if it does not show the basis upon which it is passed, it is liable to be set aside in revision by the High Court—Brijnandan, 1 P.L.T. 717, 57 I.C. 457 (458). The officer making the complaint must state the evidence on which he relies; otherwise the Magistrate to whom the case is sent has no means of ascertaining what the evidence is on which the prosecution is based—Shankar Sahai, 7 O.W.N. 638, 31 Cr.L.J. 938 (939). The complaining Court must hold such inquiry that its order when sent to the Magistrate will amount to a complaint under sec. 200. For that purpose the complaining Court must decide upon and name the witnesses to be examined by the Magistrate; otherwise the complaint is liable to be dismissed on the ground that there are no witnesses. The Court must not leave it to the Magistrate to inquire and find out for himself who the witnesses may be—Kalyani v. Ram Deen, 48 Mad. 395, 48 M.L.J. 290, 26 Cr.L.J. 801, 86 I.C. 449, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 609. But see Banke Lal v. Maiku, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 35 Cr.L.J. 121, 146 I.C. 638, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 10 O.W.N. 1037, where it has been held that there is no provision in the Cr. P. C. that there should be a list of witnesses along with the complaint.

A Magistrate is competent under sec 250 to order the complainant to pay compensation to the accused and also to make a complaint under this section for bringing a false charge—Adikhan v. Aitagan, 21 Mad. 237, Tuni Reddi, 27 Mad. 59; Beni Madhab v. Kumud, 30 Cal. 123; Allabux, 10 S.L.R. 162, 18 Cr.L.J. 414 (Contra—Bachu v. Jagdam, 26 Cal 181; Shib Nath v. Sarat, 22 Cal 586). See Note 817 under sec 250. But the two orders must be simultaneous; where the Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay compensation to the accused under sec 250, and three weeks later he passed an order under this section directing the issue of notice to the complainant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for an offence under sec 211, I. P. C., it was held that that latter order was not proper under the circumstances—Lalji Hari, 20 Cr.L.J. 226 (Pat.).

An order under this section which merely directs the prosecution of the accused, but omits to direct the accused to be taken before the First Class Magistrate, was held to be at most an irregularity cured by sec 537 (b) of this Code—Suppaya Tharagan, 37 Mad 317. But it would not be so now, because clause (b) of sec. 537 which cured irregularities under sec 476 has been omitted by the Amendment Act of 1923.

A Magistrate passed the following order: "Whereas D instituted a false case before the S. I. of Police, I therefore sanction the prosecution of D under sec. 211, I. P. C., and send the proceeding to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for favour of disposal. The prosecution is sanctioned under sec 476, Cr. P. Code" Held that the order could not be treated as a complaint in proper form under this section. The proceeding against D based on such a complaint must be quashed—Durjodhan, 52 Cal 666, 26 Cr.L.J. 1459.

Although it is no longer possible to apply the provisions of sec. 537, Cr. P. C., in the case of want of sanction required by sec. 195, Cr. P. C., an irregularity in a complaint made by one Court to another is curable under sub-sec. (a), since a complaint made by a Court is, for the purposes of sec 537, Cr. P. C., in no wise different from a complaint made by a private individual—Vithoo Raghoji v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 487 (489), 1938 N.I.J. 285, 40 Cr.L.J. 388, 180 I.C. 577.

Recording Reasons:—This section merely states that the Judge should record a finding; it does not state that the finding should be supported by reasons, or that it should contain issues for decision—Lakhmichand, 21 S.L.R. 43, 27 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1250), 98 I.C. 97. But see Yerneni, 30 Cr.L.J. 370, 114 I.C. 834, 28 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 74, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 354.

See also Note 1255A.

Review of Complaint:—A complaint cannot be a judgment even when the complaint is made by a Court under this section. Therefore, sec. 369, Cr. P. C., cannot apply to a complaint and does not, therefore, amount to a bar against a Court altering or reviewing the complaint under this section. Where, therefore, a Civil Court made a complaint to a Magistrate under this section but the complaint was returned to him by the District Magistrate with the request that he should act under sec. 478, Cr. P. C., and the Civil Court acted accordingly, held that it was open to the Civil Court under these circumstances when the record was sent back to it by the District Magistrate to pass the order of commitment after the further enquiry which is made and that the commitment having been made, no ground existed for the High Court to set it aside in its revisional powers under sec. 215, Cr. P. C.—Jagat Ram, A.I.R. 1937 All. 76, 1936 A.L.J. 1199.

Once an order has been passed by the Magistrate declining to take action, that order can be displaced only by the order of the Appellate Court under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C. The District Magistrate has no power to direct the prosecution and if the Magistrate in making the complaint allows himself to be guided by the wishes of a superior executive officer, he manifestly acts improperly and contrary to law and the proceedings are liable to be quashed—Ramdeni Pathak v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 358 (359), 173 I.C. 738, 10 R.P. 432, 4 B.R. 327, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 145.

"May take security.....custody to such Magistrate".—"The object of this is not to make it compulsory on the Magistrate to send the accused in custody even in non-bailable cases. I want to leave a discretion to the Magistrate to come to a conclusion that it is necessary for him to do so. Otherwise he may take security for his appearance."—Speech of Mr. Rangachariar (Legislative Assembly Debates, 8th February, 1923, page 2087).

1249. Effect of reversal of the order directing prosecution:—If an order under sec. 476 (1) directing any enquiry by a Magistrate of the First Class is set aside, it is just and proper that proceeding under sub-sec. (2) before that Magistrate must also cease; the Magistrate cannot proceed with the inquiry any further—San Tin, 6 L.B.R. 49, 13 Cr.L.J. 492. Thus, where in a suit on a registered bond alleged to have been executed by the defendant, the Munsiff held that the bond was genuine, and directed the prosecution of the defendant, who had denied the execution of the bond, for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. C., and sent the defendant to the nearest First Class Magistrate to be tried for the offence, but on appeal the judgment of the Munsiff was reversed by the Sub-Judge who held that the bond was not genuine and that the defendant had not executed it, it was held that the result of the judgment of the Appellate Court must be taken to be that the order for the prosecution of the defendant was not maintainable and that the inquiry into the case of the defendant by the First Class Magistrate must be stopped and should proceed no further; and that if the defendant had been convicted by the Magistrate, the conviction would be set aside by the High Court, although the defendant did not move the High Court to quash the proceeding taken against him—Kanullah, 12 C.W.N. 1. But where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint and directed the prosecution of the complainant under this section, and the Sessions Judge directed further inquiry setting aside the order of dismissal, but passed no order in respect of the order of prosecution, it was held that the order of prosecution remained good until it was quashed and the Magistrate to whom the case was sent was competent to continue the inquiry—Kachi Madar, 21 M.L.J. 795, 12 Cr.L.J. 323. If an order directing the prosecution is set aside by the High Court as not being in proper form, it does not debar the Court from instituting fresh proceedings by making a complaint in proper form—Durjodhan, 52 Cal. 666, 26 Cr.L.J. 1459.

1250. First Class Magistrate:—Under the old section, the Court before which an offence was committed had to send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest First Class Magistrate; and it was not necessary that such Magistrate should be a Magistrate having local jurisdiction over the offence. The order making the transfer was of itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on such Magistrate—Nagappa, 16 Mad. 461; Rup Narain, 20 Cr.L.J. 202 (Pat.). But in a Sind case, it was held that the word 'nearest' was merely directory; and the trial of the offender by a Magistrate who was not the nearest Magistrate but who had local jurisdiction over the offence was not illegal—Neuand, 1 S.L.R. 84, 8 Cr.L.J. 209. See also Donaldson, 43 Cal. 542, where the High Court sent the case to a Magistrate who was the nearest Magistrate having jurisdiction over the offender, though not the nearest Magistrate to the High Court. To remove this conflict of opinion, it has now been expressly laid down that the Magistrate to whom the accused is to be sent must be a Magistrate having jurisdiction.

If a High Court or Chief Presidency Magistrate takes action under this section, he shall send the case to a Presidency Magistrate; see para. 3 of sub-section (1). In this para as originally framed by the Amendment Act of 1923, the words were "Chief Presidency Magistrate," but the word 'Chief' has been omitted by the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, II of 1926. "This amendment proposes to make all Presidency Magistrate, Magistrates of the first class for the purpose of sec. 476 (1). At present, if a Chief Presidency Magistrate wishes to take action, it is necessary for him to send the case to a first class Magistrate outside the Presidency town, because the other Presidency Magistrates are not first class Magistrates for the purposes of this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 215). Such a difficulty arose in the case of Mackey, 53 Cal. 350, 30 C.W.N. 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 385 (F.B.). In this case the accused gave false evidence before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, whereupon he drew up a complaint for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. Code. This complaint he preferred in his own Court (i.e., to himself), because the other Presidency Magistrates were not first class Magistrates; then he transferred the complaint under sec. 192, Cr. P. Code to the Third Presidency Magistrate. The Full Bench decided that the procedure adopted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate in making the complaint to himself was irregular, though not absolutely illegal. The present amendment, however, has removed this difficulty.

This section authorises the Court to send the accused to the First Class Magistrate; it does not permit the Court to commit him to the Sessions—Anwarkha, 3 Bom.L.R. 185

The Court should specify the Magistrate to whom the case is sent; an order that the case be sent to the Magisterial authorities for investigation is not sufficient—Nurput, 4 N.W.P. 86.

1251. Power of Magistrate to whom case is sent:—The expression 'proceed according to law' in sub-sec. (2) means that the Magistrate receiving the reference must proceed under Chapters XVIII to XXI of the Code according to the nature of the offence supposed to have been committed. Chapter XVII has, of course, no application, in as much as the accused must necessarily appear before the Magistrate as a consequence of the reference itself—Duidin v. Narayan, 21 Cr.L.J. 310 (Nag.).

The Magistrate receiving a case under sec. 476 cannot act under sec. 202. The latter section enables a Magistrate who is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint to postpone the issue of process and to direct a local investigation. Now, sec. 476 presupposes that the Court (Civil, Criminal or Revenue) making the reference to the Magistrate must be of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into the offence in respect of which the case is sent to the Magistrate. This shows that sec. 476 precludes the application of sec. 202, and that there can be no room for the investigation which is contemplated by that section—Duidin v. Narayan, 55 I.C. 470, 21 Cr.L.J. 310 (Nag.).

The Magistrate to whom a case has been sent is competent to discharge the accused person, if in his opinion the evidence against the accused is insufficient—Rachappa, 13 Bom. 109 (113). He has power to dismiss the complaint under sec. 203—Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (46). If the Magistrate passes an order of discharge, the Sessions Judge can should contain issues for decision—Lakhmichand, 21 S.L.R. 43, 27 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1250), 98 I.C. 97. But see Yerneni, 30 Cr.L.J. 370, 114 I.C. 834, 28 M.L.W. 774, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 74, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 354.

Review of Complaint:—A complaint cannot be a judgment even when the complaint is made by a Court under this section. Therefore, sec. 369, Cr. P. C., cannot apply to a complaint and does not, therefore, amount to a bar against a Court altering or reviewing the complaint under this section. Where, therefore, a Civil Court made a complaint to a Magistrate under this section but the complaint was returned to him by the District Magistrate with the request that he should act under sec. 478, Cr. P. C., and the Civil Court acted accordingly, held that it was open to the Civil Court under these circumstances when the record was sent back to it by the District Magistrate to pass the order of commitment after the further enquiry which is made and that the commitment having been made, no ground existed for the High Court to set it aside in its revisional powers under sec. 215, Cr. P. C.—Jagat Ram, A.I.R. 1937 All. 76, 1936 A.L.J. 1199.

Once an order has been passed by the Magistrate declining to take action, that order can be displaced only by the order of the Appellate Court under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C. The District Magistrate has no power to direct the prosecution and if the Magistrate in making the complaint allows himself to be guided by the wishes of a superior executive officer, he manifestly acts improperly and contrary to law and the proceedings are liable to be quashed—Ramdeni Pathak v. Emp, 39 Cr.L.J. 358 (359), 173 I.C. 738, 10 R.P. 432, 4 B.R. 327, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 145.

"May take security.....custody to such Magistrate".—"The object of this is not to make it compulsory on the Magistrate to send the accused in custody even in non-bailable cases. 1249. Effect of reversal of the order directing prosecution:—If an order under sec. 476 (1) directing any enquiry by a Magistrate of the First Class is set aside, it is just and proper that proceeding under sub-sec. (2) before that Magistrate must also cease; the Magistrate cannot proceed with the inquiry any further—San Tin, 6 L.B.R. 49, 13 Cr.L.J. 492. Thus, where in a suit on a registered bond alleged to have been executed by the defendant, the Munsiff held that the bond was genuine, and directed the prosecution of the defendant, who had denied the execution of the bond, for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. But where a Magistrate dismissed a complaint and directed the prosecution of the complainant under this section, and the Sessions Judge directed further inquiry setting aside the order of dismissal, but passed no order in respect of the order of prosecution, it was held that the order of prosecution remained good until it was quashed and the Magistrate to whom the case was sent was competent to continue the inquiry—Kachi Madar, 21 M.L.J. 795, 12 Cr.L.J. 323. If an order directing the prosecution is set aside by the High Court as not being in proper form, it does not debar the Court from instituting fresh proceedings by making a complaint in proper form—Durjodhan, 52 Cal. 666, 26 Cr.L.J. 1459.

1250. First Class Magistrate:—Under the old section, the Court before which an offence was committed had to send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest First Class Magistrate; and it was not necessary that such Magistrate should be a Magistrate having local jurisdiction over the offence. The order making the transfer was of itself sufficient to confer jurisdiction on such Magistrate—Nagappa, 16 Mad. 461; Rup Narain, 20 Cr.L.J. 202 (Pat.). But in a Sind case, it was held that the word 'nearest' was merely directory; and the trial of the offender by a Magistrate who was not the nearest Magistrate but who had local jurisdiction over the offence was not illegal—Neuand, 1 S.L.R. 84, 8 Cr.L.J. 209. See also Donaldson, 43 Cal. 542, where the High Court sent the case to a Magistrate who was the nearest Magistrate having jurisdiction over the offender, though not the nearest Magistrate to the High Court. To remove this conflict of opinion, it has now been expressly laid down that the Magistrate to whom the accused is to be sent must be a Magistrate having jurisdiction.

If a High Court or Chief Presidency Magistrate takes action under this section, he shall send the case to a Presidency Magistrate; see para. 3 of sub-section (1). In this para as originally framed by the Amendment Act of 1923, the words were "Chief Presidency Magistrate," but the word 'Chief' has been omitted by the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, II of 1926. "This amendment proposes to make all Presidency Magistrate, Magistrates of the first class for the purpose of sec. 476 (1). At present, if a Chief Presidency Magistrate wishes to take action, it is necessary for him to send the case to a first class Magistrate outside the Presidency town, because the other Presidency Magistrates are not first class Magistrates for the purposes of this section"—Statement of Objects and Reasons (Gazette of India, 1925, Part V, p. 215). Such a difficulty arose in the case of Mackey, 53 Cal. 350, 30 C.W.N. 276, 27 Cr.L.J. 385 (F.B.). In this case the accused gave false evidence before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, whereupon he drew up a complaint for an offence under sec. 193, I. P. Code. This complaint he preferred in his own Court (i.e., to himself), because the other Presidency Magistrates were not first class Magistrates; then he transferred the complaint under sec. 192, Cr. P. Code to the Third Presidency Magistrate. The Full Bench decided that the procedure adopted by the Chief Presidency Magistrate in making the complaint to himself was irregular, though not absolutely illegal. The present amendment, however, has removed this difficulty.

This section authorises the Court to send the accused to the First Class Magistrate; it does not permit the Court to commit him to the Sessions—Anwarkha, 3 Bom.L.R. 185.

The Court should specify the Magistrate to whom the case is sent; an order that the case be sent to the Magisterial authorities for investigation is not sufficient—Nurput, 4 N.W.P. 86.

1251. Power of Magistrate to whom case is sent:—The expression 'proceed according to law' in sub-sec (2) means that the Magistrate receiving the reference must proceed under Chapters XVIII to XXI of the Code according to the nature of the offence supposed to have been committed. Chapter XVII has, of course, no application, in as much as the accused must necessarily appear before the Magistrate as a consequence of the reference itself—Dwidin v Narayan, 21 Cr.L.J. 310 (Nag.).

The Magistrate receiving a case under sec. 476 cannot act under sec. 202. The latter section enables a Magistrate who is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint to postpone the issue of process and to direct a local investigation. Now, sec. 476 presupposes that the Court (Civil, Criminal or Revenue) making the reference to the Magistrate must be of opinion that there is ground for inquiry into the offence in respect of which the case is sent to the Magistrate. This shows that sec. 476 precludes the application of sec. 202, and that there can be no room for the investigation which is contemplated by that section—Dwidin v. Narayan, 55 I.C. 470, 21 Cr.L.J. 310 (Nag.).

The Magistrate to whom a case has been sent is competent to discharge the accused person, if in his opinion the evidence against the accused is insufficient—Rachappa, 13 Bom. 109 (113). He has power to dismiss the complaint under sec. 203—Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (46). If the Magistrate passes an order of discharge, the Sessions Judge can order further inquiry under sec. 436—Peary Lal v. Sagar Mal, 49 All. 230, 27 Cr.L.J. 1130.

If the complaint under this section is made without jurisdiction, the Magistrate to whom the case is sent is competent to dismiss the complaint—Kulandai v. Ramasami, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 431, 12 I.C. 644 (645). The Magistrate while dismissing the case and acquitting the accused, cannot direct compensation to be paid to the accused. Thus, where the decree-holder complained to the Civil Court of obstruction by the judgment-debtor under this section, and after the trial and acquittal of the accused the Magistrate ordered the decree-holder to pay compensation, it was held that the order was not valid, since the decree-holder was not the complainant. The real complainant was the Civil Court which directed the prosecution of the accused—Kishandas Hirachand, 14 Bom.L.R. 1166, 14 Cr.L.J. 1.

The Magistrate is competent to proceed against persons not named in the order of the Court directing the prosecution under this section. The Code provides for taking cognizance of offences and not of offenders, and a Magistrate who has legally taken cognizance of an offence on an order under sec. 476 has jurisdiction to proceed against any one who may be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence, whether he was mentioned in the order or not—Girdhari Lal, 21 C.W.N. 950, 18 Cr.L.J. 901; Waman, 43 Bom. 300; Ajaib Singh, 34 P.R. 1917, 18 Cr.L.J. 893 (895). See Note 614C.

Where the accused failed to place on record of the case sufficient material to satisfy the Magistrate that the preliminaries laid down by sec. 476 had not been complied with by the Court before filing the complaint, it cannot be presumed that the Court had not applied its mind to the case and that in filing the complaint he merely carried out the order of his superior officer—Moolchand, 34 Cr.L.J. 305 (307), 142 I.C. 74, 26 S.L.R. 105, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 37, 1933 Cr.C. 166, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 82.

1252. Limit of time for taking action:—This section does not limit the time within which action should be taken, and there is no necessity to proceed under this section immediately after the close of the original trial or proceeding in which the offence complained of is said to have been committed—Badri Singh, 19 A.L.J. 819, 22 Cr.L.J. 680, 63 I.C. 616 (617); Daman, 43 Bom. 300; Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (339); Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (282); Tilak Panday, 37 All. 344, 13 A.L.J. 466; Lakshmidas, 32 Bom. 184 (190, 191), 7 Cr.L.J. 35, 10 Bom.L.R. 28; Jethamal v. Wadhmal, 7 S.L.R. 187, 15 Cr.L.J. 541; Jawala Parshad v. Ram Parshad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 526, distinguishing Ram Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1916 Lah. 259, 88 P.L.R. 1916, 17 Cr.L.J. 470 and Chothu Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 316, 126 I.C. 794, 31 Cr.L.J. 1135. But still it is desirable that an order under this section should be made either at the close of the proceeding or so shortly thereafter that it may be reasonably said that the order is a part of the proceeding—Rahimatulla, 31 Mad. 140, 7 Cr.L.J. 54, 17 M.L.J. 584 (F.B.); Yad Rau v. Risal, 5 I.C. 469, 7 A.L.J. 50, 11 Cr.L.J. 140; Abdul Qadir v. Muhammad Ibrahim Khan, 25 Cr.L.J. 119, 76 I.C. 183, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 569; Sarat Chandra, 20 Cr.L.J. 184; Choudhury Mean, 20 Cr.L.J. 286; Maung Ba Hla, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332) (Bur.); Aiyakannu, 32 Mad. 49, 9 Cr.L.J. 41, 4 M.L.T. 204. If the Court thinks that action should be taken under this section, it ought to pass such order at or immediately after the termination of the original trial (and should not delay it by several months)—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (556), 5 Cr.L.J. 398, 5 C.L.J. 508, 11 C.W.N. 568 (F.B.); Bhim Lal v. Bisu, 40 Cal. 444, 17 C.W.N. 290; Kashi Shukul, 38 All. 695; Subbaraya, 15 M.L.J. 489, 3 Cr.L.J. 118. See also Trailokya v. Radharanjan, 25 C.W.N. 886, 67 I.C. 204, 23 Cr.L.J. 380. In Bai Kasturbai v. Vanamalidas, 49 Bom. 710, A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 436, 26 Cr.L.J. 1189, 27 Bom.L.R. 616, Crump, J. considered Begu Singh, supra, and after pointing out that it was overruled by Bahadur v. Eradatullah Mallick, 37 Cal. 642, 6 I.C. 801, 14 C.W.N. 799, he said: "It is also obvious from a reference to the section itself as it stood, and as it now stands, that the main grounds on which the decision rests are no longer in force. The learned Judges relied on the words 'committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding'" which are no longer to be found in the section." On the section as it now stands it is clear that the application need not be made in the course of the proceedings out of which it arises, or immediately thereafter, and the difference of opinion upon the former section is now immaterial. Whether the Court would accede to an application made long after the termination of the proceedings out of which it arises is a matter which would arise upon the merits and would no doubt depend upon all the circumstances—Bhagwandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co, 41 Cr.L.J. 526 (528), 187 I.C. 867, 1940 Bom. 403, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, 42 Bom.L.R. 231. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down that delay is a ground for setting aside an order for prosecution. It may, under certain circumstances, be almost a sufficient ground in itself, but in other cases it may be no ground at all. It is possible to imagine a case in which the commission of an alleged offence may not have actually come to light for many months or even years after it had been committed. But a prosecution for false complaint under sec. 211, I. P. C., should be ordered as soon as the complaint is dismissed as false, and not many months afterwards, because the facts justifying the prosecution are known to the Court at the time when the complaint is dismissed—Baldeo Prosad, 46 All. 851 (852); Sajjad Husain, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 113, 1934 O.L.R. 980, 153 I.C. 346, 1935 O.W.N. 29, 1935 Cr.C. 203. In some cases a Court might refuse to take proceedings on the ground that an application was unduly delayed, but that is a matter of discretion to be exercised in the circumstances of each case—Banke Lal v. Maiku, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 35 Cr.L.J. 121, 146 I.C. 638, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 10 O.W.N. 1037. Before exercising its jurisdiction to lay a complaint the Court should find, first, that it is in the interests of public justice that a complaint should be made, and secondly, that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction resulting from a complaint. In regard to the first point, although no time limit for the institution of such prosecutions is laid down in the section, it has been held by all the High Courts that prompt action is desirable, and the delay on the part of a party in making his application to move the Court to lay a complaint may, if unexplained, be fatal to the application. If the application is delayed, and the delay is not satisfactorily explained, evidence called in support thereof naturally comes under suspicion, and the inference arises that the interests of public justice are less likely to be served than the interests of the applicant by the laying of a complaint. Moreover, a party who has been unsuccessful in a case should not remain indefinitely under the threat that an application for his prosecution may be filed; such a weapon is likely to be used for improper purposes. These considerations apply with most force when the application is not founded on materials to be found on the record of the trial, but on evidence of additional facts which the applicant alleges to be available. In such cases strict explanation of the reasons for the delay in making the application is necessary; otherwise it cannot be held that it is in the interests of justice to make a complaint—M. Mohamed Kaka v. District Judge, Bassein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 62 (64), 168 I.C. 632, 9 R.R. 359, 38 Cr.L.J. 615, 1937 Rang.L.R. 276. While, no doubt, a Court may properly hesitate to make a complaint on an application which is presented long after proceedings have ended and which is obviously not prompted by any other motive than personal grudge, there is nothing in the statute warranting the proposition that action under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is only to be taken before the close of the proceedings in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, or in strict continuation of them, or within any particular time after their termination. Nor is there justification for the view that only applications prompted by high motives are to be entertained—Jahan Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 698 (699), 176 I.C. 116, 11 R.L. 164, 40 P.L.R. 136, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 429. A delay of three months was considered too long—Maung Ba, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332). In Lalji Hari, 20 Cr.L.J. 226 (Pat.) a delay of three weeks was held to be too much under the circumstances of the case. In fact, each case would depend upon its own circumstances, so that no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to within what time a complaint should be made under sec. 476, and in view of the amendment made in this section and the enactment of the two new secs. 476A and 476B it is no longer necessary that the proceeding under sec. 476 should be taken immediately after the termination of the original proceeding. But, of course, a complaint made after the order further inquiry under sec. 436—Peary Lal v. Sagar Mal, 49 All. 230, 27 Cr.L.J. 1130.

If the complaint under this section is made without jurisdiction, the Magistrate to whom the case is sent is competent to dismiss the complaint—Kulandai v. Ramasami, (1911) 2 M.W.N. 431, 12 I.C. 644 (645). The Magistrate while dismissing the case and acquitting the accused, cannot direct compensation to be paid to the accused. Thus, where the decree-holder complained to the Civil Court of obstruction by the judgment-debtor under this section, and after the trial and acquittal of the accused the Magistrate ordered the decree-holder to pay compensation, it was held that the order was not valid, since the decree-holder was not the complainant. The real complainant was the Civil Court which directed the prosecution of the accused—Kishandas Hirachand, 14 Bom.L.R. 1166, 14 Cr.L.J. 1.

The Magistrate is competent to proceed against persons not named in the order of the Court directing the prosecution under this section. The Code provides for taking cognizance of offences and not of offenders, and a Magistrate who has legally taken cognizance of an offence on an order under sec. 476 has jurisdiction to proceed against any one who may be proved by the evidence to be concerned in the offence, whether he was mentioned in the order or not—Girdhari Lal, 21 C.W.N. 950, 18 Cr.L.J. 901; Waman, 43 Bom. 300; Ajaib Singh, 34 P.R. 1917, 18 Cr.L.J. 893 (895). See Note 614C.

Where the accused failed to place on record of the case sufficient material to satisfy the Magistrate that the preliminaries laid down by sec. 476 had not been complied with by the Court before filing the complaint, it cannot be presumed that the Court had not applied its mind to the case and that in filing the complaint he merely carried out the order of his superior officer—Moolchand, 34 Cr.L.J. 305 (307), 142 I.C. 74, 26 S.L.R. 105, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 37, 1933 Cr.C. 166, Ind. Rul. 1933 Sind 82.

1252. Limit of time for taking action:—This section does not limit the time within which action should be taken, and there is no necessity to proceed under this section immediately after the close of the original trial or proceeding in which the offence complained of is said to have been committed—Badri Singh, 19 A.L.J. 819, 22 Cr.L.J. 680, 63 I.C. 616 (617); Daman, 43 Bom. 300; Attar Singh, 1916 P.R. 29, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (339); Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (282); Talak Panday, 37 All. 344, 13 A.L.J. 466; Lakshmidas, 32 Bom 184 (190, 191), 7 Cr.L.J. 35, 10 Bom.L.R. 28; Jethamal v. Wadhmal, 7 S.L.R. 187, 15 Cr.L.J. 541; Jawala Parshad v. Ram Parshad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 526, distinguishing Ram Nath v. Emp., A.I.R. 1916 Lah. 259, 88 P.L.R. 1916, 17 Cr.L.J. 470 and Chothu Ram v. Emp., A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 316, 126 I.C. 794, 31 Cr.L.J. 1135. But still it is desirable that an order under this section should be made either at the close of the proceeding or so shortly thereafter that it may be reasonably said that the order is a part of the proceeding—Rahimatulla, 31 Mad 140, 7 Cr.L.J. 54, 17 M.L.J. 584 (F.B.); Yad Rau v. Risal, 5 I.C. 469, 7 A.L.J. 50, 11 Cr.L.J. 140; Abdul Qadir v. Muhammad Ibrahim Khan, 25 Cr.L.J. 119, 76 I.C. 183, A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 569; Sarat Chandra, 20 Cr.L.J. 184; Chowdhury Mean, 20 Cr.L.J. 286; Maung Ba Hla, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332) (Bur.); Aiyakannu, 32 Mad. 49, 9 Cr.L.J. 41, 4 M.L.T. 204. If the Court thinks that action should be taken under this section, it ought to pass such order at or immediately after the termination of the original trial (and should not delay it by several months)—Begu Singh, 34 Cal. 551 (556), 5 Cr.L.J. 398, 5 C.L.J. 508, 11 C.W.N. 568 (F.B.); Bhim Lal v. Bisu, 40 Cal. 444, 17 C.W.N. 290; Kashi Shukul, 38 All. 695; Subbaraya, 15 M.L.J. 489, 3 Cr.L.J. 118. See also Trailokya v. Radharanjan, 25 C.W.N. 886, 67 I.C. 204, 23 Cr.L.J. 380. In Bai Kasturbai v. Vanamaldas, 49 Bom. 710, A.I.R. 1925 Bom 436, 26 Cr.L.J. 1189, 27 Bom.L.R. 616, Crump, J. considered Begu Singh, supra, and after pointing out that it was overruled by Bahadur v. Eradatullah Mallick, 37 Cal. 642, 6 I.C. 801, 14 C.W.N. 799, he said: "It is also obvious from a reference to the section itself as it stood, and as it now stands, that the main grounds on which the decision rests are no longer in force. The learned Judges relied on the words "committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding" which are no longer to be found in the section." On the section as it now stands it is clear that the application need not be made in the course of the proceedings out of which it arises, or immediately thereafter, and the difference of opinion upon the former section is now immaterial. Whether the Court would accede to an application made long after the termination of the proceedings out of which it arises is a matter which would arise upon the merits and would no doubt depend upon all the circumstances—Bhagwandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co., 41 Cr.L.J. 526 (528), 187 I.C. 867, 1940 Bom. 403, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, 42 Bom.L.R. 231. But no hard and fast rule can be laid down that delay is a ground for setting aside an order for prosecution. It may, under certain circumstances, be almost a sufficient ground in itself, but in other cases it may be no ground at all. It is possible to imagine a case in which the commission of an alleged offence may not have actually come to light for many months or even years after it had been committed. But a prosecution for false complaint under sec. 211, I.P.C., should be ordered as soon as the complaint is dismissed as false, and not many months afterwards, because the facts justifying the prosecution are known to the Court at the time when the complaint is dismissed—Baldeo Prosad, 46 All. 851 (852); Sajjad Husain, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 113, 1934 O.L.R. 980, 153 I.C. 346, 1935 O.W.N. 29, 1935 Cr.C. 203. In some cases a Court might refuse to take proceedings on the ground that an application was unduly delayed, but that is a matter of discretion to be exercised in the circumstances of each case—Banke Lal v. Maiku, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 430, 35 Cr.L.J. 121, 146 I.C. 638, 1933 Cr.C. 1315, 10 O.W.N. 1037. Before exercising its jurisdiction to lay a complaint the Court should find, first, that it is in the interests of public justice that a complaint should be made, and secondly, that there is a reasonable probability of a conviction resulting from a complaint. In regard to the first point, although no time limit for the institution of such prosecutions is laid down in the section, it has been held by all the High Courts that prompt action is desirable, and the delay on the part of a party in making his application to move the Court to lay a complaint may, if unexplained, be fatal to the application. If the application is delayed, and the delay is not satisfactorily explained, evidence called in support thereof naturally comes under suspicion, and the inference arises that the interests of public justice are less likely to be served than the interests of the applicant by the laying of a complaint. Moreover, a party who has been unsuccessful in a case should not remain indefinitely under the threat that an application for his prosecution may be filed; such a weapon is likely to be used for improper purposes. These considerations apply with most force when the application is not founded on materials to be found on the record of the trial, but on evidence of additional facts which the applicant alleges to be available. In such cases strict explanation of the reasons for the delay in making the application is necessary; otherwise it cannot be held that it is in the interests of justice to make a complaint—M. Mohamed Kaka v. District Judge, Bassein, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 62 (64), 168 I.C. 632, 9 R.R. 359, 38 Cr.L.J. 615, 1937 Rang.L.R. 276. While, no doubt, a Court may properly hesitate to make a complaint on an application which is presented long after proceedings have ended and which is obviously not prompted by any other motive than personal grudge, there is nothing in the statute warranting the proposition that action under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is only to be taken before the close of the proceedings in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed, or in strict continuation of them, or within any particular time after their termination. Nor is there justification for the view that only applications prompted by high motives are to be entertained—Jahan Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 698 (699), 176 I.C. 116, 11 R.L. 164, 40 P.L.R. 136, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 429. A delay of three months was considered too long—Maung Ba, 18 Cr.L.J. 331 (332). In Lalji Hari, 20 Cr.L.J. 226 (Pat.) a delay of three weeks was held to be too much under the circumstances of the case. In fact, each case would depend upon its own circumstances, so that no hard and fast rule can be laid down as to within what time a complaint should be made under sec. 476, and in view of the amendment made in this section and the enactment of the two new secs. 476A and 476B it is no longer necessary that the proceeding under sec. 476 should be taken immediately after the termination of the original proceeding. But, of course, a complaint made after the lapse of a considerable time would be open to the objection that it was made after an undue delay—Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (282), 92 I.C. 456.

Where an appeal is preferred against the original case, the Court is justified in waiting till the disposal of the appeal, before directing a prosecution under this section—Attar Singh, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (338), 1916 P.R. 29; Gendan Singh, 3 C.L.J. 302; Shri Nana Maharaj, 16 Bom. 729; Mutty Lall, 6 Cal 308; Khan Muhammad, 4 Lah. 58. See sub-section (3).

Where proceedings for directing a prosecution are commenced in the course of a judicial proceeding or so soon thereafter as to make the former substantially a continuation of the latter, the final order directing the prosecution will not be vitiated by the fact that it was passed more than a year afterwards—Venkatasubbayya, 1919 M.W.N. 112, 20 Cr.L.J. 172, 49 I.C. 492. But the Court will set aside an order directing a prosecution if it is passed so long after the offence that the delay is oppressive or scandalous—Ibid.

1253. Revision:—Power of Sessions Judge :—A Sessions Judge has no power to interfere with an order under sec. 476, nor with a complaint under sec. 195 made by a Magistrate—Ankanna, 23 Mad. 205 (260); Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (45). If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order should be set aside, he should refer the matter to the High Court—Kanhu v. Natabar, 15 Cr.L.J. 1 (Cal); Arjun v. Bira, 15 Cr.L.J. 16 (17). It is the High Court which alone has the power to interfere with an order under sec. 476; a Sessions Judge has no such power—Gopal Barik, supra.

Power of High Court :—In Eranpoli Athan, 26 Mad. 98, it was held that the effect of the words "as if upon complaint made and recorded under sec. 200" was that the order under this section was merely a complaint and not an order, and, as such, was not subject to revision by the High Court. Whereas in various other cases it was laid down that these words did not mean that the proceedings of the Court directing prosecution were to be taken merely as a complaint and not as an order; the order of prosecution was, therefore, subject to revision—Ottupura Natayanam, 33 Mad. 48 (F.B.); Srinivasulu, 21 Mad. 124; Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 26 Bom. 785; Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (46); Chaudhuri Mahomed Isharul, 20 Cal. 349; Mathura Das, 16 All. 80. The decision in 26 Mad. 98 (supra) must be deemed as overruled by the Full Bench case of 33 Mad. 48. In Narakka, 13 Mad. 144, it was held that the High Court had no power to interfere on appeal with a complaint duly made by a Court under sec. 476, but the Judges indicated that they were of opinion that if sufficient cause were shown they might have interfered in revision. Further, it is the intention of the Legislature that an order under this section is subject to revision. This will be evident from the amendment made in 1923 to the effect that the Court shall record a finding "In order to give effect to our decision that proceedings under sec. 476 should be subject to revision we have introduced words which will make it necessary for the Court to record an order"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

1254. When High Court will interfere and when not:—Orders purporting to be made under this section are open to revision by the High Court when they have been made during proceedings held entirely without jurisdiction—Suryanarayana, 29 Mad. 100. When the Lower Court has proceeded upon merely fanciful grounds or grounds so obviously wrong that it could not be said to have formed a serious judicial opinion at all, then the High Court will interfere and set aside the order of the Court below—Alamdar, 23 All. 249, 1901 A.W.N. 59; Parshotamdas, 25 Bom.L.R. 282, 24 Cr.L.J. 359, A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 201; Abdul Husen, 9 N.L.R. 184, 15 Cr.L.J. 33 (34); but where the Lower Court has arrived at a judicial opinion on substantial grounds and the order shows that the Court has acted with circumspection and mature deliberation, the order should not be interfered with, merely because the High Court disagrees with that opinion—Alamdar, 23 All. 249; Mata Ratan v. Mahabir, 4 A.L.J. 803, 7 Cr.L.J. 1; Abdul Husen, supra; Daulat, 14 N.L.R. 16, 18 Cr.L.J. 1015 (1016). Where the undisputed and indisputable facts speak for themselves, and on those facts a responsible officer of the Government after obviously careful consideration, has sought to prosecute the petitioner in order to vindicate public justice, and the conditions laid down in sections 195 and 476 have been observed, mere technicalities should not be permitted to interfere with the course of justice—Ram Prasad, 37 Cal. 12 (21). The question whether a complaint should be made under sec. 476 is almost invariably a matter of discretion, and the High Court is always loath to interfere except in extraordinary cases—Ranjit Narain v Ram Bahadur, 5 Pat. 262, 7 P.L.T. 114, 27 Cr.L.J. 641; Hiralal, 33 Cr.L.J. 860, 139 I.C. 543, 13 P.L.T. 370, 1932 Cr.C. 640, A.I.R. 1932 Pat. 243, Ind. Rul. 1932 Pat. 245. See also Beyas Narain Singh v. Dasrath Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 838, 163 I.C. 451, 4 I.R. 1936 Pat. 382, 17 P.L.T. 276, 1936 Cr.C. 581. Ordinarily the High Court is reluctant to interfere with orders where the Courts below, after a consideration of the entire material on the record, have come to the conclusion that an offence has been committed, which it is desirable, in the interests of justice, to send for inquiry to a Magistrate—Nand Lal v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 867, 39 P.L.R. 812, 172 I.C. 942. If the trial Court or the Court to which it is subordinate thinks that no complaint should be made, then it is not desirable that the High Court should interfere—Somabhai v. Adibhai, 48 Bom. 401, 26 Bom.L.R. 289. Revision should be granted if there be some error of law, some irregularity, some abuse of or failure to exercise jurisdiction, and not simply because the Revisional Court has formed a different opinion from that of the Court below about the case—Ganda Singh v. Bisaki, 18 P.R. 1902, 73 P.L.R. 1902; Behari Lal Sud v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 204 (205), 185 I.C. 588, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 529, 41 P.L.R. 652. See also Dauood Rowther v. Abdul Kadar Rowther, 40 Cr.L.J. 312 (314), 179 I.C. 980, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 976, 48 M.L.W. 441, 1938 M.W.N. 1009, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 843. Where an order was made on insufficient grounds and no further action was taken by the Court for more than a year, it was held that this was a case in which the revisional powers of the High Court might properly be exercised and the order set aside—Zafim Singh, 1901 A.W.N. 177.

Formerly, when sec. 195 enabled a private person to obtain sanction to institute a prosecution, and when no appeal was provided for from an order by a Magistrate under sec. 476, it was sometimes desirable for the High Court to interfere in revision, because sanction was frequently used merely as a means of blackmail, and orders under sec. 476 were passed occasionally by inexperienced Magistrates. Now, after the change effected in 1923, the choice of instituting a prosecution is not placed in the hands of private persons, but is left to the Court, and the person who is the subject of the complaint has a definite right of appeal to a superior Court. This being the situation, it does not seem to be the function of the High Court, unless the circumstances are altogether outside the ordinary, to examine in revision the merits of the complaint with a view to discovering whether it is likely to result in a conviction. Moreover, when a Magistrate presiding over a Court and a responsible Court of Appeal are agreed that a prosecution is necessary in the interests of justice and in accordance with public policy, it would be extremely difficult for the High Court to interfere in revision and to declare that the prosecution is not in the interests of a public policy. Such a course is not even in the interests of the accused person as it deprives him of the only means of clearing his character which would otherwise remain affected by the fact of the complaint having been made and endorsed by the Court of appeal—Behram, 7 Lah. 108, 27 P.L.R. 314, 27 Cr.L.J. 776, 95 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 305; Kaloo Mal, 27 Cr.L.J. 1101, 95 I.C. 867; Behari Lal Sud v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 204 (205), 185 I.C. 588, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 529, 41 P.L.R. 652. In spite of the right of appeal given under sec. 476B to persons against whom an order is made or persons whose application for an order under s. 476 has been refused, matters under this section are not matters of private litigation between individual parties and should not be so treated. They are matters which affect the administration of public justice, and when a Court has decided to make a complaint in the public interest, a superior Court should be reluctant to interfere with such lapse of a considerable time would be open to the objection that it was made after an undue delay—Seshamma v. Venkamma, 22 L.W. 863, 27 Cr.L.J. 280 (282), 92 I.C. 456.

Where an appeal is preferred against the original case, the Court is justified in waiting till the disposal of the appeal, before directing a prosecution under this section—Attar Singh, 18 Cr.L.J. 337 (338), 1916 P.R. 29; Gendan Singh, 3 C.L.J. 302; Shri Nana Maharaj, 16 Bom. 729; Mutty Lall, 6 Cal. 308; Khan Muhammad, 4 Lah. 58. See sub-section (3).

Where proceedings for directing a prosecution are commenced in the course of a judicial proceeding or so soon thereafter as to make the former substantially a continuation of the latter, the final order directing the prosecution will not be vitiated by the fact that it was passed more than a year afterwards—Venkatasubbayya, 1919 M.W.N. 112, 20 Cr.L.J. 172, 49 I.C. 492. But the Court will set aside an order directing a prosecution if it is passed so long after the offence that the delay is oppressive or scandalous—Ibid.

1253. Revision:—Power of Sessions Judge :—A Sessions Judge has no power to interfere with an order under sec. 476, nor with a complaint under sec. 195 made by a Magistrate—Ankanna, 23 Mad. 205 (260); Gopal Barik, 34 Cal. 42 (45). If the Sessions Judge is of opinion that the order should be set aside, he should refer the matter to the High Court—Kanhu v. Natabar, 15 Cr.L.J. 1 (Cal.); Arjun v. Bira, 15 Cr.L.J. 16 (17). It is the High Court which alone has the power to interfere with an order under sec. 476; a Sessions Judge has no such power—Gopal Barik, supra.

Power of High Court .—In Eranpoli Athan, 26 Mad. 98, it was held that the effect of the words "as if upon complaint made and recorded under sec. 200" was that the order under this section was merely a complaint and not an order, and, as such, was not subject to revision by the High Court. The decision in 26 Mad. 98 (supra) must be deemed as overruled by the Full Bench case of 33 Mad. 48. Emp.*, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 867, 39 P.L.R. 812, 172 I.C. 942. If the trial Court or the Court to which it is subordinate thinks that no complaint should be made, then it is not desirable that the High Court should interfere—Somabhai v. Adibhai, 48 Bom. 401, 26 Bom.L.R. 289. Revision should be granted if there be some error of law, some irregularity, some abuse of or failure to exercise jurisdiction, and not simply because the Revisional Court has formed a different opinion from that of the Court below about the case—Ganda Singh v. Bisaki, 18 P.R. 1902, 73 P.L.R. 1902; Behari Lal Sud v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 204 (205), 185 I.C. 588, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 529, 41 P.L.R. 652. See also Dawood Rowther v. Abdul Kadar Rowther, 40 Cr.L.J. 312 (314), 179 I.C. 980, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 976, 48 M.L.W. 441, 1938 M.W.N. 1009, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 843. Where an order was made on insufficient grounds and no further action was taken by the Court for more than a year, it was held that this was a case in which the revisional powers of the High Court might properly be exercised and the order set aside—Zalim Singh, 1901 A.W.N. 177.

Formerly, when sec. 195 enabled a private person to obtain sanction to institute a prosecution, and when no appeal was provided for from an order by a Magistrate under sec. 476, it was sometimes desirable for the High Court to interfere in revision, because sanction was frequently used merely as a means of blackmail, and orders under sec. 476 were passed occasionally by inexperienced Magistrates. Now, after the change effected in 1923, the choice of instituting a prosecution is not placed in the hands of private persons, but is left to the Court, and the person who is the subject of the complaint has a definite right of appeal to a superior Court. This being the situation, it does not seem to be the function of the High Court, unless the circumstances are altogether outside the ordinary, to examine in revision the merits of the complaint with a view to discovering whether it is likely to result in a conviction. Moreover, when a Magistrate presiding over a Court and a responsible Court of Appeal are agreed that a prosecution is necessary in the interests of justice and in accordance with public policy, it would be extremely difficult for the High Court to interfere in revision and to declare that the prosecution is not in the interests of a public policy. Such a course is not even in the interests of the accused person as it deprives him of the only means of clearing his character which would otherwise remain affected by the fact of the complaint having been made and endorsed by the Court of appeal—Behram, 7 Lah. 108, 27 P.L.R. 314, 27 Cr.L.J. 776, 95 I.C. 312, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 305; Kaloo Mal, 27 Cr.L.J. 1101, 96 I.C. 867; Behari Lal Sud v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 204 (205), 185 I.C. 588, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 529, 41 P.L.R. 652. In spite of the right of appeal given under sec. 476B to persons against whom an order is made or persons whose application for an order under s. 476 has been refused, matters under this section are not matters of private litigation between individual parties and should not be so treated. They are matters which affect the administration of public justice, and when a Court has decided to make a complaint in the public interest, a superior Court should be reluctant to interfere with such exercise of discretion—Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, 34 C.W.N. 914 (923), 1930 Cr.C. 1129, 52 C.L.J. 87.

Revision of proceedings of Civil and Revenue Courts:—When a Munsiff or Sub-Judge or District Judge takes proceeding under this section, he acts as a Civil Court, and the proceedings cannot be interfered with by a Criminal Bench of the High Court in Revision under sec. 439. The power of revision under secs. 435-439 is confined to records of inferior Criminal Courts. When an order is passed by a Civil Court making or refusing to make a complaint under this section, the High Court can interfere only under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, or sec. 15 of the High Courts Act or sec. 107, Government of India Act—Har Prasad, 40 Cal. 477, 17 C.W.N. 647, 14 Cr.L.J. 197, 17 C.L.J. 245, 19 I.C. 197 (F.B.); Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, 52 C.L.J. 87, 129 I.C. 561, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 721, 58 Cal. 374, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 209, 34 C.W.N. 914 (916), 1930 Cr.C. 1129; Surendra Nath v. Mutu Kurpan, 10 Bur.L.T. 32, 17 Cr.L.J. 316 (317); Ko Maung v. Ma, 10 Bur.L.T. 13, 18 Cr.L.J. 121; Bismilla v. Shakir Ali, 4 Luck. 155; Kartmulla v. Sheo Ram, 49 All. 536; Ejaz Ali Khan, 24 O.C. 367; Nawab Ali v. Madhuri, 3 O.W.N. 905, 28 Cr.L.J. 16; Thakur Das, 17 O.C. 25 (31), 15 Cr.L.J. 217 (219); Sheopal v. Mahendra, 35 Cr.L.J. 432, 147 I.C. 535, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 55; Shiva Prasad v. Pahlad Singh, A.I.R. 1935 All. 696, 1935 A.W.R. (H.C.) 792, 1935 A.L.J. 943. If the Civil Court (e.g., Munsiff) refuses to institute a prosecution under this section, and this order of refusal is upheld by the Civil Appellate Court (e.g., Subordinate Judge), the High Court cannot interfere with the appellate order under sec. 439 of this Code but can do so only under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code—Nawab Ali v. Madhuri, supra. An order of the Small Cause Court under sec. 476 of the Code directing a prosecution for perjury can be interfered with only under sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act—Valab Das v. Maung Ba Than, 1 Rang. 372.

Similarly, the High Court has no power in revision to interfere with an order passed by a Revenue Court under this section; the application for revision should be filed before the Board of Revenue—Abdool Raof, 4 A.L.J. 701, 6 Cr.L.J. 350; Asharfi Lal, 39 All. 91; Pandit Ganga Sahai, 15 Cr.L.J. 2 (Oudh); Nataraja Iyer, 36 Mad. 72 (per Sundara Ayyar, J.); Raghunadha v. Govinda, 55 M.L.J. 798, 114 I.C. 161, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1032, Ind. Rul. 1929 Mad. 225 (F.B.). But see Rajah of Mandasa v. Jagannayakalu, 63 M.L.J. 450, 140 I.C. 331, A.I.R. 1932 Mad. 612, 1932 M.W.N. 350, 36 M.L.W. 292, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 859, 55 Mad. 883 (F.B.), where doubts were cast on the correctness of the decision in Raghunadha v. Govinda, supra.

In some cases, however, the High Court, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under secs. 435 and 439, interfered with an order of a Civil Court directing a prosecution under this section—Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 26 Bom. 785 (789); Mathura Das, 16 All. 80 (81); Bishan Singh v. Amritsari, 1908 P.R. 5, 7 Cr.L.J. 281 (286), 103 P.L.R. 1908 (F.B.); Hari Ram, 116 I.C. 711, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 676, 11 Lah.L.J. 103, 30 P.L.R. 392, 30 Cr.L.J. 666, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 567; Lachman, 32 Cr.L.J. 647, 131 I.C. 216, 32 P.L.R. 46, 1931 Cr.C. 169, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 105.

See Note 1255 & Note 1257 under the heading "Revision of order under this section."

1255. Sec. 115, C. P. Code, and Sec. 439, Cr. P. Code, compared:—If an order under sec. 476 (or under sec. 476A or 476B) is passed by a Criminal Court, the application for revision lies under sec. 439 of this Code; whereas in case of an order under sec. 476 (or 476A or 476B) passed by a Civil Court, the application for revision will lie on the civil side of the High Court, under sec. 115 of the C. P. Code. The High Court's powers of revision under the two sections are different. Section 439 of this Code enables the High Court to call for the records of an inferior Criminal Court in order to satisfy itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of an order passed by such Court; i.e., the High Court has power to interfere whenever it finds the order to be incorrect, illegal or improper. But its power under sec. 115, C. P. Code is narrower, and can be exercised only where the lower Court has failed to exercise its jurisdiction or has exceeded its jurisdiction or has exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with irregularity. If the Civil Court has properly exercised its jurisdiction in making a complaint under sec. 476 or 476A or 476B, the High Court has no power to interfere under sec. 115, Civil Procedure Code, even though the complaint is based on a faulty application of the facts or on a faulty view of the law or is based on insufficient grounds or on wrong grounds—Abdul Haq v. Sheo Ram, 49 All. 536, 25 A.L.J. 569, 28 Cr.L.J. 296; Purna Chandra v. Shaikh Dhalu, 34 C.W.N. 914 (916), 1930 Cr.C. 1129, 58 Cal. 374, 32 Cr.L.J. 377, 52 C.L.J. 87, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 721, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 209. In the Allahabad case, Ashworth, J., has suggested that some amendment of the law is necessary to give larger powers to the High Court under sec. 115, C. P. Code.

See Note 1257 under the headings "Procedure in appeal" and "Revision of order under this section".

1255A. Review:—If the Court at first refuses to make a complaint under this section, it cannot subsequently make a complaint, because the subsequent order would amount to a review of the first order of refusal—Kulandi v. Ramaswami, (1911) M.W.N. 431, 12 I.C. 644 (645). This Code generally makes no provision for a review. In view of an appeal being now allowed by sec. 476B, it is undesirable that a Court should review its order refusing to make a complaint—Ram Prosad, 49 All. 752, 28 Cr.L.J. 543, 25 A.L.J. 639. But see Jagat Ram v. Emp., in Note 1259; Kunjo Chaudhry, 39 Cr.L.J. 353 (356), 16 Pat. 650, 19 P.L.T. 21, 1938 P.W.N. 41, 173 I.C. 742, 4 B.R. 332, 10 R.P. 443, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 99; and Vithoo Raghaji v. Emp., in Note 1257. See also Notes 634B and 1248A.

Costs:—Courts have jurisdiction to award costs to one party or the other only where the parties are the same as in the civil litigation; but if a Magistrate makes an application to a Munsif to make a complaint in respect of a forgery committed in a civil suit decided by the Munsif, and that application is dismissed, the Munsif cannot award costs against the Magistrate, as the latter was not a party to the civil suit—Behari Lal, 51 All. 338, 27 A.L.J. 62, A.I.R. 1928 All. 588 (590), 114 I.C. 741, 1929 A.L.J. 62, Ind. Rul. 1929 All. 277. The Bombay High Court has also held that in proceedings under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., the Court acts as a Civil Court, and that the Civil Court would have jurisdiction to award costs to one or the other party where the parties were the same as those in the civil litigation. An application under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., being in the nature of a civil application the Court has full jurisdiction to award costs—Bhagandas Narandas v. D. D. Patel & Co. 41 Cr.L.J. 526 (531), 187 I.C. 867, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 131, 42 Bom.L.R. 231, I.L.R. 1940 Bom. 403.

See Note 634B.

476A. The power conferred on Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts by section 476, sub-section (1) may be exercised, in respect of any offence referred to therein and alleged to have been committed in or in relation to any proceeding in any such Court, by the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of section 195, sub-section (3), in any case in which such former Court has neither made a complaint under section 476 in respect of such offence

Superior Court may complain where subordinate Court has omitted to do so.

nor rejected an application for the making of such complaint; and, where the superior Court makes such complaint, the provisions of section 476 shall apply accordingly.

Where an application under sec. 476 is pending before the original Court (in which the offence has been committed) for a very long time, and has not been rejected by that Court, there is no objection to the superior Court taking such action as could be taken by the original Court under sec. 476—Ramdas, 26 Bom.L.R. 713, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 511 (512), 25 Cr.L.J. 1287. But the superior Court should not interpose soon after an application under sec. 476 has been made to the original Court, and is pending in that Court. The superior Court should allow the original Court to conclude the proceeding—Rajdhari v. Rameshwar, 49 All. 460, A.I.R. 1927 All. 469 (470). Where a person instituted a false case before a Bench of (2nd or 3rd class) Honorary Magistrates, but they took no action against that person, the District Magistrate could order the prosecution of that person under this section—Moti Ram, 26 Cr.L.J. 566 (567), 85 I.C. 710, A.I.R. 1925 All. 410. If a false charge is made by a person before a Magistrate of the 1st class, who takes no action under sec. 476, a complaint against that person under sec. 211, I. P. Code should be made by the Sessions Judge and not by the District Magistrate, since the 1st class Magistrate is subordinate to the Sessions Judge and not to the District Magistrate. If the District Magistrate makes the complaint, it is ultra vires, but that does not prevent the Sessions Judge from making a complaint on his own initiative—Gulab, 26 Cr.L.J. 923 (924), 86 I.C. 987, A.I.R. 1925 All. 667.

Section 476A must be distinguished from sec. 476B. If the subordinate Court has neither made a complaint nor rejected an application for the making of a complaint under sec. 476, then the superior Court can take action and make a complaint under sec. 476A. But where the subordinate Court has rejected an application for the making of a complaint, then the procedure which is contemplated by this Code is by way of an appeal to the superior Court under sec. 476B—Chandra Kumar v. Mathuriya, 52 Cal. 1009, 29 C.W.N. 1035, 26 Cr.L.J. 1569 (1570). See also Jahan Khan v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 698, 176 I.C. 116, 11 R.L. 164, 40 P.L.R. 136, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 429, where it has also been held that the Court is not concerned with the reasons for which the application was dismissed (so long as the procedure was regular) and had it been the intention of the legislation that 'rejection' in sec. 476A, Cr. P. C., should not include rejection on the ground that the complainant did not appear to prosecute the application as he ought to have done, it would presumably have made this clear. See Note 1248A.

The word "rejected" means rejected after consideration on the merits; merely to allow the application to be withdrawn without consideration of the merits does not amount to rejection—Vasudermal, 23 S.L.R. 29, 37 Cr.L.J. 1051, 112 I.C. 475, 11 A.I.Cr.R. 360.

Where an appeal against the order of a Munsif refusing to make a complaint was preferred, under sec. 476B, to the District Judge who transferred it to the Subordinate Judge and the latter dismissed the appeal on the ground of limitation but decided to take action suo motu under this section, held that the Subordinate Judge was not the Court to which appeals from orders of the Munsif ordinarily lay, and, therefore, he was not authorised under this section to make a complaint—Fauzdar v. Narendranath, 35 Cr.L.J. 1061, 150 I.C. 239, 15 P.L.T. 303, A.I.R. 1934 Pat. 366.

The Deputy Commissioner in the exercise of his powers as superior Court under this section has authority to direct a complaint being made in respect of an offence committed in the course of mutation proceedings in the Court of a Tahsildar who is subordinate to him when dealing with a mutation case—Sajjad Husain, 36 Cr L.J. 319, 153 I.C. 346, 1935 O.W.N. 28.

Under this section the power, which a Subordinate Judge as Election Commissioner could have exercised under sec. 476, is exercisable by the Court to which he is subordinate within the meaning of sec. 195, sub-sec. (3), i.e., by the District Judge as the principal Court having ordinary original civil jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Election Court was situate—Mahabalaswarappa v. Gopalaswami, A.I.R. 1935 Mad 673 (679), 1935 M.W.N. 152, 41 M.L.W. 503, 156 I.C. 311, 36 Cr.L.J. 895, 58 Mad. 954.

Where a Subordinate Judge is alleged to have abetted an offence under sec. 193, I. P. C., in course of a suit in his Court and the District Judge as superior Court has transferred the suit to senior Subordinate Judge but has retained the proceedings under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., to himself, the effect of this order is to take away the power of senior Subordinate Judge to make complaint and hence the latter Court's order refusing to make complaint on the ground of lack of jurisdiction is right. The District Judge as a superior Court has jurisdiction to deal with the matter under this section—Behari Lal v. Abdul Qadir, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 292 (298), 41 Cr.L.J. 843, 190 I.C. 178.

There is no rule having the force of law which requires a power of attorney to be filed with an appeal from an order on a petition under this section—Harcharan v. Kupa, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 677, 36 Cr L.J. 1485, 158 I.C. 1005, 1935 Cr.C. 1039.

See Note 631.

476B. Any person on whose application any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court has refused to make a complaint under section 476 or section 476A, or against whom such a complaint has been made, may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of section 195, sub-section (3), and the superior Court may thereupon, after notice to the parties concerned, direct the withdrawal of the complaint or, as the case may be, itself make the complaint which the subordinate Court might have made under section 476, and if it makes such complaint, the provisions of that section shall apply accordingly.

Appeals.

This section has been added by section 128 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Under the old law, when an application was made to a Munsiff asking him to take action under sec. 476, and the Munsiff refused to do so, it was held that no appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Munsiff—Bhagirathi v. Suraj Mal, 12 A.L.J. 684, 15 Cr L.J. 575. This ruling is now rendered obsolete by the present section.

1257. Scope:—This section cannot have any application to a case where the complaint was not made under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., but under sec. 70 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920)—Madan Mohan Sarkar v. Emp. 40 Cr L.J. 335 (336), 180 I.C. 237, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 264, I.L.R. (1938) 2 Cal 478, 42 C.W.N. 787.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Session only arises under this section when a Court subordinate to it has directed the filing of a complaint or refused to make a complaint under sec. 476 or 476A, Cr. P. Code. When the Subordinate Court passed no such order, the Court of Session has no jurisdiction to take action under this section—Wajid Ali, 35 Cr L.J. 824, 148 I.C. 1075, 8 Luck. 633, 11 O.W.N. 490, 1934 Cr.C. 1015, A.I.R. 1934 Oudh 344.

A person who has made no application for action being taken under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., has no right of appeal under this section—Narotam Das v. Bhagawan Das, A.I.R. 1939 All 79 (80), 179 I.C. 673, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 747, 1938 A.L.J. 1196.

When an application is dismissed for default, there is no sanction (now complaint) given or refused by the Court and no appeal lies. The only jurisdiction which the superior Court has under the circumstances is to revise the order dismissing the application as for default—Gopal Siddeshwar, 32 Bom 203 (205). This section gives an appeal against a refusal to make a complaint, not against a dismissal for default, an order which does not seem to have been contemplated by the law—Jawala Parshad v. Ram Parshad, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 526.

When a complaint, under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is made against several persons, each of them ought to prefer a separate appeal—Maromma, 34 Cr.L.J. 92, 1933 M.Cr.C. 25, 140 I.C. 756, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 125, 1933 Cr.C. 157, 1933 M.W.N. 100, Ind. Rul. 1933 Mad 43.

The remedy open to a person aggrieved by a complaint made under sec. 476 should be limited to an appeal under sec. 476B and it is not permissible to call the complaint in question in the course of an appeal against conviction—Ali Ahmed, 55 C.L.J. 336, 1932 Cr.C. 545, 34 Cr.L.J. 39, 140 I.C. 544, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 545, 1932 Cr.C. 545, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 11; Jabbar Ali, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 203, 49 C.L.J. 193, 116 I.C. 632, 30 Cr.L.J. 656; U Kadoo, 37 Cr.L.J. 1008, 164 I.C. 769, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 369, 1936 Cr.C. 771; Kunjo Chaudhry v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 353 (356), 173 I.C. 742, 16 Pat. 650, 19 P.L.T. 21, 1938 P.W.N. 41, 4 B.R. 332, 10 R.P. 443, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 99; *Vithoo Raghoji v. This section applies where a complaint has been made under sec. 476, which again refers to offences under clauses (b) and (c) of sec. 195. An offence under sec. 174 or 182, I. P. Code, falls under clause (a) of sec. 195 and is, therefore, not an offence for which the Court can make a complaint under sec. 476. So, an order of a Magistrate or District Judge (as a public servant) making a complaint for an offence under sec. 174 or 182, I. P. Code is not appealable under sec. 476B—P. J. Money, 6 Rang. 529, 29 Cr.L.J. 812; Brijendra, 28 Cr.L.J. 547, 102 I.C. 483, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 55, A.I.R. 1927 All. 828; Yusuf Ali v. Lachmi, A.I.R. 1931 All. 630, 53 All. 594, 1931 A.L.J. 366, 132 I.C. 419, 1931 Cr.C. 926. See also Bajrang Marwari v. Durga Prasad, A.I.R. 1937 Pat. 31, 17 P.L.T. 747, 1936 P.W.N. 747, 166 I.C. 870, 38 Cr.L.J. 292. But the Appellate Court can withdraw the complaint under sec. 195 (5)—Brijendra, supra. See Note 634A.

An appeal lies under this section against an order passed by a Court making a complaint under sec. 476 even where the order was passed suo motu and not on the application of any person—Numberumal v. Nainiappa, 59 M.L.J. 850, 32 Cr.L.J. 200 (201), 54 Mad. 331, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 16, 32 M.L.W. 513, 1930 M.W.N. 991, 128 I.C. 719 (dissenting from Sattos, 30 Cr.L.J. 163, 113 I.C. 537, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 9, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 185); Prabhu Dayal, 31 P.L.R. 153, 32 Cr.L.J. 30; Thiraj, 11 Lah. 55, 30 Cr.L.J. 1019 (1024), 119 I.C. 265, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 641, 1929 Cr.C. 205, 31 P.L.R. 464, 1929 Ind. Rul. 857; Ram Prasad, 52 All. 79, 120 I.C. 113, A.I.R. 1929 All. 899, 1929 Cr.C. 491, 1930 A.L.J. 203, Ind. Rul. 1930 All. 1; Mester Zoda, 37 Cr.L.J. 1043, 164 I.C. 1057, A.I.R. 1936 Lah. 828, 38 P.L.R. 16, 1936 Cr.C. 796.

This section is not intended to be exhaustive, but provides powers supplementary to those which are given in Chapter XXXI—Surendra v. Susil, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 604, 35 C.W.N. 775, 59 Cal. 68, 1931 Cr.C. 756, 134 I.C. 1063, 33 Cr.L.J. 38.

Death of appellant:—The right of appeal under this section does not survive on the death of the appellant before hearing; the appeal abates—Nihal v. Ramji, 47, All. 359, 26 Cr.L.J. 1008, A.I.R. 1925 All. 620.

Time of filing appeal:—An appeal cannot be filed until a complaint has actually been made—Bal Govind, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 199, 36 Cr.L.J. 1371, 158 I.C. 496, 1935 Cr.C. 1096.

To which Court appeal will lie:—The appeal will lie to the Court to which the trial Court is subordinate. For the meaning of the term 'subordinate' see Note 631 under sec. 195.

This section indicates with sufficient clearness that the Court to which the appeal lies is one to which the Court making or filing the complaint is subordinate; in other words, if it is a Civil Court which has made an order under s. 476, the appeal against such an order must lie to and be heard by the authority or tribunal to which such Civil Court is subordinate. Thus, if the order is made by a Munsif, the appeal would lie to the District Judge (i.e., the Appellate Court exercising Civil appellate jurisdiction)—Nasaruddin, 53 Cal. 827, 99 I.C. 124, 28 Cr.L.J. 92 (93). A mere mistake of the office in putting the appeal under the list of criminal cases, instead of in the list of civil cases, is not material. Thus, where an appeal from an order of a Munsiff was preferred to the District Judge of Meerut, but the clerk of the office made the mistake of heading the proceedings as "in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Meerut," and gave a number of criminal appeal, but the Dist. Judge signed as "Dist. Judge" (and not as Sessions Judge), held that the mistake of the office was immaterial and did not affect the proceedings, as the Judge really acted as District Judge and not as Sessions Judge—Hikmatullah v. Sakina, 53 All. 416, 32 Cr.L.J. 367 (368). An appeal under this section from an order of an Assistant Sessions Judge lies to the Court of Session and not to the High Court—Nagendra, 34 Cr.L.J. 628, 143 I.C. 703, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 192, 37 C.W.N. 192, 1933 Cr.C. 243, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 464, 60 Cal. 596. See Note 631.

Procedure in appeal:—An appeal under sec. 476B, from the order of a subordinate Civil Court (Sub-Judge) to a superior Civil Court (District Judge) must be dealt with as a miscellaneous Civil appeal regulated by the procedure of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code—Hamid Ali v. Madhusudan, 54 Cal. 355, 31 C.W.N. 281 (per Duval, J., Chotzner, J., contra); Nasaruddin, 53 Cal. 827, 99 I.C. 124, 28 Cr.L.J. 82 (93); Mahendra, 49 C.L.J. 374, 1929 Cr.C. 54 (55), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 428. In a later Calcutta case also, it has been said that applications originating in Civil Courts must be dealt with according to the provisions of the C. P. Code, and, therefore, the District Judge, on appeal, can remand the case for further inquiry under O. XLI, C. P. Code—Surendra Nath v. Susil, 35 C.W.N. 775 (777), 1931 Cr.C. 756, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 604, 134 I.C. 1063, 59 Cal. 68. But it has also been stated in this case that the provisions of Cr. P. Code under Chapter XXXI may also apply to matters arising under secs. 476, 476A, 476B, and, therefore, the order of remand may come under sec. 423 (1) (b) and (c) of this Code. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has followed the view adopted in this Calcutta case—Janardana v. Lakshmi, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 52, 38 M.L.W. 940, 65 M.L.J. 873, 1934 Cr.C. 52, 57 Mad. 177, 6 R.M. 330, 1933 M.W.N. 1476, 35 Cr.L.J. 392, 147 I.C. 351 (F.B.). The Nagpur High Court has also followed the view taken in Nasiruddin Khan, supra, and has held that the Appellate Court hearing an appeal from an order of a Civil Court under this section has powers conferred on him by O. 41, Civil P. C., and under rule 27 of that order he is entitled to take further evidence if he requires that evidence in order to enable him to decide the case—Bholanath v. Achheram, A.I.R. 1937 Nag. 91, 169 I.C. 816, 10 R.N. 20. But a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court has held that the procedure of an appeal under this section must be governed by the Criminal Procedure Code, irrespective of whether the trial Court be a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court. The Appellate Court cannot make a remand to the trial Court—Dhanpat Rai v. Balak Ram, 13 Lah. 342, 1931 Cr.C. 1065 (1066), A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 761, 135 I.C. 594, 33 Cr.L.J. 178, 33 P.L.R. 558 (F.B.). The Oudh Chief Court and the Bombay and Rangoon High Courts have followed this view in Mendi Lal v. Ram Adhin, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 59, 158 I.C. 104, 11 O.W.N. 1469, 1934 O.L.R. 949, 10 Luck. 335, 1935 Cr.C. 113, 36 Cr.L.J. 254; Bhatu Sadu Mali, 39 Cr.L.J. 495 (497), I.L.R. 1938 Bom. 331, 174 I.C. 780, 10 R.B. 495, 40 Bom.L.R. 297,

A.I.R. 1938 Bom. 225 (F.B.), and Abdul Hussain v. Mohamed Ibrahim, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 526 respectively. The Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has also held that a Court hearing an appeal under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., has no jurisdiction to return the case to the Magistrate with direction to take evidence and then to dispose of the matter afresh. It is, however, open to the Appellate Court when it finds that the Subordinate Court has not made a proper enquiry to report the matter to the High Court on its revisional side and in such special cases the High Court can pass any orders that it considers just and fit. By enacting sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., the Legislature did not intend to confer on the Appellate Court the powers conferred by secs. 423 and 428, Cr. P. Code—Manni Lal v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 561 (566), I.L.R. 1937 All. 517, 168 I.C. 434, 1937 A.W.R. (H.C.) 290, 9 R.A. 639, 1937 A.Cr.C. 94, 1937 A.L.R. 360, 1937 A.L.J. 192, A.I.R. 1937 All. 305 (F.B.). But in recent Calcutta, Madras, Nagpur and Patna cases it has been held that appeals under this section are subject to all the provisions applicable to criminal appeals laid down in section 419 and the following sections. Consequently, such an appeal can be summarily disposed of by the District Magistrate under section 421—Mahomed Boyatulla, 34 C.W.N. 923, 32 Cr.L.J. 325, 1931 Cr.C. 35, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 3, 58 Cal 402, 129 I.C. 317; Baidyanath Giri, 12 P.L.T. 336, 32 Cr.L.J. 735 (736); Krishnamachari, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 767, 1933 M.W.N. 902, 65 M.L.J. 534, 38 M.L.W. 564, 1933 Cr.C. 1373, 147 I.C. 794; Surendra Nath v. Susil, 35 C.W.N. 776, 59 Cal. 68, 134 I.C. 1063, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 604, 1931 Cr.C. 756, 33 Cr.L.J. 38, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 23; Kunjo Chaudhry v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 353 (356), 173 I.C. 742, 16 Pat. 650, 19 P.L.T. 21, 1938 P.W.N. 41, 4 B.R. 332, 10 R.P. 443, A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 99; Vithoo Raghoji v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 487 (489), 1938 N.L.J. 285, 40 Cr.L.J. 388, 180 I.C. 577; and the Appellate has also a power of remand—Krishnamachari, supra; Vithoo Raghoji v. Emp., supra; Surendra Nath v. Susil, supra; Kunjo Chaudhry v. Emp., supra. The jurisdiction that is exercised by a Court in filing a complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is a jurisdiction exercised under the Cr. P. C. and is therefore of a criminal nature. There is no rule that everything done by a Civil Court should be regarded as being of a civil nature. The order of the Court which is challenged in a superior Court is an order passed in exercise of criminal jurisdiction; the right of appeal is also provided by another provision in the Cr. P. Code. Therefore appeals from orders, under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., of Civil Courts including revisions preferred from appellate orders made under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., are proceedings of a criminal nature and should therefore be filed on the criminal side of the High Court and not on the civil side—D. S. Raju Gupta, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 472, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 439, 1939 M.W.N. 243, 49 M.L.W. 330, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 480. But see Kumaravel Nadar v. Shanmuga Nadar, under the heading "Revision of order under this section" in this Note. See also Sarat Chandra v. Hari Charan, 51 C.L.J. 45 (49).

The Appellate Court has no power to take any additional evidence under sec. 428, for that section applies only to an appeal under Chap. XXXI, and not to an appeal under sec. 476B—Sami Vannia v. Periaswami, 51 Mad. 603, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 391, 29 Cr.L.J. 445; Dhanpat Rai v. Balak Ram, supra. See also Seeniah v. Abdul, A.I.R. 1930 Mad. 483, 53 Mad. 688, 1930 Cr.C. 507, 58 M.L.J. 414, 31 M.L.W. 524, 123 I.C. 809, 31 Cr.L.J. 602, 1930 M.W.N. 534. But the Sind Court and the Allahabad High Court have taken a contrary view—Ramchand v. Lilaram, 25 S.L.R. 68, 1931 Cr.C. 733, 134 I.C. 1007, A.I.R. 1931 Sind 115, Ind. Rul. 1931 Sind 159; Rahamatulla v. Emp., 32 I.C. 157; Jagrup Shukul, 40 All. 21 (24), A.I.R. 1918 All 332, 42 I.C. 915, 19 Cr.L.J. 4, 15 A.L.J. 844; Manni Lal v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 561 (566), 168 I.C. 434, I.L.R. 1937 All. 517, 1937 A.W.R. 290, 9 R.A. 639, 1937 A.Cr.C. 94, 1937 A.L.R. 360, 1937 A.L.J. 192, A.I.R. 1937 All. 305 (F.B.), where it has been laid down that there certainly is nothing in the language of sec. 510, Cr. P. C., which would prevent an Appellate Court hearing an appeal under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., from examining a witness under that section. See also Abdul Hussain v. Mohamed Ibrahim, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 526.

Itself make the complaint:—If the Appellate Court accepts an appeal against an order refusing to make a complaint, it would itself make the complaint; an order directing the subordinate Court to file a complaint is illegal—Manir Ahmed v. Jogesh, 55 Cal. 1277, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 195, 115 I.C. 36; Kuppuswami v. Sathiapria, 1931 M.W.N. 713, 134 I.C. 1216, 1931 Cr.C. 928, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 768, 33 Cr.L.J. 51.

The Nagpur High Court has taken a different view. It has held that whatever the powers of an Appellate Court are to remand a case when an appeal has been filed before it under sec. 476B, Cr. P. C., the powers of a Court to lay a complaint in respect of an offence committed before it, remain unimpaired. There is no reason why a Court, after having declined to accede to a petition that it should lay a complaint, is debarred from laying one suo motu if, on a further consideration, it finds, whether such conclusion is reached on a further study of the facts or on an elucidation by a higher tribunal, that there is really a case for making a complaint—Vithoo Raghon v. Emp., A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 487 (489), 1938 N.L.J. 285, 40 Cr.L.J. 388, 180 I.C. 577.

Limitation:—For the purposes of limitation, an appeal under this section is an "appeal under the Criminal Procedure Code within the meaning of Articles 154 and 155, and not an "appeal under the Civil Procedure Code" under Article 152 or 156. See Chandra Kumar v. Mathuria, 52 Cal. 1009, 29 C.W.N. 1035, 26 Cr.L.J. 1569; Rajani v. Bistoo, 46 Cr.L.J. 40, 104 I.C. 456, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 718, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 433, 28 Cr.L.J. 840 (841); Shco Prasad v. Shco Bans, 24 A.L.J. 358, A.I.R. 1926 All. 211 (212); Kandaswami v. Thirunavukarasu, 1931 M.W.N. 1064; Harcharan v. Kirpa, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 677, following Dhanpat v. Balak, 13 Lah. 312, 1931 Cr.C. 1065, 135 I.C. 594, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 761; Daulat Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal, 47 All. 462.

The limitation must be held to run from the date of the complaint, for the words of the section make it clear that it is only on the refusal to make a complaint or on a complaint being made that an appeal is possible. But for this it would undoubtedly be open to argument that time ran from the date of the finding and order that a complaint should be made—Ramjan Ali v. Moohi Seeka, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 521 (523), 33 C.W.N. 329, 118 I.C. 889, 56 Cal. 932, 30 Cr.L.J. 974, 1929 C.C. 184; Fitzhollmes, 7 Lah. 77, A.L.R. 1927 Lah. 54, 98 I.C. 393, 27 Cr.L.J. 1321, 28 P.L.R. 232; Daga Devji Patil, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 64, 52 Bom. 164, 108 I.C. 26, 29 Cr.L.J. 315, 30 Bom.L.R. 76; Bal Govind, A.I.R. 1935 Nag. 199, 35 Cr.L.J. 1371, 158 I.C. 496, 1935 Cr.C. 1096.

Extension of the period of limitation:—Where the appellant was not given any opportunity of showing cause why the complaint should not be made against him, he knew nothing about the matter until he received a summons from the Court to appear and answer a charge upon a complaint made against him and as soon as he did this he applied for a copy of the order of the Magistrate and by that time his appeal was out of time because more than thirty days had elapsed, clearly this is a case where the delay should be condoned because in the ordinary way the accused person would have received some notice if such a complaint was to be made against him to appear before the Magistrate and show cause why the complaint should not be made against him—Radhakrishnan G. Kesuani v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 449, 180 I.C. 436, A.I.R. 1939 Sind. 78, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 648, 11 R.S. 178.

Transfer of appeal:—An appeal made to the District Judge may be transferred by him to the Additional District Judge, and as the latter is competent to discharge any of the functions of a District Judge, under sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), the Additional Judge can make a complaint under this section—Nara n Das, 49 All. 792, 102 I.C. 485, 25 A.L.J. 559, 7 A.I.Cr.R. 534, A.I.R. 1927 All. 555, 28 Cr.L.J. 549 (552); Lal Muhammad, 57 Cal. 831, 34 C.W.N. 80, 31 Cr.L.J. 921 (922), A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 361 distinguishing *Ram Charan v. See also Karimulla v. Rameshwar, 51 All. 344, 1929 A.L.J. 55, 111 I.C. 595, 12 A.I.Cr.R. 199, A.I.R. 1929 All. 774. In an Oudh case, it has been held that under the provisions of sec. 40 of the Oudh Courts Act, an appeal made under this section to a District Judge from the order of a Munsif refusing to make a complaint cannot be transferred to a Subordinate Judge—Bismilla v. Sakhr Ali, 4 Luck. 155, 30 Cr.L.J. 382 (384), 114 I.C. 812, 5 O.W.N. 882, A.L.R. 1928 Oudh 494, Ind. Rul. 1929 Oudh 204. A similar view has been taken by the Patna High Court following Ram Charan v. Tariqulla, supra, and distinguishing Ram Chandra, 117 I.C. 878, 8 Pat. 428, A.L.R. 1929 Pat. 367, 30 Cr.L.J. 834 and Dinanath v. Muhammad Abdulla, 61 I.C. 53, 2 Lah. 57, 22 Cr.L.J. 325 on the ground that in these two cases notifications had been issued directing that certain appeals from the decision of Munsif should be preferred to the Subordinate Judge—Dulari v. Fauzdar, 34 Cr.L.J. 410, 142 I.C. 621, 14 P.L.T. 131, Ind. Rul. 1933 Pat. 161, A.L.R. 1933 Pat. 179, 1933 Cr.C. 510. See also Fauzdar v. Budhan, 36 Cr.L.J. 1231, 57 All. 785, 157 I.C. 901, A.L.R. 1935 All. 440, 1935 A.L.J. 473, 1935 Cr.C. 531; Mehdi Hasan, 57 All. 687, 36 Cr.L.J. 1253, 157 I.C. 990, A.L.R. 1935 All. 212, 1935 A.L.J. 66, 1935 Cr.C. 255 and Shiva v. Phlad, A.L.R. 1935 All. 696, 161 I.C. 322, 58 All. 85, 1935 A.L.J. 943, 1935 A.W.R. (H.C.) 792, dissenting from Karim Ullah v. Rameshwar Prasad, A.L.R. 1929 All. 774, 111 I.C. 595, 51 All. 344, 1929 A.L.J. 55, 12 A.L.Cr.R. 199.

An appeal from an order of a Judge of the Small Cause Court under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., lies to the District Judge and cannot be transferred by him to the Subordinate Judge for hearing—Abdul Ghani Khan v. Ram Mohan Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 960, 156 I.C. 593, 1935 A.L.J. 671, A.L.R. 1935 All. 573, 1935 Cr.C. 594; Ram Sarup, 36 Cr.L.J. 1302, 158 I.C. 101, A.L.R. 1935 All. 446, 1935 A.L.J. 476, 1935 Cr.C. 575.

Notice of appeal:—In an appeal against a refusal to make a complaint, the party entitled to receive notice is the accused person. But in an appeal against an order making a complaint, the party entitled to receive notice is the Crown, and not the person on whose application the complaint was made—Labha Mal v. Wasawa, 29 P.L.R. 128, 29 Cr.L.J. 72, 106 I.C. 584, 9 A.L.Cr.R. 395.

Duty of Appellate Court:—The Appellate Court, in the case of appeals under this section, should reconsider the entire matter on the merits, and while allowing reasonable weight to the opinion of the Court below, should nevertheless reconsider the question of the propriety of the order appealed against, upon a complete review of the entire facts. If the Appellate Court is not satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out, the order appealed against must be set aside—Ram Charan, 23 A.L.J. 515, 25 Cr.L.J. 1126, A.L.R. 1926 All. 544; Jagabandhu v. Abdul, 33 C.W.N. 945, 57 Cal. 500, A.L.R. 1929 Cal. 480, 1929 Cr.C. 94. When the Court below has refused to make a complaint under sec. 476, the superior Court in reversing the order of the Court below must give sufficient reasons for such reversal—Kalusadhan v. Nani Lal, 52 Cal. 478, 25 Cr.L.J. 1307. Like the Original Court, the Appellate Court making a complaint under this section would apply its mind to the question whether it is expedient in the interests of justice to make an inquiry into the offence complained of, and should record a finding to that effect—Ramchand v. Lularam, 25 S.L.R. 68, A.L.R. 1931 Sind. 115, 134 I.C. 1007, 33 Cr.L.J. 43, 1931 Cr.C. 733. When affirming the order of the original Court making a complaint, it is not necessary that the Appellate Court should record a finding that the prosecution is expedient in the interests of justice—Keralam, 1933 M.W.N. 1257.

The power to lay a complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is a discretionary power, and an Appellate Bench of the High Court would not interfere with the exercise of his discretion by a Single Judge of the High Court unless it could be shown that the discretion had been exercised under some misapprehension or error which was plain on the face of the record—Tan Ba Chang v. Registrar, O. S. High Court, 41 Cr.L.J. 515 (517), 187 I.C. 754, A.L.R. 1940 Rang. 104, 1940 Rang. 12.

Where the subordinate Court (Munsif) refused to make a complaint under sec. 476 on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, as the offence was not committed in relation to any proceeding in his Court, and the Appellate Court made a complaint under sec. 476B, without deciding whether the Munsif had jurisdiction or not to make the complaint, held that the complaint made by the Appellate Court was illegal and must be set aside. For, it is quite clear that if the Munsif had really no jurisdiction to make the complaint, the Appellate Court also had no power to make the complaint and ought to dismiss the appeal. For this reason, it was incumbent on the Appellate Court first of all to decide whether the Munsif had no jurisdiction—Kanai v. Makhan, 55 Cal 836, 29 Cr.L.J. 483 (484), 109 I.C. 211, 47 C.L.J. 277, A.I.R. 1928 Cal 237, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 167.

Power to Stay:—An order to stay criminal proceedings cannot be passed in an appeal under sec. 423 from a complaint which has been actually made by a subordinate revenue authority to a competent Magistrate and which is being investigated by the latter—Jagannath v. Rajagopalachari, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 411 (413), 12 P.L.T. 671, 1931 Cr.C. 999, 33 Cr.L.J. 147, 135 I.C. 513.

Second Appeal from order under this section:—If the original Court has made or refused to make a complaint under sec. 476, but on appeal the Appellate Court withdraws or makes a complaint under sec. 476B, no further appeal lies. Section 476B does not provide for a second appeal to the High Court from an order passed by the Appellate Court under sec. 476B itself. It only contemplates one appeal, viz., an appeal from an order passed by the original Court under sec. 476, or from an order passed by a superior Court under section 476A—Mo On Khin v. N. K. M. Firm, 5 Rang. 523, A.I.R. 1927 Rang 313, 105 I.C. 457, 28 Cr.L.J. 937 (938); Hikmatullah v. Sakina, 53 All. 416, 32 Cr.L.J. 367, 1931 A.L.J. 177, 129 I.C. 264, A.I.R. 1931 All. 305, 1931 Cr.C. 449, Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 136; Teomal Gerimal v. Ali Muhammad Shah Rashidi, 38 Cr.L.J. 873, 170 I.C. 360, 31 S.L.R. 77, 10 R.S. 53, A.I.R. 1937 Sind 116; Moiddeen v. Adutbhai, 48 Bom. 401 (403), 26 Bom.L.R. 289; Mohim, 49 C.L.J. 342, 116 I.C. 638, 30 Cr.L.J. 658, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 172, 56 Cal. 824, 33 C.W.N. 285 (287); Kanai Lal v. Makhan, 55 Cal. 836, 109 I.C. 211, 47 C.L.J. 277, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 237, 10 A.I.Cr.R. 167, 29 Cr.L.J. 483 (484); Ahmadar v. Dwip Chand, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 281, 55 Cal. 765, 32 C.W.N. 164, 29 Cr.J.L. 119, 106 I.C. 711; Mahomed Idris, 88 I.C. 528, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 322, 1 Lah. See also Bachu Singh v. Tribeni Sah, infra. But the Patna High Court holds that if the original Court refuses to make the complaint, but, on appeal the Appellate Court makes the complaint, a second appeal lies—Faujdar, 7 P.L.T. 199, 26 Cr.L.J. 1565, 90 I.C. 445, A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 25; Narayan Meher v. Dhana Meher, 10 Pat. 446, 32 Cr.L.J. 1065, Ind. Rul. 1931 Pat. 395, 133 I.C. 683, A.I.R. 1931 Pat. 343, 1931 Cr.C. 791, 12 P.L.T. 633; Ranjit Narain v. Ram Bahadur, 5 Pat. 262, 7 P.L.T. 114, 27 Cr.L.J. 641 (645). In the last mentioned case (5 Pat. 262), section 476B has been thus analysed: (a) Where a Munsif has refused to make a complaint, and an appeal has been made to the District Judge, under sec. 476B, but the District Judge dismisses the appeal and makes no com-

against whom such a complaint has been made may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate', i.e., the person proceeded against by the District Judge may take a second appeal to the High Court, to which the District Judge's Court is subordinate. (c) Where the Munsif has done nothing and has been asked to do nothing, and the District Judge has, either suo motu or on application, made a complaint, the complaint falls under sec. 476A, and the person against whom the complaint is made may appeal to the High Court. (d) Where the Munsif has made a complaint, and an appeal is made to the District Judge under sec. 476B, but the Judge upholds the Munsif's view and dismisses the appeal, but makes no complaint himself there is no further right the latter section made it obligatory on the Court to make a complaint and send it to a first class Magistrate. This defect has been removed by one of the amendments we have made in section 476, but we are doubtful whether section 477 should stand. We considered a proposal to enable a Court of Session to try a case committed to it after a complaint had been made by itself, but we do not think it desirable that a Court which has instituted the proceedings should dispose of the case, and we have, therefore, repealed section 477."

478. (1) When any such offence is committed before any Civil or Revenue Court, or brought under the notice of any Civil or Revenue Court in the course of a judicial proceeding, and the case is triable exclusively by the High Court or Court of Session, or such Civil or Revenue Court thinks that it ought to be tried by the High Court or Court of Session, such Civil or Revenue Court may, instead of sending the case under section 476 to a Magistrate for inquiry, itself complete the inquiry, and commit or hold to bail the accused person to take his trial before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be.

(2) For the purposes of an inquiry under this section the Civil or Revenue Court may * * exercise all the powers of a Magistrate; and its proceedings in such inquiry shall be conducted as nearly as may be in accordance with the provisions of Chapter XVIII, and of Chapter XXXIII in cases where that Chapter applies, and shall be deemed to have been held by a Magistrate.

Change:—In sub-section (2), the words "subject to the provisions of sec. 443" have been omitted after the word "may", and the italicised words have been added, by section 28 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923. As a result of this Amendment, this section has been made applicable to European British subjects.

1258. Sections 476 and 478:—If a Sessions offence has been committed, the Civil Court taking proceedings under sec. 476 has the option either to continue the proceedings under that section and send the case to a first class Magistrate, or to hold an inquiry under Chap XVIII and pass an order of commitment under sec. 478. And if the Civil Court in the exercise of this option elects to proceed under sec. 478, the accused cannot object on the ground that the Civil Court has by proceeding under sec. 478 deprived him of his right of appeal (there being no appeal from an order under sec. 478) which he would have had (under sec. 476B) if the Court had proceeded under sec. 476—Rameshwar Lal, 49 All. 898, 25 A.L.J. 555, 28 Cr.L.J. 668 (669). The procedure of this section is only alternative to that prescribed in sec. 476 as indicated by the words "instead of sending the case under sec. 476." But this section does not give any power to a Court on failure of one to adopt the other method of procedure; and, therefore, if the accused has been sent by the Civil Court to a First Class Magistrate under sec. 476, and has been discharged by the Magistrate, the Civil Court has no power to revive the case against the accused and adopt the procedure prescribed by this section—Raoji Moreshwar, Ratanlal 959 (960). In the Allahabad case (49 All. 898) the Court acted under sec. 478 before sending the case to a Magistrate.

Section 476 merely lays down the procedure that may be followed in certain cases, and does not confer any new jurisdiction on a Court. This section does not by itself give to the Civil Court the powers of committal in the cases referred to in that section, and that is why section 478 has been enacted—Popat, 4 Bom. 487.

An order passed under sec. 476 is open to appeal (see sec. 476B), but there is no right of appeal against an order under sec. 478—Rameshwar Lal, supra.

1259. Scope:—The power of a Civil Court to commit is limited to cases which are triable exclusively by the Court of Session or which ought to be tried by such Court, and to such cases only when the offence charged has been committed before the Civil Court or brought under its notice—Popat, 4 Bom. 287. The Court has power to commit under this section, even if some of the offences imputed to the accused are triable exclusively by the Court of Session, and the others are not so triable—Rameshwar Lal, supra.

An Assistant Collector concerned in mutation proceedings is acting as a Revenue Court—Lachman Prosad, 5 Luck. 435, 6 O.W.N. 953, 1930 Cr.C. 154, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 58, 124 I.C. 364, 31 Cr.L.J. 679.

This section, like section 476, must be taken as supplementary to sec. 195. The expression "any such offence" means an offence referred to under sec. 195 and committed under the circumstances mentioned in sec. 195. And, therefore, a Civil Court cannot direct a committal for offences under secs 463 and 471, I. P. C., unless the documents have been given in evidence, as mentioned in clause (c) of sec. 195. If the documents have been merely put in Court but not given in evidence, sec. 195 cannot apply and sec. 478 also will not apply—Abdul Khadar v. Meera Saheb, 15 Mad 224. But in In re Devji, 18 Bom. 581; Akhil Chandra, 22 Cal 1004 and Khushali, 40 All 116, it has been held that the words "any such offence" in this section simply mean an offence referred to in sec. 195 and not an offence qualified by the circumstances mentioned in sec. 195. But this view is no longer correct. See this subject fully discussed in Note 1237 under section 476.

Procedure:—Sub-section (2) lays down that the procedure of Chapter XVIII must be followed as nearly as possible. Where the Court recorded very brief statements of the accused, and passed a commitment order without examining the witnesses in the presence of the accused and without explaining the charge, held that the Court not having followed the procedure as laid down in Chap. XVIII, the order was illegal—Babu Prasad, 40 All. 32. A Civil Court has no power to order a commitment merely on proceedings held in the civil suit, without holding the preliminary inquiry required by this section—Rangatoonee, 22 W.R. 52.

If an Assistant Judge (Civil Court) before whom a witness gave a false deposition, transfers the case to himself as District Magistrate for inquiry, he is competent to do so under this section, because the action taken by him amounts to his taking action under sec. 478, as the offence was brought under his notice as a Civil Court in the course of a judicial proceeding—Rashid Karmalli, 9 Bom.L.R. 212, 5 Cr.L.J. 202 (209).

Where a Civil Court made a complaint to a First Class Magistrate under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., in respect of offences some of which were exclusively triable by the Court of Session and the District Magistrate suggested that the Civil Court should itself commit the case for trial by the Court of Session under sec. 478, Cr. P. C., as the First Class Magistrate was very busy with other cases and the Civil Court passed an order of commitment under sec. 478, Cr. P. C., held that the Civil Court had power to alter or review the complaint, which was not a judgment within the meaning of sec. 369, Cr. P. C., and that it was open to the Civil Court under these circumstances when the record was sent back to it by the District Magistrate to pass the order of commitment after the further enquiry which it made—Jagat Ram v. Emp., 38 Cr.L.J. 318, 166 I.C. 915, 9 R.A. 469, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1125, 1936 A.Cr.C. 225, 1937 A.L.R. 112, 1936 A.L.J. 1199, A.I.R. 1937 All 76.

No appeal:—There is no appeal from an order passed under this section. "It is not for me to speculate why no right of appeal has been given against an order passed under sec. 478. The mere fact remains that there is no right of appeal against such order"—Rameshwar Lal, 49 All. 898, 28 Cr.L.J. 668 (669), 25 A.L.J. 555, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 85, A.I.R. 1927 All. 571, 103 I.C. 204.

1260. Revision:—Though certain Magisterial powers have been given to the Civil Court under this section for the purposes of investigating cases of contempt of Court, it still remains while exercising those powers a Civil Court, and is not an 'inferior Criminal Court' within the meaning of sec. 435. It is not, therefore, competent to the Sessions Judge to revise the proceeding of the Civil Court—Ramachandra v. Subramania, 5 M.L.J. 226. In Salig Ram v. Ramji, 28 All. 554 (561), Knox, J., has expressed an opinion (obiter) that the express language of sub-section (2) of this section shows that the Civil Court is converted into a Criminal Court for the time.

479. When any such commitment is made by a Civil or Revenue Court, the Court shall send the charge with the order of commitment and the record of the case to the Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or other Magistrate authorized to commit for trial, and such Magistrate shall bring the case before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be, together with the witnesses for the prosecution and defence.

480. (1) When any such offence as is described in section 175, section 178, section 179, section 180 or section 228 of the Indian Penal Code is committed in the view or presence of any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, the Court may cause the offender * * * to be detained in custody and at any time before the rising of the Court on the same day may, if it thinks fit; take cognizance of the offence and sentence the offender to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, and in default of payment, to simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, unless such fine be sooner paid.

(2) Nothing in section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII shall be deemed to apply to proceedings under this section.

Change:—The words "whether he is an European British Subject or not" have been omitted in sub-section (1); and the words "section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII" in sub-section (2) have been substituted for the words "section 443 or 444," by sec. 29 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

1261. Scope and application of Section:—This section and the next deal with what is known in English law as direct contempt that is, contempt committed in the view or presence of the Court. The High Court has got greater powers (not by virtue of this Code or the Penal Code but by virtue of the common law of England) to punish for contempts committed out of Court, e.g., comments in newspapers on proceedings pending in the High Court—Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 Cal. 109 (P.C.). See also In re Claridge, 14 Bom.L.R. 231, 13 Cr.L.J. 461; In re Amrita Bazar Patrika, 45 Cal. 169, 21 C.W.N. 1161, 19 Cr.L.J. 530 (F.B.); Weston v. Editor, Bengalee, 15 C.W.N. 771; In re Banks, 26 C.L.J. 401, 19 Cr.L.J. 449; In re Satyabodha, 24 Bom.L.R. 928, 23 Cr.L.J. 644; In re Taylor, 26 Cr.L.J. 245, 19 Cr.L.J. 402, 44 I.C. 930.

As to the power of the High Court to punish for contempts of subordinate Courts, see the Contempt of Courts Act, XII of 1926. The procedure to be followed under this Act has been laid down in Amulya v. Satish, 33 Cr.L.J. 444, 137 I.C. 238, 35 C.W.N.

1265, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 254, 1932 Cr.C. 287, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 281. See also Balakrishna, 46 Bom. 592, 24 Bom.L.R. 16; In re Venkat Rao, 21 M.L.J. 832 (F.B.); and In re M. K. Gandhi, 22 Bom.L.R. 368, 21 Cr.L.J. 835, 58 I.C. 915 (F.B.). The ruling in Moti Lal Ghosh, 41 Cal. 173 (A. B. Patilka case), in 17 C.W.N. 1253 (where it was held that the High Court had no power to punish for contempts of mofussil Courts) is no longer good law in view of the Contempt of Courts Act. See Ananta Lal v. Alfred Henry Watson, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 257, 58 Cal. 884, 35 C.W.N. 189, 1931 Cr.C. 289, 131 I.C. 267, 32 Cr.L.J. 675.

The High Court has inherent power to punish a witness for contempt when he leaves the jurisdiction of the Court without being discharged as a witness and without the permission of the Court—Ebrahim, 4 Rang. 257.

The offence of contempt must be committed during a judicial proceeding, in order to come under this section. An inquiry by a Magistrate into a case of breach of the peace in order to ascertain whether he should make a report to his official superior and to satisfy himself, whether he should act under sec. 108, is not a judicial proceeding, and a person behaving insolently to the Magistrate in such proceeding cannot be proceeded against under this section—Yerumakaran, 2 Weir 605. A Tahsildar or a Naib-Tahsildar has to perform various miscellaneous duties, most of which are of non-judicial character, and the mere fact that on a particular day he has to try a case does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that he is doing judicial business during the whole of that day. If it appears that at the time when the incident took place, he was engaged in conversation with two persons who were sitting in his room, it is doubtful whether it can be said that he was sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, and it is, therefore, doubtful whether he can take summary action under this section—Dalip Singh, 2 Lah. 308 (312), 23 Cr.L.J. 9.

The offence must be committed in the view and presence of the Court, to attract the provisions of this section. The plaintiff in a suit was directed to appear with certain account books on a specified date and to give his deposition before Small Cause Court, failing which the suit was to be decided against him. The plaintiff did not appear as directed and the Munsif called upon him to show cause why he should not be fined for disobedience. Cause was shown by a petition, but there was no appearance, and he was fined for contempt of Court. It was held that the case did not come under this section, as there was no offence committed in the view or presence of the Court, and the order was, therefore, without jurisdiction—Chagmal, 23 C.W.N. 389, 20 Cr.L.J. 373.

The provisions of this section must be applied then and there, or at any rate before the rising of the Court in whose view or presence a contempt has been committed, if it considers that it can be properly and adequately dealt with under this section. Therefore, where a Magistrate in whose presence a contempt was committed, after taking cognizance of the matter, postponed passing final orders in order to afford the accused an opportunity of showing cause why such order should not be passed, and eventually fined him several days after, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular, and that the proper procedure would have been to detain the accused and to deal with the matter at once or before rising—Palambar Bakhsh, 11 All. 361. But rising for a short time in the middle of the day (for luncheon) does not amount to 'rising of the Court' for the day—Venkat Rao, 46 Bom. 973 (979), 24 Bom.L.R. 386, 23 Cr.L.J. 325.

In the case of a contempt committed coram judice and punishable under sec. 228, I. P. C., a Court has the option of proceeding either under secs. 480 to 482, Cr. P. C., or under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., and it cannot be held that the complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is invalid—Ram Lal Anand, 41 Cr.L.J. 766 (768), 189 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 233, 42 P.L.R. 505.

Where the Court deals with the offence of contempt of Court under this section, it cannot pass the sentence prescribed by sec. 228, I. P. C., but should under this section limit the punishment to a fine of Rs. 200 or imprisonment in default for 30 days—Dhanakoti Mudali, 2 Weir 603. If it considers the fine of Rs. 200 too light a sentence order"—Rameshwar Lal, 49 All. 898, 28 Cr.L.J. 668 (669), 25 A.L.J. 555, 8 A.I.Cr.R. 85, A.I.R. 1927 All. 571, 103 I.C. 204.

1260. Revision:—Though certain Magisterial powers have been given to the Civil Court under this section for the purposes of investigating cases of contempt of Court, it still remains while exercising those powers a Civil Court, and is not an 'inferior Criminal Court' within the meaning of sec. 435. It is not, therefore, competent to the Sessions Judge to revise the proceeding of the Civil Court—Ramachandra v. Subramania, 5 M.L.J. 226. In Salig Ram v. Ramji, 28 All. 554 (561), Knox, J., has expressed an opinion (obiter) that the express language of sub-section (2) of this section shows that the Civil Court is converted into a Criminal Court for the time.

479. When any such commitment is made by a Civil or Revenue Court, the Court shall send the charge with the order of commitment and the record of the case to the Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or other Magistrate authorized to commit for trial, and such Magistrate shall bring the case before the High Court or Court of Session, as the case may be, together with the witnesses for the prosecution and defence.

480. (1) When any such offence as is described in section 175, section 178, section 179, section 180 or section 228 of the Indian Penal Code is committed in the view or presence of any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, the Court may cause the offender * * * to be detained in custody and at any time before the rising of the Court on the same day may, if it thinks fit; take cognizance of the offence and sentence the offender to fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, and in default of payment, to simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, unless such fine be sooner paid.

(2) Nothing in section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII shall be deemed to apply to proceedings under this section.

Change:—The words "whether he is an European British Subject or not" have been omitted in sub-section (1); and the words "section 29A or in Chapter XXXIII" in sub-section (2) have been substituted for the words "section 443 or 444," by sec. 29 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.

1261. Scope and application of Section:—This section and the next deal with what is known in English law as direct contempt that is, contempt committed in the view or presence of the Court. The High Court has got greater powers (not by virtue of this Code or the Penal Code but by virtue of the common law of England) to punish for contempts committed out of Court, e.g., comments in newspapers on proceedings pending in the High Court—Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 Cal. 109 (P.C.). See also In re Claridge, 14 Bom.L.R. 231, 13 Cr.L.J. 461; In re Amrita Bazar Patrika, 45 Cal. 169, 21 C.W.N. 1161, 19 Cr.L.J. 530 (F.B.); Weston v. Editor, Bengalee, 15 C.W.N. 771; In re Banks, 26 C.L.J. 401, 19 Cr.L.J. 449; In re Satyabodha, 24 Bom.L.R. 928, 23 Cr.L.J. 644; In re Taylor, 26 Cr.L.J. 245, 19 Cr.L.J. 402, 44 I.C. 930.

As to the power of the High Court to punish for contempts of subordinate Courts, see the Contempt of Courts Act, XII of 1926. The procedure to be followed under this Act has been laid down in Amulya v. Satish, 33 Cr.L.J. 414, 137 I.C. 238, 35 C.W.N.

1265, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 254, 1932 Cr.C. 287, Ind. Rul 1932 Cal. 281. See also Bala-krishna, 46 Bom. 592, 24 Bom.L.R. 16; In re Venkat Rao, 21 M.L.J. 832 (F.B.); and In re M. K. Gandhi, 22 Bom.L.R. 368, 21 Cr.L.J. 835, 58 I.C. 915 (F.B.). The ruling in Moti Lal Ghosh, 41 Cal. 173 (A. B. Patilka case), in 17 C.W.N. 1253 (where it was held that the High Court had no power to punish for contempts of mofussil Courts) is no longer good law in view of the Contempt of Courts Act. See Ananta Lal v. Alfred Henry Watson, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 257, 58 Cal. 884, 35 C.W.N. 189, 1931 Cr.C. 289, 131 I.C. 267, 32 Cr.L.J. 675.

The High Court has inherent power to punish a witness for contempt when he leaves the jurisdiction of the Court without being discharged as a witness and without the permission of the Court—Ebrahim, 4 Rang. 257.

The offence of contempt must be committed during a judicial proceeding, in order to come under this section. An inquiry by a Magistrate into a case of breach of the peace in order to ascertain whether he should make a report to his official superior and to satisfy himself, whether he should act under sec. 108, is not a judicial proceeding, and a person behaving insolently to the Magistrate in such proceeding cannot be proceeded against under this section—Yerumakaran, 2 Weir 605. A Tahsildar or a Naib-Tahsildar has to perform various miscellaneous duties, most of which are of non-judicial character, and the mere fact that on a particular day he has to try a case does not necessarily lead to the conclusion that he is doing judicial business during the whole of that day. If it appears that at the time when the incident took place, he was engaged in conversation with two persons who were sitting in his room, it is doubtful whether it can be said that he was sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, and it is, therefore, doubtful whether he can take summary action under this section—Dalip Singh, 2 Lah. 308 (312), 23 Cr.L.J. 9.

The offence must be committed in the view and presence of the Court, to attract the provisions of this section. The plaintiff in a suit was directed to appear with certain account books on a specified date and to give his deposition before Small Cause Court, failing which the suit was to be decided against him. The plaintiff did not appear as directed and the Munsif called upon him to show cause why he should not be fined for disobedience. Cause was shown by a petition, but there was no appearance, and he was fined for contempt of Court. It was held that the case did not come under this section, as there was no offence committed in the view or presence of the Court, and the order was, therefore, without jurisdiction—Chagmal, 23 C.W.N. 389, 20 Cr.L.J. 373.

The provisions of this section must be applied then and there, or at any rate before the rising of the Court in whose view or presence a contempt has been committed, if it considers that it can be properly and adequately dealt with under this section. Therefore, where a Magistrate in whose presence a contempt was committed, after taking cognizance of the matter, postponed passing final orders in order to afford the accused an opportunity of showing cause why such order should not be passed, and eventually fined him several days after, it was held that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular, and that the proper procedure would have been to detain the accused and to deal with the matter at once or before rising—Paiambar Bakhsh, 11 All. 361. But rising for a short time in the middle of the day (for luncheon) does not amount to 'rising of the Court' for the day—Venkat Rao, 46 Bom. 973 (979), 24 Bom.L.R. 386, 23 Cr.L.J. 325.

In the case of a contempt committed coram judice and punishable under sec. 228, I. P. C., a Court has the option of proceeding either under secs. 480 to 482, Cr. P. C., or under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., and it cannot be held that the complaint under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., is invalid—Ram Lal Anand, 41 Cr.L.J. 766 (768), 189 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 233, 42 P.L.R. 505.

Where the Court deals with the offence of contempt of Court under this section, it cannot pass the sentence prescribed by sec. 228, I. P. C., but should under this section limit the punishment to a fine of Rs. 200 or imprisonment in default for 30 days—Dhanakoti Mudiali, 2 Weir 603. If it considers the fine of Rs. 200 too light a sentence for the offence, or considers that a substantive sentence of imprisonment is necessary in the circumstances of the case, it ought to refer the case under sec. 482 to some competent Magistrate—Buham Khan, 10 W.R. 47; Anonymous, 6 M.H.C.R. App. 16.

A substantive sentence of imprisonment cannot be passed under this section in a case under sec. 228, I. P. Code—Buham Khan, 10 W.R. 47. The imprisonment will be only in default of fine.

A Debt Conciliation Board constituted under the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (VII of 1934) is a Court and its proceedings are judicial proceedings under sec. 16 of that Act. The Board would, therefore, be acting within jurisdiction in passing an order of fine under sec. 228, I. P. C., and in adopting the procedure laid down in this section—Budhu v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 658 (659), 175 I.C. 797, 11 R.L. 147, 40 P.L.R. 218, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 366.

1262. Contempt:—An application for transfer of a case from a particular Court on the ground of probable miscarriage of justice is not a contempt of that Court—Sirdar Buksh, 1869 P.R. 34; Venkat Rao, 46 Bom. 973 (976), 24 Bom.L.R. 386. Even if in such an application the accused uses certain unhappy remarks concerning the Magistrate from whose Court the case is sought to be transferred, it cannot be presumed that the accused intended to insult that Court—Murli Dhar, 38 All. 284, 17 Cr.L.J. 163, 14 A.L.J. 247; Abdulla Khan, 1898 A.W.N. 145. A refusal by a witness to affix his thumb-mark to the record of his deposition is not an offence under sec. 180, I. P. C.—Fateh Ali, 1912 P.R. 8, 13 Cr.L.J. 713. A witness on being asked the name of his grandfather replied that he did not remember it. Held that it did not amount to a refusal to answer a question (section 179, Indian Penal Code) and he could not be proceeded against under section 480, Criminal Procedure Code—Kallu, 27 Cr.L.J. 252, 92 I.C. 428, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 240. But a refusal by an accused to sign a statement under section 364 of this Code is punishable under section 180, Indian Penal Code—Umar Khan, 39 All. 399. Walking with creaking shoes near the Court-room does not ipso facto lead to the conclusion that the accused intended to insult or interrupt the Court in its work—Davuluri Veerayya, 5 M.L.T. 286, 9 Cr.L.J. 309. Courts should not be unduly sensitive about their dignity, and a mere audible remark by the accused which interrupted the proceedings of a Court is not enough to sustain a conviction unless the accused intended to interrupt the Court—Ramasami Gounden, 29 M.L.J. 274, 16 Cr.L.J. 610; Dalip Singh, 2 Lah. 308 (312). In the absence of any intention to insult the Court and of any interruption to the Court, a person accused of a scuffle in the verandah of a Court is not guilty of an offence under section 228, I. P. Code—Manghal Ram, 20 Cr.L.J. 777 (All.). Prevarication by a witness may, though it does not necessarily, amount to contempt of Court—Jaimal, 10 B.H.C.R. 69. See also Chota Hurry, 15 W.R. 5; Auba, 4 B.H.C.R. 6; Pandu, 4 B.H.C.R. 7. Where a witness refused to answer the questions put to him in his examination-in-chief and cross-examination unless an application made by him for stay of proceedings was granted, held that this conduct amounted to contempt—Gopi Chand, 1918 P.R. 14, 19 Cr.L.J. 676. When a complainant refused to answer questions put to him on the pretext that he had pain in his stomach but was found smiling and talking freely about other things, held that he was guilty under section 179, I. P. Code—Moti Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 446, 153 I.C. 907, 1935 A.L.J. 299. An accused person who, during the hearing of a case, makes an impertinent threat to a witness in the box commits an offence under sec. 228, I. P. C.—Allu, 45 All. 272. An irrelevant question put by a pleader to a witness cannot amount to contempt, though persistence in vexatious or irrelevant questions after warning might amount to contempt—Azeemoola, 1887 P.R. 44. But every little insistence on the part of a pleader in the conduct of his case should not be turned into an occasion for a criminal trial, unless the pleader's conduct is so clearly vexatious as to lead to an inference that his intention is to interrupt or insult the Court—Dattatraya, 6 Bom.L.R. 541; Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 C.W.N. 1062. Any trivial incident such as laughter or hesitation in speaking is not a contempt—Chappu Menon, 4 M.H.C.R. 146. A witness who having a document in his possession will not produce it, is guilty of contempt, and can be dealt with under this section—Premchand Dowlatram, 12 Bom. 63. An accused who in the course of his statement under sec. 342 calls the Judge a 'prejudiced Judge' and being called upon by the Judge to withdraw the remarks refuses to do so, is guilty of contempt, and can be proceeded against under this section—Venkat Rao, 46 Bom. 973, 24 Bom L.R. 386, 23 Cr.L.J. 325.

Talking outside the Court in the verandah and refusing to come before the Court when summoned by the Chaprassi does not appear to constitute any of the five offences mentioned in this section—Armugam Chettyar, 30 Cr.L.J. 118, 113 I.C. 278, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 280, Ind. Rul. 1929 Rang. 32.

There is no rule as to the dress of assessors. Where an assessor in a session case appeared in a dress consisting of a 'paheran,' a cap and a scarf and there was no suggestion that this dress offended against any rule of public decency, or was intended to be insulting to the Court, the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to fine the assessor—Chhaganlal, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 478, 35 Cr.L.J. 107, 146 I.C. 446, 35 Bom L.R. 1025. In order to bring a case within the purview of sec. 480, Cr. P. C., and sec. 228, I. P. C., it must be shown that an intentional insult was meant to the Court—Chhaganlal, supra.

A comment on a pending case, if it has or may have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of an accused person, amounts to a contempt of Court—Claridge, 14 Bom L.R. 231, 13 Cr.L.J. 461. An article in a newspaper reflecting on a party to a suit, more especially when he is under cross-examination, is a contempt of Court—Weston v. Editor, Bengalee, 15 C.W.N. 771. But such contempts can be punished only by the High Court. See Note 1261 above.

1263. Appeal:—A summary order under this section by a Sessions Judge for an offence under sec. 228, I. P. C., imposing a fine on a person for intentional insult to the Judge when sitting in a stage of judicial proceeding, amounts to a trial, though by a summary mode, and is therefore, appealable—Chappu Menon, 4 M.H.C.R. 146. A Sessions Judge cannot refuse to hear an appeal against an order under this section, because in his opinion the matter is a mere trifle. He is bound to hear the appeal and come to a finding whether the conviction is legal or not—Jivacharam Keshavram, Ratanlal 978.

481. (1) In every such case the Court shall record the facts constituting the offence, with the statement (if any) made by the offender, as well as the finding and sentence.

(2) If the offence is under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, the record shall show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in which the Court interrupted or insulted was sitting, and the nature of the interruption or insult.

1264. Record:—The procedure prescribed by sec. 480 for punishing a contempt committed in facie curie is of a summary character, and the Court taking action under that section is, therefore, required to record certain particulars mentioned in sec. 481. When the guilt or innocence of a person depends upon the exact words used by him, it is the duty of the Magistrate to record them with a reasonable degree of precision, and his omission to record the nature of the insult constitutes a great defect in the procedure—Dalip Singh, 2 Lah 308 (311), 23 Cr.L.J. 9. The directions contained in this section are mandatory, and the omission to record the particulars as directed by the section is fatal to the proceedings—Surendra Nath Banerjee, 10 C.W.N. 1062, 4 C.L.J. 415, 9 Cr.L.J. 210. No person can be punished for contempt unless the specific offence charged against him be distinctly stated and an opportunity given him of answering the charge, by making a statement. The expression "statement, if any" does not mean that the Court should not give the accused an opportunity to make a statement; all that it indicates is that the Court cannot compel the accused to make a statement. The omission to record the statement of a legal practitioner charged for contempt is a fatal defect to the prosecution—Krishna Chandra, 37 C.L.J. 535, 24 C.L.J. 798, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 562; Pohu Ram, 25 Cr.L.J. 588, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 88, 81 I.C. 76.

Sub-section (2) lays down that where a person is charged with an offence under sec. 228, I. P. C., the record convicting him must show the stage of the judicial proceeding interrupted, and the nature of the interruption, and the evidence must establish that such interruption was intentional; omission to do so is a vital irregularity in procedure not curable by sec. 537, and the conviction is illegal—Jathu Mal, 29 P.L.R. 653, 111 I.C. 464, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 357, 29 Cr.L.J. 880; Kukati, 15 Cr.L.J. 621, 25 I.C. 629 (Mad); Khushal Singh, 1886 P.R. 36; Arumugam Chettiyar, 113 I.C. 278, 30 Cr.L.J. 118, A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 280, Ind. Rul. 1929 Rang. 32; Ram Lal, 1931 Cr.C. 831, 32 Cr.L.J. 1221, 134 I.C. 686, 14 N.L.J. 106, A.I.R. 1931 Nag. 193, Ind. Rul. 1931 Nag. 172

482. (1) If the Court in any case considers that a person accused of any of the offences referred to in section 480 and committed in its view or presence should be imprisoned otherwise than in default of payment of fine, or that a fine exceeding two hundred rupees should be imposed upon him, or such Court is for any other reason of opinion that the case should not be disposed of under section 480, such Court, after recording the facts constituting the offence and the statement of the accused as hereinbefore provided, may forward the case to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the same, and may require security to be given for the appearance of such accused person before such Magistrate, or if sufficient security is not given, shall forward such person in custody to such Magistrate.

(2) The Magistrate, to whom any case is forwarded under this section, shall proceed to hear the complaint against the accused person in manner hereinbefore provided.

1265. Scope:—The provisions of this section can only be employed where cognizance has already been taken under sec. 480, Cr. P. C., and the section is in no way independent of sec. 480—Ram Lal Anand, 41 Cr.L.J. 766 (768), 189 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1940 Lah. 233, 42 P.L.R. 505.

Under sec. 480 the Magistrate can award a fine up to Rs 200, or a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine. If, however, the Magistrate considers that a substantive sentence of imprisonment or a heavier fine is demanded by the circumstances of the case, he ought to forward the case to another Magistrate under this section—Anonymous, 6 M.H.C.R. App. 16; Buham Khan, 10 W.R. 47.

Section 482 need not be read along with sec. 480, and sec. 482 does not require a Magistrate to draw up proceedings on the same day that the offence is committed—Bepin Chandra Pal, 35 Cal. 161; Malkhan Singh, 38 Cr.L.J. 55, 165 I.C. 698, A.I.R. 1936 All. 762, 1936 A.L.J. 1056, 1936 Cr.C. 1003.

Procedure:—If a Court considers a substantive sentence of imprisonment necessary, it should record a statement of the facts constituting the contempt and the statement of the accused, and forward the case to another Magistrate—Rutton Sahoo, 11 W.R. 49. Where a Court chooses to act under sec. 482 instead of sec. 480, in respect of an offence under sec. 179, I. P. C., it must give reasons for not taking cognizance under sec. 480—Chedi Lal, 11 O.L.J. 358, 25 Cr.L.J. 1127, 81 I.C. 951, A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 402.

A Barrister in the course of the trial of a case in which he was the complainant, used insulting language to the Sub-Magistrate. The Magistrate then recorded proceedings required by this section but failed to take any statement from the accused explanatory to his conduct as the accused left the Court at once. It was held that the omission to take such statement was not fatal to the proceedings, and the case ought not to be dismissed on that ground—Anonymous, 2 Weir 604.

An application under sec 476, Cr. P. C., was made to the Subordinate Judge to file a complaint against the defendants for an offence under sec 175, I P. C. The Sub-Court was abolished. The application was transferred to the District Court and it was dismissed on the ground that sec. 476, Cr. P. C., was not applicable. But a complaint was made under sec. 482, Cr. P. C. Held that the complaint was not competent as the District Court did not order the production of any document, nor could the alleged offence under sec. 175, I P. C., be said to have been committed in the view or presence of the District Court—Ayancherri Kovilagath Sankara Varma Rajah, 41 Cr L.J. 465, 187 I.C. 470, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 272

Court:—See Vithal Sonaji Marathi in Note 622

483. When the Provincial Government so directs, any Registrar or any Sub-Registrar appointed under the Indian Registration Act, 1877,* shall be deemed to be a Civil Court within the meaning of sections 480 and 482.

When Registrar or Sub-Registrar to be deemed a Civil Court within sections 480 and 482.

1266. The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by sec 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

A Registrar or Sub-Registrar may be deemed to be a Court only for the purposes of secs 480 and 482; and it cannot be implied that he is to be deemed a Court for ordinary purposes. A provision that a particular officer may for a particular purpose be deemed a Court does not warrant the extension of that provision so as by inference to produce a group of rules in conflict with the general system. A provision such as that contained in this section is an excrescence on the general system; such an exceptional provision should not be drawn out into all its logical consequences—Tulja, 12 Bom. 36. In the absence of a direction by the Local Government under this section, an offence under sec 228, I P. C., if committed before a Sub-Registrar cannot be dealt with under secs. 480 and 482 of this Code—Probhat Chandra, 57 Cal. 1007, 34 C.W.N. 56, 31 Cr L.J. 942.

484. When any Court has under section 480 or section 482 adjudged an offender to punishment or forwarded him to a Magistrate for trial for refusing or omitting to do anything which he was lawfully required to do, or for any intentional insult or interruption, the Court may, in its discretion, discharge the offender or remit the punishment on his submission to the order or requisition of such Court, or on apology being made to its satisfaction.

Discharge of offender on submission or apology.

1267. Discharge on submission or apology:—Too much notice should not be taken of a hasty language used by rustic litigants during a moment of excitement without any serious intention of insulting the Court. If the offender offers an apology or adopts a submissive attitude, an admonition by the Court, or at the most a petty fine, would be sufficient—Jit Singh, 1912 P.W.R. 23, 13 Cr.L.J. 567, 15 I.C. 983.

* See now the Indian Registration Act, 1908 (XVI of 1908).

Power of High Court to interfere:—A pleader was tried and punished for contempt by a Munsiff for having used certain words which the latter thought to be derogatory to his position. The pleader gave an assurance that the words in question had no reference to the Court, but the Munsiff declined to accept the assurance. The District Judge refused to interfere on appeal by the pleader. The High Court on revision directed the Munsiff to consider whether it was not a case in which he himself should take action under sec. 484. Upon the Munsiff, declining to do so because the pleader had not withdrawn the words in question, the High Court held that the assurance given by the pleader should be taken as sufficient, and remitted the punishment—Ram Bali, 11 A.L.J. 955, 14 Cr.L.J. 687, 21 I.C. 1007.

485. If any witness or person called to produce a document or thing before a Criminal Court refuses to answer such questions as are put to him or to produce any document or thing in his possession or power which the Court requires him to produce, and does not offer any reasonable excuse for such refusal, such Court may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, sentence him to simple imprisonment, or by warrant under the hand of the presiding Magistrate or Judge commit him to the custody of an officer of the Court for any term not exceeding seven days, unless in the meantime such person consents to be examined and to answer, or to produce the document or thing. In the event of his persisting his refusal, he may be dealt with according to the provisions of section 480 or section 482, and, in the case of a Court established by Royal Charter, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt.

1268. Witness:—A complainant is not a witness and therefore not punishable under this section—Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600.

A witness cannot be punished for not answering a question which is irrelevant to the real issue or which he is not legally bound to answer—Ganesh, 13 Bom. 600. Where the question is asked with a view to criminal proceedings being taken against the witness, he is not legally bound to answer it and he cannot be punished for refusing to answer—Hari Lakshman, 10 Bom. 185.

486. (1) Any person sentenced by any Court under section 480 or section 485 may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, appeal to the Court to which decrees or orders made in such Court are ordinarily appealable.

(2) The provisions of Chapter XXXI shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to appeals under this section, and the Appellate Court may alter or reverse the finding, or reduce or reverse the sentence appealed against.

(3) An appeal from such conviction by a Court of Small Causes in a Presidency-town shall lie to the High Court, and an appeal from such conviction by any other Court of Small Causes shall lie to the Court of Session for the sessions division within which such Court is situate.

(4) An appeal from such conviction by any officer as Registrar or Sub-Registrar appointed as aforesaid may, when such officer is also Judge of a Civil Court, be made to the Court to which it would, under the preceding portion of this section, be made if such conviction were a decree by such officer in his capacity as such Judge, and in other cases may be made to the District Judge, or in the presidency towns, to the High Court.

See 4 M.H.C.R. 146 and Ratanlal 978 cited in Note 1263 under section 480, under heading 'Appeal.'

487. (1) Except as provided in sections  480 and 485,

Certain Judges and Magistrates not to try offences referred to in section 195 when committed before themselves.

no Judge of a Criminal Court or Magistrate, other than a Judge of a High Court, shall try any person for any offence referred to in section 195, when such offence is committed before himself or in contempt of his authority, or is brought under his notice as such Judge or Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding.

(2) Nothing in section 476 or section 482 shall prevent a Magistrate empowered to commit to the Court of Session or High Court from himself committing any case to such Court.

Change:—The word "477" has been omitted in sub-section (1) by section 130 of the Cr. P. C Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. This is consequent to the repeal of sec. 477.

1269. General rule:—A Magistrate cannot convict a person for contempt of Court committed in respect of his own authority. A commitment to another Magistrate is necessary in all such cases—Atmaram Govind, Ratanlal 64; Kashmiri, 1 All. 625; Seshayya, 13 Mad. 24. The Court before which an offence was committed, and by which the preliminary inquiry was held under sec. 476, should not be the Court to try the case—Taraprosad, 15 W.R. 88.

Thus, where a Sessions Judge has directed the trial of a person for the offence of giving false evidence committed before him in the course of a judicial proceeding of a criminal nature, he cannot try the case himself—Makhdam, 14 All. 354. If the facts alleged to constitute the offence came to the knowledge of the Magistrate in the course of judicial proceedings, he has no jurisdiction himself to try the case—Kunwar Bahadur, 23 O.C. 138, 57 I.C. 936, 21 Cr.L.J. 696. A Magistrate whose summons was disobeyed has no jurisdiction to try the offence of disobedience of summons—Anonymous, 2 Weir 612; Deo Saran, 16 A.L.J. 432, 19 Cr.L.J. 688, 46 I.C. 48; Pahalwan, 27 Cr.L.J. 1344, 98 I.C. 416 (All.); Muhammad Din, 36 Cr.L.J. 407(2), 153 I.C. 514(1), 35 P.L.R. 454, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 545, 1934 Cr.C. 865(1). The prohibition is absolute and the consent or otherwise of the accused is immaterial—Muhammad Din, supra. A Magistrate who issued an order under sec. 144 of this Code cannot himself try the disobedience of that order (sec. 188, I. P. C.)—Ranchod Dayal, 10 B.H.C.R. 424; Mritunjoy Gon, 23 C.W.N. 520, 20 Cr.L.J. 557; Abdulla, 24 Mad. 262; Langadaya, Ratanlal 901; Lokendra Lal Pal Choudhury, 37 Cr.L.J. 936, 164 I.C. 434, 61 C.L.J. 579, 39 C.W.N. 1053; Veerappa Moopan, 40 Cr.L.J. 752, 183 I.C. 240, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 496, 49 M.L.W. 474, 1939 M.W.N. 340, (1939) 1 M.L.J. 573. A Magistrate, who makes an order under sec. 133 for the removal of a nuisance, cannot himself try and convict the person to whom such order was directed and who has disobeyed it—Hua Lal, 1883 A.W.N. 222. If the Magistrate holds a trial for an offence committed in contempt of his authority the whole proceedings of the trial are invalid, and a person who disobeys a warrant issued in the course of such trial commits no offence—Pahalwan Singh, 27 Cr.L.J. 1344, 98 I.C. 416 (All.). The Rangoon High Court holds that although it is not desirable that a Magistrate whose lawful orders are disobeyed should, save in very exceptional circumstances, himself try and dispose of the charge of disobedience, still, unless there has been a clear failure of justice, the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the Magistrate's action—J. R. Das, 1 Rang. 540.

1270. Scope of section:—Sec. 487, which says that no Court shall try any person for the offence committed in contempt of its own authority, is not limited to offences falling under Chapter X of the Penal Code. It extends to all contempts of Courts—Parsapa Mahadevapa, 1 Bom. 339. Moreover, the prohibition in this section extends to the abetment of the offences referred to in the section. Therefore, a Magistrate is not competent to convict a person of abetting the offence of giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding before himself—Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 28.

Where a District Magistrate (as the head of the Police) gave sanction to prosecute a person for giving false information to the police, the District Magistrate was not incompetent to try or hear an appeal from the conviction of such person; section 487 would not apply, because the offence was committed before the Police and not before the District Magistrate or in contempt of his authority or brought to his notice as Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding—Ramaswamy Lal, 27 Cal. 452; Baldeo, 3 All. 322; Karim Baksh, 1905 P.R. 12, 2 Cr.L.J. 66. Where the Deputy Commissioner directed the prosecution of the accused under sec. 182, I. P. C., for having made a false report to a Forest Officer, and then the Deputy Commissioner, as District Magistrate, heard the accused's appeal against his conviction in the case, held that sec. 487 did not apply as the offence was not committed before the Deputy Commissioner nor brought to his notice as Magistrate in the course of a judicial proceeding. But sec. 556 applied—Faiz Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr.L.J. 385 (386).

Magistrate:—This section is wide enough to include a Presidency Magistrate. Such Magistrate cannot try a case under sec. 188, I. P. C., for the disobedience of an order which he had himself passed—Leakat Hussain, 12 C.W.N. 246, 7 Cr.L.J. 103, 7 C.L.J. 70.

Prohibition to 'try' the case:—According to the Madras High Court, this section prohibits the Judge or Magistrate only from trying the case; but a Sessions Judge before whom an offence was committed is not precluded by this section to hear an appeal in the case—Kesavaia, 2 Weir 607. But the Calcutta High Court holds that the words "shall try a person" in this section include the trial of an appeal. Therefore, where a Judge sanctions the prosecution of a decree-holder under sec. 210, I. P. C., for an offence committed before a Munsiff he is not competent to hear an appeal from the conviction of the decree-holder for that offence—Madhub Chunder v. Narodeep, 16 Cal. 121. So also, the Burma Chief Court holds that a Judge who has directed a prosecution should not hear the appeal of the accused, when convicted, even though the appeal is not against the conviction but only against the severity of the sentence—Htuktalwe, 2 L.B.R. 302, 1 Cr.L.J. 1021. Where a District Magistrate procured the initiation of a number of prosecutions against the same person, and one of them which resulted in conviction came before him in appeal, the High Court considering that it was not altogether proper that he should hear the appeal, ordered its transfer to the Sessions Judge—Ramzan Ali v. Durpo, 24 W.R. 58. The Nagpur Court also holds (following 16 Cal. 121) that the word "try" as used in this section includes the hearing of an appeal—Krishnappa, 25 Cr.L.J. 713, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 51, 81 I.C. 201.

Judicial proceeding:—The proceeding of a Magistrate granting or revoking or refusing a sanction under sec. 195 is a judicial proceeding. Therefore, a Magistrate who has declined to revoke a sanction granted to a person on a charge of forgery, is precluded from himself trying the case—Seshadri, 20 Mad. 383.

1271. "As such Judge or Magistrate":—In some cases it has been said that this expression means that the Judge or Magistrate is precluded from trying the case only when the offence was committed before him or brought to his notice while acting in his capacity as Judge or Magistrate; but it does not prevent the Magistrate or Judge from trying an offence which was committed before him or brought under his notice in another capacity. Thus, in Sarat Chandra, 16 Cal 766 (FB), it is stated that a Sessions Judge may as Sessions Judge try the accused for an offence which was committed before him in another capacity as District Judge; that is, the prohibition is restricted to a 'Judge' of a Criminal Court, and that being so, a strict construction must be placed upon the words 'as such Judge' and it must be held that they do not include a Judge of a Civil Court or a District Judge. The same view has been taken in Gaspar, 6 Bom. 479 (481); Banka Behari, 7 C.W.N 708; Rajit Daji, 18 Bom. 280. Thus, it is held that a Magistrate is not debarred from trying an accused person for disobedience of summons issued by him in his capacity as Mamlatdar—Rajit Daji, 18 Bom. 380. Where sanction is given by a Deputy Collector and Magistrate in his capacity as Revenue Officer, he is not debarred from trying the case himself as Deputy Magistrate—Moula Sahib, 2 Weir 613.

But in some other cases it has been pointed out that the above view runs counter to the fundamental principle of law (sec. 556) that no man ought to try a case in which he is interested. The prohibition in this section is a personal one, the mischief to be prevented being that the same person should not decide a matter which he may have already prejudged. It does not refer to the office of the Magistrate or Judge before whom an offence of the class described in the section is committed, but refers to the person of the Judge or Magistrate—Anonymous, 1 Mad. 305. An officer before whom, while acting in a particular capacity, an offence has been committed, punishable under sec. 228, I. P. C., cannot in another capacity take up and try the offence—an offence committed against himself. If he could do so, it would be in violation of that fundamental rule in the administration of justice that no man can be a Judge in a case wherein he is interested—Chander Seekur, 12 W.R. 18. When a Judge on the Civil side has already formed an opinion that a document has been forged or a perjury has been committed, he should not try the case as a Sessions Judge, and it is proper for the High Court to transfer the case to another Judge, as a means of relieving the former Judge from a position which he himself would desire to avoid—Arunachella, 5 M.H.C.R. 212. In Gaspar 6 Bom. 479 (481), it has been said that it is desirable that a trial should not be held before an officer who has already prejudged the guilt of the accused, and on this ground the case should be transferred; but in the case of an offence exclusively triable by the Court of Session, great inconvenience would be caused if the case has to be transferred; and if the accused is perfectly willing to be tried by the Sessions Judge, no transfer is necessary.

an order under sec. 133 for the removal of a nuisance, cannot himself try and convict the person to whom such order was directed and who has disobeyed it—Hira Lal, 1883 A.W.N. 222. If the Magistrate holds a trial for an offence committed in contempt of his authority the whole proceedings of the trial are invalid, and a person who disobeys a warrant issued in the course of such trial commits no offence—Pahalwan Singh, 27 Cr.L.J. 1344, 98 I.C. 416 (All.). The Rangoon High Court holds that although it is not desirable that a Magistrate whose lawful orders are disobeyed should, save in very exceptional circumstances, himself try and dispose of the charge of disobedience, still, unless there has been a clear failure of justice, the High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the Magistrate's action—*J. But sec. 556 applied—Faiz Muhammad, 9 N.L.R. 81, 14 Cr.L.J. 385 (386).

So also, the Burma Chief Court holds that a Judge who has directed a prosecution should not hear the appeal of the accused, when convicted, even though the appeal is not against the conviction but only against the severity of the sentence—Htukhtaw, 2 L.B.R. 302, 1 Cr.L.J. 1021. CHAPTER XXXVI.

OF THE MAINTENANCE OF WIVES AND CHILDREN.

Sir James FitzJames Stephen describes this chapter as "a mode of preventing vagrancy or at least of preventing its consequences." The object of maintenance proceedings is not to punish a parent for his past neglect, but to prevent vagrancy by compelling those who can do so to support those who are unable to support themselves and who have a moral claim to support—Sardar Muhammad v. Nux Muhammad, 1917 P.R. 22, 18 Cr.L.J. 811. The scope of this chapter is limited and the Magistrate may not, except as herein provided, usurp the jurisdiction in matrimonial disputes possessed by the Civil Courts—Gulabdas Bhaidas, 16 Bom. 269.

488. (1) If any person having sufficient means neglects or refuses to maintain his wife or his legitimate or illegitimate child unable to maintain itself, the District Magistrate, a Presidency Magistrate, a Sub-divisional Magistrate or a Magistrate of the first class may, upon proof of such neglect or refusal, order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate not exceeding one hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs.

(2) Such allowance shall be payable from the date of the order, or if so ordered from the date of the application for maintenance.

(3) If any person so ordered fails without sufficient cause to comply with the order, any such Magistrate may, for every breach of the order, issue a warrant for levying the amount due in manner hereinbefore provided for levying fines, and may sentence such person, for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid after the execution of the warrant, to imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month or until payment if sooner made:

Provided that, if such person offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and she refuses to live with him, such Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order under this section notwithstanding such offer, if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing:

Provided, further, that no warrant shall be issued for the recovery of any amount due under this section unless application be made to the Court to levy such amount within a period of one year from the date on which it became due.

(4) No wife shall be entitled to receive an allowance from her husband under this section if she is living in adultery, or if, without any sufficient reason, she refuses to live with her husband, or if they are living separately by mutual consent.

(5) On proof that any wife in whose favour an order has been made under this section is living in adultery, or that without sufficient reason she refuses to live with her husband, or that they are living separately by mutual consent, the Magistrate shall cancel the order.

(6) All evidence under this Chapter shall be taken in the presence of the husband or father, as the case may be, or, when his personal attendance is dispensed with, in the presence of his pleader, and shall be recorded in the manner prescribed in the case of summons-cases:

Provided that if the Magistrate is satisfied that he is wilfully avoiding service, or wilfully neglects to attend the Court, the Magistrate may proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte. Any order so made may be set aside for good cause shown on application made within three months from the date thereof.

[(7) (Omitted).]

(7) The Court in dealing with applications under this section shall have power to make such order as to costs as may be just.

(8) Proceedings under this section may be taken against any person in any district where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife, or, as the case may be, the mother of the illegitimate child.

This section has been amended by section 131 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923, and the changes introduced are the following:—First, in sub-section (1), the words 'one hundred' have been substituted for 'fifty,' in order to suit modern conditions of life. Secondly, in sub-section (3) the words 'fails without sufficient cause' have been substituted for the words 'wilfully neglects' owing to the difficulties which have been felt in the interpretation of the word 'wilfully' (Statements of Objects and Reasons, 1914). Thirdly, a proviso has been added to sub-section (3) to provide a period of limitation for the recovery of outstanding arrears. Fourthly, sub-section (7) has been omitted; it ran thus: "The accused may tender himself as a witness and in such case shall be examined as such." This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of sec 340. The old sub-sections (8) and (9) have been re-numbered as (7) and (8). Fifthly, in the present sub-sec. (8) the words "any person" have been substituted for the words "the accused" in order to make it clear that the person proceeded against under this section is not in the position of an accused person.

1935 O.L.R. 172, A.I.R. 1935 Oudh 285 Thus, a mulatta wife is not, under the Muhammedan Law of the Shia sect, entitled to maintenance; but this disability arising from her personal law is different from her statutory right to maintenance under this Code. In other words, she is entitled to maintenance under this section, irrespective of the fact that she is not entitled to maintenance under her personal law—Luddon Sahiba v. Mirza Kamar, 8 Cal. 736. The right of illegitimate children to be maintained by their actual father is a statutory right, and the duty is created by express enactment independent of the personal law of the parties—Kariyadan Pokkar v. Veeran, 19 Mad. 461. There is no text of Hindu law under which an illegitimate son of a Hindu by a woman who is not a Hindu can claim maintenance; but under this section such illegitimate child is entitled to claim maintenance from his putative father—Lingappa v. Esudason, 27 Mad. 13. Apart from the Hindu Law, maintenance is awardable in such cases on general principles; the defendant having begotten the child is bound to provide for its maintenance—Ghana Kanta v. Gereli, 32 Cal. 479. The father of an illegitimate child cannot get rid of statutory obligation under this Code to maintain that child by pleading that he is a Buddhist monk. The Criminal Procedure Code must override his personal law if it conflicts with it—U Thiri v. Ma Pwa, 4 U.B.R. 138, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 131, 24 Cr.L.J. 368.

On the other hand, the provision in the Cr. P. Code does not take away any right conferred by the Hindu Law. Thus, under this Code, the illegitimate daughters are entitled to claim maintenance only from their father, but under the Hindu law, they can claim maintenance not only from their father but also from his co-parceners who took his property by survivorship—Nataranjan v. Mutha, 22 L.W. 650, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 261.

1272A. Procedure:—Proceedings under this section are not complaints and hence it is not legally necessary for the wife to be examined before issue of process—Nur Muhammad v. Harjan, 36 Cr.L.J. 792, 153 I.C. 609, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 946, 36 P.L.R. 181, 1934 Cr.C. 1334.

This section contemplates applications by a wife or a child. When maintenance is claimed for the child, the application should be made by the mother as guardian of the child and for the child—Kumli, 25 Cr.L.J. 1249, 82 I.C. 257, A.I.R. 1925 All. 73.

An application for maintenance under this section should not be dismissed on the failure on the part of the applicant to comply with an order for payment of process fees—Ponnammal, 16 Mad. 234. See Note 1292.

1272B. Maintain:—Maintenance is not intended to go further than to insure to the wife or children food, clothing and lodging. It does not include education—Nga Hla v. Mi Hla Kyu, 4 I.C. 758, U.B.R. (1907-1909) Cr. P. C., p. 17, 11 Cr.L.J. 40; Kumli, 25 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1251), 82 I.C. 257, A.I.R. 1925 All. 73. In criminal law maintenance would not include cost of College education—Shanno Debi v. Daya Ram, 147 I.C. 719, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1026, 1934 Cr.C. 12, 35 Cr.L.J. 473, 35 P.L.R. 320. But see Maung Shwe Ba v. Ma Thein Nya, 40 Cr.L.J. 440 (441), 180 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 95, 1938 Rang. 673, 11 R. Rang. 423 where it has been held that the meaning of "maintenance" as used in this section includes the education of children, that is to say, the minimum amount of education which the conventions of the country call for. See also Note 1279.

1273. Who can be ordered:—An undivided son living with his father can be ordered to maintain his wife under this section—Ramasami, 13 Mad. 17. The mere fact that the defendant is 16 years of age only and studying at school will not by itself be a sufficient cause for his being relieved of the liability imposed by this section of providing for his illegitimate child—Koer v. Roshun Lal, 4 N.W.P. 123.

The order may be passed only against the father or husband, as the case may be. This section does not authorise a Magistrate to order the father-in-law to pay maintenance to his daughter-in-law—Miran, 1903 P.R. 26, 1 Cr.L.J. 110. Nor can the father-in-law and the husband be made jointly liable for the maintenance of the wife.

'Of sufficient means':—Before an order is passed under this section it must be proved that the person ordered has sufficient means to support his wife and children—Payaji v. Dudhnath, 1882 A.W.N. 179. If he has sufficient means, he is not relieved of the obligation to maintain his wife on the ground that the wife has means of earning money by her own labour—Ghurbin v. Gobindi, 1887 A.W.N. 107; or that the wife has relations able and willing to maintain her—Veluth Ahmed, 2 Weir 615; Chanda v. Rama Misari, 16 Cr.L.J. 80 (Mad.)

A Magistrate is not justified in absolutely refusing to order maintenance to be paid to the wife on the ground that the husband is a man of slender means. In such a case, only a small amount will be ordered—Chockingam, 2 Weir 617. So also, the fact that the father is a professional beggar does not relieve him from his obligation to maintain his illegitimate child. If a man is capable of labour, and the Magistrate is satisfied that the child is his child, he should order the payment of a reasonable sum—Boya Kondanma, 2 Weir 616. The word 'means' in this section does not signify only visible means, such as real property or definite employment. If a man is healthy and able-bodied he must be held to have the means to support his wife; and he cannot be relieved of this obligation on the ground that he is only 19 years old and unemployed—In re Kandasamy, 1926 M.W.N. 146, 92 I.C. 862, 50 M.L.J. 44, 27 Cr.L.J. 350. The word 'sufficient means' includes a capacity to earn money; and if a man can be shown to be capable of earning money, he has then the 'means' to maintain his wife. Prima facie, a man 26 years old must be presumed to be capable of earning money. But it is open to him to rebut that presumption by showing that in fact because of disease, accident or labour market he is not capable of earning anything—Muni Kantivijayari, 56 Bom. 260, 34 Bom.L.R. 587, 1932 Cr.C. 397, 33 Cr.L.J. 625, 138 I.C. 517, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 285, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 385; Ganga Devi v. Ram Sarup, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 24, 179 I.C. 766, 11 R.L. 624, 41 P.L.R. 161. The words "sufficient means" should not be confined to the actual pecuniary resources but should have reference to the earning capacity. Where the husband is a vigorous man in the prime of life and is able to earn sufficient if he wishes and the amount granted to the wife is not more than is necessary for her simple needs, the order should be upheld—Abdul v. Sugrabi, 37 Cr.L.J. 86, 159 I.C. 120, 18 N.L.J. 107. So also, the mere fact that the husband is a young boy of 16 is not a ground for granting merely nominal maintenance. He must make serious endeavour to find work, and must pay sufficient maintenance to his wife—Ma E Sin v. Mg Hla, 4 Bur.L.J. 258, 27 Cr.L.J. 725. In a Burma case it has been held that in the case of a Pongyi or Buddhist priest, the presumption is that he possesses no property except such as is necessary for his religious life and which is held under conditions which do not make it available for other purposes; and a woman who allows herself to be seduced by a member of the priesthood cannot obtain any maintenance for her child; she ought to have known beforehand that a priest has no money—Ma E Shi v. Aditsa, 1 Bur.L.J. 97, 24 Cr.L.J. 510. But in another Burma case it has been held that a Buddhist monk cannot get rid of his statutory obligation under this Code to maintain his illegitimate child. If he is an able-bodied man, the presumption is that he has sufficient means to maintain himself and his child, and it is for him to prove the contrary. If he cannot pay the maintenance ordered if he remains a monk, it is his duty to throw off the yellow robe and work—U Thiri v. Ma Pua, 4 U.B.R. 138, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 131, 72 I.C. 368. The Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court accepted the view laid down in U Thiri v. Ma Pua, and held that a Burmese Buddhist monk is liable for the maintenance of his child—Maung Tin v. Ma Hmin, 34 Cr.L.J. 815, 144 I.C. 187, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 138, 11 Rang. 226, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 92 (F.B.), dissenting from Ma E Shi v. Aditsa, supra. A man by merely becoming a Jain Sadhu

is not in law excused from maintaining his wife. If, on the other hand, he can prove that by reason of the vows which he has taken he is incapable of holding any property or earning any money which will enable him to maintain his wife without incurring such serious consequences that no Court could expect him to incur, then he cannot be said to have sufficient means to maintain his wife—Muni Kantivipayaji, supra.

The onus is on the husband or father to show that he has no sufficient means to support his wife and children. An able-bodied man who is suffering from no physical infirmity will be presumed to have sufficient means to support himself and his family—Me Tha v. Nga San, 1911 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 90, 15 Cr.L.J. 162 (164), 13 I.C. 915.

1274. Neglect or refusal to maintain:—The first essential for proceedings under this section is that the person proceeded against should have neglected or refused to maintain his wife or children. If there is no evidence as to the neglect or refusal, an order for maintenance passed by the Magistrate is bad in law—Intazar v. Samidan, 27 O.C. 271, 1 O.W.N. 150, 20 Cr.L.J. 128; Gulabdas Bhaidas, 16 Bom. 269; Sita Debi v. Har Narain, 32 Cr.L.J. 196 (198), 129 I.C. 17, 1930 Cr.C. 982, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 886, 31 P.L.R. 876, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 97. Where the evidence was that since the separation had taken place, the husband was regularly paying Rs. 92 for the maintenance of his wife and children, it was held that the Magistrate was wrong in having entertained the petition at all—Graham v. Graham, 4 Bur.L.J. 11, 26 Cr.L.J. 831.

The neglect or refusal to maintain wife and children may be express or implied. The Court may infer the neglect or refusal from the conduct of the husband—Bhikaiji v. Maneckji, 9 Bom.L.R. 359, 5 Cr.L.J. 334. To give jurisdiction to a Magistrate, it is not necessary to prove express refusal to maintain; if the husband or father does not in fact maintain his wife or children, he is said to 'neglect or refuse' to maintain them—Ha Hun, 8 Bur.L.R. 96. Where the father has denied his paternity of the child, that is a fact from which the Court can infer neglect to maintain the child—6 S.L.R. 208, 14 Cr.L.J. 303. But where the husband is willing to maintain his wife and the wife is willing to live with her husband, i.e., where both parties are willing to live together, the fact that the wife deposes that though she is willing to live with her husband, the latter refuses to maintain her, will not lead the Court to infer that the husband is unwilling to maintain his wife—Phula Khan, 213 P.L.R. 1915, 16 Cr.L.J. 86.

This section is based on the principles that there is continuing obligation upon a father, who has sufficient means, to support his child. If a man who is bound to maintain his child continuously does not do so, he is deemed to have neglected to maintain, and proof of actual refusal to maintain is not necessary. The fact that the child is not in a starving condition is no answer to an application for maintenance—Ma Hnin v. Maung Myat, L.B.R. (1900-1902) 189; Baran v. Ma Chan, 2 Rang 682, 26 Cr.L.J. 535; Ha Hun Bya, 8 Bur.L.R. 96. See Ambirathu v. Lakshmi Amma, 1937 M.W.N. 985.

The fact that a lump sum has been paid to the wife in final settlement of all her claims is no answer to an application for maintenance, if in fact that money has been spent or lost or does not yield a sufficient income—Mi Le v. Ng. Paw Din, 1905 U.B.R. (Cr. P. C.) 45; Ma Hnin v. Maung Myat, L.B.R. (1900-1902) 189. See also Note 1276 under the heading "Effect of agreement or compromise". But where the father has given certain property to the mother for the maintenance of herself and the child, which yields sufficient monthly income and furnishes means of support, he cannot be said to have neglected to maintain his wife and child and an order cannot be made under this section—Maung Mya v. Ma Bok, U.B.R. (1897-1901) 108; Gangaraju v. Bhadrappa, 2 Weir 648.

A father's neglect to sue for the custody of a girl who has chosen to live within her mother who is living in adultery, cannot be deemed to be a neglect on his part to maintain the daughter—Parvathi v. Ramaswami, 2 Weir 630 (631). Where the father is entitled to the custody of children, and the mother who takes them away does not allow them to return to him, there is no such neglect or refusal to maintain them as is contemplated by this section—Venkatasubbaiyan, 2 Weir 632. Where the children who were being properly maintained while in the custody of their father, were dissuaded by their mother from his custody and went away to live with their mother, the refusal of the father to maintain them unless they returned to his custody, was not a refusal to maintain within the meaning of this section—Ma Shwe v Maung Po Chit, 8 L.B.R. 105, 16 Cr.L.J. 217, 27 I.C. 841. Where the wife (who has been deserted) is allowed maintenance under this section, the mere fact that the son is of tender years and that it is in the interests of the minor son that he should be left with the mother till the father is able to get the custody of the minor son from the Civil Court, is not sufficient to invest the Criminal Court with jurisdiction as regards the son, unless it can be shown that the father has neglected or refused to maintain the boy—Sita Devi v. Har Narain, 31 P.L.R. 876, 1930 Cr.C. 982 (1935), 32 Cr.L.J. 196, 129 I.C. 17, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 886, Ind. Rul. 1937 Lah. 97.

Where a husband, whose wife has deserted him and has taken the child with her, is prepared to take the child, it cannot be held that the father is neglecting or refusing to maintain the child. The father may apply to a Civil Court for the custody of the child, but meanwhile he is bound to pay maintenance for the child, even though it is living with its mother, for the child cannot be allowed to starve merely because its father and mother do not live together—Maung San v. Ma Lai, 10 Rang. 486, 1932 Cr.C. 818, 140 I.C. 150, 33 Cr.L.J. 918, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 183, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 217; Ma Shwe Kyin v. Maung San Nyein, 38 Cr.L.J. 782, 169 I.C. 428, 10 R.R. 5, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 205. The negligence lies in the fact that from the time the child left his protection he has been making no contribution towards his support—Ma Shwe Kyin v. Maung San Nyein, supra.

Before passing an order under this section, the Magistrate ought to ascertain whether the husband has been called upon to maintain his wife. Where the husband has not been called upon to do so, and the wife was living with her father who refused to allow her to live with her husband without a money payment from him, the Magistrate cannot make an order for maintenance—Somree v. Jitun, 22 W.R. 30.

The neglect or refusal must be a present neglect or refusal. Where a wife, subsequent to her application for maintenance, came to live with her husband and compromised her claim, but prayed for an order of the Magistrate to the effect that if her husband failed to maintain her in future, he should pay her a certain allowance, it was held that the Magistrate could not pass such order but must dismiss the application, as no present refusal or neglect was established—Kuppa Mudali, 2 Weir 630. But where the husband neglected his wife for a number of years, the fact that he has succeeded by means of a subterfuge in making her live in his house for a short while during the pendency of an application for maintenance made by her, should not be allowed to affect the decision of the application—Ghulam Mohammad v. Allah Rakhi, 41 Cr.L.J. 107, 185 I.C. 69, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 533, 41 P.L.R. 605. See also Note 1286 under the heading "Wife returning to her husband."

1275. Right of wife to maintenance:—To justify an order under this section, it must be shown that the complainant is the wife of the defendant—Gulabdas, 16 Bom. 269; Lakshmi Ambalām v. Audiammal, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 66 (67), 1937 M.Cr.C. 317, 1937 M.W.N. 1131, 46 M.L.W. 766, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 885, 172 I.C. 811, 39 Cr.L.J. 228. The condition precedent to a right of maintenance, in the case of a wife, is the existence of a conjugal relation—In re Din Mahomed, 5 All. 226. It is only on proof of the relationship of husband and wife that an order of maintenance should be made; but where such relationship has ceased to exist, an order already made may be stayed—Sobhan v. Subraton, 5 Cal. 558. No order for maintenance can be passed under this section as against the husband, in favour of the wife, where there is no proof that the latter is the lawfully married wife of the former, according to his personal law—Wa Foon v. Ma Thein, 7 Bur.L.T. 71, 15 Cr.L.J. 484; Pua Me v. San Hal, 7 L.B.R. 270, 16 Cr.L.J. 39. Among Jats, Karoo marriage is a valid marriage, and the woman is entitled to maintenance—Bahadur Singh, 4 N.W.P. 128. A muta wife is entitled to maintenance under this section, though she is not so entitled under the Mahomedan law

—Luddun Saheba v. Mirza, 8 Cal. 736. A marriage between a Naidu and an Adi Dravida, is valid and the Adi Dravida wife can claim maintenance against her Naidu husband under this section—Manickam v. Poongavanammal, 35 Cr.L.J. 852, 148 I.C. 921, 39 M.L.W. 439, 1934 M.W.N. 185, A.I.R. 1934 Mad. 323, 66 M.L.J. 543, A.I.R. 1934 Mad 116.

Where on an application made by the wife for maintenance, the husband denies the validity of the marriage, it is for the Magistrate to decide such question in his own Court. It is erroneous to leave the wife to establish her claim by a civil suit—Mangli v. Ganda Singh, 23 P.L.R. 230, 1932 Cr.C. 381 (382), A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 301, 33 Cr.L.J. 447, 137 I.C. 30, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 312. The Calcutta High Court has, however, held that if the husband wishes to impeach the validity of his marriage, he should bring a declaratory suit in a Civil Court when the whole question can be investigated and authorities pros and cons canvassed in this regard. The Magistrate or the High Court ought not to be burdened with the decision of a point of personal civil law which could not possibly concern it. Therefore a claim for maintenance made by a wife under this section cannot be resisted on the ground that the parties were not lawfully married, both having been born Indian Christians and married according to Hindu rites on conversion to Hinduism—Edward Sailendra v. Snehalata, 41 C.W.N. 898.

A woman is not entitled to maintenance if she has lived with a man as his wife for 12 years and has also borne him a child. Only legally married women are entitled to maintenance—Lakshmi Ambalam v. Andiammal, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 66, 1937 M.Cr.C. 317, 1937 M.W.N. 1131, 46 M.L.W. 766, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 885, 172 I.C. 811, 39 Cr.L.J. 228. A man of uncertain religion and a Burmese Buddhist woman lived together for 13 years as a man and wife with the repute of being such. There was no proof that the man was a Buddhist and that they were married according to Burmese Buddhist rites. The woman claimed maintenance against the man under this section. Held that the presumption of marriage could not arise from the fact of co-habitation with habit and repute for a number of years and that she was not entitled to maintenance—Singleyo v. Ma To, 35 Cr.L.J. 1502, 151 I.C. 1089, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 166, 1934 Cr.C. 783. Where a Muhammadan married a Buddhist woman, she is to be regarded as a wife for purposes of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Even in the eye of the Muhammadan Law, she appears to be so regarded and it is in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience that she should be so regarded—Maung Pakhtan v. Ma Sau, 40 Cr.L.J. 653, 182 I.C. 259, 12 R.R. 1, A.I.R. 1939 Rang 207. The parties were both Madras of the domestic servant class, and were probably people of low caste, among whom nika marriages were recognized. The marriage, if it took place at all, took place some 17 or 18 years ago, and there was no evidence that the priest who celebrated the marriage was dead. They lived together as man and wife for many years and in a passport issued to the woman some eight years ago, she was described as the wife of the man. There was proof of admission made by the man to his landlord, in whose house they lived for many years as man and wife, that she was his wife. Held that in these circumstances it would not be reasonable to expect very strict proof of the actual celebration of the marriage—Bogis Mangati v. Applama, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 866, 59 Cal. 1257, 1932 Cr.C. 890, 34 Cr.L.J. 108, 140 I.C. 876.

There is no warrant for holding that a dancing girl once dedicated to a temple can never re-marry; and hence there is no bar to award her maintenance under this section against her husband—Ramanuja Mudaliar v. Nagarathnammal, 1937 M.W.N. 735.

Effect of divorce:—A Muhammadan wife is entitled to maintenance up to the date of divorce—Sha Abu v. Ulfat Bibi, 19 All. 50, 1896 A.W.N. 173. Even after divorce, she is entitled to maintenance during the iddat. This part of the personal law of the parties has not been abrogated by sec. 488, Cr. P. Code—Shekhan Mian, 31 Cr.L.J. 1110, 126 I.C. 893, 32 Bom.L.R. 582, 1930 Cr.C. 610; Ghulam v. Nias, 1905 P.R. 5, 2 Cr.L.J. 40; Gulam Mohidin v. Kasara, 2 Weir 617; Syed Saib v. Meeran, 0 Cr.L.J. 502, 20 M.L.J. 12. There is nothing in the provisions of this section which suggest that a husband can avoid payment of sums which a Magistrate might order to be paid under sec. 488 (2), Cr. P. C., by divorcing his wife in the middle of the proceedings. The proper date to be considered is a date on which the application is made. If, on the date on which the application is made, relations of husband and wife exist, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass an order under sec. 488 (2) directing the husband to pay sums due on account of maintenance from the date of the application until the period of iddat has expired—Mahomed Nagman v. Zullekhan, 0 Cr.L.J. 814 (815), 183 I.C. 536, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 179, 12 R.S. 58, I.L.R. 1939 Lar 659. But an order for maintenance subsequent to the expiration of the iddat is illegal, unless pregnancy is alleged—Gulam Mohidin, 2 Weir 617; Murad, 1888 A.W.N. 16; Mahomed Husain v. Ma Pwa, 13 Bur L.T. 43, 56 I.C. 663; Mariam v. Kadir, 6 A.W.N. 942, 1929 Cr.C. 625, 5 Luck. 442.

When a husband pleads non-liability to maintain his wife on the ground of his having divorced her, the Magistrate is bound to entertain and enquire into such plea, and determine on such evidence as may be adduced before him whether the plea is a valid one. Unless the relation of husband and wife exists between them, the Magistrate has no authority to pass an order for maintenance as between husband and wife. If he finds the plea established, he cannot order maintenance—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50; Khaja Sharfoodeen, 2 Weir 620; Hasen Chanea v. Mi Sin, 16 Cr.L.J. 531, 1915 U.B.R. 1st. Qr. 3. Where a Magistrate makes an order under this section, the order becomes functus officio on a subsequent divorce of the wife by the husband—Jadi, 17 O.C. 260, 15 Cr.L.J. 646. Where there has been a divorce by mutual consent, the order of maintenance passed in favour of wife cannot stand—Maung Tin U v. Ma Hla Kyi, 38 Cr.L.J. 913, 170 I.C. 13, 10 R.Rang 79, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 246.

1276. Right of children to maintenance:—The child must be born; no order can be passed under this section for the maintenance of a foetus, when it is believed that a woman is pregnant. Until it is born, it can hardly be regarded as a child—Arlee v. Bunsee, 3 N.W.P. 70; Anonymous, 2 Weir 618.

The word 'child' in this section simply means son or daughter. Reference to age is purposely omitted, the object being that any son or daughter is entitled to maintenance so long as he or she is unable to maintain himself or herself—Bhagat Singh, 11 Cr.L.J. 27, 1910 P.W.R. 28; Ma E Mya v. U Ko Ko Gyi, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 370 (372), 171 I.C. 800. In Krishnasamy v. Chandravadana, 37 Mad. 565, 1913 M.W.N. 695, 20 C. 1005, 14 M.L.T. 224, 25 M.L.J. 349, 14 Cr.L.J. 525; Baran Shanta v. Ma Chin Tha Ma, 26 Cr.L.J. 535, 85 I.C. 375, 2 Rang. 628, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 197; and Gangaramsa v. Vishnusa, 23 Cr.L.J. 167, it has been held that the word "child" means one who has not attained majority. The same view has been taken in Channo Debi v. Daya Ram, 35 Cr.L.J. 473, 35 P.L.R. 320, 147 I.C. 719, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1026, 1934 Cr.C. 12 and Hemanta v. Monorama, 36 Cr.L.J. 1114, 157 I.C. 365, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 488, 19 C.W.N. 432, 61 C.L.J. 141, 62 Cal. 639, 1935 Cr.C. 880. See also Note 1277.

The defendant may be ordered to pay maintenance for his own children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, but not for the child of another person, e.g., for a daughter of his wife by her first husband—Abdul Rahim v. Amir Begum, 7 Lah. 365, 27 Cr.L.J. 610.

Legitimate children:—A child born during the continuance of the form of marriage known as Sambandham and prevalent among the Nayar community in Malabar, is entitled to maintenance under this section—Venkataskrishna v. Chimmukuttee, 22 Mad. 246; Ayya Patter v. Kalfani, 22 Mad. 247 (foot-note). Children of a Nikah wife are legitimate and entitled to maintenance—Sheikh Moneerooddeen v. Ramdhan, 18 W.R. 28.

Illegitimate children:—An order under this section may be passed for the maintenance of legitimate as well as illegitimate children. The basis of an application for the maintenance of a child under this section is the paternity of the child irrespective of its legitimacy or illegitimacy—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla, 16 Cal. 781. But before an order for the maintenance of illegitimate children is passed, it must be proved that the man against whom the woman proceeds was the father of the children—Hira Lal v. Saheb Jan, 18 All. 107. In a case where the question at issue is, whether a certain man is the father of a certain child, it is prima facie improper to accept without corroboration the mere statement on oath of the mother who asserts the paternity—Vedanthachari v. Marie, 27 Cr.L.J. 1095, 97 I.C. 359, 24 M.L.W. 409, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 1130. Where maintenance is claimed for an illegitimate child from an alleged father, it is not enough that the defendant may have been the father; but the Magistrate must be able to find that in all reasonability no one else can have been the father—Arunachella v. Kamala, 2 Weir 621. The Magistrate is not justified in holding that the child is the child of the defendant on the ground of the similarity of the features and the name of the child with those of the defendant—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla, 16 Cal. 781.

Independently of any legislative enactment the law of Malabar does not recognise marriage as a legal institution, the relation being in truth not marriage but a state of concubinage into which the woman enters of her own choice and is at liberty to change when and so often as she pleases and the offspring of such a connection would be entitled to an order for maintenance against the father only if and when the mother's tavazhi or tarwad is unable to maintain them—Raman v. Parvathi, 34 Cr.L.J. 1159, 145 I.C. 970, 38 M.L.W. 587, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 794, 1933 Cr.C. 1399, 65 M.L.J. 629, 1933 M.W.N. 1276.

Adopted child:—An adopted child does not fall within the phrase "his legitimate or illegitimate child" in this section. Therefore an adoptive father is not liable under this section to pay maintenance to his adopted child—Nanu Nair v. Puthan Veetil Kathayini Amma, 38 Cr.L.J. 602, 168 I.C. 782, 45 M.L.W. 431, 1937 M.W.N. 464, (1937) 1 M.L.J. 618, 9 R.M. 648, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 547, I.L.R. 1937 Mad 775; Ma E Mya v. U Ko Ko Gyi, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 370, 171 I.C. 800.

Children in custody of mother:—Where a mother has the custody of a child and has to maintain it, she is entitled to claim maintenance on its account—Vaithilinga, 2 Weir 630. And the father cannot refuse to maintain his children on the ground that they are living with their mother. If he wants to have them in his custody, he must enforce his right, if any, in the Civil Court—Murugesu v. Sodiamma, 8 Bur.L.T. 134, 16 Cr.L.J. 656, 30 I.C. 480; Mi Saw v. S, 7 I.C. 460, (1910) U.B.R. 1. See also Maung San v. Ma Lai, 10 Rang. 486 cited in Note 1274, ante. This view of law has not been accepted in—Sita Devi v. Har Narain, 32 Cr.L.J. 196 (198), 129 I.C. 17, 1930 Cr.C. 982, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 886, 31 P.L.R. 876, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 97, where it has been laid down that however desirable such an arrangement might be, it is not sufficient to invest Criminal Courts with jurisdiction under sec. 488 as the neglect or refusal on the part of the father to maintain the child cannot be presumed in such a case. Under the Mahomedan law, the mother is the lawful guardian of her minor daughter, and is entitled to her custody; consequently, the daughter living with her mother can claim maintenance from her father; and the order cannot be refused on the ground that the father is willing to maintain her daughter if her custody is given to him—Sarfraz v. Miran, 9 Lah. 313, 29 Cr.L.J. 1052 (1053), 112 I.C. 476, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 543, 29 P.L.R. 401; Zahura Bi v. Muhammad Yusuf, 129 I.C. 216, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1043, 32 Cr.L.J. 247, 32 P.L.R. 143, 1930 Cr.C. 1219, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 152; Mahomed Jusub v. Haji Adam, 37 Bom. 71, 15 I.C. 520, 14 Bom.L.R. 336; Moideen, 21 I.C. 469, 14 Cr.L.J. 597, 14 M.L.T. 223, 25 M.W.N. 355, 1913 M.W.N. 997; Allah Rakhi v. Karam Ilahi, 35 Cr.L.J. 344, 147 I.C. 123, 14 Lah. 770, 1933 Cr.C. 1457, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 969, 35 P.L.R. 34. Where maintenance was claimed by a Mahomedan wife for herself and her children and her husband made a bona fide offer to maintain them in his own house, which his wife unreasonably refused to accept and her application was accordingly dismissed, held that the Magistrate should have awarded maintenance to the children, whose legal guardian their mother was, and who could not, therefore, be taken separately to live with their father—Mohideen Bi v. Bashu Sahib, A.I.R. 1937

Mad. 809, 1937 M.W.N. 565, 46 M.L.W. 318, 171 I.C. 905, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 278, 1937 M.Cr.C. 179; Akhতার Begum v. Abdul Rashid, 38 Cr.L.J. 672, 168 I.C. 896, 9 R.L. 699, 38 P.L.R. 1117, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 236. An enquiry into Muhammadan Law as to custody of children is not made necessary by the Statute law (the Code of Criminal Procedure) which governs these proceedings. The mother is the proper person to have custody of a child of four and the father must maintain that child—Akhতার Begum v. Abdul Rashid, supra. A divorced wife is, under the Mahomedan law, as well as under the Marumakatayam law, entitled to the custody of her children, and the father is not thereby relieved of his liability to maintain them—Ayshabai, 6 Bom.L.R. 536, 1 Cr.L.J. 599; Kariyadam v. Kayat Beeran, 15 Mad. 461; In re Parathy, 25 M.L.J. 355, 14 Cr.L.J. 597 (598). But where a child has left its father and has chosen to live with its mother who is leading a life of adultery since she left her husband, the father cannot be directed to pay an allowance to the child under this section—Parvathi v. Ramaswami, 2 Weir 630 (631). See also 8 L.B.R. 105 cited in Note 1274, ante.

Children in custody of guardian:—If the father is entitled to the custody of his children as their lawful guardian, he cannot be compelled to pay for their maintenance, if they live separately from him. But if another person is appointed guardian of the children, then the father is liable to maintain them while they are living with such guardian—Sardar Muhammad v. Nur Muhammad, 1917 P.R. 22, 18 Cr.L.J. 811 (815).

Offer to maintain children:—If, at the trial, the father makes an offer to maintain his children on condition that they should live with him, the offer is not sufficient to oust the Magistrate of his jurisdiction, if as a matter of fact the father has paid nothing for the maintenance of his children for several years—Kent v. Kent, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597; Kambu Ammal v. Ranganathan, 1924 M.W.N. 465, 25 Cr.L.J. 94; Mi Gauk v. Nga Po, 2 Cr.L.J. 830, 1905 U.B.R. Cr.P.C. 39. If in fact the father has neglected or refused to maintain his children in the past, the Magistrate can make an order for the payment of monthly allowance for the maintenance of the children, in spite of his offer to maintain the children. Otherwise in those cases where the children are very young, a man, knowing full well that no mother would part with such children, has simply to make an ostensible offer to keep the children with him, and he can thus defeat an application for maintenance. The Magistrate will be entitled to consider the circumstances in which the offer was made, and whether it is right and proper that the children, if not in the custody of the father, should be handed over to him—David Sasson, 49 Bom. 562, 27 Bom.L.R. 359, 26 Cr.L.J. 975. If the children are too young (e.g., daughters aged 5 to 10), it is in their interests that they should remain with their mother; and a separate maintenance will be granted to them, in spite of the father's offer to maintain them—In re Bas Manek, 52 Bom. 763, 29 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050). But the Punjab Chief Court has held that if the father offers to maintain his children on condition that they should live with him, the Magistrate should refrain from passing an order against him—Sardar Muhammad v. Nur Muhammad, 1917 P.R. 22, 18 Cr.L.J. 811 (815); Ralla v. Atti, 1914 P.L.R. 115, 15 Cr.L.J. 529; Sultan v. Mahtab, 27 P.L.R. 233, 27 Cr.L.J. 1319; Man Singh v. Dharman, 1894 P.R. 18. The Chief Court further holds that although past neglect by a father to support his children may be a cogent factor in deciding that at the time of the application the father is neglecting or refusing to maintain his children, still it should not be considered as sufficient by itself to hold that the offer is not made in good faith. If a father offers to maintain his children on condition that they should live with him, the Magistrate should refrain from passing an order for maintenance until the father has had an opportunity of proving that his offer is made in good faith—Sardar Muhammad, supra. The same Court has, however, taken a different view and has held that in the case of a minor who is living with its legal guardian the condition imposed by the father that he would maintain it only if the child want to reside with him, is tantamount to a refusal to maintain the child—Sarfaraz v. Miran, 9 Lah. 313, 29 Cr.L.J. 1052, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 39, 112 I.C. 476, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 543, 29 P.L.R. 401; Zahura v. Muhammad Yusuf, 32 Cr.L.J. 247, 129 I.C. 216, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1013, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 152, 32 P.L.R. 143, 1930 Cr.C. 1219.

Effect of agreement or compromise:—Obligation to maintain a child is a statutory obligation and the parties cannot contract themselves out of it. Thus, the father cannot divest himself of his liability to maintain his child, by an agreement with his wife—Alla Pichai, 2 Weir 648; Maung Tin U v. Ma Hla Kyi, 38 Cr.L.J. 913, 170 I.C. 13, A.I.R. 1937 Rang 246, 10 R.Rang. 79. The language of this section is inconsistent with the capacity of a wife to make a contract absolving her husband from his statutory liability. So, where a wife first applied for maintenance but on receipt of a lump sum from her husband withdrew her application, and later on, again applied stating that the lump amount had been expended, and the respondent (husband) objected that the lump amount had been paid in final settlement of all her claims, held that the Magistrate should inquire whether the settlement made by the husband still furnishes sufficient means for the wife's support; but if the money has been in fact spent or lost, the wife is entitled to maintenance. The object of the law being to prevent his wife, whom her husband is able to support, from becoming a burden on other people, this object would not be obtained by a contract which ultimately leaves the wife to the charity of her neighbours. The section does not say that a wife is not entitled to maintenance if she is able to maintain herself, or if she has made a bad use of the money which her husband gave her sometime back—Mi Lee v. Nga Paw, U.B.R. 1905 Cr.P.C. 54. The mere fact that sec. 488, sub-sec. (1), Cr. P. C., refers to monthly allowances and monthly rates of allowances merely shows that the Court has taken the month as a convenient unit whereby to calculate allowances. It does not show that independently of an order of the Court lump sums cannot be paid for the maintenance of a child. Of course this lump sum is not a complete answer to future applications by the woman. If at any time she finds that she has nothing left of this sum she can apply to the Court for a fresh order for maintenance, and there will be no obstacle then to this fresh order in the fact that this lump sum had been paid on a previous occasion—Maung Tin U v. Ma Hla Kyi, supra. But it has been held in Yerukula Jagabandhu v. Jamuna, 2 Weir 631, that where the mother of the illegitimate children renounced on their behalf all future claims of maintenance by a document on payment of a certain sum by the father, the Magistrate was not competent to pass any further order for maintenance unless there was proof of fraud in the execution of the document, or unless it was proved that there was a valid subsequent oral agreement in supersession of the document. In another Madras case it has been stated that a compromise by the lawful guardian of a minor acting bona fide for his benefit cannot be set aside even at his instance, except upon proof of fraud—Parvathi v. Ramaswami, 2 Weir 630.

But there can be no doubt that when a compromise made by the guardian of a minor does not appear to be for his benefit, and it is very likely that he would be materially injured by a manifestly inadequate adjustment of his maintenance claim under the section, the compromise will not bind the minor nor any one acting as guardian after the mother's death—Hildephonsus v. Malone, 1885 P.R. 13.

Anything short of a decree entitling the wife to maintenance is not sufficient to take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. Where there was an agreement between the husband and the wife that the amount of maintenance should be Rs. 7 per month but the agreement was not acted upon in the sense that arrears of maintenance for one year accrued, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to take action under this section—Saraswati v. Narayan, 33 Cr.L.J. 634, 138 I.C. 613, 36 C.W.N. 571, 55 C.L.J. 341, 59 Cal. 1229, 1932 Cr.C. 653, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 698, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 471.

1277. 'Unable to maintain itself':—The words 'unable to maintain itself' refer to the child and not to the wife—Nga Po, 10 Bur.L.R. 166.

The father is bound to maintain the child if it is unable to maintain itself, even though its mother may be able to maintain it. The question as to the means of the mother is not to be taken into account; the true criterion is the inability of the child to support itself—Mt Them v. Nga Po, 15 Cr L.J. 278, 7 Bur L.T. 34. A father who has sufficient means is bound to maintain his child who is under the age of majority; and, in fixing the sum payable, no regard should be paid to the fact that the child is able to contribute towards its own support by means of labour or work of any kind—Baran Shanta v. Ma Chan Tha Ma, 26 Cr L.J. 535, 85 I.C. 375, 2 Rang. 628, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 197. The fact that the child belongs to a well-to-do tarwad does not relieve the father from his liability to maintain it. The inability referred to in this section relates to the absence of sufficient maturity of physical and mental development in the child rendering it in consequence unable to earn its living by its own efforts, and does not refer to inability through poverty or absence of all means—In re Parathi, 25 M.L.J. 355, 14 Cr.L.J. 597 (598), 13 M.W.N. 997. But in Chanta v. Chakkapayan, 39 Mad. 957 and Kariyadan v. Kayal Beeran, 19 Mad. 461, it has been held that this section has no application to cases where the children are being maintained by a tarward which is bound by law to maintain them. The words 'unable to maintain itself' cannot be confined to the tender age of the child but have also reference to its financial position. Therefore, where there are enough funds to support the child in the tarward to which it belongs, it cannot be said to be unable to maintain itself—Thillu Amma v. Sankunni, 37 M.L.J. 361, 52 I.C. 893, 20 Cr L.J. 733. The offspring of a sambandham marriage are entitled to maintenance from their tavazhi, and if the tavazhi or tarward has sufficient means to maintain them, they are not entitled to an order of maintenance under this section—In re Bharata Aiyar, 46 M.L.J. 324.

A child who is deaf and dumb and unable to maintain itself is entitled to maintenance even though it may have attained majority—In re Todd, 5 N.W.P. 237. A minor girl earning her living by prostitution will still be considered as "unable to maintain herself" because prostitution is not to be treated as a profession by which a girl can maintain herself for the purpose of this section—37 Mad. 565. Where the minor girl is married, the person bound to maintain her is not her natural father but her husband—Bhojan Lal v. Swarna, 11 C.W.N. 100 (short notes). A minor married girl, whose husband is willing to maintain her, cannot be regarded as a person unable to maintain herself, and her father cannot be ordered to maintain her on the ground that the husband is not bound to maintain his wife until she attains puberty—Gurusami Pillai, 2 Weir 650. But if it in spite of her marriage the girl still remains unable to maintain herself either because her husband is too poor to maintain her or for any other good reason; the father's liability to maintain the child would still exist—Meenakshi v. Karupanna, 48 Mad. 503, 48 M.L.J. 183, 26 Cr L.J. 732. The child is entitled to get maintenance until it is able to maintain itself; the Magistrate is not justified in ordering maintenance 'till the child attains the age of 14'; a Magistrate has no power to fix an arbitrary age limit up to which the child will get maintenance—2 P.L.T. 109. A Mahomedan girl aged between 15 to 16 years is not a child able to maintain herself and her father may rightly be ordered to maintain her—S. A. Haldar v. Sajura Bibi, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 518, 172 I.C. 879. Where a boy is aged 17 or 18 and is able to work and earn his living, he cannot be said to be 'unable to maintain himself' and he cannot compel his father to educate him in a college and thus better his prospect—1 Bur.L.J. 123. But a boy of 11 years must be deemed to be a child 'unable to maintain itself', and is entitled to maintenance; it would be contrary to public policy to encourage child labour by holding that a boy of 11 years should contribute towards his own support by work, when he should be in school—Baran Shanta v. Ma Chan, 2 Rang. 682, 26 Cr.L.J. 535, 85 I.C. 375, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 197. A father who has sufficient means is bound to maintain his child who is under the age of majority, and in fixing the sum payable, no regard should be paid to the fact that the child is able to contribute towards its own support by means of labour or work of any kind—Ma E Shi v. U San Kai, 40 Cr.L.J. 241 (242), 179 I.C. 643, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 67, 11 R.Rang. 336.

A boy under 18 years of age can ask for maintenance from his parent so long as he is unable to earn his own living, even though that inability results from his taking an educational course provided the said educational course is not being undergone with the object of inflicting upon the parent the burden of maintenance—Shanno Debi v. Daya Ram, 147 I.C. 719, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1026, 1934 Cr.C. 12, 35 Cr.L.J. 473, 35 P.L.R. 320; Hemanta v. Manorama, 36 Cr.L.J. 1114, 157 I.C. 365, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 488, 39 C.W.N. 432, 61 C.L.J. 141, 62 Cal. 639, 1935 Cr.C. 880.

See Note 1276.

1278. Order for maintenance:—Evidence:—The trial Court is entitled to act if it thinks fit upon the evidence of the wife. The law does not require corroboration in cases of this kind, though, of course, such corroboration is always desirable. Where the circumstances strongly support the wife's testimony, the Magistrate is right in accepting it—Bathulu Bhagirathi v. Bathulu Lakshmi Devi, 41 Cr.L.J. 718 (719), 189 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 242.

Compromise:—The only order that can be passed under this section is either an order allowing maintenance or an order dismissing the application for maintenance. He cannot pass any other order. Where a claim for maintenance is compromised by the parties, the Magistrate is not competent to pass an order in accordance with the terms of the compromise. He can only dismiss the petition and strike it off the file. To pass an order in terms of the compromise would be to assume the functions of the Civil Court—Lingadu v. Labbakka, 2 Weir 629; Kuppa Mudali, 2 Weir 630. In a later case it has, however, been held that the Magistrate has no power to dismiss an application under this section on the ground that the case has been compromised. It is his duty to pass an order awarding maintenance at a certain amount arrived at in pursuance of the agreement between the parties and mentioned in the joint petition filed by them—Rama Bai v. Bhoja Rao, 1937 M.W.N. 640. Where there was a compromise it could not be said that there was refusal to maintain a wife and, therefore, a Magistrate should not pass an order under this section—Jai'Dial, 42 P.R. 1888. Even if an order is passed by a Magistrate in terms of the compromise, the order cannot be enforced by Criminal Courts but can be enforced only by Civil Courts—Sham Singh v. Hakam Devi, 1930 Cr.C. 623 (624), 31 Cr.L.J. 1179, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 524; Raham Ali v. Fateh Bibi, 108 P.L.T. 1905, 2 Cr.L.J. 690 (692).

Where a husband has in fact neglected or refused to maintain his wife and has thus forced her to make an application under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., his entering into a compromise to pay her a fixed monthly allowance when summoned before the Court, without any attempt to rebut the wife's allegation cannot be said to annul his previous refusal to maintain her so as to take the case outside the provisions of sec. 488, but where such compromise contemplates the passing of an order under sec. 488, an order in the terms of the compromise can properly be passed by the Criminal Court under that section—Lee v. Lee, 34 Cr.L.J. 744, 144 I.C. 51, 10 O.W.N. 374, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 119, 1933 Cr.C. 270, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 226; Birch v. Birch, 34 Cr.L.J. 238, 141 I.C. 805, 9 O.W.N. 1189, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 87, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 122, 1933 Cr.C. 273. The Madras High Court differed from the view of the Lahore High Court as expressed in Budhu Ram v. Khem Devi, 95 I.C. 315, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 469, 27 Cr.L.J. 779 and Sham Singh v. Hakim Devi, 127 I.C. 13, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 524, 31 Cr.L.J. 1179, 1930 Cr.C. 623, and held that if the passing of an order under this section is an essential part of the compromise the Court could not refuse to enforce the order, merely because it was based on a compromise and if the compromise was entirely independent of the Court, the Court would be under no necessity to pass an order under sec. 488, Cr. P. C.—Mangayamma v. Appalaswami, 32 Cr.L.J. 688, 131 I.C. 173, 60 M.L.J. 213, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 185, 33 M.L.W. 405, 1931 M.W.N. 327, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 509, 1931 Cr.C. 226. Following this ruling the Lahore High Court has held that merely because the parties agreed as to what was the proper rate of maintenance, does not mean that sec. 488, Cr. P. C., is no longer applicable; nor does it mean that it can no longer be said that the husband had neglected or refused to maintain his wife—Hakim Devi v. Sham Singh, 32 Cr.L.J. 993, 132 I.C. 854, 1931 Cr.C. 862, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 694, 13 Lah. 313. The parties can compromise before the Magistrate by agreeing among themselves as to what is the proper rate of maintenance. But if the compromise is with respect to other matters which do not come under sec. 488, or where the compromise amounts to an agreement to live separately by mutual consent, the agreement cannot be embodied in an order under this section, and cannot be given effect to in a Criminal Court. In such a case the Magistrate should dismiss the petition for enforcement of the order, and refer the wife to a Civil Court to enforce the agreement—Pal Singh v. Nihal Kaur, 33 P.L.R. 292, 1932 Cr.C. 430 (432), A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 349, 33 Cr.L.J. 488, 137 I.C. 364, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 339. It is only where the compromise between the husband and wife does not cover matters outside the purview of sec. 488 that an order for maintenance can properly be passed by a Criminal Court. Where the Magistrate's order incorporated only the agreement as to the amount of maintenance but it purported to be based on a compromise which could not justly be enforced separately from and without regard to the other conditions agreed upon by the parties which conditions a Criminal Court had no jurisdiction to enforce, the Magistrate could not pass such an order—Ram Saran v. Damodri, 36 Cr.L.J. 193, 152 I.C. 946, 36 P.L.R. 153, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 864, 16 Lah. 420, 7 R.L. 346.

The Magistrate can pass an absolute order under this section based on a compromise between the parties referring only to the amount fixed as maintenance and nothing else—Bhagwati v. Gajadhar, A.I.R. 1935 All. 294, 37 Cr.L.J. 9, 158 I.C. 1123, 1935 Cr.C. 327.

In Nirmala v. Bejoy, 35 Cr.L.J. 606, 148 I.C. 151, 37 C.W.N. 538, 6 R.C. 439, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 675, 1933 Cr.C. 1157, the Calcutta High Court upheld an order of maintenance based on a compromise, one of the terms to which was that the wife should live separate from the husband. A contrary view was, however, taken in Colbert v. Colbert, 35 Cr.L.J. 501, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 776, 6 R.C. 379, 147 I.C. 914, 37 C.W.N. 736, 1933 Cr.C. 1327 by M. C. Ghose, J., who was in favour of setting aside the order of maintenance in Nirmala v. Bejoy, supra.

Discussing the rulings cited above the Nagpur High Court has held that the function of the Magistrate is restricted to passing an order as to the amount of maintenance and that his order should not embody restrictive conditions which could not be enforced in summary criminal proceedings. It would certainly be undesirable if a Magistrate were to pass an order with regard to one part of the compromise incompatible with an order which the Civil Court might pass with regard to the rest; but where the Magistrate restricts himself to the fixation of the amount of maintenance and where that order is to take effect immediately without further conditions, then it would not matter if changes are contemplated in the future—John P. E. Coelho v. Mrs. Blanche, 38 Cr.L.J. 170 (172), 166 I.C. 27, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 228, 1936 Cr.C. 913, 9 R.N. 116, 11 R.L. 1937 Nag. 230.

There is nothing in the provisions of this section which would lead to the conclusion that an order for maintenance passed by a Magistrate with the consent of a husband and wife cannot afterwards be enforced. Whether it is or is not to be enforced depends upon the circumstances of the case into which the Magistrate has power to make an enquiry—Ram Saran Das v. Mt. Ram Piari, A.I.R. 1937 All. 115 (117), 1936 A.L.J. 1379, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1268, 1937 A.L.R. 102, 166 I.C. 894, 38 Cr.L.J. 312, 11 R.L. 1937 All. 430, dissenting from Pal Singh v. Nihal Kaur and Ram Saran v. Damodri, supra. In Bhagwan Singh v. Gurcharan Kaur, 40 Cr.L.J. 794, 183 I.C. 464, A.I.R. 1939 Lah. 209, 41 P.L.R. 527, 12 R.L. 117 the Lahore High Court referred to Ram Saran Das v. Mt. Ram Piari, supra, with approval.

The ratio decidendi of the rulings Pal Singh v. Nihal Kaur, supra and Ram Saran v. Damodri, supra, is that where a compromise is with respect to other matters as well which do not come within the purview of this section or where the compromise amounts to an agreement to live separately by mutual consent, then the compromise cannot be given effect to in a Criminal Court. But the condition, in the order of maintenance passed on the basis of a compromise, that the husband will provide a house for his wife where she will live separately from his second wife, does not amount to the husband and wife "living separately by mutual consent," as laid down in sub-sec. (4) of this section and does not make the order of maintenance illegal or unenforceable—Bhagwan Singh v. Gurcharan Kaur, supra.

Whatever the validity of the contention, that an order embodying a petition of compromise cannot be enforced under this section, may be in an application in revision, directed towards the setting aside of the order passed under this section, it has no application whatsoever to a case in which the Magistrate refuses to enforce an order made by his own predecessor and in his own Court: When such an order has actually been made by a Magistrate, a successor cannot refuse to enforce it—Latifannessa v. Namu, 44 C.W.N. 734, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 398, 41 Cr.L.J. 789, 189 I.C. 714.

Where a Magistrate made an order allowing the wife maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem and during the pendency of a revisional application against that order in the Court of the Sessions Judge the parties entered into a compromise by which the wife agreed to live with her husband who promised to support her and in the event of the husband's default the wife was entitled to recover the same maintenance, held that the compromise being made out of Court and no order under sec. 488 being made in pursuance of that compromise, the order of the Magistrate allowing maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem was neither rescinded nor modified and the Criminal Court cannot take cognizance of the compromise and refuse to enforce the order made by it—Fazal Din v. Fatima, 33 Cr.L.J. 121, 135 I.C. 198, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 70, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 1115, 1932 Cr.C. 135, 32 P.L.R. 927.

Under this section, the Magistrate can award maintenance only and nothing else, e.g., a house to live in—Makhan v. Harnamo, 29 Cr.L.J. 909 (910), 111 I.C. 669 (Lah.).

The order under this section must not be conditional and must not have reference to any future circumstances. When the wife, after compromising the claim for maintenance, prayed for an order by the Magistrate that if her husband failed to support her in future, he should pay her a monthly allowance, it was held that the Magistrate could not pass an order of this nature, he must dismiss the application—Kuppa Mudali, 2 Weir 630. An order directing the husband to take away his wife with him, and maintain her, and in the event of his failing to do so or turning her out, to pay a fixed sum to her for maintenance, is a conditional order and hence illegal—Natha Singh v. Harnam, 7 Lah. 313, 27 Cr.L.J. 556. An order for maintenance passed on condition that the woman must reside in her husband's house is illegal—Jamiet, 1917 P.R. 14, 18 Cr.L.J. 528. The order that if the accused lives with the complainant the latter would not be entitled to any maintenance, is illegal—Ramzan v. Sahib Bibi, 29 Cr.L.J. 895, 111 I.C. 575, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 56.

Who can order:—Only the Magistrate enumerated in this section can inquire into the case and pass an order for maintenance. An inquiry under this section cannot be delegated by a First Class Magistrate to a Magistrate of a lower rank—Chokalingam Pillai, 2 Weir 617. A First Class Magistrate cannot refer an application under this section to a Subordinate Magistrate of lower grade and act upon his report—Sardaran v. Amir, 1905 P.R. 29; Venkata v. Paramma, 11 Mad. 199.

Monthly allowance:—The law empowers a Magistrate only to direct payment of a monthly maintenance. An agreement between a husband and wife whereby the husband agreed that he would furnish his wife with certain ornaments, build a house for her, deliver to her annually a certain amount of grain, and pay her a certain sum in cash, is not an agreement which can be made the basis of an order under this section, and, therefore, cannot be enforced under its provision—Viramma v. Narayya, 6 Mad 283; Masta, 21 Cr.L.J. 612, 57 I.C. 276 (Lah.). The payment ordered must be a monthly payment. An order for the payment of a certain sum annually for the value of clothes is not legal—Chavadi v. Basuvan, 2 Weir 627. But where a razinama entered into between the parties contains an agreement for the payment of a certain sum annually for value of clothes, the wife is entitled to ask the Court to give effect to the general intention of the parties as disclosed by the razinama, by allotting in the monthly allowance the value of the clothes agreed to be paid annually—Sivabagiam v. Saminatha, 2 Weir 634.

The payment of maintenance must be in money; an order for payment of maintenance in grain is not in accordance with this Code—Selambal, 2 Weir 626; Odachi v. Viramulhan, 2 Weir 627; Atru v. Mahou, 25 Cr.L.J. 1271, 82 I.C. 279, A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 142. So also, an order directing a mixed payment in kind and cash is contrary to the terms of this section—Mukta v. Dattu Mahadev, 26 Bom L.R. 186, 25 Cr.L.J. 965, 81 I.C. 613, A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 332. The allowance shall be made in cash and not in kind whether of grain or clothing—Kaluram v. Chinto, 34 Cr.L.J. 123, 141 I.C. 15, 28 N.L.R. 284, 1932 Cr.C. 906, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 183.

An order under this section fixing the duration of the period for which the maintenance is to be paid, is illegal—Mangala Thayammal v. Mangala Baghavathi, 2 Weir 634.

1279. Amount of maintenance:—In determining the amount of maintenance, no luxury should be allowed; only the necessaries of life should be considered according to the station in life of the applicant and the means of the respondent—Dragon v. Dragon, 4 Bur.L.T. 269, 13 Cr.L.J. 55; Ma E Mya v. U Ko Ko Gyi, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 370 (372), 171 I.C. 800, dissenting from Nga Hla v. Mi Hla Kyu, (1909) 1 U.B.R. (Cr.) 17, 4 I.C. 758, 11 Cr.L.J. 40 where it has been laid down that it is not intended to go further than to ensure to the wife or children food, clothing and lodging and that the proceedings under this Chapter do not amount to a civil suit where the issue is as to the social standing of the wife and the amount of alimony appropriate.

The meaning of "maintenance" as used in this section includes the education of children, that is to say, the minimum amount of education which the conventions of the country call for. The mere maintenance of the body is not sufficient; provisions has to be made for the child's developing mind and conscience; and, in our time, "maintenance" should be held to include this. Therefore, any calculation which fails to take these matters into account, is bound to result in an inadequate sum being estimated for the maintenance of the child—Maung Shwe Ba v. Ma Thein Nya, 40 Cr.L.J. 440, 180 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 95, 1938 Rang. 673, 11 R.Rang. 423. See also Note 1272B.

The maximum amount which can be awarded for the maintenance of each person is now Rs. 100; under the old law it was Rs. 50. The words 'in the whole' mean that a sum of money not exceeding Rs. 100 should be ordered to be paid, and no other payment either in the shape of school fees or medical expenses, etc., should be ordered to be paid. The words do not mean that when a woman makes an application for herself and for her children, she can only be awarded Rs. 100 for the maintenance of herself and of her children whatever be the number. The Magistrate can order a sum not exceeding Rs. 100 to be paid for the wife and for each of the children unable to maintain itself—Kent v. Kent, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597, 90 I.C. 669, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 59. The words "in the whole" are intended to prevent the Court from exceeding the statutory limit in the case of any particular dependent and are not intended to restrict the powers of the Court to ordering a monthly allowance of Rs. 100 in respect of the maintenance of all the dependants—Tulsi Das v. Sarju Devi, 34 Cr.L.J. 590, 143 I.C. 296, 37 C.W.N. 655, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 406, 1933 Cr.C. 584, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 398; Maung Ba Tun v. Ma Kyway, 40 Cr.L.J. 537, 181 I.C. 377, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 151, 11 R.Rang. 460. The word "or" is used in sec. 488 (1), Cr.P.C. Power is given therein to make an order for the maintenance of the wife "or such child". Therefore, an application can be made for the maintenance of the wife or for the maintenance of the child. There is nothing in the section which says that if an application is made on behalf of the wife, an application shall not lie on behalf of the child. Where an application is made for the maintenance of the wife and the child, it can be treated as an application for an order in favour of the wife and also for an order in favour of the child. Therefore, to contend that when a woman makes an application for herself and for her children, she could only be given Rs. 100 for the maintenance of herself and her children, whatever be the number, is opposed to the clear wording of the section—M. Bulteel v. R. C. Bulteel, 39 Cr.L.J. 865, 177 I.C. 334, A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 721, 47 M.L.W. 594, 1938 M.W.N. 424, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 821, I.L.R. 1933 Mad.

729, 11 R.M. 305, overruling Bulteel v. Emp., 1937 M.W.N. 1127. (But see Palmerino v. Palmerino, 28 Bom L.R. 1299, 28 Cr.L.J. 49 (50) where an order awarding a total sum of Rs. 150 for the wife and child was held to be in excess of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.) Where a wife applied for maintenance of herself and her four children and the Magistrate ordered the husband to pay Rs. 50 (under the old section) for maintenance of the wife and Rs. 10 for each child, every month, it was held that the order was legal. The husband was liable to maintain his wife and each of his children, and the Magistrate might order him to pay as much as Rs. 50 for each of them, if each child was living with a different person. And the fact that all the children were at the time in the custody of the mother could not affect the question of what should be paid to each child—Clement v. Florencé, 4 Bur.L.T. 139, 12 Cr.L.J. 538, 12 I.C. 847.

A prospective order, providing for increase being made in the amount awarded for the child's maintenance hereafter as the child grows older, is not justified by law—Munglo v. Jumna, 2 N.W.P. 454. A Magistrate cannot, under this section, make an order for maintenance at a progressively increasing rate. He may, however, under sec. 489, from time to time alter the rate of monthly allowance granted under this section, as the child grows older—Upendra Nath v. Soudamini, 12 Cal. 535; Ramayee, 14 Mad. 398.

The Magistrate shall order the amount to be paid to the wife or child as the case may be. An order for the payment of the amount of maintenance at the Taluk Kutchery is not authorised by law—Kallavellapil Alagamma, 2 Weir 627.

Order should specify amount payable to each person:—An order under this section awarded Rs. 42 for the maintenance of the wife and son; but nothing was said as to what portion was to be for the wife and what portion for the son. At the time the wife applied for enforcement of the order, the son was over 19 years of age and earning sufficient for him to live on. The Magistrate altered (under sec. 489) the monthly allowance into Rs. 25 payable to the wife only. It was held that as regards the son the foundation of the order was taken away when he was able to maintain himself, and it became spent so far as he was concerned and was not enforceable; and that the Magistrate in the original order not having allotted any particular portion to the wife, the order could not be partially enforced to the extent of Rs. 25 by the wife, but that she should make a fresh application for maintenance for herself alone—Thumbusyami Pillai, 9 L.B.R. 49, 18 Cr.L.J. 103.

Sub-section (2):—The maintenance allowance is payable only from the date of the order (or at most from the date of the application). A direction to pay maintenance from a date prior to such date is opposed to this section—Anonymous, 2 Weir 635; Abdul Rahim v. Amir Begum, 7 Lah. 365, 27 Cr.L.J. 610; Omree v. Elahi, 1870 P.R. 5. But where an order for such retrospective payment was made with the consent of the parties, the High Court did not interfere—Anonymous, 2 Weir 635.

1280. Sub-section (3)—Enforcement of order:—In this sub-section, the words "fails without sufficient cause" have been substituted for the words "wilfully neglects," because of difficulties which had arisen in the interpretation of the word 'wilfully'. Under the old law it was held that before an order for imprisonment could be made on default of payment of maintenance, strict proof was necessary that the non-payment was due to wilful neglect on the part of the defendant, and mere omission to pay the arrears was not sufficient—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291; Bhiku v. Zahuran, 25 Cal. 291. Under the present law, no such proof is necessary; the simple fact of non-payment without sufficient cause is sufficient to bring this sub-section into operation.

When execution of a maintenance order is applied for and the counter-petitioner files a counter-petition setting out certain grounds on which he contends that the order should not be executed, the Court is bound to consider the sufficiency of the cause alleged by him, and to refuse the execution if the Court is satisfied that the cause is sufficient and to grant execution if the Court is not satisfied with the cause alleged.

The Legislature has used the expression 'sufficient cause' obviously intending that the Magistrate before whom the matter comes up should be in a position to use his judicial discretion having regard to all the circumstances, and that such judicial discretion should not be fettered or limited by any definite rules. The expression 'sufficient cause' is wide enough to include all possible considerations that may be submitted to the Magistrate in the circumstances of the case—Theetharappa v. Meenakshi, 48 M.L.J. 949, 26 Cr.L.J. 953.

The words 'sufficient cause' are wide enough to justify the raising of a plea that the order of maintenance passed in favour of a child has become spent owing to the child having attained majority and being able to maintain itself. Consequently, if the Court finds on defence raised that the child attained the age of majority and was able to maintain itself during the period for which the arrears were claimed, it should refuse to grant those arrears; and it is not necessary for the defendant to make a formal application under sec. 489—U Ba Thaung v. Ma Aye, 10 Rang. 194, 1932 Cr.C. 476 (477), 137 I.C. 439, 33 Cr.L.J. 495, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 94, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 130. See also John P. E. Coelho v. Mrs. Blanche, 38 Cr.L.J. 170 (172), 166 I.C. 27, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 228, 1936 Cr.C. 913, 9 R.N. 116, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 230.

Where the parties entered into a compromise after the passing of the maintenance order under sec. 488 (1), Cr. P. C., the order remains in force but the existence of the compromise, which can be proved at any time, is sufficient ground for any Magistrate to refuse to enforce the order if moved to do so under sec. 488 (3) or sec. 490, Cr. P. Code. It is not until the woman seeks to enforce the order that any necessity for considering the compromise arises—Sultan Khan Gulshan Khan v. Khanam Jan, 38 Cr.L.J. 614, 168 I.C. 832, A.I.R. 1937 Pesh. 45, 9 R.Pesh. 133.

Jagir income of a person, against whom maintenance order had been passed by a Magistrate, when collected by the revenue authorities can be taken in satisfaction of the arrears due under the order. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, exempting certain property from attachment and sale, do not apply to Criminal Courts. Under sections 4 and 9, Cr. P. C., Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to go into the matter—Natha Singh v. Mt. Bachint Kaur, A.I.R. 1937 Lah. 367, 39 P.L.R. 100, 169 I.C. 944.

Under this section, the Magistrate can imprison the persons proceeded against after default is made; but he cannot take security from that person in anticipation of default—Kanoo Soudagar, 24 W.R. 72.

This clause lays down that if the amount of maintenance is not paid, a distress warrant should be issued for the realisation of the dues. But the Magistrate cannot order a third party, e.g., a mortgagee of a house belonging to the defendant, to pay the amount to the petitioner monthly out of the rents of the house—Lalit Mohan v. Sarojini, 35 C.W.N. 692 (693), 1931 Cr.C. 844, 134 I.C. 1199, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 644.

Warrant:—A warrant in respect of the breach of the order is a condition precedent to the inflicting of imprisonment—Naram, 9 All 240. A Police officer when executing a warrant for the levy of the amount of maintenance recoverable under this section, can break open an inner door of the house of the person against whom it is executed—Baba, Ratanlal 431. The law contemplates only a single warrant of commitment regarding the arrears due at the time of issue. Where six months' arrears are due, a separate warrant or commitment for each months' arrears is bad in law—Bhiku v. Zahuran, 25 Cal. 291. The levy of accumulated arrears of maintenance by a single warrant and in one proceeding is not illegal—Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 38; Anonymous, 6 M.H.C.R. App. 22, 2 Weir 637.

See Note 1297.

Second proviso:—The second proviso (newly added) to this sub-section provides a period of limitation (one year from the date of default) within which the application is to be made for the issue of the warrant for realisation of the outstanding arrears.

Under this proviso, the Court's power extends to the recovery of arrears falling due for a period of one year next before the date of application, but it does not follow that that power should be fully exercised; and so the petitioner may ask for the recovery of arrears for less than a year—Kanagammal, 50 Mad. 663, 28 Cr.L.J. 271 (272).

The proviso does not say that no such warrant shall be issued except on an application made to levy such amount within a period of one year from the date on which it became due. The proviso was clearly enacted to prevent the person in whose favour an order for maintenance was made from being negligent, and allowing arrears to pile up until their recovery would become a hardship or an impossibility. It was not meant that a loop hole should be given to the person against whom an order for maintenance was made to evade payment by preventing the service of process on him. In fact the proviso was evidently worded in the way it was expressly to preclude the possibility of such an evasion. The order of the Magistrate allowing enforcement of the order of maintenance for fifteen months was held to be correct when a previous case for realisation of arrears of maintenance for first four of these fifteen months was made in the fifth month and had to be closed as the person liable to make payment could not be traced—U Hpay Lait v. Ma Po Byu, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 407, 37 Cr.L.J. 91, 159 I.C. 289, 13 Rang. 289, 1935 Cr.C. 1192.

This proviso can only mean that a person in whose favour an order for maintenance has been made must, to enable her to recover arrears of maintenance, apply to the Court to recover such arrears within one year from the date the arrears became due. She cannot allow arrears to accumulate indefinitely and apply for the recovery of those arrears for the first time after several years. Any other interpretation of the proviso would clearly lead to an absurdity, for a party who at any time successfully evaded execution of a maintenance order for the period of one year would escape all liability for that period and this could hardly be said to be the intention of the Legislature—Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847 (848), 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 72, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 151.

Where the first application for arrears of maintenance is made long after a period of one year from the date on which the order of maintenance was made, the fact that the applicant so long delayed does not under this proviso deprive her entirely of all rights of maintenance or to an order for maintenance. This proviso merely provides that if an applicant delays the making of the application for the payment of arrears, she can recover no more than 12 months' arrears due to her at the time of her application. There is nothing in the words of the section which justifies the interpretation that the absence of an application within 12 months of the order of maintenance extinguishes such orders—Jasodabai v. Tarachand Tekchand, 40 Cr.L.J. 776, 183 I.C. 336, 1 I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 674, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 180, 12 R.S. 51.

1281. Imprisonment:—The imprisonment may be awarded only after default is made. Where it was provided in the order of maintenance itself that in case of the defendant failing to pay the monthly allowance, he should be imprisoned for a term of 16 days for every breach of the order, it was held that the order was in anticipation of the procedure to take place on a wilful default, if such should occur, and was therefore illegal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 637, 5 M.H.C.R. App. 34. Imprisonment is a means of enforcing payment, and an order for imprisonment can be passed only after there has been negligence to pay the amount of maintenance—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291.

Release on payment:—The imprisonment awarded under this section is not punishment for contempt of the Court's order, nor it is an absolute sentence. It is passed only for the unpaid portion of the maintenance, or in other words, it is owing to default of payment of the unrealised portion of the maintenance. Therefore, the imprisonment ought to cease upon payment of the amount of maintenance—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291. The words "until payment if sooner made" did not occur in the 1882 Code, and therefore it was held in Biyacha v. Maidin, 8 Mad. 70, that a person committed to jail for non-payment of maintenance was not entitled to be released even when the arrears were paid, because the imprisonment ordered in default of payment was held to be a punishment for breach of the order of the Court. This ruling is no longer good law.

Nature of imprisonment:—The imprisonment under this section may be either simple or rigorous, looking to the terms of sec. 2 (18) of the General Clauses Act—Naran, 9 All. 240. In Form XL not only simple but rigorous imprisonment is provided for, but it would be safer to order the imprisonment to be simple—Mr. Tasok v. Nga Te Naung, U.B.R. (1892-1896) 70.

Term of imprisonment:—It was held in Naran, 9 All. 240, and 6 M.H.C.R. App. XXIII that the maximum term of imprisonment was one month, and that only one month's imprisonment could be awarded on the whole in default of payment of the aggregate of the amounts due. But these cases were decided under the Code of 1872 and are not of any authority at present. In a Burma case also the same view has been taken, and the words "for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid" have been interpreted to mean "for the whole or any part of every month's or all months' allowance remaining unpaid"—Zaw Ta, 7 Bur.L.T. 225, 15 Cr.L.J. 434. Such an interpretation seems to be too laboured. The more reasonable view has been taken in the following cases. Thus, the Punjab Chief Court expressed the opinion that a person who has wilfully neglected to pay the arrears of maintenance for several months may be imprisoned for more than one month—Mono v. Kaka, 1877 P.R. 12; Budhu Ram, 1919 P.R. 12, 50 I.C. 847, 20 Cr.L.J. 367. The imprisonment in default of payment of maintenance is not to be limited to one month. The procedure contemplated by the Code appears to be to ascertain how many months' arrears are due. The maximum imprisonment that can be imposed will then be one month for each month's arrears and if there is a balance representing the arrears for a portion of a month, a further term of a month's imprisonment may be imposed for such arrears—Allapichai v. Mohidin, 20 Mad. 3, 2 Weir 638; Bhiku v. Zahuran, 25 Cal. 291; Saradar Mahmud, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 758, 36 P.L.R. 191, 37 Cr.L.J. 207, 159 I.C. 939, 1935 Cr.C. 1050, 8 R.L. 437; Budhu Ram, 50 I.C. 847, A.I.R. 1919 Lah. 197, 20 Cr.L.J. 367, 12 P.P. 1919 (Cr.), 75 P.L.R. 1919.

Discussing the rulings mentioned above the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that the intention of the Legislature was to empower the Magistrate after execution of one warrant only to sentence a person, who has defaulted in the payment of maintenance ordered under this section to imprisonment for a period of one month in respect of each month's default and that the section does not enjoin that there should be a separate warrant in respect of each term of imprisonment for one month. In other words, where arrears have been allowed to accumulate, a Court can issue one warrant and impose a cumulative sentence of imprisonment—Beni, 39 Cr.L.J. 720, 176 I.C. 397, 1 L.R. 1938 All. 750, 1938 O.W.N. 591, 1938 A Cr.C. 47, 10 R.A. 104, 1938 A.L.R. 601, 1938 A.L.J. 565, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 379, A.I.R. 1938 All. 386 (F.B.), overruling Naran, supra.

A person making default in respect of payment of certain arrears of maintenance cannot be sentenced a second time to imprisonment for the same default for which he has already undergone a sentence of imprisonment—Maung Kyi Pe v. Ma Htu, 10 Rang. 176, 1932 Cr.C. 475 (476), 33 Cr.L.J. 554, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 93, 137 I.C. 673, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 154.

Costs:—The person in whose favour an order of maintenance has been passed, cannot be ordered to pay expenses of the person committed to jail for his maintenance—Sardar Muhammad, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 758, 36 P.L.R. 191, 37 Cr.L.J. 207, 159 I.C. 939, 1935 Cr.C. 1050.

1282. When order cannot be enforced:—Where the husband has been adjudged an insolvent, the order of maintenance cannot be enforced so long as the order of adjudication stands, and he cannot, therefore, be imprisoned for default of payment—Halhide v. Halhide, 50 Cal. 867, 25 Cr.L.J. 1088, 81 I.C. 912, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 230. This case relates to cl. (3) of sec. 488 and decides that if the husband has applied for

for a period of one year next before the date of application, but it does not follow that that power should be fully exercised; and so the petitioner may ask for the recovery of arrears for less than a year—Kanagammal, 50 Mad. 663, 28 Cr.L.J. 271 (272).

The proviso does not say that no such warrant shall be issued except on an application made to levy such amount within a period of one year from the date on which it became due. The proviso was clearly enacted to prevent the person in whose favour an order for maintenance was made from being negligent, and allowing arrears to pile up until their recovery would become a hardship or an impossibility. It was not meant that a loop hole should be given to the person against whom an order for maintenance was made to evade payment by preventing the service of process on him. In fact the proviso was evidently worded in the way it was expressly to preclude the possibility of such an evasion. The order of the Magistrate allowing enforcement of the order of maintenance for fifteen months was held to be correct when a previous case for realisation of arrears of maintenance for first four of these fifteen months was made in the fifth month and had to be closed as the person liable to make payment could not be traced—U Hpay Latt v. Ma Po Byu, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 407, 37 Cr.L.J. 91, 159 I.C. 289, 13 Rang. 289, 1935 Cr.C. 1192.

This proviso can only mean that a person in whose favour an order for maintenance has been made must, to enable her to recover arrears of maintenance, apply to the Court to recover such arrears within one year from the date the arrears became due. She cannot allow arrears to accumulate indefinitely and apply for the recovery of those arrears for the first time after several years. Any other interpretation of the proviso would clearly lead to an absurdity, for a party who at any time successfully evaded execution of a maintenance order for the period of one year would escape all liability for that period and thus could hardly be said to be the intention of the Legislature—Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847 (848), 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 72, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 151.

Where the first application for arrears of maintenance is made long after a period of one year from the date on which the order of maintenance was made, the fact that the applicant so long delayed does not under this proviso deprive her entirely of all rights of maintenance or to an order for maintenance. This proviso merely provides that if an applicant delays the making of the application for the payment of arrears, she can recover no more than 12 months' arrears due to her at the time of her application. There is nothing in the words of the section which justifies the interpretation that the absence of an application within 12 months of the order of maintenance extinguishes such orders—Jasodabai v. Tarachand Tekchand, 40 Cr.L.J. 776, 183 I.C. 336, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 674, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 180, 12 R.S. 51.

1281. Imprisonment:—The imprisonment may be awarded only after default is made. Where it was provided in the order of maintenance itself that in case of the defendant failing to pay the monthly allowance, he should be imprisoned for a term of 16 days for every breach of the order, it was held that the order was in anticipation of the procedure to take place on a wilful default, if such should occur, and was therefore illegal—Anonymous, 2 Weir 637, 5 M.H.C.R. App 34. Imprisonment is a means of enforcing payment, and an order for imprisonment can be passed only after there has been negligence to pay the amount of maintenance—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291.

Release on payment:—The imprisonment awarded under this section is not punishment for contempt of the Court's order, nor it is an absolute sentence. It is passed only for the unpaid portion of the maintenance, or in other words, it is owing to default of payment of the unrealised portion of the maintenance. Therefore, the imprisonment ought to cease upon payment of the amount of maintenance—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal. 291. The words "until payment if sooner made" did not occur in the 1882 Code, and therefore it was held in Biyacha v. Maidin, 8 Mad. 70, that a person committed to jail for non-payment of maintenance was not entitled to be released even when the arrears were paid, because the imprisonment ordered in default of payment was held to be a punishment for breach of the order of the Court. This ruling is no longer good law.

Nature of imprisonment:—The imprisonment under this section may be either simple or rigorous, looking to the terms of sec. 2 (18) of the General Clauses Act—Narain, 9 All. 240. In Form XL not only simple but rigorous imprisonment is provided for, but it would be safer to order the imprisonment to be simple—Mi Tasok v. Nga Te Naung, U.B.R. (1892-1896) 70

Term of imprisonment:—It was held in Narain, 9 All. 240, and 6 M.H.C.R. App. XXIII that the maximum term of imprisonment was one month, and that only one month's imprisonment could be awarded on the whole in default of payment of the aggregate of the amounts due. But these cases were decided under the Code of 1872 and are not of any authority at present. In a Burma case also the same view has been taken, and the words "for the whole or any part of each month's allowance remaining unpaid" have been interpreted to mean "for the whole or any part of every month's or all months' allowance remaining unpaid"—Zaw Ta, 7 Bur.L.T. 225, 15 Cr.L.J. 434. Such an interpretation seems to be too laboured. The more reasonable view has been taken in the following cases. Thus, the Punjab Chief Court expressed the opinion that a person who has wilfully neglected to pay the arrears of maintenance for several months may be imprisoned for more than one month—Mono v. Kaka, 1877 P.R. 12; Budhu Ram, 1919 P.R. 12, 50 I.C. 847, 20 Cr.L.J. 367. The imprisonment in default of payment of maintenance is not to be limited to one month. The procedure contemplated by the Code appears to be to ascertain how many months' arrears are due. The maximum imprisonment that can be imposed will then be one month for each month's arrears and if there is a balance representing the arrears for a portion of a month, a further term of a month's imprisonment may be imposed for such arrears—Allapichai v. Mohidin, 20 Mad. 3, 2 Weir 638; Bhiku v. Zahuran, 25 Cal. 291; Saradar Mahmud, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 758, 36 P.L.R. 191, 37 Cr.L.J. 207, 159 I.C. 939, 1935 Cr.C. 1050, 8 R.L. 437; Budhu Ram, 50 I.C. 847, A.I.R. 1919 Lah. 197, 20 Cr.L.J. 367, 12 P.P. 1919 (Cr.), 75 P.L.R. 1919

Discussing the rulings mentioned above the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that the intention of the Legislature was to empower the Magistrate after execution of one warrant only to sentence a person, who has defaulted in the payment of maintenance ordered under this section to imprisonment for a period of one month in respect of each month's default and that the section does not enjoin that there should be a separate warrant in respect of each term of imprisonment for one month. In other words, where arrears have been allowed to accumulate, a Court can issue one warrant and impose a cumulative sentence of imprisonment—Beni, 39 Cr.L.J. 720, 176 I.C. 397, I.L.R. 1938 All. 750, 1938 O.W.N. 591, 1938 A.Cr.C. 47, 10 R.A. 104, 1938 A.L.R. 601, 1938 A.L.J. 565, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 379, A.I.R. 1938 All. 386 (F.B.), overruling Narain, supra.

A person making default in respect of payment of certain arrears of maintenance cannot be sentenced a second time to imprisonment for the same default for which he has already undergone a sentence of imprisonment—Maung Kyi Pe v. Ma Htu, 10 Rang. 176, 1932 Cr.C. 475 (476), 33 Cr.L.J. 554, A.I.R. 1932 Rang. 93, 137 I.C. 673, Ind. Rul. 1932 Rang. 154.

Costs:—The person in whose favour an order of maintenance has been passed, cannot be ordered to pay expenses of the person committed to jail for his maintenance—Sardar Muhammad, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 758, 36 P.L.R. 191, 37 Cr.L.J. 207, 159 I.C. 939, 1935 Cr.C. 1050.

1282. When order cannot be enforced:—Where the husband has been adjudged an insolvent, the order of maintenance cannot be enforced so long as the order of adjudication stands, and he cannot, therefore, be imprisoned for default of payment—Halshide v. Halshide, 50 Cal. 867, 25 Cr.L.J. 1088, 81 I.C. 912, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 230. This case relates to cl. (3) of sec. 488 and decides that if the husband has applied for insolvency and has been adjudicated an insolvent, it cannot be said that he has wilfully neglected to maintain his wife under cl. (3) of sec. 488, Cr. P. C., and that the order for adjudication being conclusive on the point of his inability to pay his debts, the Magistrate may not issue a warrant for enforcement of the order passed under sec. 488, Cr. P. Code. There is, however a change in cl. (3) of sec. 488. The words "fail without sufficient cause" are substituted for the words "wilfully neglects". The case is not an authority on the question of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass an order under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 488 in case the husband has applied for insolvency and neglected to maintain his wife—Mahomedalli, 31 Cr.L.J. 609, 124 I.C. 127, 31 Bom.L.R. 1366, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 144. See also Sardar Muhammad, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 753 (760), 36-P.L.R. 191, 37 Cr.L.J. 207, 159 I.C. 939, 1935 CrC. 1050, where it has been laid down that under section 44 (1) (d), Insolvency Act, an order of discharge shall not release the insolvent from any liability under an order of maintenance made under this section.

As the law stands at present, however, the amended section 488 (3), Cr. P. C., does not specify wilful neglect. That definition was contained in the law before amendment. But under the amended Code if any person ordered to pay maintenance fails, without "sufficient cause", to comply with that order, the Magistrate may proceed by means of a distress warrant. Under the previous law, he could only do so on proof of wilful neglect by the party to comply with the order made and what the case of Haljhide v. Haljhide, referred to above, lays down is that an order of adjudication in insolvency is a complete answer to an allegation of wilful neglect. That case, however, does not lay down that an order of adjudication, in itself, is a rebuttal of an allegation that the insolvent has failed without sufficient cause to comply with the order of the Magistrate directing the payment of maintenance. The correct position seems to be, therefore, that on presentation of an application to a Magistrate, the duty of the Magistrate is to decide, in the first place, whether the person against whom the adjudication is made, has failed without sufficient cause to comply with the order and if that fact is established, to proceed as directed by sec. 488 (3), Cr. P. Code—Radharani Dasi v. Mati Lal Sen, A.I.R. 1940 Cal. 569, 71 C.L.J. 507, 44 C.W.N. 898, I.L.R. (1940) 2 Cal. 110. The mere fact that the husband has been adjudicated an insolvent does not show that he is unable to pay for the maintenance of his wife and that constitutes sufficient cause for non-payment. The property of the insolvent which vests in the Receiver does not include any property which is exempted by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree. Under the provisions of sec. 60, Civil Procedure Code as now enacted, the salary to the extent of the first hundred rupees and one-half of the remainder of such salary is exempt from attachment. The husband would, therefore, if he is prepared to do work and earn salary, be in a position to support his wife—Shyama Charan v. Auguri Debi, 39 Cr.L.J. 553, A.I.R. 1938 All. 253, 175 I.C. 235, I.L.R. 1938 All. 486, 1938 A.L.J. 225, 1938 A.Cr.C. 19, 10 R.A. 652, 1938 A.L.R. 391, 1938 A.W.R. (H.C.) 157. Assuming that the order for payment of past maintenance constituted a debt provable in insolvency, but even so, a protection order under sec 25, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, does not protect the debtor from being proceeded against in a Criminal Court. A provable debt might have been incurred by reason of some criminal offence, such as cheating or criminal misappropriation. It is obvious that a protection order would not protect against prosecution and conviction for such an offence and also a protection order does not protect against the special statutory power of committal given to a Criminal Court—Mahammed Hussein v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 344, 42 Bom.L.R. 742. The wording of this section shows that in every case it is the duty of the Magistrate to find out whether the person ordered to pay maintenance under this section has or has not failed without sufficient cause to comply with the order. Neither the protection order nor the adjudication order could be conclusive on this point. The question is one of fact which the Magistrate has to decide for himself. Prima facie, of course, it would appear to a Magistrate that an order of protection or an order of adjudication would be sufficient to show that failure to comply with, an order to pay maintenance had not been without sufficient cause, but it cannot be said that the Magistrate's hands would be tied by the order of the Insolvency Court—Muni Krishnayya v. Akulamma, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 697, 1940 M.W.N. 237, 1940 M.Cr.C. 83, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 868, 51 M.L.W. 718, 41 Cr.L.J. 785, 189 I.C. 692, I.L.R. 1940 Mad. 692. No doubt the adjudication of insolvency might to some extent alter the position. Insolvency is prima facie evidence of inability to pay a debt on the part of a husband but it cannot be treated as conclusive evidence—Mahomed Hussein v. Emp, supra.

Arrears of maintenance are a debt provable in insolvency and in respect of which a protection order can be given—S Yakia v. Amaturrab Ghousunnissa Begum, 37 Cr.L.J. 1129, 165 I.C. 297, 44 M.L.W. 292, A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 793, 71 M.L.J. 430, 1936 M.W.N. 1024, I.L.R. 1937 Mad. 90, following Takee Bibi v. Abdool Khan, 5 Cal. 536 and Halfhide v. Halfhide, supra.

The term "arrest or detention" used in sec 31 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) cannot include arrest in execution of a Criminal Court process or detention under a sentence of imprisonment passed by a Criminal Court. It is clear that arrest or detention must mean arrest or detention in pursuance of an order of a Civil Court passed in execution of a decree of such Court. An order passed by a Magistrate under section 488 (3), Cr. P. C., for the imprisonment of a person who fails to pay a maintenance is a sentence of imprisonment. The protection order in favour of such a person does not protect him from arrest under a warrant issued by a Criminal Court or detention in accordance with a sentence of imprisonment by such Court—Shyama Charan v. Anguri Debi, supra. It is not possible for a Magistrate who has passed a sentence of imprisonment under sec. 488 (3), Cr. P. C., to cancel the sentence merely because the insolvency Court has issued an order of protection. The sentence of imprisonment is a punishment inflicted for breach of the order. It cannot be considered in the terms of sec. 23, Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), that a person who has been sentenced under sec. 488 (3), Cr. P. C., is under "imprisonment in execution of the decree of any Court for the payment of money"—Muni Krishnayya v. Akulamma, supra.

If the person against whom an order of maintenance has been made dies, the order cannot be enforced against his estate—Ead Ali v. Lal Bibi, 41 Cal. 88, 17 C.W.N. 1130.

When a composite order of maintenance of a wife and child has been made and it is not known what proportion of the total amount awarded is to be devoted to the maintenance of the wife, it is not possible to enforce the order in respect of the maintenance of the wife—Thambuswamy Pillay v. Ma Lon, 9 L.B.R. 49, 37 I.C. 311, A.I.R. 1917 L.B. 84, 18 Cr.L.J. 103, 10 Bur.L.T. 209. But where an order is made against a father for the maintenance of his three children and subsequently the eldest child attains majority and is in a position to maintain himself, the order ceases to be enforceable in respect of him but it does not cease to be enforceable in respect of the remaining two children—Ma E Shi v. U San Kai, 40 Cr.L.J. 241, 179 I.C. 643, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 67, 11 R.Rang. 336.

The defendant's inability to pay is not a ground for the Magistrate's refusal to enforce the order for maintenance. If the allowance granted is too excessive, he may revise the rate of maintenance on further inquiry, and the order will take effect from the date of such inquiry—Vembali, 2 Weir 636.

1283. Offer to maintain wife:—Where the husband offers to receive his wife to live with him, an order for maintenance should not be made except on proof of adultery or cruelty on the part of the husband—Makhan v. Harnamo, 29 Cr.L.J. 909 (910), 111 I.C. 669 (Lah.). Where the husband offers to maintain his wife and the wife states that she is willing to live with him, the Magistrate cannot make an order under this section, unless the complainant (wife) satisfies him that notwithstanding such offer there is a just ground for making such order—Hakimi v. Mouze, 1 C.L.J. 214. See also Phani Khan, 16 Cr.L.J. 86, A.I.R. 1914 Lah. 590, 26 I.C. 998, 213 P.L.R. 1915.

But the mere offer to maintain is not sufficient—Saraswati v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 698 (699), 33 Cr.L.J. 634, 138 I.C. 613, 36 C.W.N. 571, 55 C.L.J. 341, 59 Cal. 1229, 1932 Cr.C. 653, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 471, following Kent v. Kent, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 59, 90 I.C. 669, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597. The offer to maintain must be a bona fide offer, and not made with the object of escaping obligation—Dragon v. Dragon, 4 Bur.L.T. 269, 13 Cr.L.J. 55. If it is found that the husband had formerly ill-treated his wife, and turned her out of his house, his subsequent offer to keep her in his house cannot be taken to be bona fide; and he cannot escape his liability to maintain her under this section merely by such offer, because he may break his promise as soon as she gets home—Aishan v. Sher Muhammad, 22 Cr.L.J. 149, 59 I.C. 853 (Lah.); Kaluram, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 183, 28 N.L.R. 284, 1932 Cr.C. 906; Pritam v. Basant, 27 Cr.L.J. 507, 93 I.C. 971, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 353; Sama Jetha, 54 Bom. 548, 1930 Cr.C. 780 (782). In a claim for maintenance it is no defence for a husband to say that he is prepared to take his wife back if the facts show that the wife has reasonable cause for fearing to return to her husband's home. If a wife has been ill-treated and there is ground for believing that if she returns the ill-treatment will continue, then the wife is entitled to live apart from her husband. In such a case the husband, who is the guilty party, must maintain his wife. Causing a wife to leave the protection of the husband by ill-treatment is tantamount to driving the wife deliberately from the home. In such a case the wife is justified in refusing to return to her husband—Bathulu Bhagirathi v. Bathulu Lakshmi Devi, 41 Cr.L.J. 718 (719), 189 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 242. But see Nur Muhammad v. Harjan, 36 Cr.L.J. 792, 155 I.C. 609, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 946 36 P.L.R. 181, 1934 Cr.C. 1334, where it has been laid down that the mere fact that some three years ago the husband beat the wife and turned her out is no reason for holding that the subsequent offer was not bona fide or could justify the refusal of the wife to go back to her husband. In such a case unless the Magistrate gives his finding that the offer is not bona fide or that the reason given by the wife for not going back to her husband is sufficient, the order for maintenance is illegal.

; This section contemplates a careful order made after a careful inquiry. It is wrong to dismiss an application by the wife under this section on the mere offer of the husband to maintain her without taking any evidence or giving any finding as to neglect or refusal to maintain the wife or as to the sufficiency or otherwise of the wife's reasons for refusing to live with her husband. "Finding" means a finding after an inquiry which is of a judicial nature—Nooran v. Rasool Baksh, 40 Cr.L.J. 496, 181 I.C. 75, 11 R.S. 204, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 80, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 383.

The husband left the house in which he and his wife were living together and went to live elsewhere. He left behind him a note pointing out that they had been quarrelling even since they were married and that owing to these quarrels and unpleasantness, he was unable to continue their joint living. He further alleged that he suspected that his wife on one occasion had poisoned his soup. The husband made no attempt to maintain his wife who instituted a suit for judicial separation which was dismissed. Subsequently there was an attempt on the part of the neighbours to bring about a compromise which also failed as the husband told that he could not compromise. The wife then applied for maintenance under this section. It was contended that as the wife's suit for judicial separation failed, and as the husband was ready to maintain her, it could not be said that she was refusing to live with him for sufficient cause and she was, therefore, not entitled to maintenance. Held that in such circumstances the Magistrate quite rightly refused to believe that the belated offer to maintain his wife on condition that she lived with him was made bona fide. It made no difference that in the interim the wife had brought a suit for judicial separation which had failed. That suit did not alter the fact that the husband had deserted his wife and failed to maintain her. The order of maintenance was, therefore, proper—Bibian Ludwig De Cruz v. Alice Winifred De Cruz, 39 Cr.L.J. 287, 173 I.C. 212, 10 R.R. 322, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 25.

The offer must be to maintain wife as wife. It has, however, been held in Gulabdas Bhaidas, 16 Bom. 269 that where the husband offered to keep the complainant in his house, not as wife but as servant or dependant, the offer was a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section. But this decision does not seem to be just. The Madras High Court rightly lays down that an offer to maintain wife must be one to maintain her with the consideration due to her position as wife—Manatha Achari, 17 Mad. 260. And therefore where a Hindu husband having two wives offered to maintain his first wife in his own house, adding that he would not live with her, but would supply grain for her to cook her own food and eat it separately in the house, such an offer was not a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section—Marakkal v. Kandappa, 6 Mad. 371; Sakrulla v. Fatma, 25 Cr.L.J. 453, 77 I.C. 805, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 297. Following Gulabdas Bhaidas, supra, the Allahabad High Court has held that the object of proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy and that object is attained by the provision of lodging, food and clothing. A husband is bound to maintain his wife but he is not bound to do more than supply her with lodging, food and clothing, he is not bound to maintain her as wife—Kumli, 25 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1251), 82 I.C. 257, A.I.R. 1935 All. 73. In a recent case similar view has been taken by the Madras High Court—Arunachala v. Anandayammal, cited in Note No. 1284. The offer must be an offer by the husband to maintain the wife in his own house. An offer of maintenance in a separate residence even though the residence be one befitting the status of the wife is not sufficient. The wife is entitled to be kept in the house where her husband lives, and so she may refuse the offer of her husband to provide her with a separate house, and may claim maintenance—In re Bai Manek, 52 Bom. 763, 29 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050).

1284. Grounds of wife's refusal to live with husband:—An order for separate maintenance in favour of the wife may be made under this section if the wife has some just ground for living apart from her husband—Bai Parvati v. Ghanchi, 44 Bom. 972 (975). Inability of husband and wife to agree to live together is not a ground for ordering separate maintenance for wife—Jesmut v. Shoojaut, 6 W.R. 59. A Magistrate cannot pass an order for maintenance, where the husband has neither ill-treated his wife nor has refused or neglected to maintain her but she of her own accord and without any just ground left her husband's house and protection and refuses to live with him unless he gives her a separate house—Tota v. Durgi, 30 P.L.R. 367, 30 Cr.L.J. 861 (862); Gangumal v. Himathmal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1457, 158 I.C. 376, 8 R.S. 50. When the wife voluntarily leaves her husband's house without sufficient justification, she is not entitled to any order under this section, unless the husband refuses to maintain her, or turns her out or ill-treats her, so as to make it impossible for her to live with her husband—Gourishankar v. Bai Reva, 5 Bom.L.R. 614.

If the husband is willing to maintain his wife, but the wife refuses to live with him, the Magistrate should make an inquiry as to why she is not willing to go and live with her husband. She should be given a chance by the Magistrate to substantiate her reasons for refusal by such evidence as she can produce. The omission of the inquiry vitiates the proceedings—Sultan v. Mahtab, 27 P.L.R. 233, 27 Cr.L.J. 1319; Subbayya v. Ambamma, 9 Cr.L.J. 501, 2 I.C. 155; Said Bibi v. Umar Din, 31 P.L.R. 664, 1930 Cr.C. 533, 32 Cr.L.J. 468, 130 I.C. 51, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 464, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 243.

The following are proper grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband —

(1) Cruelty :—If the husband so ill-treats his wife (e.g., drives her out with blows) that she is compelled to leave his house, she is justified in refusing to live with her husband and in claiming maintenance—Rajpati v. Deoli, 46 All. 877 (878); Kalviya v. Hira, 1929 A.L.J. 1208, 31 Cr.L.J. 3, 120 I.C. 195, A.I.R. 1929 All. 950, 1929 Cr.C. 593; and the fact that the parties belong to a low class makes no difference—Kalviya, supra. Under the Code of 1882, cruelty was the only ground on which a wife was justified in living separately from her husband and demanding maintenance. But the words "that he habitually treated his wife with cruelty" which occurred in the Code of 1882 have been substituted by the words "that there is just ground for so doing." This alteration gives the Magistrate larger discretion in giving maintenance. The present Code does

But the mere offer to maintain is not sufficient—Saraswati v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 698 (699), 33 Cr.L.J. 634, 138 I.C. 613, 36 C.W.N. 571, 55 C.L.J. 341, 59 Cal. 1229, 1932 Cr.C. 653, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 471, following Kent v. Kent, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 59, 90 I.C. 669, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597. The offer to maintain must be a bona fide offer, and not made with the object of escaping obligation—Dragon v. Dragon, 4 Bur.L.T. 269, 13 Cr.L.J. 55. If it is found that the husband had formerly ill-treated his wife, and turned her out of his house, his subsequent offer to keep her in his house cannot be taken to be bona fide; and he cannot escape his liability to maintain her under this section merely by such offer, because he may break his promise as soon as she gets home—Aishan v. Sher Muhammad, 22 Cr.L.J. 149, 59 I.C. 853 (Lah.); Kalutam, A.I.R. 1932 Nag 183, 28 N.L.R. 284, 1932 Cr.C. 906; Pritam v. Basant, 27 Cr.L.J. 507, 93 I.C. 971, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 353; Sama Jetka, 54 Bom. 548, 1930 Cr.C. 780 (782). In a claim for maintenance it is no defence for a husband to say that he is prepared to take his wife back if the facts show that the wife has reasonable cause for fearing to return to her husband's home. If a wife has been ill-treated and there is ground for believing that if she returns the ill-treatment will continue, then the wife is entitled to live apart from her husband. In such a case the husband, who is the guilty party, must maintain his wife. Causing a wife to leave the protection of the husband by ill-treatment is tantamount to driving the wife deliberately from the home. In such a case the wife is justified in refusing to return to her husband—Bathulu Bhagirathi v. Bathulu Lakshmi Devi, 41 Cr.L.J. 718 (719), 189 I.C. 105, A.I.R. 1940 Pat. 242. But see Nur Muhammad v. Harjan, 36 Cr.L.J. 792, 155 I.C. 609, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 946, 36 P.L.R. 181, 1934 Cr.C. 1334, where it has been laid down that the mere fact that some three years ago the husband beat the wife and turned her out is no reason for holding that the subsequent offer was not bona fide or could justify the refusal of the wife to go back to her husband. In such a case unless the Magistrate gives his finding that the offer is not bona fide or that the reason given by the wife for not going back to her husband is sufficient, the order for maintenance is illegal.

4 This section contemplates a careful order made after a careful inquiry. It is wrong to dismiss an application by the wife under this section on the mere offer of the husband to maintain her without taking any evidence or giving any finding as to neglect or refusal to maintain the wife or as to the sufficiency or otherwise of the wife's reasons for refusing to live with her husband. "Finding" means a finding after an inquiry which is of a judicial nature—Nooran v. Rasool Baksh, 40 Cr.L.J. 496, 181 I.C. 75, 11 RS 204, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 80, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 383.

The husband left the house in which he and his wife were living together and went to live elsewhere. He left behind him a note pointing out that they had been quarrelling even since they were married and that owing to these quarrels and unpleasantness, he was unable to continue their joint living. He further alleged that he suspected that his wife on one occasion had poisoned his soup. The husband made no attempt to maintain his wife who instituted a suit for judicial separation which was dismissed. Subsequently there was an attempt on the part of the neighbours to bring about a compromise which also failed as the husband told that he could not compromise. The wife then applied for maintenance under this section. It was contended that as the wife's suit for judicial separation failed, and as the husband was ready to maintain her, it could not be said that she was refusing to live with him for sufficient cause and she was, therefore, not entitled to maintenance. Held that in such circumstances the Magistrate quite rightly refused to believe that the belated offer to maintain his wife on condition that she lived with him was made bona fide. It made no difference that in the interim the wife had brought a suit for judicial separation which had failed. That suit did not alter the fact that the husband had deserted his wife and failed to maintain her. The order of maintenance was, therefore, proper—Bibian Ludvig De Cruz v. Alice Winifred De Cruz, 39 Cr.L.J. 287, 173 I.C. 212, 10 R.R. 322, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 25.

The offer must be to maintain wife as wife. It has, however, been held in Gulabdas Bhaidas, 16 Bom. 269 that where the husband offered to keep the complainant in his house, not as wife but as servant or dependant, the offer was a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section. But this decision does not seem to be just. The Madras High Court rightly lays down that an offer to maintain wife must be one to maintain her with the consideration due to her position as wife—Manatha Achari, 17 Mad. 260. And therefore where a Hindu husband having two wives offered to maintain his first wife in his own house, adding that he would not live with her, but would supply grain for her to cook her own food and eat it separately in the house, such an offer was not a sufficient offer within the meaning of this section—Marakkal v. Kandappa, 6 Mad. 371; Sakrulla v. Fatma, 25 Cr.L.J. 453, 77 I.C. 805, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 297. Following Gulabdas Bhaidas, supra, the Allahabad High Court has held that the object of proceedings for maintenance is to prevent vagrancy and that object is attained by the provision of lodging, food and clothing. A husband is bound to maintain his wife but he is not bound to do more than supply her with lodging, food and clothing, he is not bound to maintain her as wife—Kumli, 25 Cr.L.J. 1249 (1251), 82 I.C. 257, A.I.R. 1935 All. 73. In a recent case similar view has been taken by the Madras High Court—Arunachala v. Anandayammal, cited in Note No 1284. The offer must be an offer by the husband to maintain the wife in his own house. An offer of maintenance in a separate residence even though the residence be one befitting the status of the wife is not sufficient. The wife is entitled to be kept in the house where her husband lives, and so she may refuse the offer of her husband to provide her with a separate house, and may claim maintenance—In re Bai Manek, 52 Bom. 763, 29 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050).

1284. Grounds of wife's refusal to live with husband:—An order for separate maintenance in favour of the wife may be made under this section if the wife has some just ground for living apart from her husband—Bai Parvati v. Ghanchi, 44 Bom 972 (975). Inability of husband and wife to agree to live together is not a ground for ordering separate maintenance for wife—Jesmut v. Shoojaut, 6 W.R. 59. A Magistrate cannot pass an order for maintenance, where the husband has neither ill-treated his wife nor has refused or neglected to maintain her but she of her own accord and without any just ground left her husband's house and protection and refuses to live with him unless he gives her a separate house—Tota v. Durgi, 30 P.L.R. 367, 30 Cr.L.J. 861 (862); Gangumal v. Himathmal, 36 Cr.L.J. 1457, 158 I.C. 376, 8 R.S. 50. When the wife voluntarily leaves her husband's house without sufficient justification, she is not entitled to any order under this section, unless the husband refuses to maintain her, or turns her out or ill-treats her, so as to make it impossible for her to live with her husband—Gourishankar v. Bai Reva, 5 Bom.L.R. 614.

If the husband is willing to maintain his wife, but the wife refuses to live with him, the Magistrate should make an inquiry as to why she is not willing to go and live with her husband. She should be given a chance by the Magistrate to substantiate her reasons for refusal by such evidence as she can produce. The omission of the inquiry vitiates the proceedings—Sultan v. Mahtab, 27 P.L.R. 233, 27 Cr.L.J. 1319; Subbayya v. Ambamma, 9 Cr.L.J. 501, 2 I.C. 155; Said Bibi v. Umar Din, 31 P.L.R. 664, 1930 Cr.C. 533, 32 Cr.L.J. 468, 130 I.C. 51, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 464, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 243.

The following are proper grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband:—

(1) Cruelty.—If the husband so ill-treats his wife (e.g. drives her out with blows) that she is compelled to leave his house, she is justified in refusing to live with her husband and in claiming maintenance—Raypati v. Deoti, 46 All. 877 (878); Kalviya v. Hira, 1929 A.L.J. 1208, 31 Cr.L.J. 3, 120 I.C. 195, A.I.R. 1929 All. 950, 1929 Cr.C. 593; and the fact that the parties belong to a low class makes no difference—Kalviya, supra. Under the Code of 1882, cruelty was the only ground on which a wife was justified in living separately from her husband and demanding maintenance. But the words "that he habitually treated his wife with cruelty" which occurred in the Code of 1882 have been substituted by the words "that there is just ground for so doing." This alteration gives the Magistrate larger discretion in giving maintenance. The present Code does not restrict the payment of maintenance, when the wife is living separately, only to cases of cruelty—Dragon v. Dragon, 4 Bur.L.T. 269, 13 Cr.L.J. 55. Where the husband did not habitually ill-treat the wife but behaved in a very violent manner towards her, it is not necessary for her to prove habitual ill-treatment in order to justify her refusal to return to his house—Ignatious v. Alagamma, 36 Cr.L.J. 1044, 156 I.C. 968, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 192, 1935 Cr.C. 748. A wife is not bound to return to her husband and live with him if really she has reasonable apprehension of physical ill-treatment—Sundarammal v. Palaniandi Mudali, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 292, 1939 M.W.N. 1255, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 171, 1940 MCr.C. 9, 51 M.L.W. 204, 41 Cr.L.J. 532, 188 I.C. 32. There are other grounds on which the wife may live separately and claim maintenance, and these are stated below.

(2) If a Christian husband reverts to Hinduism and marries a second (Hindu) wife, the Christian wife may refuse to live with her husband, and apply for maintenance—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App 3.

(3) Adultery on the part of the husband, although not punishable under the I. P. Code may nevertheless constitute sufficient cause for the wife living separately from her husband and enable her to claim maintenance under this section—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad. 470 (472); Malcolm De Castro, 13 All 348. Where the husband is living with a mistress in the house at the time of application, the wife is entitled to refuse to live with him, and a subsequent offer made by the husband in Court to give up his mistress does not deprive the wife of her right of refusal to live with her husband—Garraty v. Garraty, 14 Bur.L.R. 240, 8 Cr.L.J. 422. But in such cases, the Magistrate should take into consideration the social habits of the particular community to which the parties belong. If that community does not completely disapprove of concubinage and tolerates it so far as to give kept woman some status and rights, the fact that the husband keeps a concubine ought not by itself to entitle the wife to claim separate maintenance—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad. 470 (475). The circumstance that a Hindu husband keeps a concubine in the house will not entitle a wife to an allowance for maintenance if her husband is willing to receive her and treat her with the consideration which is due to her position—Latchmi v. Pavadai, 2 Weir 641. A married woman should not, however, be put to the degradation of being brought into the society of a concubine of her husband—Abdul v. Sugrabi, 37 Cr.L.J. 86, 159 I.C. 120, 18 N.L.J. 107; Ram Saran Das v. Mt. Ram Piari, A.I.R. 1937 All. 115 (116), 1936 A.L.J. 1379, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1268, 1937 A.L.R. 102, 166 I.C. 894, 38 Cr.L.J. 312, 1 L.R. 1937 All 430. If the husband is keeping in his own house another woman as his mistress, the wife is justified in refusing to accept his offer to take her to live with him, and to refuse to return to him. If he does not offer to expel the mistress from the house or to satisfy his wife that the mistress is no longer there, the Magistrate is perfectly entitled to pass an order for maintenance—Joseph Henry Robert v. Alice Kamalam Robert, 1937 M.W.N. 984. But the wife cannot exact a promise of sexual fidelity before she returns to live with her husband. Where the husband has never insulted his wife to compel her to live in the same house as his mistress and offers to take her back, and maintain her, she cannot refuse to go unless he will give up his mistress and cannot claim separate maintenance—P. Amaldoss v. Kamala Amaldoss, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 794, 46 M.L.W. 324, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 488, 1937 M.W.N. 1197, 1937 MCr.C. 284, 171 I.C. 914.

(4) Where the breach between the husband and wife is irremediable and it is quite impossible for the latter to return to the former after many years' separation without leading to fresh trouble and dispute, she is entitled to live separately and get maintenance—Nihal Kaur v. Bhagwan, 170 P.L.R. 1914, 15 Cr.L.J. 554, A.I.R. 1914 Lah. 185, 24 I.C. 962 (distinguished in J. Chan Toon v. Ma Ti, 37 Cr.L.J. 6, 159 I.C. 81, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 359, 1935 Cr.C. 1083 on the ground that in that case the wife had already obtained an order many years ago and the question was whether the husband was entitled to have the order set aside on his offering to take his wife back); Baloch v. Zainib, 32 P.L.R. 619, 1931 Cr.C. 849 (850), 32 Cr.L.J. 1251, 131 I.C.

817, A.I.R. 1931 Lah. 561, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 1009. But if the wife finds her husband cold and indifferent, it may make her prefer to live separately from him; but that is a matter of preference or choice. She cannot be said to have been forced to live separately from him. Her departure amounts definitely to a refusal to live with her husband even if the parties could not be said to be living apart by mutual consent and she is not entitled to an order of maintenance from her husband under this section—Chan Toon v. Ma Ti, supra.

(5) The marriage of a Mahomedan with the step-mother of his wife is not valid under the Mahomedan law. The wife is entitled in such a case to say that she would not live with her husband during the continuance of such marriage—Sheik Issake v. Biyyamunni, 2 Weir 647.

(6) Where a Burmese Buddhist has taken a lesser wife without the consent of the chief wife, the latter can refuse to live with her husband and at the same time claim maintenance—Ma Ka v. Po Saw, 4 L.B.R. 340, 9 Cr.L.J. 25. Also, according to Burmese Buddhist law, the fact that the husband took a second wife might be a good reason for the first wife's refusal to live with him, unless he provided her with a separate residence—Po Nyein v. Ma Shwe, 11 Bur.L.T. 105, 47 I.C. 866; Ma Ka v. Po Saw, supra. See also Maung Paik v. Ma Ohu Sint, infra.

(7) Where the Magistrate found that there was nothing before him from which he could conclude that the husband was even in the past anxious that his wife should come away from her mother to live with him, secondly, that his present offer was not bona fide, but made simply with the object of escaping liability, and finally that he used to neglect her and treat her badly, until he finally left her after assaulting her, this is a finding of "sufficient reason" within the meaning of sub-section (4) of this section—Richard Bruce Whigham Teasdale v. Florence Teasdale, 39 Cr.L.J. 969, 177 I.C. 939, 66 C.L.J. 567, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 623.

The following are not sufficient grounds for the wife's refusal to live with her husband:—

(1) The fact that the husband has married again does not entitle the first wife to separate maintenance, if the husband is willing to maintain her in his house—Arumugam v. Tulukanam, 7 Mad 187; Khushala, 1880 P.R. 27; Basant v. Kuri, 1882 P.R. 31; Dhara v. Nando, 1878 P.R. 2; Purushotam, Ratanlal 7; Waryam Singh, 1914 P.R. 12, 15 Cr.L.J. 577, 25 I.C. 329, 245 P.L.R. 1914; Pritam v. Basant, 93 I.C. 971, 27 Cr.L.J. 507, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 353, Ramzan v. Sahib Bibi, 29 Cr.L.J. 895, 111 I.C. 575, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 56; Kirpal v. Santi, 28 Cr.L.J. 236, 99 I.C. 1036, A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 168; Sukrulla v. Fatma, 35 Cr.L.J. 453, 77 I.C. 805, A.I.R. 1924 Nag 297. Though this is not a just ground for the first wife's refusal to live with her husband, that is a factor to be taken into account in considering whether the offer is really bona fide or not—Sundarammal v. Palaniandi Mudali, A.I.R. 1940 Mad 292, 1939 M.W.N. 1255, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 171, 1940 M.C.R.C. 9, 51 M.L.J. 204, 41 Cr.L.J. 532, 188 I.C. 32. The existence of a co-wife with whom, the complainant had quarrels, or the husband's want of affection for the complainant or his greater affection for the co-wife, is not a valid ground of the complainant's refusal to live with her husband—Ganda Singh v. Atma Devi, 1901 P.R. 14. The fact that the younger wife will suffer annoyance from the elder wife and that the husband may not protect her from such annoyance, is not a proper ground for the younger wife's refusing to live with her husband and claiming maintenance—Maung Waing v. Ma Chit, 1904 U.B.R. 1st Qr. (Cr. P. C.) 10, 1 Cr.L.J. 545, 10 Bur.L.R. 319. But two wives of a Burmese Buddhist do not live or cannot live amicably in the same house. Therefore even if the wife is asked to live with the husband in the same house with his another wife and even if she refuses, she is perfectly justified in doing so and is entitled to claim maintenance—Maung Paik v. Ma Ohu Sint, 40 Cr.L.J. 702, 182 I.C. 671, A.I.R. 1939 Rang 210, 12 R.Rang. 24.

(2) Minority of the wife is not a ground for her not living with her husband, if the husband offers to maintain his wife in his house—Jandoo, 1882 P.R. 1; though in not restrict the payment of maintenance, when the wife is living separately, only to cases of cruelty—Dragon v. Dragon, 4 Bur.L.T. 269, 13 Cr.L.J. 55. Where the husband did not habitually ill-treat the wife but behaved in a very violent manner towards her, it is not necessary for her to prove habitual ill-treatment in order to justify her refusal to return to his house—Ignatious v. Alagamma, 36 Cr.L.J. 1044, 156 I.C. 968, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 192, 1935 Cr.C. 748. A wife is not bound to return to her husband and live with him if really she has reasonable apprehension of physical ill-treatment—Sundarammal v. Palaniandi Mudali, A.I.R. 1940 Mad. 292, 1939 M.W.N. 1255, (1940) 1 M.L.J. 171, 1940 M.Cr.C. 9, 51 M.L.W. 204, 41 Cr.L.J. 532, 188 I.C. 32. There are other grounds on which the wife may live separately and claim maintenance, and these are stated below.

(2) If a Christian husband reverts to Hinduism and marries a second (Hindu) wife, the Christian wife may refuse to live with her husband, and apply for maintenance—Anonymous, 4 M.H.C.R. App. 3.

(3) Adultery on the part of the husband, although not punishable under the I. P. Code may nevertheless constitute sufficient cause for the wife living separately from her husband and enable her to claim maintenance under this section—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad. 470 (472); Malcolm De Castro, 13 All. 348. Where the husband is living with a mistress in the house at the time of application, the wife is entitled to refuse to live with him, and a subsequent offer made by the husband in Court to give up his mistress does not deprive the wife of her right of refusal to live with her husband—Garraty v. Garraty, 14 Bur.L.R. 240, 8 Cr.L.J. 422. But in such cases, the Magistrate should take into consideration the social habits of the particular community to which the parties belong. If that community does not completely disapprove of concubinage and tolerates it so far as to give kept woman some status and rights, the fact that the husband keeps a concubine ought not by itself to entitle the wife to claim separate maintenance—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad. 470 (475). The circumstance that a Hindu husband keeps a concubine in the house will not entitle a wife to an allowance for maintenance if her husband is willing to receive her and treat her with the consideration which is due to her position—Latchmi v. Pavadai, 2 Weir 541. A married woman should not, however, be put to the degradation of being brought into the society of a concubine of her husband—Abdul v. Sugrabi, 37 Cr.L.J. 86, 159 I.C. 120, 18 N.L.J. 107; Ram Saran Das v. Mt. Ram Piar, A.I.R. 1937 All 115 (116), 1936 A.L.J. 1379, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1268, 1937 A.L.R. 102, 166 I.C. 894, 38 Cr.L.J. 312, 11 L.R. 1937 All 430. If the husband is keeping in his own house another woman as his mistress, the wife is justified in refusing to accept his offer to take her to live with him, and to refuse to return to him. If he does not offer to expel the mistress from the house or to satisfy his wife that the mistress is no longer there, the Magistrate is perfectly entitled to pass an order for maintenance—Joseph Henry Robert v. Alice Kamalam Robert, 1937 M.W.N. 984. But the wife cannot exact a promise of sexual fidelity before she returns to live with her husband. Where the husband has never insulted his wife to compel her to live in the same house as his mistress and offers to take her back, and maintain her, she cannot refuse to go unless he will give up his mistress and cannot claim separate maintenance—P. Amaldoss v. Kamala Amaldoss, A.I.R. 1937 Mad. 794, 46 M.L.W. 324, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 488, 1937 M.W.N. 1197, 1937 M.Cr.C. 284, 171 I.C. 914.

(4) Where the breach between the husband and wife is irremediable and it is quite impossible for the latter to return to the former after many years' separation without leading to fresh trouble and dispute, she is entitled to live separately and get maintenance—Nihal Kaur v. Bhagwan, 170 P.L.R. 1914, 15 Cr.L.J. 554, A.I.R. 1914 Lah. 185, 24 I.C. 962 (distinguished in J. Chan Toon v. Ma Ti, 37 Cr.L.J. 6, 159 I.C. 81, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 359, 1935 Cr.C. 1083 on the ground that in that case the wife had already obtained an order many years ago and the question was whether the husband was entitled to have the order set aside on his offering to take his wife back); Balock v. Zainib, 32 P.L.R. 619, 1931 Cr.C. 849 (850), 32 Cr.L.J. 1231, 134 I.C.

(3) Where the husband is willing to maintain his wife, the fact that the prompt dower had not been paid is not a ground for separate residence and maintenance—Sadar Din v. Suban, 1888 P.R. 6; Mehtab v. Dina, 1880 P.R. 15. The non-payment by the husband of a prompt dower may be a good and sufficient reason under the Muhamaddan Law for a married woman to withhold her person from her husband, but it does not follow that such non-payment is a sufficient or good ground within the meaning of this section so as to empower a Court to pass a decree for maintenance to a Muhammadan wife against a husband who is willing to maintain her upon condition of her living with him. Non-payment of prompt dower is not sufficient reason under the provisions of this section to entitle a wife to claim separate maintenance when she refuses to live with her husband without any good reason—Muhammad Azizullah v. Abdul Halim, 36 Cr.L.J. 524, 154 I.C. 561, 1935 O.W.N. 292

(4) Where the husband offered to give his wife maintenance in his house but wanted her to live in a separate room and not to associate with the other members of his family and she refused the offer, held that she had no sufficient grounds for refusing and that under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., she could only claim to be maintained on a scale appropriate to her station in life but could not claim to be treated "as a wife." This section has nothing to do with ordinary conjugal rights; it deals with "maintenance" only which cannot include anything more than appropriate food, clothing and lodging—Arunachala v. Anandayammal, 34 Cr.L.J. 950, 145 I.C. 378, 38 M.L.W. 392, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 688, 65 M.L.J. 386, 1933 Cr.C. 1178, 1933 M.W.N. 1029, 56 Mad. 913.

(5) So long as a Jewish husband does not harass a Christian wife, so long as he treats her as husband should and permits her to practise her own religion and does not apply any temporal or moral pressure to her to cause her to abandon her religion or to adopt his, the Christian wife of the Jewish husband has no right to leave her husband. If she does so, she cannot reasonably expect that the Court should award her maintenance from him—Talkar, 27 Cr.L.J. 1177 (1178), 97 I.C. 809, 19 S.L.R. 128, A.I.R. 1926 Sind 278.

1285. Sub-section (4):—"Living in adultery":—Living in adultery means following a course of adulterous conduct more or less continuous; a single act of adultery cannot be considered as living in adultery—Gantapalli v. Gantapalli, 20 Mad. 470; Paiki v. Vishwanath, 5 N.L.R. 19, 9 Cr.L.J. 390; Patala Atchmma v. Patala Mahalakshmi, 30 Mad. 332, 17 M.L.J. 279, 5 Cr.L.J. 359; In re Fulchand, 52 Bom. 160, 108 I.C. 24, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 59, 30 Bom.L.R. 79, 29 Cr.L.J. 314 (315); Ram Autar v. Raghuri, 13 O.L.J. 802, 3 O.W.N. 717, 27 Cr.L.J. 1190; Gopaldeo v. Ratni, 30 Cr.L.J. 403, 115 I.C. 161, A.I.R. 1929 Nag 238, Ind Rul. 1929 Nag 97; Ma Thein v. Maung Mya Khin, 38 Cr.L.J. 646, 168 I.C. 825, 9 R.R. 368, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 67; Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847 (849), 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 42, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 151. The word 'living in adultery' refer to a course of conduct or at least to something more than a single lapse from virtue. Where the wife, two years prior to the application for maintenance, had given birth to an illegitimate child, but since that time she had been living with her parents leading a chaste and respectable life, she cannot be said to be living in adultery so as to disentitle her to maintenance—Kallu v. Kaunsilia, 26 All. 326, 1 A.L.J. 18, 1 Cr.L.J. 84, 1904 A.W.N. 23; Nandan, 1881 A.W.N. 37. Although the woman may be found to have given birth to an illegitimate child it is open to the Magistrate to find that, apart from that circumstance, she is not living in adultery—Jalindra v. Gouri Bala, 25 Cr.L.J. 1184, 88 I.C. 608, 29 C.W.N. 647, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 794.

The principle is that a husband is absolved from the obligation to maintain his wife when his wife has a de facto protector with whom she lives and by whom she is being maintained as if she were his wife. The obligation of a husband to maintain his wife arises from the anxiety of the Legislature to protect deserted wives from the bitter necessity of earning a living by trading on their sex. That obligation, however, ceases when it has been voluntarily assumed by some man other than the woman's husband. No woman can fairly claim a right to be kept by two men. But it obviously is not the law that a man may desert and neglect his wife and thus tempt her to unchastity and then resist her claim to be maintained by him on the ground that she is unchaste—Lakshmi Ambalam v. Audiammal, A.I.R. 1938 Mad 66, 1937 M.Cr.C. 317, 1937 M.W.N. 1131, 46 M.L.W. 766, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 885, 172 I.C. 811, 39 Cr.L.J. 228. It cannot be said that, unless a married woman lives with the adulterer in the latter's own house and is maintained by him as wife, the husband will be liable to pay maintenance under this section. Emphasis is no doubt to be laid on the words "is living in adultery". The clear implication from the words used by the Legislature in this section is that, unless the wife is actually living in adultery at or about the time of the application, she is not disentitled to obtain maintenance. It is nowhere said in the section and there is no need to introduce additional words therein that "living in adultery" must be in the house of the adulterer. The words 'living in adultery' are merely indication of the principle that occasional lapses from virtue are not a sufficient reason for refusing maintenance. Continued adulterous conduct is what is meant by 'living in adultery'. The question, therefore, for the Magistrate to decide is whether there had been such adulterous conduct on the part of the wife at or about the time of the application, that is to say, shortly before or shortly after the application was made, interpreting the word shortly in a reasonable manner—Kista Pillai v. Amirthammal, 39 Cr.L.J. 951, 177 I.C. 736, I.L.R. 1938 Mad. 1100, 48 M.L.W. 273, 1938 M.W.N. 829, A.I.R. 1938 Mad. 833, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 407, 11 R.M. 382, following Fulchand, supra.

In a case for claim for maintenance under this section the respondent who puts forward a charge of 'living in adultery' against the petitioner as his only defence to the claim for maintenance ought to begin his case and the petitioner against whom this charge is made ought to have an opportunity of adducing rebutting evidence—Kista Pillai v. Amirthammal, supra.

The fact that the wife had been outcasted and that her husband, therefore, could not take her to live with him without himself being outcasted, is not sufficient reason to induce a Magistrate to refuse to order maintenance—Yesubai v. Parasram, 34 Cr.L.J. 140, 141 I.C. 348, 34 Bom.L.R. 1449, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 21, 1933 Cr.C. 15, Ind. Rul. 1933 Bom. 77, dissenting from 31 Mad. 185.

Under certain circumstances, past adultery of the wife would disentitle her to maintenance, although she was not living in adultery at the time of the application. Thus, where a woman committed adultery with a man of low caste and was expelled from her caste, thereby making it impossible for her husband to live with her, she could not claim maintenance, although at the time of application she was not living in adultery—Ponnajee v. Peria Moopan, 31 Mad. 185; Ram Aular v. Raghurai, 3 O.W.N. 717, 13 O.L.J. 802, 27 Cr.L.J. 1190. Where the wife had deserted her husband many years ago and led a life of adultery and did not attempt to seek her husband's pardon for past misconduct, the wife was not entitled to maintenance, merely because she was not living in adultery at the time of making the application for maintenance—In re Shivram, Ratanlal 506 (507). But the fact that the wife does not seek the husband's pardon for her past misconduct is not, by itself, a sufficient reason for excluding a wife who committed only a single act of adultery from the benefit of sec. 488—In re Fulchand, 52 Bom. 160, 30 Bom.L.R. 79, 29 Cr.L.J. 314 (315), 108 I.C. 24, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 59, 9 A.I.Cr.R. 447.

There must be clear proof of adultery. The mere fact that the husband considers the wife's conduct open to suspicion is not sufficient—Soundarajaswami, 2 Weir 647. A mere suspicion by the husband that the child of the wife was the result of her intimacy with another man is not a ground of refusing maintenance—Nandon, 1881 A.W.N. 37. The mere fact that the panchayet of the brotherhood condemned the wife's conduct is not a ground for dismissing an application for maintenance, and the Magistrate should have inquired whether the wife was living in adultery—Kashij

Sheodiala, 1881 A.W.N. 62. It is erroneous to refuse to award maintenance to a wife (a young girl of 14) merely because she had been excommunicated from her caste by her caste-fellows for a stray case of misconduct against her will—Yesubai v. Parasram, 34 Bom L.R. 1449, 1933 Cr.C. 15.

See also Note 1286.

"Refuses to live with her husband":—See Note 1284, ante. If a Civil Court has passed a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, ordering the wife to live with her husband, and she refuses to do so, she is debarred from making any claim to maintenance—Bai Parvati v. Ghanchi, 44 Bom. 972 (975, 977). Where a Hindu wife leaves her husband's house without good cause, her right of maintenance is only suspended, and she has the right to return to her husband's house and claim maintenance—Janaki v. Shivram, 12 S.L.R. 90, 20 Cr.L.J. 98, 48 I.C. 978.

"Living separately by mutual consent":—A wife is not entitled to maintenance from her husband when both have entered into an agreement which provides for their living separately by mutual consent, and they are actually living separately in terms of that agreement—Tricumal Kalidas, Ratanlal 870. Where it appeared that by mutual consent, the husband and wife had been living separately for a number of years, and that the maintenance of the wife was, by arrangement made at the time they began to live separately, provided for by the assignment to her of some land, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order under this section—Gangaraju v. Bhadrappa, 2 Weir 648.

To bring the case within sub-section (4) it must be shown that the husband and the wife are living apart by a definite contract mutually made between them. A contract voluntarily and freely made and entered into between the parties is essential. Where, therefore, a husband and wife are living apart in obedience to the decree of a Panchayet of their castemen by which the wife is awarded maintenance, it cannot be said that they are living apart by mutual consent—Nathun v. Maturwa, 4 P.L.J. 109, 20 Cr.L.J. 154.

Where each party finds it impossible to live amicably and comfortably with the other and each party is content that they should live separately, they are living separately by mutual consent. If the wife finds her husband cold and indifferent it may make her prefer to live separately from him; but that is a matter of preference or choice. She cannot be said to have been forced to live separately from him unless it is established that he made it impossible for her to live with him by overt unkindness—Chan Toon v. Ma Ti, A I R. 1935 Rang. 359, 1935 Cr.C. 1083, 159 I.C. 81, 37 Cr.L.J. 6.

Because the wife would not live in a separate house with the husband, but insisted on staying on with him where they were, and he on his part was not willing or did not find it possible to comply with her wishes, this would not amount to "mutual consent" to live apart from each other—Richard Bruce Whigham v. Florence Teasdale, 39 Cr.L.J. 969, 177 I.C. 939, 66 C.L.J. 567, A.I.R. 1938 Cal 623. An agreement by the husband to pay half the salary every month to his wife as maintenance does not imply mutual agreement to live apart—Ibid.

The mutual consent as used in the sub-sec. (4) of this section means a consent on the part of the husband and wife to live apart no matter what the circumstances may be. Where a wife refuses to live with her husband on some specific ground such as cruelty or the fact that he is keeping another woman, it cannot be said that the husband and wife are living apart by mutual consent if the husband does not insist that the wife should live with him—Ram Saran Das v. Mt. Ram Piari, A.I.R. 1937 All. 115 (116), 1936 A.L.J. 1379, 1936 A.W.R. (H.C.) 1268, 1937 A.L.R. 102, 166 I.C. 894, I.L.R. 1937 All. 430, 38 Cr.L.J. 312, 9 R.A. 458, 1937 A Cr.C. 136.

See Note 1286.

been made was "living in adultery". Under sub-cl. (4) the Magistrate is entitled to refuse to enforce the maintenance orders on a finding that during the period in respect of which maintenance was sought to be recovered the applicant was "living in adultery"—Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847 (849), 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 42, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 151.

The general principles of law that an order, whose term is not fixed, and whose currency is not made expressly dependent upon the continued existence of some circumstances or set of circumstances, remains in force until it is cancelled, is, prima facie, applicable to maintenance orders passed under this section. The husband may, on proof of circumstances specified in sec. 488 (5) or sec. 489, Cr. P. C., obtain the cancellation or modification of the original order, as the case may be, and until he does that, the original order must be deemed to be still in force. Sec. 488 (5), Cr. P. C., provides for cancellation of the order. The reasons given therein for cancellation are not exhaustive—Pearey Lal v. Narami, 37 Cr.L.J. 62, 159 I.C. 308, A.I.R. 1935 All. 977, 159 I.C. 308, 1935 Cr.C. 1197, 58 All. 379, 1935 A.L.J. 1186, 1935 A.L.R. 1106, 8 R.A. 426. See also Kanagammal v. Pandara Nadar, 50 Mad. 663, 100 I.C. 239, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 376, 28 Cr.L.J. 271, 52 M.L.J. 176, 25 M.L.W. 148, 1927 M.W.N. 111 and Jasodabai v. Tarachand Tekchand, 40 Cr.L.J. 776, 183 I.C. 336, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 180, 12 R.S. 51, I.L.R. 1939 Kar. 674.

Under this sub-section, an allowance granted to the wife only can be cancelled; an allowance granted to a child cannot be cancelled, though it may be altered under sec. 489—Mehtab v. Allah Baksh, 17 P.R. 1885. An order for maintenance of the child of a divorced Mahomedan wife, who has married again, cannot be cancelled under this section. Such an order can be cancelled only on the ground of change of circumstances mentioned in sec. 489—Budhni v. Dadal, 27 All. 11.

'Is living in adultery':—An order granting maintenance to a wife can be cancelled under this sub-section upon proof that the wife is living in adultery subsequent to the order—Totaram, Ratanlal 353; Laraut v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. But adultery previous to the order of maintenance is not admissible in evidence to cancel the order. Specially, where a Magistrate had awarded maintenance to the wife after adjudicating upon all the facts antecedent thereto and connected with the objection of the husband as to wife's leading an adulterous life, held that on the principle of res judicata, another Magistrate would be wrong in re-opening the same antecedent facts as to adultery of the wife, and in discontinuing the maintenance on those facts—Laraut v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. Evidence of past adultery is admissible under sub-section (4) before passing an order of maintenance; but after an order is passed, such past adultery cannot be considered for the purpose of cancelling the order. The ruling in 5 All. 224 has been dissented from in 5 Rang. 697. See Note 1291, infra.

There must be sufficient evidence of adultery. The fact that the wife continually went to the bazar, or that men went to the house where she lived (especially when other people including the wife's mother lived in that house) is not sufficient evidence to lead to the conclusion that the wife was living in adultery—Shyama v. Madho, 1893 A.W.N. 56. The words 'living in adultery' mean a continuous course of misconduct; and unless this continuity is established it cannot be inferred from a single act of adultery that the woman is living in adultery. Therefore, where a woman to whom maintenance had been awarded under this section gave birth to an illegitimate child, held that this single instance of misconduct did not show that she was living in adultery, so as to enable the Magistrate to cancel the allowance—Jatindra v. Gauribala, 29 C.W.N. 647, 26 Cr.L.J. 1184, 88 I.C. 608, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 794; Ma Mya Khin v. Godenho, 37 Cr.L.J. 1115, 165 I.C. 205, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 446, 1937 R.L.R. 86, 1936 Cr.C. 864; Paiki v. Vishwanath, 5 N.L.R. 19, 9 Cr.L.J. 390; Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847 (849), 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 42, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 151. Where the husband alleges adultery, the Magistrate should make an inquiry and adjudicate upon such allegation—Uttam Chand, 1902 P.R. 36; Sohni v. Manohar, 1882 A.W.N. 168.

Sheodiala, 1881 A.W.N. 62. It is erroneous to refuse to award maintenance to a wife (a young girl of 14) merely because she had been excommunicated from her caste by her caste-fellows for a stray case of misconduct against her will—Yesubai v. Parasram, 34 Bom L.R. 1449, 1933 Cr.C. 15.

been made was "living in adultery". Under sub-cl. (4) the Magistrate is entitled to refuse to enforce the maintenance orders on a finding that during the period in respect of which maintenance was sought to be recovered the applicant was "living in adultery."—*Chetibai v. The general principles of law that an order, whose term is not fixed, and whose currency is not made expressly dependent upon the continued existence of some circumstances or set of circumstances, remains in force until it is cancelled, is, prima facie, applicable to maintenance orders passed under this section. The husband may, on proof of circumstances specified in sec. 488 (5) or sec. 489, Cr. P. 'Is living in adultery':—An order granting maintenance to a wife can be cancelled under this sub-section upon proof that the wife is living in adultery subsequent to the order—Totaram, Ratanlal 353; Larati v Ram Dial, 5 All 224. But adultery previous to the order of maintenance is not admissible in evidence to cancel the order. Specially, where a Magistrate had awarded maintenance to the wife after adjudicating upon all the facts antecedent thereto and connected with the objection of the husband as to wife's leading an adulterous life, held that on the principle of res judicata, another Magistrate would be wrong in re-opening the same antecedent facts as to adultery of the wife, and in discontinuing the maintenance on those facts—Larati v Ram Dial, 5 All 224. Evidence of past adultery is admissible under sub-section (4) before passing an order of maintenance, but after an order is passed, such past adultery cannot be considered for the purpose of cancelling the order. The ruling in 5 All 224 has been dissented from in 5 Rang. 697. See Note 1291, infra.

There must be sufficient evidence of adultery. The fact that the wife continually went to the bazar, or that men went to the house where she lived (especially when other people including the wife's mother lived in that house) is not sufficient evidence to lead to the conclusion that the wife was living in adultery—Shyama v. Madho, 1893 A.W.N. 56. The words 'living in adultery' mean a continuous course of misconduct; and unless this continuity is established it cannot be inferred from a single act of adultery that the woman is living in adultery. Therefore, where a woman to whom maintenance had been awarded under this section gave birth to an illegitimate child, held that this single instance of misconduct did not show that she was living in adultery, so as to enable the Magistrate to cancel the allowance—Jatindra v Gauribala, 29 C.W.N. 647, 26 Cr.L.J. 1184, 88 I.C. 608, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 794; Ma Mya Khin v. Godenho, 37 Cr.L.J. 1115, 165 I.C. 205, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 446, 1937 R.L.R. 86, 1936 Cr.C. 864; Paiki v. Vishwanath, 5 N.L.R. 19, 9 Cr.L.J. 390; Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847 (849), 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 42, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 151. Where the husband alleges adultery, the Magistrate should make an inquiry and adjudicate upon such allegation—Uttam Chand, 1902 P.R. 36; Sohni v. Manohar, 1882 A.W.N. 168.

The fact that a wife is living in adultery does not automatically deprive her of the maintenance for the order of maintenance once passed stands good until it has been cancelled. It cannot be cancelled with retrospective effect. The wife can, therefore, recover the amount that was due to her before the order of cancellation—Bhag Sultan v. Muhammad Akbar, 30 Cr.L.J. 719, 117 I.C. 67, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 99, 1930 Cr.C. 96, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 611.

An order of cancellation under this sub-section takes effect from the date of the order and has no retrospective operation. It cannot, therefore, affect the arrears due up to the date of the order—Tari Bala v. Kibal Ram, 39 Cr.L.J. 357, 173 I.C. 785, I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 509, 66 C.L.J. 571, 10 R.C. 573, 42 C.W.N. 64, A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 144.

Where the maintenance allowances under this section were in favour jointly of the applicant and her minor son, even if the applicant had forfeited her claim to a maintenance allowance for living in adultery, that reason did not affect the claim of the minor son who was jointly entitled to the maintenance allowance. The Magistrate is to consider separately the claim of the minor son under the applicant's application—Chetibai v. Naroomal Shehoomal, 39 Cr.L.J. 847, 176 I.C. 863, 11 R.S. 42, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 151.

See also Note 1285.

'Living separately by mutual consent':—Where after an order for maintenance had been passed, both the husband and wife while temporarily living together presented a petition by which they agreed that the husband should pay his wife Rs. 10 a month so long as she stayed at the house of her father, and the petition asked for a decree on the said terms, held that the intention of the parties was, when they filed the petition, that the wife should abandon all claims for arrears due till then—Parul Bala v. Satish, 37 C.L.J. 180; 24 Cr.L.J. 945, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 456, 75 I.C. 529.

Where the wife denied the validity of an alleged deed of compromise by which the parties agreed to a reduction in the rate of the allowance ordered by the Magistrate, it was held that the Magistrate was not competent to cancel the order for maintenance until the agreement had been declared by a competent tribunal to be binding on the wife—Karuppa v. Karupakkal, 2 Weir 649.

See also Note 1285.

Other cases:—Sub-sec. (5) is not exhaustive of the grounds on which an order for maintenance may be cancelled. Thus, an order can be cancelled on the ground of divorce. Where the husband pleads in answer to an application for enforcement of the order of maintenance, that subsequent to the order of maintenance he has lawfully divorced his wife, and such plea is proved, the Court will decline to enforce the order, for the period subsequent to the date when the marriage ceased to exist—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All 50; Ahmad Kasim v. Khalun, 59 Cal 833; Shaikh Daud, 17 N.L.R. 92, 63 I.C. 392, 22 Cr.L.J. 633. On a valid divorce actually taking place, the Magistrate's order ceases to have operation—Abdul Ali, 7 Bom. 180. The apostasy of a Mahomedan wife ipso facto dissolves the marriage and the wife, therefore, is not entitled to maintenance from her husband—Sonaullah v. Ma Kin, 9 L.B.R. 206, 46 I.C. 716, 19 Cr.L.J. 799. In case of Mahomedans the order becomes inoperative on the expiry of the period of iddat after divorce—Mahomed Hossin v. Ma Pua, 13 Bur.L.T. 43, 21 Cr.L.J. 503, 56 I.C. 663. So also, where the father was ordered to pay maintenance to his daughter, the marriage of the daughter makes her maintenance a charge on her husband and not on her father, and the father may apply for cancellation of the order—Gurusyami, 2 Weir 650 (651).

Wife returning to her husband:—If a wife who has obtained an order for maintenance, returns to her husband, and lives with him for some time (and even bears a child), the order for maintenance will not come to an end, but will only remain in suspense; so that if she leaves him again, she will be entitled to enforce the order, and a fresh application for a fresh order will not be necessary—Kanaammal v. Pandara, 50 Mad 663, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 376, 100 I.C. 239, 52 M.L.J. 176, 25 M.L.W. 148, 1927 M.W.N. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 271 (272); Narayanaswami v. Mangayarkarasammal, 28 Cr.L.J. 237; Zahura Bi v. Muhammad Yusuf, 32 P.L.R. 143, 1930 Cr.C. 1219 (1220), 129 I.C. 216, 32 Cr.L.J. 247, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 1043, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 152. A mere temporary stay of this kind, though it may have suspended the operation of the order, has not the effect of cancelling it in the way in which it can be cancelled under sec. 488 (5)—Parul Bala v. Satish, 37 C.L.J. 180, 24 Cr.L.J. 945, A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 456, 75 I.C. 529. But the Allahabad and Burma Courts are of opinion that upon a wife voluntarily returning to her husband, the order for maintenance would become permanently ineffectual, and that if afterwards the parties separate again, she would have to obtain a fresh order for maintenance upon fresh application; the original order cannot be enforced—Phulkari v. Harnam, 1888 A.W.N. 217; Ma Tin v. Maung An Gyi, 1 Cr.L.J. 870 (871); U Po Shem v. Ma Sein, 8 Rang. 460, 32 Cr.L.J. 114 (115), 128 I.C. 353, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 89, Ind. Rul. 1931 Rang. 1. In a very recent case the Allahabad High Court followed the view of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts mentioned above, distinguishing Phulkari v. Harnam, supra—Pearey Lal v. Naraini, A.I.R. 1935 All. 977, 37 Cr.L.J. 62, 159 I.C. 308, 1935 A.L.J. 1186, 1935 Cr.C. 1197, 1935 A.L.R. 1105, 8 R.A. 416, 58 All. 379.

The view of the High Courts, excepting Rangoon, is consistent with the principles underlying sub-sec. (3) of the section. It is always open for the husband to apply to have the original order cancelled on good cause being shown so that the Rangoon argument that it should not be held in terrorem against him does not appear convincing. The re-union does not automatically vacate the previous order. The length of time during which re-union lasts is hardly relevant. The parties may contemplate permanent re-union and yet quarrel and separate again after a short interval—John P. E. Coelho v. Mrs. Blanche, 38 Cr.L.J. 170 (172), 166 I.C. 27, A.I.R. 1936 Nag. 228, 1936 Cr.C. 913, 9 R.N. 116, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 230.

See also the last paragraph of Note 1274.

Application for cancellation is essential:—Sub-section (5) provides that in certain specific circumstances the Magistrate shall cancel the order. In such cases it will be incumbent upon the counter-petitioner to make an application for cancellation of the order; until he does so, the order will remain in force. Thus, the mere fact that a wife is living in adultery will not bring the order to an end automatically. So also, the mere fact that the wife has returned to live with her husband will not put an end to the order—Kanagammal v. Pandara, 50 Mad. 663, 28 Cr.L.J. 271 (272); Narayanaswami v. Mangayarkarasammal, 28 Cr.L.J. 237, 99 I.C. 1037, 38 M.L.T. 13, A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1148.

Application to whom to be made:—An application for the cancellation of an order of maintenance must be made to the Magistrate who made the original order or to his successor-in-office—Bhagwanta v. Sheo Charan, 25 All. 545.

Magistrate can go into question of divorce:—The Magistrate can go into the question of divorce, even in a summary proceeding under sec. 488, if the husband applies for cancellation of the order of maintenance on the ground that he has divorced his wife. If the husband is able to adduce satisfactory evidence that there has been a valid divorce, the Magistrate would be justified in acting upon that evidence. It is not necessary for the husband to produce a decree of a Civil Court declaring that he has divorced his wife—Punjyalal, 30 Bom.L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 908 (909). Cf. also Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50; Abdul Ali, 7 Bom. 180. See also Note 1275 under the heading "Effect of divorce".

1287. Sub-section (6)—Evidence:—An order under this section must be passed on proof in the proceedings, and not upon knowledge acquired by the Magistrate in some other case—Lopotee v. Tikha, 8 W.R. 67. An order for payment of maintenance without recording evidence and without examining any witnesses is illegal—Venkatachala Paduachi, 2 Weir 628. Where a Magistrate, instead of examining the applicant at length, and her witnesses, got her only to verify on oath the truth and correctness of her application, and treating her application as legal evidence against the husband, passed an order for maintenance, held that the order was bad—Kamta v. Mangal Dei, 23 O.C. 237, 25 Cr.L.J. 302. Proceedings under this Chapter are judicial in their nature and should not be conducted as if they were ministerial matters. The notes of evidence, therefore, should not be vague or inadequate and the order recorded must be issued on distinct findings of fact—Laraiti v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. If, however, an order is made with the consent of parties, the necessity of evidence may be dispensed with—Rangammal, 2 Weir 629.

The evidence must be recorded as provided by sec. 355. Proceedings under this Chapter cannot be conducted as in a summary trial under Chap XXII—Kali Dasi v. Durga, 20 Cal 351. But if the proceedings are held before a Presidency Magistrate, it is not necessary for him to record evidence. This is the effect of sec. 488 (6) and sec. 362 (4) read together—Chhagan Hargovan, 34 Bom.L.R. 276, 1932 Cr.C. 238, 33 Cr.L.J. 461, 137 I.C. 27, A.I.R. 1932 Bom. 179, Ind. Rul. 1932 Bom. 242, where Hanifabai, 32 Cr.L.J. 276, 129 I.C. 339, 33 Bom.L.R. 1499, Ind. Rul. 1931 Bom. 147, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 142, 1931 Cr.C. 190 was not followed.

The Magistrate is bound to inquire as to whether the wife has good reason for not living with her husband—Tajbaro v. Ghulam Qadar, 35 Cr.L.J. 491, 147 I.C. 772, A.I.R. 1933 Pesh. 101, 1935 Cr.C. 9.

Presence of the defendant:—As directed by this sub-section, the inquiry should be conducted in the presence of the person proceeded against. A proceeding under this section should not be conducted ex parte. Evidence should be taken in the presence of the defendant or his pleader, unless the Court is satisfied that the defendant is willingly avoiding service of summons or neglecting to attend the Court, proceedings should not be taken ex parte, especially in a case where proceedings are taken against a person on the ground that he is the father of an illegitimate child—Ajoy Chandra v. Dubi, 1 C.L.J. 102. Proceedings can be conducted in the presence of the pleader, only when the personal attendance of the defendant has been dispensed with. Where his attendance has not been dispensed with the Court is justified in refusing to hear the Mukhtear by whom he is represented, and the Court ought to insist upon the presence of the defendant and should not proceed ex parte—Hormuzshah v. Perozbai, 2 Bom.L.R. 700.

Ex parte:—The word ex parte is not defined in the Cr. P. Code but the proceedings instituted under this section are a quasi civil nature. Therefore, the word ex parte used in this section is used in the same sense as is used in Orders IX and XVII, Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, an order passed against an absent party at the adjourned hearing of a case under this section is an ex parte order—Maung Ba Tun v. Ma Kyway, 40 Cr.L.J. 537, 181 I.C. 377, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 151, 11 R.Rang. 460.

Under the proviso to this sub-section, the Magistrate may proceed ex parte, if he is satisfied that the defendant is willingly avoiding service and neglecting to attend the Court. But in every case of absence of the defendant the Court ought not to treat the absence as due to wilful neglect—Mormuzshah v. Perozbai, 2 Bom.L.R. 700. A Court ought not to infer that the defendant was neglecting to attend the Court, when the inability to attend was due to the absence of specification in the summons of the place where he was to appear—Anonymous, 7 M.H.C.R. App. 43, 2 Weir 38.

Where, no notice having been served on the person against whom the proceedings were taken, the order was passed ex parte, and within three months he applied to the Magistrate's successor to have the order revised, stating that he had no notice of the application, such succeeding Magistrate had jurisdiction under sec. 488 (6) to have the case re-opened and disposed of according to law—Maung Tun v. Ma Thein, 2 Bur.L.J. 61, 24 Cr.L.J. 928, A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 159.

Examination of defendant:—Sec. 342 does not apply to a proceeding under sec. 488, because the words "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence" are inappropriate to such a proceeding—

Vithaldas, 53 Bom. 768, 29 Cr.L.J. 1051 (1052); Meher Khan, 10 Lah. 406, 29 Cr.L.J. 1002 (1003, 1004), 112 I.C. 218, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 32. For contra see Demello v. Demello, 27 Cr.L.J. 1000, 96 I.C. 856, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 667. At any rate, if the defendant has given evidence on his own behalf, it is not necessary to further examine him under sec. 342—Bachai v. Jamuna, 25 Cr.L.J. 1901, 81 I.C. 915, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 339. Where the defendant did not appear, and the matter was decided ex parte under sec. 488 (6), the non-examination of the defendant was immaterial—Raspin v. Raspin, 36 C.W.N. 380 (381), 138 I.C. 629, 33 Cr.L.J. 640, 1932 Cr.C. 480, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 488, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 477.

Presence of complainant:—This section does not require the personal attendance of the complainant. If the complainant be a pardanashin lady, her presence may be dispensed with—Ghulam v. Niazali, 1903 P.R. 19. In Hakim v. Mouzi, 1 C.L.J. 214 and Ma Sa v. Paul Sassoon, U.B.R. (1892-96) 64, however, the Magistrate dismissed an application for maintenance for default of appearance of the complainant.

1287A. Sub-section (7)—Costs:—Under this sub-section the High Court has power to deal with costs—Yesubai v. Parasram, 34 Cr.L.J. 140, 141 I.C. 348, 34 Bom.L.R. 1449, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 21, Ind. Rul. 1933 Bom. 77, 1933 Cr.C. 15. The High Court ordered payments of costs in this as well as in Kent v. Kent, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 59, 90 I.C. 669.

1288. Sub-section (8)—Forum:—This sub-section did not occur in the 1872 and 1882 Codes and it was, therefore, held that the application must be heard by the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the wife resided—Malcolm De Castro, 13 All. 348; Todd, 5 N.W.P. 237. These decisions are no longer good law. Under the present Code the proper Court to take cognizance of a petition by the wife under this section is the Court within whose jurisdiction the husband or the father, as the case may be, resides. In fact, the circumstances which it may be necessary for the husband to prove in answer to the complaint of his wife are better known in the place of his residence than in that of her residence, and the inconvenience of going with his evidence to a place hundreds of miles away from the place of his residence is a strong reason why the jurisdiction to take cognizance of such a complaint should be confined to Magistrates having local jurisdiction at the place where the husband may reside. See In re Shaik Fakruddin, 9 Bom. 40 (46); Benbow v. Benbow, 24 Cal. 638; Hildephonsus v. Malone, 1885 P.R. 13; Bishen Das v. Nanaki, 1893 P.R. 3. This sub-section does not give the wife or child to select a forum other than that where the husband or father is then residing or last resided with the complainant—Maung Wang v. Ma Chut, 10 Bur.L.R. 319, 1 Cr.L.J. 545. See also Bishen Das v. Amar Kaur, 34 Cr.L.J. 1171, 146 I.C. 51, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 387, 1933 Cr.C. 640. The mere fact that the marriage of the parties took place at a certain place is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction under this section on the Magistrate within whose jurisdiction the place is situated—Ghulam Hussain v. Hakab Bibi, 27 Cr.L.J. 1009, 96 I.C. 865, A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 663.

The words "last resided" do not contemplate a mere casual residence in a place for a temporary purpose with no intention of remaining there. Such residence does not give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Ramdeo v. Jhunni Lal, 1 Luck. 343, 3 O.W.N. 231, 27 Cr.L.J. 820; Cf. Flowers v. Flowers, 32 All. 203, 5 I.C. 871, 7 A.L.J. 193 (F.B.). Where the husband has a fixed place of residence, it is Magistrate of that place who has jurisdiction, and an occasional visit to the wife at another place where the wife resides, does not give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of the latter place. See Flowers v. Flowers, 32 All. 203; Khairunnissa, 53 Bom. 781, 1929 Cr.C. 462, 122 I.C. 59, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 410. Therefore, where the husband who was a permanent resident of Lahore for 11 years, took his wife to Lucknow at her brother's house and left her there declaring that he would support her no longer, and his stay at Lucknow did not exceed a week, held that as the residence at Lucknow was a mere flying visit, the application for maintenance should be made at Lahore and not at Lucknow—Ramdeo v. Jhunni, supra. See also Lee v. Lee, 34 Cr.L.J. 744, 144 I.C. 51, 10 O.W.N. 374, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh. 119, 1933 Cr.C. 270, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 226. Where the husband pays only occasional visits to his wife, who lives apart from him, he cannot be said to reside at the place where the wife resides, so as to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Ram Kumar v. Rukmin, 24 O.C. 249, 63 I.C. 870, 22 Cr.L.J. 710. But if the parties have no fixed place of residence, the application should be made to the Court within whose jurisdiction the husband and wife last resided, even though temporarily. See Bright v. Bright, 36 Cal. 964 (1966), 4 I.C. 419; Murphy v. Murphy, 45 Bom. 547 (550); Khair-un-nissa, 53 Bom. 781, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 410, 31 Cr.L.J. 331, 31 Bom.L.R. 931, 1929 Cr.C. 462. Where a man has no fixed dwelling, any place where he is staying at any particular time may be treated as his residence—Fernandez v. Wray, 25 Bom. 176. (The cases of 32 All. 203, 36 Cal. 964 and 45 Bom. 547 were decided with reference to the meaning of the word "resided" in sec. 3 of the Indian Divorce Act, 1869). In a later Allahabad case, it has been held that though a mere flying visit does not amount to residence (as in 3 O.W.N. 231), still the residence contemplated by this sub-section does not necessarily mean permanent residence, but includes a temporary residence. And so, where a husband and wife left their permanent place of residence (Bhatgaon) and stayed for two months at Agra, the husband paying occasional visit to his permanent place of residence, held that the temporary residence at Agra was sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Magistrate at Agra—Sher Singh v. Amur Kunwar, 49 All. 479, 25 A.L.J. 435, 101 I.C. 670, A.I.R. 1927 All. 291, 28 Cr.L.J. 494; Sama Jettha, 54 Bom. 548, 1930 Cr.C. 780 (781), 31 Cr.L.J. 1157, 127 I.C. 179, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 410. The same view has been taken in Allah Ditta v. Sakina, 29 Cr.L.J. 687, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 853, 110 I.C. 239; in Jolly v. Jolly, 21 C.W.N. 872, 18 Cr.L.J. 706, 40 I.C. 706 and Janki, A.I.R. 1932 Nag. 85, 34 Cr.L.J. 32, 140 I.C. 394, 15 N.L.J. 24, 1932 Cr.C. 435. But the mere hiring or purchase of a residential building at a place, irrespective of the actual residence of the owner therein, would not confer jurisdiction on the Magistrate of that place to entertain petitions under this section against the owner—Bai Ganga v. Amrillal Purshottam, 38 Cr.L.J. 248, 166 I.C. 574, 9 R.B. 244, 38 Bom.L.R. 1107, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 35.

Where there is something more than a flying visit, where a man leaves his house and resides for some time in the house of his parents-in-law with his wife, that is a sufficient residence within the meaning of this sub-section. This sub-section does not necessarily refer to permanent residence. It refers also to temporary residence. The word "residence", of course, implies something more than a mere brief visit, a mere flying visit. It suggests a certain continuity, but if there be a continuity for such a period of time as to allow it fairly to be said that the husband did reside even for a matter of some weeks with his wife, it does not appear to us that the section should be so strictly construed as to deprive the woman, who often in these cases is helpless, of assistance from the Court which is most easily accessible to her. It is not possible in such cases to fix any arbitrary period of time to say, for instance, two months at Agra, six weeks at Bombay, one month at Karachi as a minimum to constitute residence for the purposes of this section. Each case will have to be dealt with on its merits. It could easily be said that a visit of a few days is not residence within the meaning of this section, but it could not easily be said that a visit of a few weeks was not residence within the meaning of this section. Each case, however, must be dealt with on its merits, the distinction between a mere visit and residence being borne in mind—Gongabai v. Pamanmal Lachman, 40 Cr.L.J. 117, 178 I.C. 527, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 223.

In the case of persons who have a fixed residence, a visit to another place for however long a period, so long as it is casual, will not confer jurisdiction. A person who works and has a permanent home in L cannot, by his visits during period of casual leave, confer jurisdiction on the S courts. Where, however, the parties have no home of any sort and are moving about from place to place, each place where they so live, would be their home for the time being. The sole test on the question of residence is whether a party has animus manendi, or an intention to stay for an indefinite period, at one place; and if he has such an intention, then alone can he be said to reside there.

When, therefore, the wife left the husband and went to live with her mother at S and the husband went there on two or three occasions apparently with the intention of persuading his wife to return, the Courts at S has no jurisdiction to entertain the application of the wife under this section—Chayan Das v. Surasti Bai, AIR. 1940 Lah. 449 (451), 42 P.L.R. 470, overruling Allah Dutta v. Sakina, supra.

The intention of the Legislature in using the words, "where he resides or is, or where he last resided with his wife," in this sub-section was to make it as easy as possible for an aggrieved person to obtain a maintenance under the provisions of this section. Obviously, it was intended in the first place to confer jurisdiction upon the proper authorities within the district in which the permanent residence or home of the opposite party happened to be situated. But by using the words "or is" the further intention appears to have been that proceedings might also be taken against opposite parties, who had no permanent residence within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate concerned, but who might be easily found there. This expression is certainly sufficiently wide to confer jurisdiction upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate in a case in which the opposite party works for gain within the jurisdiction of his Court, even though he may not have a permanent residence within such jurisdiction—Indubala Devi v. Satchid Prosad, 40 Cr.L.J. 598, 181 I.C. 898, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 345, 11 R.C. 871, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 333.

In the case of a kept mistress, a man is said to reside with her if he visits her only occasionally at her settled abode, so long as he has the intention of continuing to so visit her. If the woman has no settled abode, her stay for two months at a place where she is occasionally visited by the man would give jurisdiction to the Magistrate of that place—Hidayat v. Mahomed, 5 S.L.R. 220, 13 Cr.L.J. 522 (523).

An order passed by a Magistrate who is empowered to try maintenance cases under this section would not be bad merely because the proceedings were taken in a wrong Court. To such a case, sec 531 is applicable and not sec. 530 (n)—Sitaram v. Sukia, 49 C.L.J. 205, 30 Cr.L.J. 525, 115 I.C. 602; Maung Park v. Ma Ohu Sint, 40 Cr.L.J. 702, 182 I.C. 671, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 210, 12 R.Rang. 24.

1289. Whether civil suit lies:—Where the right to maintenance is conferred by this section as well as by the personal law of the parties, the right can be enforced not only under this section but also by a civil suit for maintenance. But where the right is not conferred by the personal law of the parties (e.g., the right of the illegitimate children of a Hindu by a non-Hindu woman, to get maintenance from their putative father), such right cannot be enforced by a civil suit, and the only remedy is that provided by this section. The distinction between a remedy under the common law and a remedy under this section is that the right under the common law may be enforced not only against the defendant during his life-time, but also against his estate after his death, but a right under this section does not survive the death of the defendant—Lingappa v. Esudason, 27 Mad. 13.

Order does not bar civil suit:—An order under this section passed by a Magistrate does not take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts—Deraji Mahinga v. Maratikarim, 30 Mad. 400 (401). A Magistrate's order for payment of separate maintenance does not bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to make a declaration that the husband is not liable to pay separate maintenance to his wife—Veeran v. Ayyammah, 2 Weir 615. In spite of an order for maintenance of illegitimate children passed by a Magistrate, a civil suit is maintainable for a declaration that the children are not the children of the plaintiff—Kailasa v. Raghubar, 17 O.C. 331, 26 I.C. 526; Nga Po v. Ma Me, A.I.R. 1922 U.B. 20, 1 Bur.L.J. 82. Similarly, an order of a Magistrate refusing maintenance does not bar a suit in a Civil Court for maintenance—Ghana Kanta v. Gereli, 32 Cal. 479.

Although an order under sec. 488 has been passed with the consent of both the parties, yet it cannot operate as a bar to a civil suit for restitution of conjugal rights, unless in the maintenance proceedings the husband had consented not merely to the order for maintenance but that in all circumstances the wife should live apart from him—Guruvappa v. Thayarammal, 54 Mad. 558, 60 M.L.J. 433, 1931 Cr.C. 546 (547),

A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 482, 33 M.L.W. 423, 1931 M.W.N. 364, 131 I.C. 463, Ind. Rul. 1931 Mad. 527.

1290. Effect of Civil Court decree:—Effect of previous decree:—A Civil Court's decree cannot be disturbed by an order of the Magistrate. Where a decision for a monthly allowance for maintenance has been obtained in the Civil Court and is in force, the Magistrate is not competent to order a further and separate maintenance—Subburamakamma, 2 Weir 615. And it is immaterial whether the Civil Court decree was passed ex parte or after contest—Sharda Prasad, 1932 A.L.J. 766, A.I.R. 1932 All. 583, 1932 Cr.C. 701. The jurisdiction vested in the Magistrate being auxiliary to that of the Civil Court, it is not open to a Magistrate to ignore a Civil Court decree on the ground that it rests on reasons which do not appear to him satisfactory—Veeran v. Ayyammah, 2 Weir 615. Where the husband has obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and the decree is in force, an application for separate maintenance by the wife ought not to be entertained by the Magistrate—Nga Po Saw v. Mi Thet, 11 Cr.L.J. 662; Mt Hta v. Aye Maung, A.I.R. 1931 Rang. 111, 1931 Cr.C. 352, 133 I.C. 96. But where the husband had been making unfounded allegations of adultery against the wife she was justified in refusing to live with him, and was, therefore, entitled to maintenance, even when a decree for restitution of conjugal rights was subsisting against her—Sher Khan v. Bakhat Bhari, 33 Cr.L.J. 748, 139 I.C. 123, 33 P.L.R. 554, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 566. Where a Civil Court has declared that the child is not child of the defendant, the Magistrate should treat the decree as conclusive on the question of relationship and should refuse to pass any order for the maintenance of the child—Narayanan Itticherry, 33 M.L.J. 449, 18 Cr.L.J. 971. But the weight to be attached to a decree must depend upon the particular circumstances of the case; and no hard and fast rule can be laid down that a decree of a Civil Court is for ever binding on the Magistrate. If, after the husband had obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, he ill-treated his wife so much that she had to leave his house, and she applied to the Magistrate for an order of maintenance, and the Magistrate granted the application on the ground that she was justified in refusing to live with her husband, held that the Magistrate was justified in ignoring the decree and in exercising his discretion in favour of the wife by absolving her from the condition that she must live with her husband. Otherwise the husband can at first get a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and then turn his wife out without any allowance at all—Rajpati v. Deoli, 46 All. 877 (878), 22 A.L.J. 806, 25 Cr.L.J. 1246. The Civil Court decree, although ex parte, cannot be ignored by the Criminal Court. Where an application under this section is put in deliberately for the purpose of ignoring any decree that the Civil Court may pass in a pending suit for restitution of conjugal rights, the wife is not entitled to any relief in the Criminal Court—Sharda Prasad, A.I.R. 1932 All. 583, 1932 A.L.J. 766, 1932 Cr.C. 701, 141 I.C. 610.

The existence of an order of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court in England whereby the husband is directed to pay his wife so much alimony per month, is no bar to an application by the wife under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., if in fact the husband has neglected to maintain his wife. The existence of the order is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, for a mere order for maintenance is not equivalent to maintenance. Sec. 488 gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to award maintenance if he is satisfied that a person has neglected to maintain his wife—Kent v. Kent, 49 Mad. 891, 49 M.L.J. 335, 26 Cr.L.J. 1597, A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 59, 90 I.C. 669; Saraswati v. Narayan, 33 Cr.L.J. 631, 138 I.C. 613, 36 C.W.N. 571, 55 C.L.J. 311, 59 Cal. 1229, 1932 Cr.C. 653, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 698, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 471. Where there is a decree of the Civil Court for maintenance in favour of the wife and the decree cannot be executed on account of the insolvency proceedings initiated by the husband, held that a mere decree of Civil Court awarding maintenance is not equivalent to maintaining the wife and that a Magistrate has jurisdiction under this section to pass an order for maintenance in favour of the wife—Mahomedalli, 31 Cr.L.J. 609, 124 I.C. 127, 31 Bom.L.R. 1366, A.I.R. 1930 Bom. 141. This section contains no direction that an order under it cannot be made if there is a decree for maintenance of a Civil Court, although under sub-sec. (4) conditions are specified under which an order cannot be made. Of course the existence of a decree of a Civil Court is relevant when the Magistrate is considering what form of order he should make under this section, but the mere existence of a decree of a Civil Court does not oust the jurisdiction of a Magistrate in a proper case to make an order under this section. If the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that an order for maintenance should be made, he ought to make it clear in his order that anything paid under the decree of the Civil Court will be taken into account against anything which he may order to be paid—Taralakshmi Manuprasad, 40 Cr L J. 91, 178 I.C. 533, A.I.R. 1938 Bom 499, 40 Bom L.R. 1103, distinguishing Saraswati v. Narayan, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 698, 33 Cr L J. 634, 59 Cal. 1229, 36 C.W.N. 571, 55 C.L.J. 341, 138 I.C. 613, 1932 Cr C. 653, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 471.

Effect of subsequent decree:—See the new sub-sec (2) of sec. 489. Where an order passed by a Magistrate under this section for maintenance against the husband, and in a subsequent suit by the husband in the Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights a consent decree is passed allowing the wife maintenance and residence, held that the decree of the Civil Court will supersede the Magistrate's order—Nur Muhammad v. Ayesha, 27 All 483. The decree of a Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights supercedes any previous order of a Magistrate for maintenance, if the wife should persist in refusing to live with her husband. The Magistrate ought to cancel his order or rather to treat it as determined if the wife failing to comply with the decree for restitution refuses to live with her husband—Bulakidas, 23 Bom. 484; Maung Tha v. Ma Mya, 9 Bur L.T. 162, 17 Cr L J. 412, 35 I.C. 972, A.I.R. 1916 L.B. 17; Maung Pan Aung v. Ma Hmue Bon, 1 Bur L.T. 104; Chandulal, 43 Bom 885, 21 Bom L.R. 766, 20 Cr L J. 687. The subsequent decree of the Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights has to be considered, and if the wife persists without cause in refusing to live with the husband, then the order for maintenance is to be cancelled—Ma Pwa Shein v. Maung Po Kue, 40 Cr L J. 827, 183 I.C. 692, 1939 Rang L.R. 741, 12 R.R. 100, A.I.R. 1939 Rang 314. But a decree of a Civil Court ordering restitution of conjugal rights does not ipso facto cancel a maintenance order passed under the Cr. P. Code. In considering any application for cancellation of a maintenance order, the Magistrate is not necessarily bound to follow the order of the Civil Court, but must consider it along with any other circumstances which may be brought before him—Maung Dun v. Ma Sein, 3 Rang 150, 26 Cr L J. 1341, 89 I.C. 317, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 268; Maung Chit Tun v. Ma Pwa Sein, 35 Cr L J. 813, 148 I.C. 908, 1934 Cr C. 262, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 39. A decree for restitution of conjugal rights does not necessarily debar a wife from claiming separate maintenance. Sec. 489 (2) gives a certain amount of discretion to the Magistrate as to whether he should cancel the order, and thus discretion must be exercised judicially—Ali Mahomed, 20 S.L.R. 145, 27 Cr L J. 876 (877). Undoubtedly, if Civil Court had given to the husband a decree for restitution and the husband bona fide wished to execute that decree and the wife refused, that would be a good ground for cancelling the order of maintenance under sec. 488—Ali Mahomed, supra. Where a decree for restitution of conjugal rights imposing certain conditions on the husband is passed against a wife, who had obtained an order for maintenance, non-compliance by the husband with the condition of the decree would revive the right of the wife to claim maintenance and to have the order enforced—Devi Datta v. Ganga Devi, 115 P.L.R. 1907, 1906 P.R. 4, 4 Cr L J. 73. The party who obtains decree for restitution must comply with the conditions of the decree, and failure to comply with those conditions would justify the Magistrate in holding that the order of maintenance should not be cancelled—Ma Pwa Shein v. Maung Po Kue, supra. See also Ramdheyan v. Ram Sularia, A.I.R. 1923 Pat 153, 3 P.L.T. 51. A husband against whom an order for maintenance was passed obtained subsequently a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. Two execution petitions filed by him were dismissed as he failed to prosecute the same diligently, and it was clear from his conduct that he was not at all anxious to get back his wife to live with him on the ordinary terms of husband and wife.

Held that as the object in getting the decree for restitution of conjugal rights was merely to get the maintenance order cancelled, and not a bona fide wish to live amicably with her, the Court should not exercise its discretion under clause (2) of sec. 489 and cancel the order for maintenance—Pavakkal v. Athappa, 49 M.L.J. 269, 27 Cr.L.J. 30; Bombay High Court Circular Rule "Bombay Gazette", January 8, 1892. The Magistrate would be justified in not cancelling the order for maintenance where the suit for restitution is brought, not with a view to take the wife back, but simply to evade the payment of the allowance awarded—Ma Pwa Shein v. Maung Po Kwe, supra. But if the husband, who has obtained a decree for restitution makes a bona fide attempt to live with his wife, but the latter flatly refuses to live with him, she is not entitled to claim maintenance, and the order for maintenance must be cancelled—Ali Mahomed, 20 S.L.R. 145, 27 Cr.L.J. 876 (878).

Where a Civil Court has decided any points which would disentitle the wife to maintenance, the Magistrate who had previously passed an order for maintenance, will be bound, in the interests of justice, to take the judgment into consideration before proceeding to pass a fresh order enforcing payment of the allowance—Anonymous, 2 Weir 614. And so, when the Civil Court finds that the relationship of husband and wife has ceased to exist, the husband is entitled to ask the Magistrate, who is enforcing the order of maintenance, to abstain from giving further effect to the order—Mahomed Abid v. Luddon Saheba, 14 Cal 276. Similarly, where the relationship of father and child on which the maintenance order is based has been declared by a final decree of a competent Civil Court not to exist, it is open to the person adversely affected by the order to ask the Magistrate to abstain from giving any further effect to the order of maintenance. Therefore, a Civil Court decree declaring that A is not the child of B supersedes a Magistrate's previous order for A's maintenance, and the Magistrate cannot enforce the Criminal Court's order after the Civil Court decree is passed—Venkayya v. Padamma, 46 Mad. 721, 45 M.L.J. 104, 24 Cr.L.J. 720; Raghubar, 2 O.L.J. 251, 16 Cr.L.J. 609. No doubt, the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to cancel an order for maintenance (see Subhudra v. Basdeo, 18 All. 29), or to grant an injunction against a Criminal Court, but where the Civil Court has passed a declaration that a person is not the father of a child, the party who has obtained it can apply to the Criminal Court under sec. 489 for an order to stay the payment of maintenance to the child—Nga Po Thein v. Ma Me San, 1 Bur.L.J. 82, A.I.R. 1922 U.B. 20 (21); U Arzeina v. Ma Kyin Shwe, A.I.R. 1940 Rang 298 (300), 1940 Rang L.R. 668. The proper course in such cases is for the plaintiff, if he is successful in his civil suit, to approach the Criminal Court under sec. 489 (2), Cr. P. C., and to apply to the Magistrate to cancel or vary the order for maintenance accordingly—U Arzeina v. Ma Kyin Shwe, supra. See also Maung Dun v. Ma Sein, A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 268, 89 I.C. 317, 26 Cr.L.J. 1341, 3 Rang 150.

When the wife obtained an order for maintenance of herself and of her child, subsequent order of the Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights in favour of husband does not affect the question of his liability to maintain the child—Ma Pwa Shein v. Maung Po Kwe, supra, following Nan Saw Shwe v. Maung Hpont, 6 L.B.R. 127, 18 I.C. 658, 14 Cr.L.J. 98.

Effect of pending civil proceedings:—The Magistrate would exercise a better discretion on receiving an application under this section against a husband who had already instituted proceedings in the Divorce Court, if he refers the applicant for her remedy to the Civil Court. It was not the intention of the Legislature in sec. 489 to encourage applicants to resort to Criminal Courts up to the very time when an order was passed by a competent Civil Court. As the Civil Court was seised of the matter, it is better that the Civil Court should dispose of it. Where the Criminal Court entertained the application in such circumstances, the High Court stayed criminal proceedings under this section until the conclusion of the divorce petition—Ross v. Ross, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 210, 1932 Cr.C. 901.

The fact that the litigation is pending is no reason whatever for not giving effect to the order awarding maintenance which is still in force—Mahbub Sultan v. Qutabdin, 31 Cr.L.J. 770, 125 I.C. 63, 30 P.L.R. 740, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 213, 1930 Cr.C. 201.

The Civil Court has no jurisdiction to restrain a wife by an injunction from pursuing her remedy in the Criminal Court. Where a husband instituted a suit for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife after she instituted proceedings against him in the Criminal Court under this section and obtained an order of injunction from the Civil Court restraining the wife to proceed with her application, held that the order of injunction was to be treated as a nullity and that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to proceed with the case—Krishna Gobinda v. Kishoribala, 32 Cr.L.J. 232, 129 I.C. 103, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 753, Ind. Rul. 1931 Cal. 119, 1930 Cr.C. 1153.

1291. Miscellaneous:—Second application—It is not competent for a Magistrate to hold a second inquiry into the same facts and allegations which have once been already inquired into and dismissed by himself or by another Magistrate—Sadrudin v. Musahib, 1916 P.R. 24, 18 Cr.L.J. 326; Mutcsari v. Nand Kumar, 17 Cr.L.J. 106, 32 I.C. 842 (Cal.). On the general principle of res judicata, a Magistrate is wrong in law in re-opening a matter of maintenance which had already been adjudicated on by another Magistrate—Larait v. Ram Dial, 5 All. 224. But the Rangoon High Court, dissenting from this view, has said that the Magistrate is not wrong in law in entertaining the second application, nor are his proceedings bad or void regardless of merits, but, of course, the Magistrate ought not to act on the second application without considering the previous decision—Po So v. Ma Kyin, 4 L.B.R. 337, 9 Cr.L.J. 21; Maung Hla v. Ma On Kin, 8 Rang. 697, 28 Cr.L.J. 912; Ma Saw May v. U Aung Thein, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 277, 1935 Cr.C. 982, 36 Cr.L.J. 1391, 158 I.C. 641. But the Magistrate can entertain a subsequent application for fresh cause shown. There may be change of circumstances which would enable the applicant to come into Court again, not on the same ground, but on a new ground—Maung Hla v. Ma On, 5 Rang. 697, 28 Cr.L.J. 912; Ma Su v. Paul Sassoon, U.B.R. (1892-96) 64; Avudai v. Subramania, 2 Weir 633.

An order refusing to enforce the maintenance order in respect of arrears of maintenance for one period does not operate as a bar to a subsequent application to enforce the order for arrears of maintenance that have accrued during a different and a later period—Maung Tin v. Ma Hmin, 34 Cr.L.J. 815, 144 I.C. 187, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 138, 1933 Cr.C. 728, 11 Rang. 226, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 92 (F.B.).

But if the previous application has been dismissed for default of appearance and there was no adjudication regarding the merits, a second application is entertainable—Monmohan v. Surabala, 24 C.W.N. 32, 21 Cr.L.J. 3, 30 C.L.J. 128; Maung Hla v. Ma On, supra. Contra—Hakimi v. Mouze, 1 C.L.J. 214, 2 Cr.L.J. 213, where it has been held that if an application under this section is dismissed for non-appearance, the law does not empower the Magistrate to re-hear the application.

Insanity of defendant:—If the defendant in a proceeding under this section is alleged to be insane, the Magistrate has no power to appoint a guardian ad litem, but he should hold a judicial inquiry into his sanity and put him under medical observation, if necessary. If, as a result of such inquiry he comes to the conclusion that the defendant is insane, he must follow the procedure laid down in Chap. XXXIV and postpone the proceedings until the Magistrate is satisfied that the defendant is capable of understanding the proceedings—Appichi v. Kuthu Jammal, 48 Mad. 388, 48 M.L.J. 187, 26 Cr.L.J. 701, A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 440, 86 I.C. 77. But an application under section 488 for maintenance against a husband or father stands on a different footing altogether from an application under section 489 by the person who has been ordered to pay maintenance. Where the husband or father becomes incapable of understanding the proceedings, there may be no alternative but to stay those proceedings until he recovers his sanity. But the same considerations do not apply where it is the person in whose favour an order has been made who becomes insane. The Manager appointed by the District Judge under the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912) is obviously the proper person to state the case for the lunatic wife—Zinabkhai v. Bai Mani, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 454 (455), 39 Bom.L.R. 626, I.L.R. 1937 Bom. 674, 171 I.C. 899.

No limitation:—A wife does not lose her right of maintenance because she has delayed in making the application—Kunnath v. Veluth, 2 Weir 616. The law has not fixed any time within which a claim for maintenance is to be made. The fact that the wife has not advanced her claim immediately on her husband's desertion of her does not disentitle her to maintenance—Velth, 2 Weir 615. The second proviso to sub-section (3) provides a period of limitation for an application for the issue of a warrant for enforcement of the order, but not for an application for maintenance.

1292. Nature of proceedings under this section:—A proceeding under this section is of a criminal nature, and therefore it is a criminal case within the meaning of section 528, and the District Magistrate may withdraw a case instituted under this section from the file of a first class Magistrate to his own file—Ghulam Rukia v. Niaz Ali, 1905 P.R. 5, 2 Cr.L.J. 40. (But section 528 speaks of a 'case', and not of a 'criminal case'; and the word 'criminal' has been omitted from sects. 526 and 527 also; so that it is no longer necessary to consider whether a case under sec. 488 is a criminal case or not.) As the order is one passed in a criminal trial, no appeal lies under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the order of a single Judge made on a revision petition against the order of a Magistrate under this section—Rayana Appadu v. Rayana Appanna, 39 Mad. 472. If the parties to the proceedings compromise the claim for maintenance, the Magistrate cannot pass an order in accordance with the terms to the compromise; because to do so would be to assume the functions of a Civil Court—Lingada v. Labbakka, 2 Weir 629. He can only dismiss the petition for maintenance and strike it off the file—Lingada, supra.

The Calcutta High Court holds that proceedings under this section are civil proceedings and the defendant thereto may give evidence on his own behalf—Nur Mahomed v. Bismulla, 16 Cal. 781. This is now expressly provided by sub-section (2) of sec. 340. A proceeding under this section being a proceeding of a civil nature, the parties can be examined as witnesses. Thus, the wife may be examined as to the non-access of her husband during her married life, in order to prove the illegitimacy of her children—Rozario v. Ingles, 18 Bom. 468. The person proceeded against under this section is not an accused—Parbati v. Chotey, 17 C.P.L.R. 127, 1 Cr.L.J. 864. The word 'accused' was formerly inadvertently used in sub-section (9). The Legislature has now corrected the error by substituting the words "any person" for the word "accused". This section is not intended to be punitive but a preventive one, and hence the neglect or refusal to pay maintenance is not an 'offence' within the meaning of sec. 4—Ponnammal, 16 Mad. 234; Hildephonsus v. Malone, 13 P.R. 1885. An application for maintenance is not a complaint of an offence, and the provisions of sec. 177 are not applicable to determine the jurisdiction of the Court competent to entertain the application—Hildephonsus v. Malone, supra. Nor is the person against whom the application is made an accused—Mehr Khan v. Bahkt Bhari, 29 Cr.L.J. 1002, 112 I.C. 218, 10 Lah. 406, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 32. Compensation cannot be awarded under sec. 250 to the person proceeded against if the application for maintenance is dismissed as false and frivolous or vexatious—Amboo v. Baboo, 6 M.L.T. 261, 11 Cr.L.J. 156. The Magistrate cannot send the case under sec. 202 for inquiry—Makhan v. Harnamo, 29 Cr.L.J. 909 (910), 111 I.C. 669 (Lah.). The defendant cannot be examined under sec. 342, as he is not an accused. See Note 973 under sec. 342.

The provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code in regard to applications for maintenance stand by themselves. In fact, they might properly form part of a separate Act. They are not really criminal proceedings in the sense in which are proceedings in regard to the prosecution for the commission of an offence. No analogy can be drawn between complaints in regard to the commission of offences and application for maintenance—Ma Saw May v. U. Aung Thein, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 277. See also Mehr Khan v. Bahkt Bhari, supra.

Further inquiry:—When an application under this section is dismissed by a Magistrate, the District Magistrate cannot order further inquiry under sec. 436, because it cannot be said that a complaint has been dismissed or the accused has been discharged—Parbati v. Chotey, 17 C.P.L.R. 127, 1 Cr.L.J. 864.

Appeals:—When a Magistrate orders maintenance under this section no appeal lies as there is no conviction of an offence—Golam Hossein, 7 WR 10; Thaku, 5 B.H.C.R. 81.

1293. Revision:—When the Magistrate has given most careful and considered attention to the evidence put before him, it would not be proper for the High Court to alter his findings when it cannot be shown that he has made any grievous error in his estimation of the evidence—Chan Toon v. Ma Ti, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 359, 1935 Cr.C 1083, 159 I.C. 81, 37 Cr.L.J. 6. The High Court dealing with a case under this section will not approach the matter as if it were a Court of Appeal. So long as the proceedings of the Magistrate were in order and so long as the Magistrate has fairly estimated the evidence before him in his mind, his decision should not be disturbed even if the High Court should be of the opinion that on the evidence another conclusion might have been reached—Ignatious v. Alagamma, 36 Cr.L.J. 1044, 156 I.C. 968, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 192, 1935 Cr.C 748. The High Court will be very loath to interfere with a finding of fact, for the party aggrieved by the finding may always file a suit. But it must interfere if the Magistrate awards maintenance to a woman and does not justify his action by a definite finding that she is the wife of the person ordered to pay her maintenance—Lakshmi Ambalam v. Audiammal, A.I.R. 1938 Mad 66, 1937 M.Cr.C 317, 1937 M.W.N. 1131, 46 M.L.W. 766, (1937) 2 M.L.J. 885, 172 I.C. 811, 39 Cr.L.J. 228.

The High Court is not disposed to interfere with the discretion of a Magistrate when he has fixed an amount of maintenance after considering all the circumstances of the case—In re Bai Manek, 52 Bom 763, 29 Cr.L.J. 1049 (1050). But in awarding maintenance Magistrates must award a reasonable amount. Where the allowance is obviously grossly inadequate, the High Court will interfere—Ma E Mya v. U Ko Ko Gyi, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 370 (372), 171 I.C. 800.

The High Court can set aside in revision a previous order of a Criminal Court passed under this section in view of a subsequent decree of a Civil Court—Raghubar, 2 O.L.J. 251, 16 Cr.L.J. 509.

But the High Court does not interfere in revision when other issues are raised which should be settled in the Civil Courts, and when nothing is to be gained by protracted litigation in the Criminal Court. In such cases, the persons aggrieved by Magisterial orders should take their case to the Civil Courts—Kandasami, 50 M.L.J. 44, 27 Cr.L.J. 350.

Where the husband applied in revision for cancellation of the order of maintenance on the ground that the marriage had become null and void on account of the first husband of the wife being alive, held that the High Court could not, in a revision application of this kind, properly deal with that question, but that the petitioner must apply to the Court of matrimonial jurisdiction to have the marriage declared null and void—Palmerino v. Pamerino, 28 Bom L.R. 1299, 28 Cr.L.J. 51 (52). See also Edward Saitendra v. Suchalata, 41 C.W.N. 898.

In proceedings under this section the applicant was exempted from personal appearance in Court. On the date fixed for applicant's evidence she was not present and her Counsel failed to attend the Court as he missed a motor connection. Thereupon the Magistrate made an order under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., acquitting the accused. On revision the High Court quashed the order and directed the Magistrate to decide the case on the merits—Fatima v. Abdul Hamid, 25 Cr.L.J. 1501, 151 I.C. 1096, A.I.R. Lah. 195, 1934 Cr.C 436.

Review:—The Code of Criminal Procedure does not authorise a Magistrate to review the final order made by him in a proceeding under sec. 488 of that Code. Even if sec. 369, Cr. P. C., does not apply in terms the principle laid down in that section does apply, as there is no doubt that proceedings under sec. 488 are judicial proceedings and that the final order or the reason given for the final order in any such proceeding is in effect a judgment—Nandan Narain v. Manmaya, 21 C.W.N. 344, 18 Cr.L.J. 556, 39 I.C. 700; Saw Gwan Shein v. Ma Kin Kin, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 222, 41 Cr.L.J. 833, 190 I.C. 142. If he finds that he has committed any error, it is his duty to submit the proceedings to the Sessions Judge for submission to the High Court for rectification—Ibid. See also Punjali, 29 Cr.L.J. 908, 111 I.C. 668, 30 Bom.L.R. 617, A.I.R. 1928 Bom. 224.

Nature of the order:—Arrears of maintenance under order of a Criminal Court are not attachable property within the meaning of sec. 60 of the Civil Procedure Code. The right to receive maintenance is a purely personal right created by an order of a competent Court; it is inalienable. It is a personal right which is not assignable and consequently not liable to be sold in execution of a decree for money—Gribala v. Nirmalabala, 62 Cal. 404.

489. (1) On proof of a change in the circumstances of any person receiving under section 488 a monthly allowance, or ordered under the same section to pay a monthly allowance to his wife or child, the Magistrate may make such alteration in the allowance as he thinks fit:

Provided that if he increases the allowance the monthly rate of one hundred rupees in the whole be not exceeded.

(2) Where it appears to the Magistrate that, in consequence of any decision of a competent Civil Court, any order made under section 488 should be cancelled or varied, he shall cancel the order or, as the case may be, vary the same accordingly.

Change:—In sub-section (1) the words 'one hundred' have been substituted for the word 'fifty', and sub-section (2) has been newly added, by section 132 of the Cr. P. Code Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923.

1294. Scope:—The parties to a proceeding under section 488 can always move the Magistrate again when there is a change of circumstances—Shanno Debi v. Daya Ram, 35 Cr.L.J. 473, 147 I.C. 719, A.I.R. 1933 Lah. 1026, 1934 Cr.C. 12.

Before an alteration in the allowance is made there should be an application by one of the parties—Lilawanti v. Madan Gopal, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 24, 37 Cr.L.J. 68, 159 I.C. 310, 1935 Cr.C. 18.

This section furnishes the ground on which the Court passing an order under sec. 488 can modify the order. An order of a competent Court under sec. 488 for the maintenance of a child can be modified under this section—Budhuni, 27 All. 1. When a maintenance order is made without reference to the means of the husband, he should apply under this section, if he is aggrieved, for reduction of the allowance—Goyamoney v. Mfohesh Chunder, 9 W.R. 1. The alteration of an order of maintenance and the grant of it on a lower scale than that of the original order is not legal, without an application under this section from one of the parties and without proof of change of circumstances—Venkatachala Podiachi, 2 Weir 628.

If an order which was passed by a Magistrate under sec. 488 has been varied by the High Court in revision, the Magistrate has jurisdiction under sec. 489 to vary the amount of maintenance in accordance with the High Court's decision. He need not refer the applicant to the High Court—Haji v. Fatma, 1932 Cr.C. 200, 33 Cr.L.J. 646, 138 I.C. 624, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 59, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 87.

The Magistrate has jurisdiction to vary the amount of maintenance fixed under sec. 488 not only by himself but by his predecessor-in-office—Haji v. Fatma, supra. Where an application under this section is referred to an arbitrator who makes an award, he is not competent to review his award subsequently—Bhagwati v. Gajadhar, 36 Cr.L.J. 186, 152 I.C. 822, A.I.R. 1934 All. 940, 1934 Cr.C. 1248. Before the orders regarding fixation of maintenance can be vacated, action must be taken under this section. So a Magistrate cannot refuse to enforce an application for arrears of maintenance merely because the opposite party appears, makes part payment and promises to allot land in lieu of future maintenance—Multan v. Faramosh, 37 Cr.L.J. 347, 160 I.C. 802, A.I.R. 1936 Pesh. 32, 1936 Cr.C. 119.

An application under this section can be made so long as there is a subsisting order under section 488. Thus, an order awarding maintenance to the wife was passed in 1910; afterwards in 1912 the husband obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, but he never executed it and went on paying the maintenance to his wife as before. In 1918, the wife applied for increase of the amount of maintenance under sec. 489. Held that this application could not be granted because there was no subsisting order under section 488, the same having been put an end to by the decree of 1912. The fact that the husband continued to pay the maintenance in spite of the decree of 1912 did not keep the order of 1910 alive—Chandulal, 43 Bom. 885, 20 Cr.L.J. 687, 52 I.C. 607. Similarly, where after the wife's application for maintenance, the parties compromised and the husband agreed to pay his wife Rs. 5 per month whether she lived in his house or at her father's house, and the Court passed an order to that effect, the wife was not afterwards entitled to apply for an increase of maintenance on the ground that her father, with whom she had been living, had died. The fact that the parties came to a compromise put an end to the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court. The wife must seek her remedy in the Civil Court—Sham Singh v. Hakam Devi, 1930 Cr.C. 623 (624), A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 524, 31 Cr.L.J. 1179, 127 I.C. 13, 15 A.I.Cr. 125.

It is only a change of circumstances of the kind mentioned in this section that the Magistrate can make an alteration in the maintenance allowance that has to be paid. He cannot inquire whether at the time when the husband was directed to pay the allowance he had sufficient means, because that in effect would be a review of the previous judgment of the Court, which is prohibited by sec. 369—Punjatal, 30 Bom.L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 908.

Notice:—There is no provision in this section requiring the issue of a notice to the wife or child. In accordance with the maxim audi alteram partem, the Court may properly require that the point of view of the wife or child, as the case may be, should be properly placed before it in the case of an application under this section for reduction of the amount of maintenance. But the Court is not fettered by any technical rules as to representation or as to the kind of evidence which it may accept as sufficient. There is no need for the appointment of a guardian ad litem. The manager appointed by the District Judge under the Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912) is obviously the proper person to state the case of the lunatic wife. There is nothing in the Code which prevents the Magistrate from taking his evidence. Nor is there anything in the Code which requires that any additional or different evidence should be produced or that the wife should be otherwise represented. The Magistrate takes a narrow view of his powers under this Chapter in holding that he cannot proceed with an application under this section for reduction of the amount of maintenance ordered to be paid to the wife who becomes insane—Zinabhai v. Bai Mani, A.I.R. 1937 Bom. 454 (455), 39 Bom.L.R. 626, I.L.R. 1937 Bom. 674, 171 I.C. 899.

1295. Change of circumstances:—The expression 'change in the circumstances' in this section means not merely a temporary or accidental change in one of such circumstances (such as salary) but a change in all the circumstances connected with the condition of the person—Rukmini v. Priari, 1891 A.W.N. 32.

The change of circumstances in this section is a change of pecuniary or other circumstances of the party paying or receiving the allowance, which would justify an increase or decrease of the amount of the monthly payment originally fixed, and not a change in the status of the parties, which would entail stoppage of the allowance—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50. The words 'alteration in the allowance' clearly indicate that the section refers to such change of circumstances as would necessitate only an alteration in the amount of allowance, and not to circumstances (e.g., divorce) which entail the discontinuance of the allowance altogether—Din Mahamad, 5 All. 226 (per Mahmood, J.); Punjatal, 30 Bom.L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 908 (909). Circumstances which necessitate not merely an alteration in the allowance but a cancellation of the order of maintenance do not come under this section but under sub-section (5) of section 488; or can be pleaded by the husband when the order is being enforced under sub-section (3) of that section—In re Punjalal, 30 Bom.L.R. 617, 29 Cr.L.J. 908 (909). See also U Ba Thaung v. Ma Aye, 10 Rang. 196, 1932 Cr.C. 476 (477). But the Madras High Court holds the opinion that the word 'alteration' includes cancellation. The reduction of the maintenance allowance to nothing (which is the same thing as cancellation of the order granting maintenance) would come within the meaning of the word 'alteration'. Therefore, a Magistrate can under this section cancel the allowance granted to the daughter, if she has since been married and has thus become able to maintain herself by reason of her marriage—Meenakshi v. Karupanna, 48 Mad. 503, 48 M.L.J. 183, 26 Cr.L.J. 732.

The growth of the child, or the birth of another child, or the death of a child is a change in the circumstances—Ramayee, 14 Mad. 398; Upendra v. Soudammi, 12 Cal. 535. The advance in age of the child is a change of the child's circumstances—Maung Shwe Ba v. Ma Thein Nya, 40 Cr.L.J. 440 (441), 180 I.C. 584, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 95, 1938 Rang. 673, 11 R.Rang. 423, following Charles Nepean v. Ma Kyaw, (1893-1900) L.B.R. 393. The fact that the children are grown up and are no longer unable to maintain themselves amounts to a change in the circumstances—Ma Yu v. Coloquhoun, 19 Cr.L.J. 160; Thambuswamy, 10 Bur.L.T. 209, 18 Cr.L.J. 103, 9 L.B.R. 49. See also Ma E Shi v. U San Kai, 40 Cr.L.J. 241, 179 I.C. 643, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 67, 11 R.Rang. 336. Where a divorced Mahomedan wife has married again, the fact that the second husband has merely undertaken to maintain her child by the first husband, does not empower the Magistrate to cancel the order of maintenance passed against the first husband to maintain his child. There is no such change of circumstances as is contemplated by this section—Budhni v. Dabal, 27 All. 11. The second husband is not bound by law to maintain the child; perhaps he may refuse to maintain it any day. So the change of circumstances in this case is not such as can be relied upon.

The change of circumstances must be actual and of such a nature that the law would recognise it. The mere fact that the wife might possibly be able to earn something by her own labour is not a ground on which the husband may apply for reduction of the rate of allowance—Ghurbin v. Gobindi, 1887 A.W.N. 107, because the law does not compel a wife to work for her livelihood, while her husband is living and has sufficient means to maintain her. If the parties, subsequent to an order under sec. 488, make an agreement modifying its terms, such agreement would amount to a change in the circumstances, and the party interested can apply under this section and get the order modified—Prabhu v. Rami, 25 All. 165.

Before the original order of maintenance can be altered, it must be shown that there has been, if not a change in the circumstances of the husband, then a change in the circumstances of the wife. The mere fact that the wife is living in a different manner from the manner in which she lived at the time the order of maintenance was passed, does not necessarily constitute a change in her circumstances. The facts that the husband is heavily in debt because of the infructuous litigation which he has been conducting against his wife and that has a mistress and children by her to maintain, would be no reason for reducing the allowance awarded to his legal wife—Msa Mya Khin v. N. L. Godenho, 39 Cr.L.J. 274, 173 I.C. 135, 10 R.R. 312, A.I.R. 1938 Rang. 42.

In an application for cancellation of the order of maintenance the question whether the marriage between the parties was null and void in consequence of the wife's first husband being alive at the time of the marriage of the parties cannot properly be dealt with. This question could have been gone into at the time when the application of the wife for maintenance was heard. This being not done, it must be left to be determined in a proper proceeding under the matrimonial jurisdiction of the Court which may have jurisdiction to deal with the matter—Palmerino v. Palmerino, 28 Cr.L.J. 51, 99 I.C. 83, 28 Bom L.R. 1299, A.I.R. 1927 Bom. 46.

The father made a deed of gift of his half share in a house, the other half share of which was held by the mother of the girl, to the girl in whose favour the order of maintenance had been previously made. Nothing was said in the deed of gift about the gift being intended to take the place of the order for maintenance. The father made an application for cancellation of the order of maintenance on the ground that the gift made an alteration in the child's circumstances. Held that the child's income from her half share was not an income which was sure by any means and hence the order could not be cancelled completely, but in view of the fact that the house had become the sole property of mother and the child and thus caused a change in the child's circumstances, the effect of which it was difficult to assess, the amount might be reduced—Maung Din v. Ma Dwe, 38 Cr.L.J. 910, 170 I.C. 285, 10 R.R. 75, A.I.R. 1937 Rang. 239.

1296. Alteration of allowance:—An order of alteration of allowance under this section cannot take effect retrospectively. The Magistrate has no power to reduce the rate of maintenance which has already accrued due; his order will take effect in respect of the allowance that will fall due after the date of the order. The arrears which have fallen due will be enforced at the rate originally fixed—Parvatnam v. Mutha, 2 Weir 650; Lilauanti v. Madan Gopal, A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 24, 1935 Cr.C. 18, 159 I.C. 310, 37 Cr.L.J. 68.

When an application for modification of the allowance has been preferred under this section, the Magistrate cannot inquire into the propriety or otherwise of the previous order of maintenance—Marrakkal, 2 Weir 650.

An application for alteration of allowance is no ground for staying the execution of an order of maintenance already granted, as that order carries with it all the proper consequences so long as it remains in force—Sidheswar v. Gyanada, 22 Cal 291.

The amount of maintenance payable to each person must be specified; otherwise it cannot be altered. See Thambuswamy, 9 L.B.R. 49, 18 Cr.L.J. 103, cited in Note 1279 under section 488.

Sub-section (2):—See Notes 1282 and 1290

Where an application is made under this sub-section praying that, in view of the subsequent decree for restitution of conjugal rights the Magistrate should cancel the maintenance order, he should give each side an opportunity of being heard—Maung Chit Tun v. Ma Pwa Sein, 35 Cr.L.J. 813, 148 I.C. 908, A.I.R. 1934 Rang. 39, 1934 Cr.C. 262, A.L.R. 1934 Rang. 122.

The Magistrate cancelled his order for maintenance under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., passed in favour of the wife when the husband brought to the notice of the Magistrate that he had obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife. He did not then inform the Magistrate that an appeal against the decree was pending. When the decree was reversed on appeal the wife petitioned the Magistrate who restored the original order of maintenance. Held that section 369, Cr. P. C., does not apply to the case in view of the express provisions of secs. 488 and 489, Cr. P. Code. The order cancelling the previous order for maintenance was really obtained by fraud upon the Magistrate in his not being apprised on that date that the decree for restitution of conjugal right was liable to be set aside on appeal which was then pending and an order obtained by fraud must be treated as having no legal effect. Section 489 (2), Cr. P. C., suggests that it is open to the Magistrate to vary the order of maintenance.

nance or to alter it if circumstances so require—Bhagubhai Ranchhodas v. Bai Arvinda, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 334.

490. A copy of the order of maintenance shall be given without payment to the person in whose favour it is made, or to his guardian, if any, or to the person to whom the allowance is to be paid; and such order may be enforced by any Magistrate in any place where the person against whom it is made may be, on such Magistrate being satisfied as to the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance due.

1296A. Scope:—The only conditions laid down in respect of the enforcement of the order under this section are: (1) the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance due. If any such thing occurs as may be fit to vacate the order, the proper procedure for the husband is to apply to the Court and get the order cancelled. So long as the order stands, it is capable of being enforced though in the case of the woman living with her husband, it would remain suspended for the period during which she lives with her husband—Pearey Lal v. Naraini, 37 Cr.L.J. 62, A.I.R. 1935 All. 977, 159 I.C. 308, 1935 Cr.C. 1197, 58 All. 379, 1935 A.L.J. 1186, 1935 A.L.R. 1106, 8 R.A. 426

1297. Who can enforce order:—The order can be enforced by a second class Magistrate, if the person against whom the order is passed resides within his jurisdiction—Ubhai, Ratanlal 288.

The words 'any Magistrate in any place where the person against whom it is made may be' do not deprive the Magistrate who has made the order of his power to enforce the order under sec. 488 (3), even though the defendant no longer resides within his jurisdiction. It was not intended by the Legislature that the poor wife would have to rush about the country pursuing her absconding husband to wherever he chooses to go. When the defendant is beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who made the order, he may issue a warrant for collection of the arrears of maintenance—Gnanambalammal, 52 Mad 77, 55 M.L.J. 516, 29 Cr.L.J. 932; Kari Papayamma, 4 Mad. 230. The application for an order to enforce the recovery of maintenance may be made either to the Magistrate who passed the original order or to the Magistrate having jurisdiction over the place where the person resides. It is left in the applicant to choose where she will apply. The provisions of this section cannot be held to derogate from the provisions of sec. 488 (3)—Ma Thaw, 7 L.B.R. 116, 15 Cr.L.J. 701 (702), dissenting from Kari Papayamma, 4 Mad. 230, where it was held that if the defendant had left the jurisdiction of the Court passing the order, the Court had a discretion to refer the application to the Magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant was to be found. See also U Hpay Latt v. Ma Po Byu, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 407, 37 Cr.L.J. 91, 159 I.C. 289, 1935 Cr.C. 1192, 13 Rang. 289, where Ma Thaw, supra, was followed.

Section 135 of the Civil Procedure Code does not exempt a party from being arrested in execution of an order under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., enforced by a criminal Court—Dani, 30 Cr.L.J. 788, 117 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 785, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 670.

Powers and Duties of the Magistrate:—It has been held in Prabhu v. Rami, 25 All 165 (166), that a Magistrate to whom an application has been made to enforce an order of maintenance, should not take into consideration anything further than the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance. He may also consider whether the person (in case of a Mahomedan) to whom maintenance is ordered still holds the position of wife. But no further steps relaxing the clear words of sec. 490 should be allowed. The fact that the parties had made an agreement subsequent to the order modifying its terms is not a matter for the consideration of the Magistrate enforcing the order. If the person against whom an order for maintenance is made considers that such order should no longer be in force against him, it is for him to apply under sec. 489 and get the order altered. It is not suitable or expedient that it should be open to a second Magistrate to call in question an order duly given upon proof.

But a wider view has been taken in Rangamma v. Muhammad Ali, 10 Mad. 13. In this case it has been held that where in answer to an application for enforcement of an order of maintenance, the husband pleads that the claim has been released, the wife having received a lump sum in satisfaction of her claims for maintenance, the Magistrate enforcing the order is competent to consider such plea, and if it is proved, to refuse to enforce the order.

But there can be no doubt that the Magistrate enforcing the order must take into consideration the question whether the person to whom the order has been given is, at the time she makes the application, still holding the position of wife (i.e., has not been divorced). This is a most material question which it is incumbent on the Magistrate to consider. If the wife no longer occupies the position of wife by reason of being divorced, the allowance ceases to be due, and the order cannot be enforced for any period subsequent to the divorce—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All 50; Prabhu v. Rami, 25 All 165; Baji v. Nawab, 1894 P.R. 21; Daulat v. Jadu, 17 O.C. 260, 15 Cr L.J. 646; Hasan v. Mi Sin, 1915 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 53, 16 Cr L.J. 531.

The Magistrate enforcing the order is also bound to consider a Civil Court decree passed subsequent to the order of maintenance. If the Civil Court has decided that the complainant is not and never had been the wife of the defendant, the Magistrate must refuse to enforce the order for maintenance—Nawab Zulfikar v. Zainal, 9 O.C. 49 (B), 3 Cr L.J. 229. For further notes as to the effect of Civil Court decree, see Note 1290 under sec. 488.

An order refusing to enforce the maintenance order in respect of arrears of maintenance for one period does not operate as a bar to a subsequent application to enforce the order for arrears of maintenance that have accrued during a different and a later period—Maung Tin v. Ma Hmin, 34 Cr L.J. 815 (816), 144 IC 187, A.I.R. 1933 Rang 138, 1933 Cr C. 728, 11 Rang 226, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang 92 (FB).

A Second Class Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment for breach of an order under sec. 488, directing payment of maintenance. Even assuming that the words "any Magistrate" in sec. 490 have not been used with reference to the class of Magistrates referred to in secs. 488 and 489, the power to enforce an order of maintenance does not necessarily include the power to sentence the person against whom it was passed, to imprisonment—Kuppins Naiken, 36 Cr L.J. 830, 155 IC 694, 1934 M.W.N. 922, 68 M.L.J. 493, 41 M.L.W. 697, A.I.R. 1935 Mad 572.

Costs:—This section does not contain any provision such as that in sub-clause (7), sec. 488, Cr P.C., which would enable the Court to grant costs—Ma E Shi v. U San Kai, 40 Cr L.J. 241 (242), 179 IC 643, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 67, 11 R.Raj. 336.

See Note 1280.

nance or to alter it if circumstances so require—Bhagubhai Ranchhodas v. Bai Arvinda, A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 334.

490. A copy of the order of maintenance shall be given without payment to the person in whose favour it is made, or to his guardian, if any, or to the person to whom the allowance is to be paid; and such order may be enforced by any Magistrate in any place where the person against whom it is made may be, on such Magistrate being satisfied as to the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance due.

1296A. Scope:—The only conditions laid down in respect of the enforcement of the order under this section are: (1) the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance due. If any such thing occurs as may be fit to vacate the order, the proper procedure for the husband is to apply to the Court and get the order cancelled. So long as the order stands, it is capable of being enforced though in the case of the woman living with her husband, it would remain suspended for the period during which she lives with her husband—Pearey Lal v. Naraini, 37 Cr.L.J. 62, A.I.R. 1935 All. 977, 159 I.C. 308, 1935 Cr.C. 1197, 58 All. 379, 1935 A.L.J. 1186, 1935 A.L.R. 1106, 8 R.A. 426.

1297. Who can enforce order:—The order can be enforced by a second class Magistrate, if the person against whom the order is passed resides within his jurisdiction—Ubhai, Ratanlal 288.

The words 'any Magistrate in any place where the person against whom it is made may be' do not deprive the Magistrate who has made the order of his power to enforce the order under sec. 488 (3), even though the defendant no longer resides within his jurisdiction. It was not intended by the Legislature that the poor wife would have to rush about the country pursuing her absconding husband to wherever he chooses to go. When the defendant is beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate who made the order, he may issue a warrant for collection of the arrears of maintenance—Gnanambalammal, 52 Mad 77, 55 M.L.J. 516, 29 Cr.L.J. 932; Kari Papayamma, 4 Mad 230. The application for an order to enforce the recovery of maintenance may be made either to the Magistrate who passed the original order or to the Magistrate having jurisdiction over the place where the person resides. It is left in the applicant to choose where she will apply. The provisions of this section cannot be held to derogate from the provisions of sec. 488 (3)—Ma Thaw, 7 L.B.R. 116, 15 Cr.L.J. 701 (702), dissenting from Kari Papayamma, 4 Mad 230, where it was held that if the defendant had left the jurisdiction of the Court passing the order, the Court had a discretion to refer the application to the Magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where the defendant was to be found. See also U Hpay Latt v. Ma Po Byu, A.I.R. 1935 Rang. 407, 37 Cr.L.J. 91, 159 I.C. 289, 1935 Cr.C. 1192, 13 Rang. 289, where Ma Thaw, supra, was followed.

Section 135 of the Civil Procedure Code does not exempt a party from being arrested in execution of an order under sec. 488, Cr. P. C., enforced by a criminal Court—Dani, 30 Cr.L.J. 788, 117 I.C. 238, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 785, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 670.

Powers and Duties of the Magistrate:—It has been held in Prabhu v. Rami, 25 All. 165 (166), that a Magistrate to whom an application has been made to enforce an order of maintenance, should not take into consideration anything further than the identity of the parties and the non-payment of the allowance. He may also consider whether the person (in case of a Mahomedan) to whom maintenance is ordered still holds the position of wife. But no further steps relaxing the clear words of sec. 490 should be allowed. The fact that the parties had made an agreement subsequent to the order modifying its terms is not a matter for the consideration of the Magistrate enforcing the order. If the person against whom an order for maintenance is made considers that such order should no longer be in force against him, it is for him to apply under sec. 489 and get the order altered. It is not suitable or expedient that it should be open to a second Magistrate to call in question an order duly given upon proof.

But a wider view has been taken in Rangamma v. Muhammad Ali, 10 Mad. 13. In this case it has been held that where in answer to an application for enforcement of an order of maintenance, the husband pleads that the claim has been released, the wife having received a lump sum in satisfaction of her claims for maintenance, the Magistrate enforcing the order is competent to consider such plea, and if it is proved, to refuse to enforce the order.

But there can be no doubt that the Magistrate enforcing the order must take into consideration the question whether the person to whom the order has been given is, at the time she makes the application, still holding the position of wife (i.e., has not been divorced). This is a most material question which it is incumbent on the Magistrate to consider. If the wife no longer occupies the position of wife by reason of being divorced, the allowance ceases to be due, and the order cannot be enforced for any period subsequent to the divorce—Shah Abu v. Ulfat, 19 All. 50; Prabhu v. Rami, 25 All. 165; Baji v. Nawab, 1894 P.R. 21; Daulat v. Jadu, 17 O.C. 260, 15 Cr.L.J. 646; Hasan v. M. Sin, 1915 U.B.R. 1st Qr. 53, 16 Cr.L.J. 531.

The Magistrate enforcing the order is also bound to consider a Civil Court decree passed subsequent to the order of maintenance. If the Civil Court has decided that the complainant is not and never had been the wife of the defendant, the Magistrate must refuse to enforce the order for maintenance—Nauab Zulfikar v. Zamal, 9 O.C. 49 (B), 3 Cr.L.J. 229. For further notes as to the effect of Civil Court decree, see Note 1290 under sec. 488.

An order refusing to enforce the maintenance order in respect of arrears of maintenance for one period does not operate as a bar to a subsequent application to enforce the order for arrears of maintenance that have accrued during a different and a later period—Maung Tin v. Ma Hmin, 34 Cr.L.J. 815 (816), 144 I.C. 187, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 138, 1933 Cr.C. 728, 11 Rang. 226, Ind. Rul. 1933 Rang. 92 (F.B.)

A Second Class Magistrate is not competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment for breach of an order under sec. 488, directing payment of maintenance. Even assuming that the words "any Magistrate" in sec. 490 have not been used with reference to the class of Magistrates referred to in secs. 488 and 489, the power to enforce an order of maintenance does not necessarily include the power to sentence the person against whom it was passed, to imprisonment—Kuppini Naiken, 36 Cr.L.J. 830, 155 I.C. 694, 1934 M.W.N. 922, 68 M.L.J. 493, 41 M.L.W. 697, A.I.R. 1935 Mad. 572.

Costs:—This section does not contain any provision such as that in sub-clause (7), sec. 488, Cr. P. C., which would enable the Court to grant costs—Ma E Shi v. U San Kai, 40 Cr.L.J. 241 (242), 179 I.C. 643, A.I.R. 1939 Rang. 67, 11 R.Rang. 336.

See Note 1280.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

DIRECTIONS OF THE NATURE OF A HABEAS CORPUS.

491. (1) Any High Court may, whenever it thinks fit, direct—

Power to issue directions of the nature of a habeas corpus.

- (a) that any person within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction be brought up before the Court to be dealt with according to law;
- (b) that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within such limits be set at liberty;
- (c) that a prisoner detained in any jail situate within such limits be brought before the Court to be there examined as a witness in any matter pending or to be inquired into in such Court;
- (d) that a prisoner detained as aforesaid be brought before a Court-martial or any Commissioners * * * * * for trial or to be examined touching any matter pending before such Court-martial or Commissioners respectively;
- (e) that a prisoner within such limits be removed from one custody to another for the purpose of trial; and
- (f) that the body of a defendant within such limits be brought in on the Sheriff's return of cepi corpus to a writ of attachment.

(2) The High Court may, from time to time, frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under this section.

(3) Nothing in this section applies to persons detained under the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818, Madras Regulation II of 1819, or Bombay Regulation XXV of 1827, or the State Prisoners Act, 1850, or the State Prisoners Act, 1858.

In clause (d) of sub-section (1) the words "acting under the authority of any commission from the Governor-General in Council" have been omitted by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

The proceedings by way of habeas corpus are proceedings calling upon a person having custody of another person to produce him and demonstrate under what authority he holds him in custody. If the authority is a legitimate authority, the High Court cannot interfere. All that this Court can do is to see that there is no patent defect visible in the authority by which the person having custody detains any person—Jamna, 20 S.L.R. 128, 27 Cr.L.J. 37 (38), A.I.R. 1926 Sind 126, 91 I.C. 69. See also Bajinath v. Emp., 134 I.C. 594, A.I.R. 1931 Oudh 394, 1931 Cr.C. 826, 32 Cr.L.J. 1243, 8 O.W.N. 933, Ind. Rul. 1931 Oudh 386 and Gyan Chand v. Emp., 3 P.R. 1909 (Cr.), 1 I.C. 198, 9 Cr.L.J. 3, 36 P.W.R. 1908 (Cr.). It is doubtful whether the exercise of jurisdiction under section 491 is necessary where the person detained is on bail—Jamna, supra. This section is very widely worded and entitles the High Court to inquire into the question whether the applicant was illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody and if the High Court is satisfied that he was so detained, to order that he be set at liberty. The mere fact that after his arrest he was temporarily released on bail does not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court under this section—Sandal Singh v. District Magistrate, Dehra Dun, 35 Cr.L.J. 1296 (1299), 151 I.C. 279, 1934 A.L.J. 556, 1934 Cr.C. 214, A.I.R. 1934 All. 148, 56 All. 409. The powers of the High Court under this section are limited and they do not authorize the High Court to enter as it were upon an enquiry into the conduct of the Political Agent before issuing a warrant of arrest under sec. 7, Extradition Act. All that the High Court is concerned with while exercising its powers under this section is to see that the authority under which a person is being detained is on the face of it legal and valid. If there are any formal defects in the warrant under which the applicant is arrested, the High Court can certainly take notice of them and can upon that basis hold that the warrant is on the face of it invalid. It would necessarily follow in that event that the detention of the applicant was unlawful, but this is the limit beyond which the High Court cannot go in the exercise of its power under this section—Israr Husain v. Emp., 41 Cr.L.J. 152, 185 I.C. 302, A.I.R. 1939 All. 730, 1939 A.L.J. 895, 1939 A.Cr.C. 172, 1939 A.W.R. (H.C.) 737, 1 I.L.R. 1940 All. 23. There are with reference to section 7, Extradition Act (XV of 1903) three conditions precedent for the issue of a legal warrant: (1) the offence must be an extraditable offence, that is, one of those given in Sch. I, Extradition Act, (2) the accused must not be a European British subject, and (3) the offence must have been committed by the accused in the territories of the State. Without all these three conditions being fulfilled, the Political Agent would have no authority to issue a warrant for the arrest of any person who has either escaped into or is in British India, and the arrest of such a person in pursuance of such a warrant would be illegal and under sec. 491, Cr.P.C., a High Court would be within its rights in quashing the proceeding taken against the accused and setting him at liberty—A. W. Goulter, 37 Cr.L.J. 312, 160 I.C. 115, 8 R.S. 120, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 244, 29 S.L.R. 60, 1935 Cr.C. 1307, following Sandal Singh v. District Magistrate, Dehra Dun, supra.

Nasirabad is outside the limits of British India and, therefore, the First Class Magistrate, Nasirabad, has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant under sec. 83, Cr.P.C., for the arrest of a person who is residing in British India and, that being so, the Additional District Magistrate, Karachi, has no jurisdiction to enforce the warrant under sec. 86, Cr.P.C. When there is such a patent defect visible in the warrant under which a person is being detained in custody, the High Court can, in exercise of powers under this section, set aside the proceedings which have been taken in pursuance of the warrant and direct that the person be set at liberty—Tahilram Khanchand v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 298, 173 I.C. 322, 10 R.S. 203, 32 S.L.R. 134, A.I.R. 1938 Sind 46.

The investment of the extraordinary powers of habeas corpus in a High Court does not take away from the litigants their ordinary rights which they have under the Civil Law. Therefore a refusal by the High Court to exercise the powers under this section to recover the custody of a child will not deprive the applicant of his right to seek his remedy either by means of an application under the Guardians and Wards Act or by a regular suit—Swa Lay v. Yeo Boon, 4 Bur.L.J. 269, 27 Cr.L.J. 737. The remedy provided by this section may be resorted to by a husband seeking the custody of his wife, even though he has another remedy under the Guardians and Wards Act—Subbaswamy v. Kamakshi, 53 Mad. 72, 57 M.L.J. 642, 31 Cr.L.J. 187 (189), 120 I.C. 892, 30 M.L.W. 685, 1929 M.W.N. 689, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 834, Ind. Rul. 1930 Mad. 92. If the provisions of this section are satisfied there is no reason to refuse the expeditious relief provided for in this section because it is possible for the applicant to seek other remedies—Deputy Commissioner, Gonda v. Mohammad Shikoh, 35 Cr.L.J. 1108 (1111), 150 I.C. 706, 11 O.W.N. 803.

The Allahabad High Court has taken a different view and has laid down that where there is Special Act dealing with a special subject resort should be had to that Act instead of to a general provision. The power under this section is a general power of the nature of a habeas corpus. The power under the Guardians and Wards Act, is a power under a Special Act, dealing with a special subject, that is, the subject of minors. It is more desirable that the matter should be heard under the Special Act, because there are provisions in the Special Act such as sec. 7 which indicate to the Court how it should proceed whereas in the general provision in this section there are no special provisions to indicate to the Court as to how it should proceed in the case of a minor. Moreover, an order by the High Court under this section would not bar a party from making an application to the District Judge under the Guardian and Wards Act. The proceedings in the High Court, therefore, would not be final and it is not desirable that the High Court should take proceedings which are not final unless there is such urgency in the matter that a remedy does not exist otherwise—Haidari Begum v. Jawad Ali, 36 Cr.L.J. 554, 154 I.C. 638, A.I.R. 1935 All 55, 1934 A.L.J. 946, 4 A.W.R. 1406.

Where a Court of competent jurisdiction has declared a person to be a fit and proper person to exercise guardianship over the infant, it is never intended that the procedure by way of habeas corpus should be utilized for the purpose of going behind such an order—Subbarathnammal v. Seshachalam, A.I.R. 1931 Mad. 773, 1931 M.W.N. 768, 34 M.L.W. 171, 61 M.L.J. 219, 54 Mad. 759, 1931 Cr.C. 1029, 134 I.C. 1215, 33 Cr.L.J. 49.

Where a satisfactory decision of an application under this section involves deciding two important questions of fact, whether a woman was converted from Muhammadanism to Hinduism and whether she is now the wife of the applicant, it is not proper that such questions involving status should be summarily decided in an application of this kind if it can be avoided. The application was, in these circumstances, adjourned in order that they may be decided by a Civil Court—Jai Dayal v. Sohagan, 35 Cr.L.J. 1397, 151 I.C. 692, 35 P.L.R. 591, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 647, 1934 Cr.C. 979.

Under this section the High Court has no power to question the manner in which the Government exercises its prerogative of mercy. Even, if the High Court had such power, it would ill become it to do anything that would interfere with the freedom of the Government to act in matters of this kind according to the dictates of humanity. Where a person sentenced to imprisonment after trial was allowed to go home temporarily to be at the bed side of his wife who was seriously ill and was taken back into prison after a few days, the High Court refused to interfere in a matter like this under this section—Girdhari Lal, 36 Cr.L.J. 325, A.I.R. 1935 All. 181.

This section does not apply where there has been a conviction and sentence in the usual course. Thus, where the accused was tried before the High Court Sessions, convicted by a majority of the jury, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and there was no illegality in the trial, the accused was not entitled to make an application under clause (b), asking the High Court to set the accused at liberty. Such an application would be in effect an appeal indirectly from the decision of the High Court, where no appeal is allowed by law. If the accused alleges any miscarriage of justice the proper course would be to apply to the Government—Bonomally, 44 Cal. 723, 21 C.W.N. 167, 18 Cr.L.J. 311 (F.B.). See also Rameswar Khiroriwalla, cited below in Note 1299.

It is not reasonable, or normal procedure, to make applications to the High Court under sec. 491, Cr. P. C., or for bail, while applications by the same petitioners for bail are still pending in the Sessions Court. The proper course in a matter of this kind is to apply to the lower Courts before coming up to the High Court—Kanshi Ram, 30 Cr.L.J. 301, 114 I.C. 444, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 522, Ind. Rul. 1929 Lah. 284.

Where a Special Tribunal, out of the ordinary course, is appointed by an Act to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of that Act, then, except so far as otherwise expressly provided or necessarily implied, that Tribunal's jurisdiction to determine those questions is exclusive. Where, therefore, a person is arrested under the orders of the Manager, Encumbered Estates, under the provisions of sec. 10 of the Sind Encumbered Estates Act (XX of 1896) read with sec. 157 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), the High Court has no jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus under this section—Ghanshamdas Khatumal v. Manager, Encumbered Estates, 28 Cr.L.J. 194 (196), 22 S.L.R. 24, 99 I.C. 930, A.I.R. 1927 Sind 123; Sherkhan v. Emp., 40 Cr.L.J. 710, 182 I.C. 963, 12 R.S. 37, A.I.R. 1939 Sind 155.

Habeas Corpus:—For any of the purposes mentioned in what is now sec. 491, Cr. P. C., it is not open to an applicant still to say that he will make his application, independently of that section altogether, for the prerogative writ of habeas corpus on the civil side of the High Court—Girindra v. Birendra, 31 C.W.N. 593 (613), 8 A.I.Cr.R. 121, 102 I.C. 647, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 496, 54 Cal. 727. Sec. 491, Cr. P. C., in so far as it displaces writ of habeas corpus is not illegal—Pratul v. C. H. D. Camp, 35 Cr.L.J. 1466 (1471), 151 I.C. 1028, 38 C.W.N. 299, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 259, 59 C.L.J. 185, 1934 Cr.C. 381, 61 Cal. 197. But the Madras High Court took the view that jurisdiction to issue a writ of habeas corpus had not been displaced by any provision of the Cr. P. C., and that sec. 491 merely substituted a different form of procedure—Govindan, 68 I.C. 838, A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 499, 23 Cr.L.J. 614, 45 Mad. 922, 16 M.L.W. 349, 43 M.L.J. 396, 31 M.L.T. 304. This point was also raised before the Bombay High Court in Chanappa, A.I.R. 1931 Bom. 57 (63), 55 Bom. 263, 32 Cr.L.J. 403, 129 I.C. 596, 1931 Cr.C. 65, 32 Bom.L.R. 1623, Ind. Rul. 1931 Bom. 196, but was not gone into as it appeared to be unnecessary for the decision of that case. The question has been set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in C. P. Matthen v. District Magistrate of Trivandrum, 40 Cr.L.J. 675, 11 R. 1939 Mad. 744, 41 Bom.L.R. 1119, 1939 A.L.J. 836, 70 C.L.J. 270, 182 I.C. 551, 1939 M.W.N. 744, 50 M.L.W. 48, 1939 O.W.N. 602, 1939 O.L.R. 433, 1939 P.W.N. 581, 12 R.P.C. 4, 20 P.L.T. 597, 1939 A.Cr.C. 110, 5 B.R. 841, 1939 A.W.R. (P.C.) 141, 43 C.W.N. 981, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 213, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 406 (P.C.), where it has been laid down that the common law writ of habeas corpus does not run in British India and that, assuming that the High Court formerly had the power to issue a writ of habeas corpus, that power has been taken away and the powers conferred by sec. 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure substituted. The Privy Council confirmed the view taken in District Magistrate of Trivandrum v. K. C. Mammen Mappillai, 40 Cr.L.J. 320, 180 I.C. 216, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 120, 1938 M.W.N. 1289, 11 R.M. 663, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 135, 11 R. 1939 Mad. 708 (F.B.), which reversed Crown Prosecutor, Madras v. M. Mappillai, 40 Cr.L.J. 297, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 115, 179 I.C. 917, 1938 M.W.N. 1161, 11 R.M. 634.

High Court's power not taken away by the Extradition Act:—The High Court's power to issue a writ of habeas corpus has not been taken away by the procedure provided in the Indian Extradition Act (XV of 1903), sec. 3, sub-secs. (6) and (7)—Tops, 46 Cal. 52; Gullu Sahu, 42 Cal. 793, 19 C.W.N. 221, 21 C.L.J. 112, 16 Cr.L.J. 31, 26 I.C. 335; Bas Aisha, 117 I.C. 321, 53 Bom. 149, A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 81, 30 Cr.L.J. 772, 36 Bom.L.R. 62; Sandal Singh v. District Magistrate, Dehra Dun, 35 Cr.L.J. 1296 (1299), 151 I.C. 279, 1934 A.L.J. 556, 1934 Cr.C. 214, A.I.R. 1934 All. 148, 56 All. 409; A. W. Goulter, 37 Cr.L.J. 312, 160 I.C. 115, A.I.R. 1935 Sind. 244, 29 S.L.R. 60, 1935 Cr.C. 1307. The High Court has power to issue an order and to examine whether a person detained in public custody under the Extradition Act is legally detained, and this power is not taken away merely because the Government have already issued a warrant for surrender under sec. 3, sub-section (8) of that Act—Rudolf Stallmann, 39 Cal. 164, 12 Cr.L.J. 505, 14 C.L.J. 375, 15 C.W.N. 1053, 12 I.C. 273. Where persons were arrested and detained in custody under sec. 10 of the Indian Extradition Act for more than two months without the sanction of the Local Government the High Court released them on an application under this section inasmuch as their detention was illegal in view of the provisions of sub-sec. (3) of sec. 10 of the same Act—Suraj Narayan, 36 Cr.L.J. 1500, 158 I.C. 981, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 419, 16 P.L.T. 551, 1935 Cr.C. 1063.

1299. Clause (b)—Custody of wife or children:—As regards custody of wife or children, the husband or father has a remedy not only under this section, but also under the Guardians and Wards Act. See 53 Mad. 72 and 6 Bur.L.J. 269, cited supra. But the power under this section is to be exercised in a matter of urgency, where, for instance, the father is suddenly deprived of the custody of his sons and there is danger to life of the sons in the transferred custody. It is a remedy for a person deprived of his liberty. The power, therefore, has to be exercised with caution, and not in a case where there is a dispute merely as to who should be the guardian of particular minors—Sultan Singh v. Maya Ram, 52 All 491, 1930 A.L.J. 615, 31 Cr.L.J. 719. Where a Hindu mother, who has custody of her minor children, is inclined towards Christianity and is likely to be converted to that religion and to bring up her children in such a way that they will ultimately express a desire to be converted to Christianity, the proper course is to remove the mother from guardianship and appoint another person as guardian, under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act. The High Court will not take action under sec. 491—Veeraswami v. Ratnamma, 29 Cr.L.J. 1048 (1049), 112 I.C. 472, A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1087.

The High Court before passing an order in respect of a minor child, ought to take into consideration the interest and welfare of the child—Zarabibi v. Abdul, 12 Bom.L.R. 891, 11 Cr.L.J. 687; Swa Lay v. Yeo Boon, 4 Bur.L.J. 269, 27 Cr.L.J. 737; Moidin v. Kunhadavi, 31 Cr.L.J. 985, 126 I.C. 111, A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 33 (F.B.). The Court will not ordinarily force a child to remain in custody to which the child objects, and before deciding as to its custody, the Court will take account the wishes of the child, if it is old enough to form an intelligent preference—Pollard v. Rouse, 33 Mad 288. If she is not old enough to make an intelligent preference, e.g., if she is a girl of only 13 years of age, her consent or refusal to stay with her husband is immaterial. What the Court has to consider is the welfare of the minor wife, and in so doing, the fact that she prefers to reside elsewhere than with her husband should not have any weight at all, though if she had been old enough to form a good opinion this fact would have been a very important circumstance for consideration—Subbaswami v. Kamakshi, 53 Mad. 72, 57 M.L.J. 642, 31 Cr.L.J. 187 (188, 189). Where a mother had for eight years neglected her child who had been educated at a mission school, the High Court refused her application for custody of the girl aged 15 years, on the ground that, if granted, it would be detrimental to the welfare of the child—In re Saithri, 16 Bom. 307. Where the father has delegated the guardianship of his children to another person, the question whether the father is entitled to resume the guardianship depends on the children's interests and welfare—Annie Besant v. Narayaniah, 38 Mad 807 (P.C.).

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court refused to make over a boy aged between 7 and 8 to the custody of his father, who was his natural guardian, when there was nothing to show that the father was in a position to look after the boy—Moidin v. Kunhadavi, supra.

The High Court of Judicature has, under its Common Law powers, jurisdiction to issue a writ for the production of children outside British India, provided it is satisfied that they are in the custody or control of a person within its jurisdiction. Sec. 491 cannot be said to have affected this Common Law jurisdiction of the High Court—Mahomedali v. Ismailji, 50 Bom. 616, 95 I.C. 49, A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 332, 27 Cr.L.J. 721. But sec. 491 cannot apply if the person is in custody outside British India, and the person having the custody or control of that person is also outside British India—Shira Prasad, 27 A.L.J. 520, A.I.R. 1929 All 347 (348), 30 Cr.L.J. 1083, 119 I.C. 527, Ind. Rul. 1929 All 1055. Where a person is in the custody in a Native State over which the High Court does not exercise jurisdiction, the power of the High Court to issue directions of the nature of the habeas corpus under this section cannot be exercised—Ibid.

Illegal or improper detention:—Where an accused person is remanded to police custody under sec. 167, the mere fact that the Magistrate does not record reasons for such detention does not render the custody illegal within the meaning of sec. 491, especially where there are sufficient grounds for believing that the prisoner was concerned in a serious offence, and further information has been obtained during the investigation—Sunder Singh, 12 Lah. 16, 31 P.L.R. 780, 32 Cr.L.J. 339 (340). Where a boy, who had been under the guardianship of his uncle, went to his sister's house to attend her marriage, and refused to return on the ground that he intended to discontinue his studies and to get some work, and he also said that he was kept back to stay with his sister because she was left alone when her husband was out on work, held that there was nothing to show that he was detained against his will, and as there was no suggestion that his sister and her husband were not proper persons to live with, it could not be said that he was improperly detained—Paul v. Hunt, 6 Bur.L.J. 111, 28 Cr.L.J. 865.

When a person is detained under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, the only test to be applied is whether in the opinion of the Local Government there are reasonable grounds for believing certain things about that person (see sec. 2 of that Act). The only question, therefore, that the High Court can inquire into in the case of a detention under the Act is whether that opinion existed. But on the question whether there were reasonable grounds for such belief the Local Government's decision is final, and there is no right of appeal to a Court of Law. Moreover, the word "improperly" in this clause does not include any consideration of the question whether a particular legislation is proper, but only whether a particular detention is proper, e.g., whether, although the forms of law have been observed, there has been a fraud on an Act or an abuse of the powers given by the Legislature. The High Court can decide whether the law has been legally and properly applied in the case of detention of a particular person—Jitendra Nath Ghose, 36 C.W.N. 1088 (1100), 141 I.C. 866, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 753, 1932 Cr.C. 796, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 198, 34 Cr.L.J. 245, 60 Cal. 364. See also Pramila v. Prentice, 36 C.W.N. 669, 138 I.C. 358, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 470, 1932 Cr.C. 460, 33 Cr.L.J. 609, Ind. Rul. 1932 Cal. 455, 59 Cal. 1440 and Pratul v. C H D Camp, 35 Cr.L.J. 1466, 151 I.C. 1028, 38 C.W.N. 299, A.I.R. 1934 Cal. 259, 59 C.L.J. 185, 1934 Cr.C. 387, 61 Cal. 197.

The words "detained" and "custody" imply some sort of confinement or physical restraint on the liberty of movement of the detainee. The use of the word "be set at liberty" also supports this construction. The powers conferred by clause (b) of this section cannot be exercised in respect of a person who enjoys the fullest liberty of movement but whose liberty of other sorts is curtailed. Thus, the restraint imposed on one's right to see anybody whom she wants to see is not sufficient to entitle her to relief under cl. (b) of sub-sec. (1) of this section—Hazoor Ara Begum v. Deputy Commissioner of Gonda, 35 Cr.L.J. 1052. See also Girindra v. Birendra, 31 C.W.N. 593, 102 I.C. 647, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 496, 54 Cal. 727, where a person, interned in a village under sec. 11 of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1925, with certain restrictions, was held to be not detained in the custody of the Sub-Inspector of Police within whose jurisdiction the village is situate.

Successive applications:—Each Judge of the High Court of Justice has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus in term time or in vacation and he is bound to hear and determine such an application on its merits, notwithstanding that some other Judge has already refused a similar application—Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd Ed., Vol. IX, para 1239; Eshugbayi Eleko v. Government of Nigeria, 30 Cr.L.J. 113 (116), 113 I.C. 273, A.I.R. 1928 P.C. 300, 28 M.L.W. 874, Ind. Rul. 1929 P.C. 1, 26 A.L.J. 1169 (P.C.). The rulings upon which this practice is founded have power conferred upon the High Court under sec. 491, Cr. P. C. Prima facie an application for the exercise of powers under sec. 491 should be regulated by the procedure governing an application for the exercise of powers conferred under any other section of the Code, e.g., an application for bail. Sec. 491 empowers the High Court to frame rules to regulate the procedure in cases under that section and it is, therefore, apparently open to them to make special rules permitting successive identical applications. In the absence of such special rule and in the face of Rule 8, Chap. I of the Allahabad High Court General Rules, the Allahabad High Court did not adopt the rule of common law relating to writs of habeas corpus, permitting successive identical applications—Hydari Begum v. Jawad Ali Shah, 35 Cr.L.J. 493, 147 I.C. 820, 1933 A.L.J. 1410, A.I.R. 1934 All 22, 1934 Cr.C. 125.

It would be improper for the Criminal Bench acting under sec. 491, Cr. P. C., to retry for itself the question which has already been determined by the High Court in its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction or to pass an order overriding an order already made by the High Court—Rameswar Khiroriwalla, 32 C.W.N. 889, 56 Cal. 32, A.I.R. 1928 Cal. 367.

Forum:—An application under this section is to be made to the High Court in its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction—Charu Chandra, 20 C.W.N. 1233. In practice the powers conferred by this section, which before 1923 were exercisable only over persons within the limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, were exercised by the Judge taking Sessions, that is, by the Judge exercising the Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction of the High Court. Now that the powers are applicable to persons within the limits of the High Court's Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction, it is certainly more convenient that they should be exercised by the Division Bench appointed to deal with criminal cases—Rameswar Khiroriwalla, supra; Subodh Chandra, A.I.R. 1925 Cal 278, 85 I.C. 913, 52 Cal 319. See also C. P. Matthen v. District Magistrate of Trivandrum, 40 Cr.L.J. 675, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 744, 41 Bom.L.R. 1119, 1939 A.L.J. 836, 70 C.L.J. 270, 182 I.C. 551, 1939 M.W.N. 744, 50 M.L.W. 48, 1939 O.W.N. 602, 1939 O.L.R. 433, 1939 P.W.N. 581, 12 R.P.C. 4, 20 P.L.T. 597, 1939 C.Cr.C. 110, 5 B.R. 841, 1939 A.W.R. (P.C.) 141, 43 C.W.N. 981, A.I.R. 1939 P.C. 213, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 406 (P.C.), where it has been held that the application under this section must be dealt with in accordance with the rules of the High Court (i.e., Rules 2 and 2A of the Appellate Side Rules of the Madras High Court) which means that it must be dealt with by the Criminal Bench and that a Single Judge of the Madras High Court has no jurisdiction to deal with such an application. See also District Magistrate of Trivandrum v. K. C. Mammen Mappilai, 40 Cr.L.J. 320, 180 I.C. 216, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 120, 1938 M.W.N. 1289, 11 R.M. 663, (1939) 2 M.L.J. 135, I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 708 (F.B.), which reversed Crown Prosecutor, Madras v. M. Mappilai, A.I.R. 1939 Mad 115, 179 I.C. 917, 1938 M.W.N. 1161, 11 R.M. 634, 40 Cr.L.J. 297.

Appeal:—When a petitioner obtains a rule calling upon the other side to show cause why a child should not be delivered to her, and the rule is discharged, the order discharging the rule is a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent and is therefore appealable—In re Narrondas, 14 Bom. 555. An order by a Judge directing a writ of habeas corpus to issue is not an order made "in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and is open to appeal—Mohamedali v. Ismailji, supra. But an appeal under sec. 10, Letters Patent, is not maintainable from an order passed on an application under sec. 491, Cr. P. C.—Haidri Begum v. Jawad Ali Shah, A.I.R. 1934 All. 606, 3 A.W.R. 297, 1934 A.L.J. 399, 150 I.C. 740, following Girindra v. Birendra, 31 C.W.N. 593, 102 I.C. 647, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 496, 54 Cal. 727 and distinguishing Mahomedali v. Ismailji, supra.

491A. Any High Court established by Letters Patent may exercise the powers conferred by section 491 in the case of any European British subject within such territories, other than Powers of High Court outside the limits of appellate jurisdiction.

those within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction, as the Central Government may direct.

This section has been added by sec. 31 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1923. By this section, European British subjects, even when outside the limits of British India, will get the privilege of obtaining writs in the nature of Habeas Corpus from the High Courts.

The words "Central Government"—have been substituted for "Governor-General in Council" by sec. 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

PART IX.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROVISIONS.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

OF THE PUBLIC PROSECUTOR.

492. (1) The * * * * * Provincial Government may appoint, generally, or in any case, or for any specified class of cases, in any local area, one or more officers to be called Public Prosecutors.

(2) * * The District Magistrate, or, subject to the control of the District Magistrate, the Sub-divisional Magistrate, may, in the absence of the Public Prosecutor, or where no Public Prosecutor has been appointed, appoint any other person, not being an officer of police below such rank as the Provincial Government may prescribe in this behalf, to be Public Prosecutor for the purpose of any case.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 133 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. Firstly, the words "In any case committed for trial to the Court of Session" in the beginning of sub-sec. (2) have been omitted, because the necessity of appointing a Public Prosecutor in the absence of that officer may arise not only in Sessions Courts but in all other instances. Secondly, the italicised words have been added because "as there is a variety of nomenclature of the Police officers, we think it better to leave it to the Local Government to prescribe the rank of police-officers who may be appointed Public Prosecutors for the purposes of a particular case"—Report of the Joint Committee (1922).

The words "Governor-General in Council or the" have been omitted and the words "Provincial Government" have been substituted in place of "Local Government" by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1300. Public Prosecutor:—It is highly objectionable to appoint the Magistrate, who in the first instance tried and convicted the accused, to be Crown Prosecutor to conduct an inquiry subsequently directed in the same case. To convert a Judge into an Advocate seeking to uphold his decision before another tribunal is quite unprecedented and most objectionable, as he has an interest in the case which a Public Prosecutor should not have—Kashinath, 8 B.H.C.R. 126.

The Legal Remembrancer is ex-officio Public Prosecutor on the Appellate Side of the High Court and as such has the power to instruct counsel, his authority to act for the Local Government being in no way dependent on anything in the nature of a vakalat-nama or warrant of attorney—Tushar Kanti v. Governor of Bengal, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 118 (120), 1933 Cr.C. 134, 37 C.W.N. 276, 60 Cal. 603, 143 I.C. 790, 34 Cr.L.J. 662. See also Deputy Legal Remembrancer, Bengal v. Gaya Prosad, 41 Cal. 425, where it was held that the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal was not the Legal Remembrancer of the province of Behar and Orissa, entitling him to file an appeal against an order of acquittal on behalf of the Government of Bihar and Orissa, merely because he was instructed to do so by a letter, when the Government of Bihar and Orissa appointed a separate Legal Remembrancer for that province.

Duty of Public Prosecutor:—The purpose of a criminal trial is not to support a theory but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police but the Crown, and this duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the tribunal appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else—Ram Ranjan, 42 Cal 422, 19 C.W.N. 28, 16 Cr L.J. 170; Kunja Subudhi, 8 Pat. 289, 30 Cr L.J. 675 (683), 116 I.C. 770, A.I.R. 1929 Pat 275, Ind Rul. 1929 Pat. 338, 10 P.L.T. 549. There should be no unseemly eagerness on the part of the Prosecutor at securing a conviction. His object must be the furtherance of justice and not to act as counsel for any particular person or party—Kashinath, 8 B.H.C.R. 126

There should be on part of the Public Prosecutor no "unseemly eagerness for or grasping at, conviction." He is not to aggravate the case against the prisoner but has "to perform his duties with that calmness and impartiality which should ever characterize a Public Prosecutor." He has to "aid the Court in discovering the truth" and also in the discharge of its duty to do justice as between the Crown and the accused—Chandekar, 26 Cr L.J. 163 (165), 83 I.C. 723, 7 N.L.J. 155, A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 243, following Kashinath, supra, and Sardari Lal, 71 I.C. 1006, 3 Lah 443, A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 264, 24 Cr L.J. 286. Those who appear on behalf of the prosecution must be made to realise that it is no part of their duty to try by hook or by crook to obtain convictions—Major Robert, A.I.R. 1932 Cal 800 (803), 38 C.W.N. 187, 58 C.L.J. 405, 35 Cr L.J. 156, 146 I.C. 767, 1933 Cr C. 1375. His duty as a Public Prosecutor is not merely to secure the conviction of the accused at all costs but to place before the Court whatever evidence is in the possession of the prosecution, whether it be in favour or against the accused and to leave the Court to decide upon all such evidence, whether the accused had or had not committed the offence with which he stood charged—Ghirao, 34 Cr L.J. 1009 (1012), 145 I.C. 470, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 265, 1933 Cr C 592, 10 O.W.N. 1108. It is the duty of the Public Prosecutor to prosecute, not to persecute, the accused and that responsibility rests upon him not to allow the Court to place reliance unwittingly upon the evidence of a witness who has made a contradictory statement—Nga Lun Thauang, A.I.R. 1935 Rang 370, 1935 Cr C 1088, 158 I.C. 784, 13 Rang. 570, 36 Cr L.J. 1487; or who has made a statement as to the course of investigation which is demonstrably untrue—Nga San, A.I.R. 1936 Rang 75 (76), 1936 Cr C 80, 161 I.C. 14, 37 Cr L.J. 414. See also Note 893.

"In the absence of the Public Prosecutor":—These words are very wide and include temporary absence of the Public Prosecutor at the place and in the Court where the case is proceeding—Dipchand, 31 Cr L.J. 684 (686), 124 I.C. 378, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 156.

493. The Public Prosecutor may appear and plead without any written authority before any Court in which any case of which he has charge is under inquiry, trial or appeal, and if any private person instructs a pleader to prosecute in any Court any person in any such case, the Public Prosecutor shall conduct the prosecution, and the pleader so instructed shall act therein under his directions.

1301. Pleader privately instructed:—The Counsel instructed and retained by a private individual can watch the case on behalf of his client, but he cannot, without being especially empowered by the District Magistrate, conduct the prosecution—Chaitan Lal, O.S.C. No. 31. Where in a criminal appeal pending before the Chief Court of Punjab, the brother of the murdered man appointed a pleader to support the conviction; held that the pleader so appointed was not a Public Prosecutor—Akbar, 1886 P.R. 29.

Where the Public Prosecutor has charge of the prosecution, the pleader instructed by a private person must act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor and is not entitled to conduct the prosecution in preference to the Public Prosecutor—B. N. Ry. Co., Ltd. v. Shaikh Makbul, 7 P.L.T. 343, 27 Cr.L.J. 313. The Public Prosecutor may always avail himself of the services of the counsel retained by a private individual, but in doing so he does not deprive himself of the management of the case—Narayan, 11 B.H.C.R. 102.

This section does not refer to applications made by a private party for the amendment of the charge and does not bar the hearing of such applications on the merits, although such applications were not made by the Public Prosecutor or with his consent—Dasundha v. Lachman, 29 Cr.L.J. 1056, 112 I.C. 480, A.I.R. 1929 Lah. 127.

494. Any Public Prosecutor * * may, with the consent of the Court, in cases tried by jury before the return of the verdict, and in other cases before the judgment is pronounced, withdraw from the prosecution of any person either generally or in respect of any one or more of the offences for which he is tried; and upon such withdrawal,—

- (a) if it is made before a charge has been framed, the accused shall be discharged in respect of such offence or offences;
- (b) if it is made after a charge has been framed, or when under this Code no charge is required, he shall be acquitted in respect of such offence or offences.

Change:—This section has been amended by sec. 134 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. The reasons are stated below.

1302. Scope of section:—The old section contained the words "appointed by the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government" after the words "Public Prosecutor." That is, under the old law this section applied only to Public Prosecutors appointed by Government. A Prosecutor especially appointed by the Magistrate, under sec. 492 (2) to conduct a case had not the power to withdraw from the prosecution under this section—Madhoo, 8 All 291; Ramkrishna, 2 Weir. 653. The present section as now amended will confer the power of withdrawal on all Public Prosecutors.

This section (as well as sec. 495) does not apply to security proceedings. It applies only to proceedings which can end in a discharge or acquittal of the accused. But security proceedings do not contemplate the frame of a charge at all, and as a result of the proceedings neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal is passed therein. Hence secs. 494 and 495 cannot apply to security proceedings—Muthia Moopan, 36 Mad. 315, 14 Cr.L.J. 559, 21 I.C. 159. This section has no application to proceedings under Chap. VIII of the Cr. P. C., because such proceedings are not prosecutions. Consequently if, after having made his preliminary order under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate is convinced by evidence, or other materials of which he is permitted to take judicial notice, that the respondent is no longer likely to do anything which might lead to a breach of the peace, it is open to him to make an order under sec. 119, Cr. P. C., discharging the respondent. That is the only way in which proceedings under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., can be brought to an end. They cannot be brought to an end by the Crown withdrawing from the enquiry—The King v. Ba Khin, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 189, 1910 Rang.L.R. 226, 41 Cr.L.J. 853, 190 I.C. 196.

Secs. 337 and 494:—As to the distinction between these sections, see Note 950A under sec. 337.

Who can withdraw from prosecution:—Every case in which a person is committed for trial to the Sessions Court is not to be tried. The Public Prosecutor is not a machine or a slave to prosecute every case in which there has been a committal. To the Public Prosecutor is entrusted discretion to withdraw from the prosecution with the consent of the Court and his withdrawal puts an end to the case. The law gives him a real discretion in the matter. It may often be proper for him to consult the District Magistrate or other authorities before exercising that discretion. But in the eye of the law and of the Court the discretion is his alone, subject to the consent of the Court. The Public Prosecutor holds a very honourable and responsible office—Jaggu Naidu v. Emp, 1932 M.W.N. 692; Labbi Kutti, A.I.R. 1939 Mad. 190 (193), 1938 M.W.N. 582, 1938 M Cr.C. 212, 40 Cr.L.J. 437, 180 I.C. 605.

This section contemplates that no person other than the Public Prosecutor can withdraw from the prosecution; even a Vakul acting under the directions of the Public Prosecutor cannot do so. But if the prosecution is withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor and the Vakul, and the application for withdrawal of the case is signed by both the persons, the withdrawal is not invalid—Sital Singh, 46 Cal. 700, 30 C.L.J. 255, 21 Cr.L.J. 5, 54 I.C. 53.

A Government Pleader who has not been appointed a Public Prosecutor under the provisions of sec. 492 (1) cannot withdraw from the prosecution under this section. He can withdraw only under sec. 240; i.e., in cases where several charges have been preferred against the accused and he has been convicted on one of those charges, the Government Pleader can withdraw the remaining charges—Anonymous, 2 Weir 258. But see Dipchand, 31 Cr.L.J. 684, 124 I.C. 378, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 156, where a contrary view has been taken.

An application for withdrawal of prosecution made by a Public Prosecutor who is not in charge of the case but who applies only to withdraw the prosecution, is not a proper procedure. But the action of the Public Prosecutor is not illegal—Sher Singh v. Jitendra, 59 Cal. 275, 36 C.W.N. 16 (28), 54 Cr.L.J. 253, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 607, 33 Cr.L.J. 3, 134 I.C. 1045.

When a case was conducted from its commencement almost to its finish by a Public Prosecutor, and then it was transferred to another district, and there the District Magistrate instructed the Public Prosecutor of that place to withdraw the case, whereupon the prosecution was withdrawn, held that it was unusual (though not illegal) for the District Magistrate to take action for the withdrawal without consulting the first Public Prosecutor who had conducted the case from its commencement—Dipchand, 24 S.L.R. 377, 1930 Cr.C. 620, 31 Cr.L.J. 684, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 156, 124 I.C. 378. This section does not recognize the authority of the District Magistrate to interfere with the discretion either of the Public Prosecutor or of the Court. The matter rests entirely with the Public Prosecutor and the Court before which the case is pending for trial—Ah, 33 Cr.L.J. 912 (914), 140 I.C. 25, 33 P.L.R. 793, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah 675, A.I.R. 1932 Lah 611, 1932 Cr.C. 917.

The complainant has no locus standi in the matter of withdrawal of a prosecution. When a case has been started upon a police report, and the Court Sub-Inspector (who is the Public Prosecutor) wants to withdraw the case, the Court cannot reject the application for withdrawal simply because the complainant wants to proceed with the case—Gopi Bari, 1 P.L.T. 400, 57 I.C. 657, 21 Cr.L.J. 641. But when in case of a private complaint the complainant is given permission to conduct the prosecution and be responsible for its conclusion, it is highly improper that after he has closed his evidence, and the charge has been framed, the prosecution should be suddenly withdrawn, without even consulting him, by a Court Inspector who up till then had nothing to do with the case. The withdrawal is illegal and the acquittal must be set aside—Ram Gobind v. Lallu, 46 All. 88 (90), 21 A.L.J. 855, 25 Cr.L.J. 970, A.I.R. 1924 All. 203.

1303. Withdrawal from prosecution:—The Legislature not having defined the circumstances under which an withdrawal is permissible, no hard and fast rule can be laid down circumscribing the limits within which an withdrawal may be made. A concurrence of opinion between the Judge and the Public Prosecutor that the prosecution case is a weak one and is not likely to end in a conviction is not a sufficient ground for withdrawal. This section has been expressed in general words, because it does not intend to limit the materials on which action may be taken. This section contemplates action to be taken upon circumstances extraneous to the record of the case; e.g., inexpediency of a prosecution for reasons of State, necessity to drop the case on grounds of public policy, credible information having reached the Government as to the falsity of the evidence by which the prosecution is supported, and other matters of that description—Giribala v. Madar, 36 C.W.N. 928 (936), 56 C.L.J. 79, 1932 Cr.C. 654, 60 Cal. 233, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 699, 34 Cr.L.J. 433, 142 I.C. 891, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 317. An opinion that the prosecution case is a weak one is not sufficient to justify the Public Prosecutor in applying for its withdrawal and the Judge in consenting thereto—Satwarao Nagorao Hatkar v. Kanbarao Bhago Rao Hatkar, 39 Cr.L.J. 458 (459), 174 I.C. 510, 10 R.N. 403, 1938 N.L.J. 12, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 334, following Giribala v. Madar, supra. The Public Prosecutor cannot withdraw a case on the ground that the complainant was keeping out of the way and could not be served with summons. He should take steps to enforce his attendance—Anonymous, 2 Weir 655. But the Court can allow a Public Prosecutor to withdraw the prosecution against an accused in order that he may call him as a witness for the prosecution against the other accused person—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (471). In fact, when it is necessary to take the evidence of one accused against the others, the usual practice is either to tender pardon to the accused under sec. 337, or to withdraw the prosecution against him under sec. 494, or to enter a nolle prosequi under sec. 333 (in cases before High Courts). See G. V. Raman, supra; Regina v. Lyons, (1840) 9 Carr. & Payne 555; Queen v. Owen, 9 Carr. & Payne 83; R. v. Rowland, Ry. & M. 401. In all cases, where two persons are joined in the same indictment, and it is desirable to take the evidence of the one against the other, it is desirable for the purpose of insuring the greatest possible amount of truthfulness in the person coming to give evidence, to take a verdict of not guilty as to him, so that the witness may give his evidence with a mind free of all the influence which the fear of impending punishment might otherwise produce—Wilson v. Queen, (1886) L.R. 1 Q.B. 289 (312).

This section contemplates the case of withdrawal of a prosecution, in cases tried by jury, before the return of the verdict, and in other cases, before the judgment is pronounced. It does not contemplate the case of withdrawal of prosecution after the conviction of the accused by the first Court, and in the Appellate stage of the case. Withdrawal at that stage is illegal, and the appeal must be heard and judicially determined—Ananta Lal v. Jahiruddin, 46 C.L.J. 121, 28 Cr.L.J. 833, 104 I.C. 449, A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 816. The Public Prosecutor may apply for withdrawal of the prosecution at any time before pronouncement of judgment or delivery of verdict, and it is immaterial that at the time of such application the Court has come to the conclusion that the prosecution case is true and that the accused has committed the offence. In a suitable case the Court may still give its consent to the withdrawal, if there are good reasons for doing so—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, supra. The words "cases tried by jury" contemplate cases in which a jury trial is in fact being held. Therefore, when the accused has been committed to the Sessions Court but the jury trial has not begun, the case falls under the category of "other cases before the judgment is pronounced," (i.e., in such a case the withdrawal may be permitted until the judgment is pronounced). Therefore, if in such a case, the Public Prosecutor withdraws from the prosecution before the charge is read out and explained to the accused and before he is called on to plead, there is a legal withdrawal—Giribala v. Madar, 36 C.W.N. 928 (935), 1932 Cr.C. 654, 56 C.L.J. 79, 60 Cal. 233, A.I.R. 1932 Cal. 699, 34 Cr.L.J. 433, 142 I.C. 891, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 317.

The Sessions Judge on a perusal of the commitment order and the evidence adduced before the Committing Magistrate may invite the Public Prosecutor to consider whether he should undertake action under this section on the ground of insufficiency of evidence—Maroti, 36 Cr.L.J. 1389, 158 I.C. 537, 18 N.L.J. 227, 1935 Cr.C. 1099.

There must be a formal withdrawal from prosecution by the Public Prosecutor. Where the Prosecuting Inspector simply dropped out and let a Vakil carry on the prosecution, there was no withdrawal and consequently the accused could not be acquitted—Gopala v. Alaginswami, 54 Mad. 598, 32 Cr.L.J. 690. A withdrawal by a Public Prosecutor is withdrawal from the prosecution of any person for any act or omission made punishable by any law; that is, the Public Prosecutor states that he does not want to prosecute for certain alleged acts or omissions. Where he merely stated that there was no case under sec. 218, I. P. C., held that there was no withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor—Alopi Din, A.I.R. 1935 All. 366, 157 I.C. 205, 1935 A.L.J. 653, 1935 Cr.C. 384, 36 Cr.L.J. 1103.

The Public Prosecutor is the person responsible for making the application for withdrawal. There is no provision in the Code for any formal inquiry by the Court under this section—Gombai, 26 S.L.R. 67, 1932 Cr.C. 532, 33 Cr.L.J. 449, 137 I.C. 344, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 92, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 74.

Consent of Court:—'Consent' means a consent freely given by a free and independent Magistrate—Fakirchand Ramkrishin v. Murad Umar, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 233 (239).

Consent of the Court is necessary to the withdrawal of the prosecution. The Court in coming to the decision as to whether it would give consent should not take into consideration any extraneous circumstance. The discretion as to whether the Magistrate should give consent to the withdrawal is to be exercised not arbitrarily but must be based on correct legal principles—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 31 Cr.L.J. 315, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 319, 121 I.C. 678, 33 C.W.N. 468 (473). A Magistrate does not exercise his discretion wrongly in relying on the discretion of the Public Prosecutor in withdrawing the prosecution against an accused in order that his evidence might be available after his discharge against his co-accused who is being jointly tried with him—Sudan, 34 Cr.L.J. 675, 144 I.C. 74, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 148, 1933 Cr.C. 225, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 494; G. V. Raman, supra. The latter case has been dissented from in Abdul Majid, 36 Cr.L.J. 1248, 39 C.W.N. 1082, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 473, 1935 Cr.C. 865, cited below in Note 1304. Consent is not to be given as a matter of course, neither is it to be unreasonably withheld—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, 59 Cal. 275, 36 C.W.N. 16 (24). In a private prosecution, the Sessions Judge (or District Magistrate) should not give directions or suggestions to the Public Prosecutor to withdraw from the prosecution. Such a direction is not only irregular but illegal, and unwarranted by the Code. But, if the Public Prosecutor acts upon such direction and withdraws from the prosecution, his action is not illegal nor irregular, but merely unusual—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, 59 Cal. 275, 36 C.W.N. 16 (28), 33 Cr.L.J. 3, 54 C.L.J. 253, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 607, 134 I.C. 1045.

The fact that the District Magistrate has instructed the Public Prosecutor to apply for withdrawal is no reason for a Magistrate giving his consent to such withdrawal. The Magistrate must not surrender his authority to the District Magistrate, but must act judicially and come to his own independent conclusion as to whether withdrawal ought to be permitted or not upon a consideration of all the relevant circumstances. The Public Prosecutor acts with grave impropriety in showing his instructions to the trial Magistrate and the Magistrate acts with equal impropriety in looking at them—The King v. Ba Khin, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 189, 1940 Rang.L.R. 225, 41 Cr.L.J. 853, 190 I.C. 196; Fakirchand Ramkrishin v. Murad Umar, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 233 (238).

A Magistrate who has issued process on the ground that there was sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused, is not precluded from permitting withdrawal of the prosecution if on reconsideration of the materials he comes to the conclusion that the evidence is not likely to lead to a conviction—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, supra. See this case cited in Note 687 under section 204.

Withdrawal of some of the charges:—Under the old section, a Public Prosecutor was not competent to withdraw only one or some of the charges. If he withdrew at all, he had to withdraw all the charges. Where one of the charges was withdrawn, and the accused was tried on the other charges, the High Court ordered the trial on the charge withdrawn—2 Cr.L.J. 18 (n). But the law has now been changed, and this section empowers the Public Prosecutor to withdraw one or some of the charges.

Record of reasons:—When a Court, acting under this section gives its consent to a withdrawal from the prosecution, the order passed is a judicial order, and the Court should record its reasons in order that the High Court may be in a position to say whether the discretion vested in the Court has been properly exercised—Umesh v. Satish, 26 C.L.J. 208, 18 Cr.L.J. 886, 41 I.C. 998, 22 C.W.N. 69; Rajani v. Idris, 22 Cr.L.J. 760, 64 I.C. 280, A.I.R. 1921 Cal 259, 34 C.L.J. 51, 48 Cal. 1105, 25 C.W.N. 615; Jagat v. Kalimuddi, 26 C.W.N. 880, 24 Cr.L.J. 229, A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 382, 71 I.C. 693; G. V. Raman, 56 Cal. 1023, 121 I.C. 678, 31 Cr.L.J. 315, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 166, 33 C.W.N. 468 (471), A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 319; Sugan Chand v. Chunilal, 6 N.L.J. 177, 24 Cr.L.J. 361, A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 260; Abdul Gani v. Abdul Kadir, 1 Rang. 756, A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 168, 81 I.C. 930, 25 Cr.L.J. 1106, 2 Bur.L.J. 287; Rujulu, 25 N.L.R. 6, 30 Cr.L.J. 872, A.I.R. 1929 Nag. 133, Ind. Rul. 1929 Nag. 255; Kanhaiya Lal v. Baijnath, 34 Cr.L.J. 519, 143 I.C. 77, 29 N.L.R. 201, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 78, 1933 Cr.C. 315, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 149. Where the proceedings of the case are somewhat peculiar the Magistrate should state his reasons in detail in the order permitting withdrawal of prosecution. But even if the reasons are not adequately expressed, the High Court will not merely on that account interfere in revision—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, supra. It is true that the proposition, that a Magistrate is bound to record his reasons, has been doubted. But there is certainly nothing in law which prevents a Magistrate from recording his reasons and in practice he generally does so. It would always be open to the Crown to explain in any case what the actual reasons were—Devendra Kumar Roy v. Yar Bakht Chaudhury, 40 Cr.L.J. 349 (353, 354), 180 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 220, 43 C.W.N. 301, 11 R.C. 676, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 407. This section itself does not prescribe that reasons in writing must be given, but it is obviously desirable that reasons should be given in order to enable the High Court to judge whether the withdrawal has been rightly made—Satwarao Nagorao Hatkar v. Kanbarao Bhago Rao Hatkar, 39 Cr.L.J. 458 (459), 174 I.C. 510, 10 R.N. 403, 1938 N.L.J. 12, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 334. Reasons no doubt for giving permission to withdraw a case are desirable, but to say that they are essential is oversteering the law. The Cr. P. Code makes no such requirement, and once the consent of the Court is given, it rests on the party applying to have this decision set aside to show that the consent was given in disregard of the judicial exercise of the discretion which the Magistrate had, to give his consent to the withdrawal—Dattatraya Govindrao Pakode v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 65 (66), 10 R.N. 167, 172 I.C. 130, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 76. The Madras, Lahore and Patna High Courts hold that the Court is not bound to give any reason for its action and the High Court has no power to interfere—Sadayan, 5 M.L.T. 216, 4 I.C. 1126, 11 Cr.L.J. 193; Lakshmi v. Mohammad, 33 Cr.L.J. 337, 136 I.C. 714, 33 P.L.R. 394, A.I.R. 1932 Lah. 368, 1932 Cr.C. 486, Ind. Rul. 1932 Lah. 250; Gulli Bhagat v. Narain, 2 Pat. 708, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 283.

The Sind Chief Court has very recently laid down that an order under this section consenting to the withdrawal of a case is a judicial order; to be a judicial order there must be reasons underlying it. These reasons should be capable of articulate expressions. This being so, it is more than desirable and it is in the interest of justice that reasons should be given by a subordinate Magistrate so that the High Court can judge whether the Magistrate's discretion has been rightly exercised—Fakirchand Ramkrishin v. Murad Umar, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 233 (236), following Rajani v. Idris, supra. See also Gomibai v. Emp., A.I.R. 1932 Sind 92, 137 I.C. 344, 33 Cr.L.J. 449, 26 S.L.R. 67.

The failure to obtain consent of the Court amounts to a mere irregularity—Abdul Hamid, 6 Pat. 208 (217). The failure on the part of the Magistrate to place sufficient materials on record to satisfy the High Court that prima facie there was some good ground for the withdrawal, is not by itself sufficient to justify an interference by the High Court—Abdul Majid v. Arbab Shah, 35 Cr.L.J. 142, 146 I.C. 542, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 357, 1933 Cr.C. 1340; Dipchand, 31 Cr.L.J. 684, 124 I.C. 378, A.I.R. 1930 Sind 156.

Reasons extraneous to the case are not proper reasons for the withdrawal of the case—Fakirchand Ramkrishn v. Murad Umar, supra, following Gomibai v. Emp., supra.

1304. Acquittal:—The withdrawal of the prosecution after a charge is framed amounts to an acquittal—Nagendra Nath, 50 Cal. 632, 27 C.W.N. 578 (581). If the Public Prosecutor withdraws from the case after a charge is framed, the accused must be acquitted under clause (b), and not discharged—Sivarama, 12 Mad 35. Where therefore a prisoner, the charge against whom was withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor, was discharged, instead of being acquitted, and was again committed to the Session on a second charge for the same offence, it was held that the conviction was bad in law—Sivarama, 12 Mad. 35. In a summons case, an order of discharge under this section amounts to an order of acquittal—Mul Singh, 24 Cr.L.J. 433 (Lah.).

Where a person acquitted, on the charge being withdrawn by the Public Prosecutor, the acquittal should be recorded without taking the opinions of the assessors. In such a case, an acquittal is a matter of right to the accused, whatever might be the opinions of the assessors—Chenbasapa, Ratanlal 307.

Retrial:—An order of acquittal under this section bars a retrial for the same offence by virtue of section 403—Mahadeo Gir, 14 Cr.L.J. 135, 9 N.L.R. 26; Dudikula Lal Sahab, 40 Mad. 976; Mengharaj, 23 Cr.L.J. 305 (Sind). If a case is withdrawn against an accused in order that his evidence may be available against his co-accused, and he is acquitted, he cannot be retried, even though he refuses to give his evidence for the prosecution. In this respect this section differs from secs 337 and 339—G. V. Raman, 56 Cal 1023, 33 C.W.N. 468 (474).

Accused a competent witness against co-accused:—When a prosecution against a person has been withdrawn under this section, he can be examined as a witness in the case against his other co-accused—Hussein Haji, 25 Bom 422, 2 Bom L.R. 1095; Banu Singh, 33 Cal 1353; Kasem Ali, 47 Cal 154, 55 I.C. 994, 31 C.L.J. 192, 21 C.L.J. 386; Sital Singh, 46 Cal. 700 (710); Govind, 18 Bom.L.R. 266, 17 Cr.L.J. 256, A.I.R. 1916 Bom. 229, 34 I.C. 976. See also G V Raman, 56 Cal 1023 and the English cases cited in Note 1303.

But the prosecution must be withdrawn and the accused discharged under this section, before he can be examined as a witness against his co-accused; because so long as he is in the position of an accused, no oath can be administered to him under sec. 342 (4), and he cannot therefore be examined as a witness. Where the Court sanctions the withdrawal of a prosecution but omits to record an order of discharge, and the accused continues to be kept in custody, his position is in no way changed from that of the accused, and he cannot be examined as a witness—Banu Singh, 33 Cal. 1353, 4 Cr.L.J. 145, 10 C.W.N. 962. But if the accused was in fact discharged from custody by virtue of withdrawal from prosecution, the omission to record a formal order of discharge would be cured by section 537, and the accused would be a competent witness against the other accused—Muhammad Nur, 7 A.L.J. 86, 11 Cr.L.J. 21; Sherati, 18 C.W.N. 1213, 15 Cr.L.J. 693.

The Criminal Procedure Code gives certain powers under which the evidence of an accomplice can be made available. He can be granted a conditional pardon by the Magistrate under sec. 337, Cr. P. C., or the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Magistrate, can withdraw the charge under sec 494, Cr P Code. Those powers ought to be exercised where the prosecution considers that the evidence of an accomplice is necessary. The Police have no right to take upon themselves not to charge a person against whom they have evidence because they require him as a witness. Where that improper course is adopted, the evidence of the accomplice so obtained is entitled to very little weight—Keshav, 36 Cr.L.J. 937, 156 I.C. 392, A.I.R. 1935 Bom. 186, 37 Bom. 179, 1935 Cr.C. 487, 59 Bom. 355; Amdumijan Guljar Patil v. Emp., A.I.R. 1937

17 (23), 168 I.C. 582, I.L.R. 1937 Nag. 315, 38 Cr.L.J. 237, 9 R.N. 126 (F.B.). It is illegal to examine as a witness for the prosecution a person who has also been charged but who has not been offered pardon or discharged under section 169 or 494, Cr. P. Code—Sohan Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 568, 143 I.C. 467, A.I.R. 1933 Oudh 305, Ind. Rul. 1933 Oudh 174, 1933 Cr.C. 686, 10 O.W.N. 678. But see Mohammad Yakub, 33 Cr.L.J. 373, 137 I.C. 73, A.I.R. 1932 All. 73, 1932 Cr.C. 93, where it has been laid down that a Magistrate is not bound to try all accused jointly and, when one of the accused is tried separately and is not put upon a joint trial with other accused, his evidence is not inadmissible against the other accused. See also Karamalli Gulamalli, quoted in Note 984. It is the duty of the Police to work up a case and to secure evidence against the real culprits. If there is no evidence against an accused person, it is their duty to tell the Magistrate so. But they cannot be permitted to examine an accused person as a witness against a co-accused person by adopting the simple process of splitting up the case against them, before he has been convicted or not found guilty of the offence with which he is charged—Dholiomal Karoomal, 37 Cr.L.J. 716, 162 I.C. 863, A.I.R. 1936 Sind 47, 1936 Cr.C. 319. See also Notes 983 and 984.

The co-accused against whom the charge has been unconditionally withdrawn is a more reliable witness than the accomplice who is examined under conditional pardon—Sudam, 34 Cr.L.J. 675, 144 I.C. 74, A.I.R. 1933 Cal. 148, 1933 Cr.C. 225, Ind. Rul. 1933 Cal. 494, following Hussein, 25 Bom. 422, 2 Bom.L.R. 1095. But see Abdul Majid, cited below.

The withdrawal of the prosecution under sec. 494 must be with the consent of the Court, and in exercising his discretion, the judge must act judicially. The section is only intended to be applied in cases where either the evidence is insufficient to secure a conviction, or in cases of compromise and similar circumstances. It is not intended to be used by the prosecution to get the evidence of an accused against his co-accused and so escape the safeguards laid down in the Code with regard to such evidence under sec. 337, Cr. P. Code. The evidence of the accused, in such a case, ought to be rejected. (Per Lort-Williams, J.). The witness can only be considered a competent witness in the sense that his evidence is not inadmissible in respect of the facts to which it relates. The evidence is no doubt admissible but in practice no weight should be given to it without corroboration—Abdul Majid, 36 Cr.L.J. 1248, 157 I.C. 840, A.I.R. 1935 Cal. 473, 39 C.W.N. 1082, 1935 Cr.C. 865. There is nothing in this section which prevents a Public Prosecutor if he thinks it is in the interests of the administration of justice, from withdrawing the case as against one of the accused for the purpose of calling him as a witness against the others. It may well be in the interests of justice that the Public Prosecutor should so withdraw so that such evidence should be given to help to secure a conviction against the others. In the same way for the same reasons it may well be that the Court ought to give its consent to such withdrawal—Harihar Sinha, 37 Cr.L.J. 758 (760), 163 I.C. 9, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 356, 40 C.W.N. 876, 1936 Cr.C. 583, 63 C.L.J. 307 (F.B.) Thus, the view of Lort-Williams, J., given above, has practically been overruled by the Full Bench. See also Faqir Singh v. Emp., in Note 957. For distinction between sections 337 and 494, Cr. P. C., see Note 950A.

To order a fresh inquiry against a discharged co-accused after examining and cross-examining him as a prosecution witness and thus gathering from his own mouth the evidence against him is contrary to the traditions of justice in Criminal Courts—Chuni Lal, 34 Cr.L.J. 761, 144 I.C. 380, A.I.R. 1933 All. 399, 1933 Cr.C. 682, 1933 A.L.J. 735, Ind. Rul. 1933 All. 420, following Easatulla Mian, 76 I.C. 1031, A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 104, 25 Cr.L.J. 311; Nanda Gopal Roy, 20 C.W.N. 1128, 35 I.C. 988, 17 Cr.L.J. 288. But see Chandra Shekhar Prasad, 36 Cr.L.J. 500 (502), 154 I.C. 387, A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 91, 1935 Cr.C. 146, 1 B.R. 302, 7 R.P. 464.

Discharge—Fresh Complaint:—Where the prosecution is withdrawn under clause (a), i.e., before the frame of charge, the accused is discharged, and not acquitted and therefore sec. 403 does not debar the entertainment of a fresh complaint on the same facts—Ramanand v. Ali Hassan, 26 Cr.L.J. 129 (130), 83 I.C. 689, A.I.R. 1924

Pat. 797; Biso Ram, 23 Cr.L.J. 236, A.I.R. 1922 Pat. 372; Lari Chand v. Nirode, 31 Cr.L.J. 1153, 127 I.C. 63, 34 C.W.N. 196, A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 369; Nasir v. Sh. Abdul Karim, A.I.R. 1934 Lah. 169; Devendra Kumar Roy v. Yar Bakht Chaudhury, 40 Cr.L.J. 349 (354), 180 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 220, 43 C.W.N. 301, 11 R.C. 676, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 407. In Biso Ram's case it has been observed that though an order of discharge does not prevent a fresh complaint on the same facts, still prosecution should not be started afresh unless there are new materials which were not before the Magistrate formerly. Compare also the cases cited in Note 681 (sec. 203), Note 827 (sec. 253), Note 854 (sec. 259), and Note 1089 (sec. 403).

Where an accused is discharged under this section, he shall be discharged from those proceedings and not put back into them. He may be tried again in other proceedings on the same charge, but not in those proceedings—Harihar Singh, 37 Cr.L.J. 758 (760), 163, I.C. 9, A.I.R. 1936 Cal. 356, 40 C.W.N. 876, 1936 Cr.C. 583, 63 C.L.J. 307 (F.B.).

An order that purports to be one of acquittal has to be regarded as one of discharge when, under the provision of law that was applied only an order of discharge could be passed and specially when the Magistrate had expressly shown that it was his intention to pass such order. What has to be looked at is how the case was treated at the time of withdrawal—Musalayya v. Ranga Rao, 36 L.W. 641, 1933 Cr.C. 129, 34 Cr.L.J. 12, 140 I.C. 322, 1932 M.W.N. 1230, Ind. Rul. 1932 Mad. 850, A.I.R. 1933 Mad. 98.

1305. Revision:—The High Court is in a position to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate to give consent to the withdrawal of a prosecution has been rightly exercised—Rajani v. Idris, 48 Cal. 1105, 25 C.W.N. 615, 64 I.C. 280, 34 C.L.J. 51, 22 Cr.L.J. 76; Jagat v. Kalimuddi, 26 C.W.N. 880; Gopi Bari, 1 P.L.T. 400, 57 I.C. 657, 21 Cr.L.J. 641; Devendra Kumar Roy v. Yar Bakht Chaudhury, 40 Cr.L.J. 349 (353), 180 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 220, 43 C.W.N. 301, 11 R.C. 676, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 407.

But where good reasons have been shown by the Court below for allowing the withdrawal of a prosecution, the High Court will be slow to interfere in revision against the order allowing the withdrawal—Bepin Behari v. Haripada, 24 Cr.L.J. 5, 71 I.C. 53 (Cal.). Where the Sessions Judge has exercised his discretion in refusing permission to withdraw a case, and he has not improperly exercised that discretion, the High Court would be very reluctant to interfere with his discretion—Kaliappa, 23 L.W. 101, 27 Cr.L.J. 334; Gomibat, 26 S.L.R. 67, 1932 Cr.C. 532, 137 I.C. 344, 33 Cr.L.J. 449, A.I.R. 1932 Sind 92, Ind. Rul. 1932 Sind 74. Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction, which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court is that as a revisional Court it will neither inquire into the reasons nor interfere. Specially where the Court has acquitted the accused upon withdrawal of the charges, the High Court would not be right in interfering except upon a properly constituted appeal preferred by the Local Government under sec. 417—Gulli Bhagat v. Narain, 2 Pat. 708 (710), 77 I.C. 734, A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 283, 5 P.L.T. 404, 25 Cr.L.J. 446; Sadayan, 11 Cr.L.J. 193, 5 M.L.T. 216; Abdul Gam v. Abdul Kadir, 1 Rang. 756, 25 Cr.L.J. 1106, 2 Bur.L.J. 287. Where the prosecution does not seem to be bona fide, and the evidence that has been adduced leaves the matter in doubt, and the Magistrate allows withdrawal of the prosecution and discharges the accused on reasons which cannot be said to be unsound, it is not proper that the High Court should interfere and the case should be revived—Sher Sing v. Jitendra, 59 Cal. 275, 36 C.W.N. 16 (28), 33 Cr.L.J. 3, 54 C.L.J. 253, A.I.R. 1931 Cal. 607, 134 I.C. 1045.

Ordinarily the High Court will not interfere with the discretion given to the prosecution by this section, but it undoubtedly has power to do so, and will do so in special circumstances where the withdrawal appears to be manifestly improper. Where the prosecution has been launched by an experienced Civil Judge after a full trial on the merits and the accused had an opportunity to appeal against the order for prosecution, but apparently did not do so, it would be allowing an undesirable precedent if such a prosecution were to be, unless for very cogent reasons, cut short by the prosecuting authorities. If such a prosecution is allowed to be withdrawn on the ground that the prosecution is weak or that the trial would be costly, it is a fit case in which the High Court should interfere—Satwarao Nagorao Hatkar v. Kanbarao Bhago Rao Hatkar, 39 Cr.L.J. 458 (459), 174 I.C. 510, 10 R.N. 403, 1938 N.L.J. 12, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 334. See also Debendra Kumar Roy v. Yar Bakht Chaudhury, 40 Cr.L.J. 349, 180 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 220, 43 C.W.N. 301, 11 R.C. 676, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 407.

Where a charge is withdrawn, and the accused is acquitted, it is not competent to the revisional Court to consider the question of the legality of the charge. A number of persons were charged before the Magistrate with the offence of robbery. The Public Prosecutor withdrew the charge, and the Magistrate recorded an order of acquittal. On revision, it was contended that the charge of robbery was wrong, in as much as more than five persons were implicated in the act, and the Magistrate ought to have framed a charge of dacoity, and therefore the acquittal on the charge of robbery was wrong. The High Court refused to enter into the question as to the legality of the charge, and held that the Magistrate's procedure was right. There being a charge before him, and the charge having been withdrawn, he acted rightly in recording an order of acquittal—Sheobaran v. Shibi, 2 A.L.J. 30.

The High Court will not interfere with the order of acquittal passed by the trial Court under this section, at the instance of a private prosecutor. If the Court has allowed the Public Prosecutor to withdraw the case upon insufficient or improper grounds, and has passed an order of acquittal, the private prosecutor cannot be heard to object to it in revision. The Local Government is the only authority who can take action for the correction of that error—Gulli Bhagat v. Narain, 2 Pat. 708 (711), 5 P.L.T. 404, 25 Cr.L.J. 446. The Sind Chief Court has, however, held that there is no reason why it should not exercise its jurisdiction because the revision application is made by a witness in the case who is the aggrieved person—Fakirchand Ramkrishin v. Murad Umar, A.I.R. 1940 Sind 233 (234).

When an order of withdrawal has the effect of operating to the detriment of a third person he has right to apply in revision against such an order—G. V. Raman, 31 Cr.L.J. 315 (318), 121 I.C. 678, A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 319, 33 C.W.N. 468, 56 Cal. 1023, Ind. Rul. 1930 Cal. 166; Satwarao Nagorao Hatkar v. Kanbarao Bhago Rao Hatkar, 39 Cr.L.J. 458, 174 I.C. 510, 10 R.N. 403, 1938 N.L.J. 12, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 334.

Further enquiry:—If the case is withdrawn under clause (a), the accused will be discharged; and further inquiry may be directed under sec. 436—Hata, 30 P.L.R. 58, 30 Cr.L.J. 223; Kanhaiya Lal v. Baijnath, 34 Cr.L.J. 519, 143 I.C. 77, A.I.R. 1933 Nag. 78, 1933 Cr.C. 315, Ind. Rul. 1933 Nag. 149, 29 N.L.R. 201; Dattatraya Govindrao Pakode v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 65 (66), 10 R.N. 167, 172 I.C. 130, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 76. Where the order of discharge under this section is a proper one, no further inquiry should be directed under section 436—Sitaramayya, (1911) M.W.N. 74, 12 Cr.L.J. 440.

It is clearly necessary to distinguish between an order of acquittal and an order of discharge under this section. Under the very terms of secs. 436 and 437, Cr. P. C., the High Court has power to order a further enquiry in a case in which an accused person has been discharged under this section—Devendra Kumar Roy v. Yar Bakht Chaudhury, 40 Cr.L.J. 349 (353), 180 I.C. 384, A.I.R. 1939 Cal. 220, 43 C.W.N. 301, 11 R.C. 676, I.L.R. (1939) 1 Cal. 407.

495. (1) Any Magistrate inquiring into or trying any case

may permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person other than an officer of police below the rank to be prescribed by the Provincial Government in this behalf, * * * but no person, other than the Advocate General, Standing Counsel, Government Solicitor, Public Prosecutor or other officer generally or specially empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf shall be entitled to do so without such permission.

(2) Any such officer shall have the like power of withdrawing from the prosecution as is provided by section 494, and the provisions of that section shall apply to any withdrawal by such officer.

(3) Any person conducting the prosecution may do so personally or by a pleader.

(4) An officer of police shall not be permitted to conduct the prosecution if he has taken any part in the investigation into the offence with respect to which the accused is being prosecuted.

Amendment:—The words "Provincial Government" have been substituted for "Local Government" by section 4 of the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

1306. Permission to conduct prosecution:—The permission of the Magistrate is discretionary, and the High Court will not interfere with such discretion. Where a Magistrate has, after due consideration, exercised the discretion and allowed counsel to appear on behalf of the prosecution, the High Court cannot, as a Court of Revision, overrule the order of the Magistrate and direct him to refuse to allow counsel to appear—Mangiah v. Dakshina Murthi, 2 Weir 655. Similarly, where the District Magistrate considers that the too frequent appearance of pleaders for the prosecution in petty criminal cases is detrimental to the interests of justice, he can refuse to permit the prosecution to be conducted by a pleader, and the Chief Court will decline to interfere with the order of the District Magistrate—Rala Ram v. Buta, 1905 P.R. 6, 2 Cr.L.J. 43.

Before a Counsel engaged by a party can conduct the Crown case it is necessary for the party to obtain permission of the Court under cl (1) of this section, that he should himself be put in charge of the prosecution. If he obtains permission for himself, then it is no doubt open to him to brief counsel to represent him. The provisions of sec. 495, cl. (1) are no doubt wide enough so as to empower a trying Magistrate to permit any person to conduct the prosecution but that does not mean that the trying Magistrate should grant such permission indiscriminately. He has to exercise his discretion after considering all circumstances of the case—Kabul, A.I.R. 1933 Sind 345, 1933 Cr.C. 1121, 147 I.C. 131, 27 S.L.R. 331, 35 Cr.L.J. 320.

When there is an officer present in Court who has been empowered by the Local Government to conduct prosecution, it cannot be open to the Magistrate to give permission to some other person to conduct the prosecution either instead of or along with him without his consent—Janke Gopal, 37 Cr.L.J. 333, 160 I.C. 689, A.I.R. 1936 Bom 35, 37 Bom.L.R. 967, 1936 Cr.C. 90.

A Magistrate, presumably after giving due consideration to the complainant's application in this behalf, permitted her advocate to appear and conduct a Crown prosecution under section 354, I.P.C. The case proceeded and the complainant was examined-in-chief and partly cross-examined. The Magistrate then rose for the midday recess. After the recess an application was made to the Court by a Police Jamadar submitting that he and not the complainant's advocate should be permitted to conduct the prosecution on the ground that the case was a Crown case instituted by the police and that it was his duty to conduct it. The Magistrate made a reference to the District Magistrate and granted the Police Jamadar's application after receiving instructions from him. Held, on revision, that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate in referring the matter to the District Magistrate was not proper, that in the first place it was not competent for him to apply to higher authority for advice in such circumstances, and in the next place, having obtained such advice, to vary an order already passed in the exercise of a proper judicial discretion, and that his original order must stand—Janat Achar, A.I.R. 1935 Sind 3, 36 Cr.L.J. 1046, 156 I.C. 789, 1935 Cr.C. 44. But see Janke Gopal, supra, where a contrary view seems to have been taken.

In the prosecution of a case of murder an advocate privately engaged is not a proper person to conduct the prosecution. He must represent the interests of his client and it is above all things essential that in the prosecution on behalf of the Crown private interests and private feelings, for instance, the desire for vengeance which may not unnaturally move the complainant, in such a case, should have no place. Therefore, an advocate privately engaged to represent the complainant should have no other place than that of one strictly subordinate to the officer who prosecutes on behalf of the Crown, for the Crown stands not necessarily for a conviction but for justice—Ahmed Mahomed v. Emp., A.I.R. 1940 Sind 220 (221), I.L.R. 1940 Kar. 482.

Who can be permitted:—The Magistrate is not precluded from exercising in exceptional cases his discretion by allowing private Vakils of good character to conduct the prosecution—Krishnamachariar, 12 M.L.J. 354. The words 'any person' include persons other than certified pleaders. It is however discretionary with the Criminal Courts in each case to permit such persons to conduct the prosecution—Mad. H. C. Pro, 2-9-1882.

The fact that a certain person is also a Prosecuting Inspector does not deprive him of his right as a private citizen, and he may in his private capacity ask for permission to prosecute in his case—Maung Pu, 10 Bur.L.T. 213, 17 Cr.L.J. 486, 36 I.C. 166. So also, the fact that a particular person is a complainant is not a sufficient ground for not permitting him to prosecute the case—Ibid. But it is doubtful whether the words 'any person' would include an absolute stranger who had no connection in the remotest degree with the prosecution and whose desire to help the prosecution was based on a personal grudge only—Darsan v. Atmaram, 11 A.L.J. 313, 14 Cr.L.J. 389.

If the offence be of a nature affecting the public (e.g., rioting or unlawful assembly) which the Crown alone in the interests of public peace and security has a right to conduct, a private person should not be permitted to conduct the prosecution—Malayil Kottagil, 18 Cr.L.J. 329 (Mad.).

Under a notification of the Madras Government all superior police-officers above the rank of a first class Head Constable in charge of a police station are generally empowered to conduct the prosecution without even the permission of the Magistrate under sub-section (1); such officers would be entitled under sub-section (2) to withdraw from the prosecution with the permission of the Court as mentioned in sec. 494—Anantharama v. Mithia Thevan, 1914 M.W.N. 776, 15 Cr.L.J. 614, 25 I.C. 841.

The moment a notice is issued under sec. 112, Cr. P. C., the Crown has the right to conduct the case against the person called upon to show cause and sec. 495, Cr. P. C., gives discretion to the Magistrate to permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person mentioned in that section—Laxmi Narayan, A.I.R. 1932 All. 670, 1932 A.L.J. 880, 34 Cr.L.J. 42, 140 I.C. 536, 1932 Cr.C. 822.

Sub-section (2):—'Any such officer':—These words refer only to the Advocate-General, Standing Counsel, etc., mentioned in sub-section (1). If any person other than these officers (e.g., an Advocate privately engaged by the complainant and permitted by the Magistrate) withdraws from the prosecution, the effect provided in sec. 494 does not follow; in other words, the trial will proceed—Nga Maung v. Nga Lu, 10 Cr.L.J. 14, 1903 U.B.R. 1st Qr. (Cr. P. C.) 15; see also Lakshmana v. Keelan Peria, 1911 M.W.N. 106, 11 Cr.L.J. 722, 8 I.C. 867. A private Vakil appearing for the Crown cannot withdraw from the prosecution, even though he was conducting the case under the directions of the Public Prosecutor of the district who could not appear personally—Sital Singh, 46 Cal. 700 (709).

In Bengal by a Notification (vide Cal. Gaz., 10th July 1907, Part I, p. 1162), every Inspector or Sub-Inspector of Police appointed to prosecute cases before Magistrates is a Public Prosecutor for all such cases. Consequently, he can withdraw from the prosecution. And the fact that the application for withdrawal from prosecution is signed jointly by the Court Inspector (Public Prosecutor) and a private Vakil who is not a Public Prosecutor, does not invalidate the withdrawal—Sital Singh, 46 Cal. 700 (710).

In U. P., a Court Inspector is not a Public Prosecutor; and if he is not specially empowered by the Local Government to act as Public Prosecutor, he cannot withdraw, even with the consent of the Court. Such a withdrawal is illegal and cannot have the effect of acquittal of the accused—Ram Gobind v. Lallu, 46 All. 88 (90), 21 A.L.J. 855, 25 Cr.L.J. 970.

It is clear from this section that an officer of the Police not below a certain rank which the Local Government is to prescribe, is entitled to conduct the prosecution and is therefore, by the same section, entitled to make an application for withdrawal. Where the lowest rank prescribed by the Local Government is that of the Sub-Inspector and a Circle Inspector being above that rank, his appearance in the case under the instructions of the District Superintendent of Police to apply for withdrawal is sufficient to enable him to present the application—Dattatrya Govindrao Pakode v. Emp., 39 Cr.L.J. 65 (66), 10 R.N. 167, 172 I.C. 130, A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 76.

Sub-section (3):—A person, whether a private complainant or not, when he is permitted to conduct the case as prosecutor, may instruct a counsel to appear—Narayan, 11 B.H.C.R. 102.

It is not open to a Magistrate to decline to allow the complainant, who is conducting the prosecution, to have a particular pleader of his own choice. The section does not authorise the Magistrate to take the prosecution out of the hands of the pleader of the complainant and to assign it to some other person who is not the Public Prosecutor—Ghadially, 18 S.L.R. 30, 25 Cr.L.J. 571.

1307. Sub-section (4):—Exclusion of Police-officer:—In all important cases and specially in cases of murder and dacoity, the police-officer making the investigation should be examined as a witness, regarding the circumstances of the investigation. It is probably for this reason that he is debarred from conducting the prosecution.

A police-officer who, on receiving the information of an offence obtained a warrant, arrested the accused, and seized some books and papers, may be said to have "taken part in the investigation of an offence" under this clause, even though he may not have examined any of the witnesses and his investigation was confined to an inspection of the articles seized; consequently, if he was allowed to conduct the prosecution, the procedure was highly improper, but since in this case the accused were not prejudiced thereby, the irregularity did not vitiate the trial but was cured by sec. 537—Tribhovan-das, 26 Bom. 533, 4 Bom.L.R. 271.

Excise Officers are not impliedly as they are not expressly included in the expression "Officer of Police" in sec. 495 (4) of the Cr. P. C.—Gopal, 34 Cr.L.J. 905 (907), 145 I.C. 138, 35 Bom.L.R. 376, A.I.R. 1933 Bom. 234, 1933 Cr.C. 657, 57 Bom. 441.

A person in respect of whom an enquiry is being made under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., is not being prosecuted for any offence. It is, therefore, quite clear that sub-sec. (4) of this section does not apply in the case of an inquiry under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., but, on the other hand, sub-sec. (1) of this section does apply, since the Magistrate is enquiring into a case. Under that sub-section the Magistrate has a discretion whether to allow the Police Sub-Inspector, who has been enquiring into a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., to conduct the prosecution or not, and he is entitled to exercise his discretion by analogy to sub-sec. (4) of this section. It is generally undesirable for the Police Sub-Inspector, who has been inquiring into a case under sec. 110, Cr. P. C., to conduct such cases—Anandya Sambhya Mahar, A.I.R. 1940 Bom. 416, 42 Bom.L.R. 909.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

OF BAIL.

496. When any person other than a person accused of a non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police-station, or appears or is brought before a Court, and is prepared at any time while in the custody of such officer or at any stage of the proceedings before such Court to give bail, such person shall be released on bail: Provided that such officer or Court, if he or it thinks fit, may, instead of taking bail from such person, discharge him on his executing a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided:

Provided, further, that nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect the provisions of section 107, sub-section (4), or section 117, sub-section (3).

Change:—The second proviso has been added by sec. 135 of the Cr. P. C. Amendment Act, XVIII of 1923. For notes relating to this proviso, see Note 240 under sec. 107.

Scope:—See Note 240.

1308. Grant of bail:—The principle to be deduced from secs. 496 and 497 is that grant of bail is the rule, and refusal is the exception. An accused person is presumed under the law to be innocent, till his guilt is proved. As a presumably innocent person he is entitled to every freedom and every opportunity to look after his case. An accused person if he enjoys freedom will be in a much better position to look after his case and properly defend himself than if he were in custody—Hutchinson, 1931 A.L.J. 515, 32 Cr.L.J. 1271 (1273), Ind. Rul. 1931 All. 858, 134 I.C. 842, 1931 Cr.C. 612, A.I.R. 1931 All. 356, 53 All. 931. No such rule exists as regards serious non-bailable offences which are punishable with death or transportation for life—Joglekar, 33 Cr.L.J. 94 (96), 135 I.C. 113, 1931 A.L.J. 773, A.I.R. 1931 All. 504, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 1, 1931 Cr.C. 892, 54 All. 115 (F.B.). This section is imperative in its terms and the Court is bound to comply with its provisions. In every bailable offence, bail is a right and not a favour. Detention in the lock up is the alternative, not the original order—Raghunandan, 32 Cal. 80. When the offence is a bailable one, the Magistrate is bound to admit the accused to bail if he can furnish a satisfactory bail—M. A. Azeez v. The King, 41 Cr.L.J. 252, 186 I.C. 147, A.I.R. 1940 Rang. 26. See also Bashir-ud-Din, 33 Cr.L.J. 752 (754), 139 I.C. 330, A.I.R. 1932 All. 327, 1932 Cr.C. 306, Ind. Rul. 1932 All. 554. When a man who is arrested is not accused of a non-bailable offence, no needless impediment should be placed in the way of his being admitted to bail. The intention of the law is that in such cases the man is ordinarily to be at liberty, and it is only when he is unable to furnish such moderate security, if any is required of him, as is suitable for the purpose of securing his appearance before a Court pending inquiry, that he should remain in detention—Mir Hashamali, 20 Bom.L.R. 121, 19 Cr.L.J. 329, 44 I.C. 345. Whether the accused is to remain at large on bail depends in most cases upon the exigencies of the particular case before the Court. In cases involving the taking of accounts it is desirable that the accused should be granted bail so that he may have full opportunity of instructing his counsel as regards accounts—Ram Narain, 32 P.L.R. 383, 32 Cr.L.J. 1175, Ind. Rul. 1931 Lah. 938, 134 I.C. 490. If a case is proceeding in an extremely tardy manner, the Magistrate should enlarge the accused on bail, instead of insisting upon his rotting in jail during the time the Crown is collecting evidence in support of the prosecution—Tularam, 97 I.C. 39, A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 53, 27 Cr.L.J. 1063 (1065). Where the accused has surrendered himself before the date of hearing, that is a circumstance to show that the accused is not likely to abscond; consequently he may be granted bail—Tularam, supra.

When the Police arrests a person under sec. 55, he should be given the option of bail—Daulat Singh, 14 All. 45. Where a person arrested under Chapter VIII claims a bail, he is entitled to bail as a matter of right—Sheolalsing, 6 C.P.L.R. 31; Raghunandan, 32 Cal. 80; Narainaswamy, 36 Mad. 474; Mir Hashamali, 20 Bom.L.R. 121, 19 Cr.L.J. 329; Jatvi, 20 S.L.R. 122, 27 Cr.L.J. 935 (936). This section authorizes the Magistrate conducting an enquiry under sec. 117, Cr. P. C., to release the person concerned in the enquiry on bail with or without surety to ensure his attendance in Court—Karbalai Hussain, A.I.R. 1940 Nag. 75, 41 Cr.L.J. 155, 185 I.C. 318, 1939 N.L.J. 537, I.L.R. 1940 Nag. 61, following U Gandama, 145 I.C. 314, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 164, 1933 Cr.C. 763, 6 R.Rang. 41, 34 Cr.L.J. 950. See Maung Saw Hlaing, 34 Cr.L.J. 1195, 146 I.C. 23, A.I.R. 1933 Rang. 165, 1933 Cr.C. 764, 6 Rang. 70. See also Note 240. A person who is re-arrested after having been discharged on executing a surety bond under sec. 117, sub-cl. (3), Cr. P. C., is entitled to be released on bail, if he is not accused of a non-bailable offence—Nathan Gope, 10 P.L.T. 801, 30 Cr.L.J. 809, 117 I.C. 628, A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 654, Ind. Rul. 1929 Pat. 436.

Appeal:—When the accused is convicted of a bailable offence and prefers an appeal from the order of conviction, the Appellate Court can only act in the exercise of its jurisdiction as regards bail under sec. 496, Cr. P. C., and is obliged to grant bail under that section—Mahendra, 14 C.W.N. cxxxviii. However serious an offence may be, if it is bailable and there is no reason, such as the likelihood of the applicant absconding if released on bail, the seriousness of the offence would not alone justify a Court in refusing bail to which a convicted person is entitled under the law—Abdul Habib Khan, 29 Cr.L.J. 450, 108 I.C. 689, 26 A.L.J. 363, A.I.R. 1928 All. 211.

Court to decide sufficiency of bail:—When the bail is ordered by the Court, the duty of deciding as to the sufficiency or otherwise of the bail is with the Court itself, and not with the police. If such duties are irregularly entrusted to police, two dangers are likely to arise; first, a police officer may sometimes be unscrupulous enough to take advantage of the power entrusted to him, for the purpose of extortion; and secondly, the bringing of false charges against the police. But the Court, when it admits a man to bail, is at liberty to call for a report from the police as to the sufficiency of the bail—Gayitri Prosunno, 15 Cal. 455.

1309. Bond:—Bail means security with sureties, whereas the bond referred to in the first proviso is a simple recognizance of the principal without any surety.

Section 496 coupled with the form given in the Schedule to the Code (Form XLII, Sch. V) contemplates two kinds of security, namely, (1) the simple recognizance of the principal, and (2) security with sureties. The word "bail" is properly applicable to the second kind of security and that is the meaning which has been attached to the word in the practice and procedure of Courts—Rudolf Stallman, 15 C.W.N. 736 (737), 12 Cr.L.J. 358.

Under this section, a Police officer can either demand a bail from an accused or accept his own bond without sureties, but under no provision of the law can he take a third party's bond for the appearance of the accused without taking an undertaking from the accused himself—Wadhawa Singh, 109 I.C. 219, A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 318, 29 Cr.L.J. 491 (492). Such a bond is invalid, and the person executing it incurs no legal liability if the accused absconds—Ibid. But see Indar v. Emp., in Note 1317.

See Karbalai Hussain in Note 240.

Amount of the security:—The object is not to penalise the accused but to ensure his presence in Court and the amount of security must be fixed with due regard to the means of the accused and the nature of the offence—Chetnand v. Gurbakhsh, 31 Cr.L.J. 980, 126 I.C. 615, A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 668.

Bond of agent:—Where the personal attendance of the accused is dispensed with, a recognizance bond, if deemed necessary, should be taken from him (and not from his agent), binding him to appear, either in person or by agent. A Magistrate has no legal authority to secure the attendance of the accused, by a bond taken from the agent.—Lallubhai Jassubhai, 5 B.H.C.R. 64.

Court-fees:—Bail-bonds in criminal cases, recognizances to prosecute or give evidence, and recognizances for personal appearance or otherwise are not chargeable with any court-fee. Vide sec. 19, cl. (xv) of the Court Fees Act, 1870 (Act VII of 1870).

497. (1) When any person accused of any non-bailable offence is arrested or detained without warrant by an officer in charge of a police station, or appears or is brought before a Court, he may be released on bail, but he shall not be so released if there appear reasonable grounds for believing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life:

When bail may be taken in case of non-bailable offence.
Provided that the Court may direct that any person under the age of sixteen years or any woman or any sick or infirm person accused of such an offence be released on bail.

(2) If it appears to such officer or Court at any stage of the investigation, inquiry or trial, as the case may be, that there are not reasonable grounds for believing that the accused has committed a non-bailable offence, but that there are sufficient grounds for further inquiry into his guilt, the accused shall, pending such inquiry, be released on bail, or, at the discretion of such officer or Court, on the execution by him of a bond without sureties for his appearance as hereinafter provided.

(3) An officer or a Court releasing any person on bail under sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall record in writing his or its reasons for so doing.
